"NO one can doubt that this war is God's crucible for Christendom. e can mark some of the features of the e and faith of Christendom which are the crucible. The first of these is our ristian civilization. Two years ago, e assertion that our civilization had come securely Christian would have on an instant assent. Books were blished which declared that the awful st of war—not merely its material, t its moral cost—would be an almost superable barrier to its happening. e were told that the nations were so sely bound together by commerce, d had so many common interests in t and science and literature, and had ined hands in prosecuting so many oral ventures, that plainly the wolf in an was tamed and the tiger lust had en quenched. . . . This Christian vilization was manifest in the wiser ws, the humaner manners and the ifter sympathies of our time. It had en concretely expressed in Peace onferences, where treaties and rules ad publicly banned the methods of arbarism. But when this Christian vilization has been put into God's ucible, what have we found? . . . t is God separating between the false nd the true, the precious and the vile. t is God discerning between those who erve him and those who serve him not. t is God searching and testing and casting out the dross. Whatever may be the sult of this war, this is clear; that en will come to understand what is hristian in our civilization and what is agan. The conscience is being educated. hings that are base are being exposed. n days to come, men will look back to his time of war and mark it as the poch when the Refiner separated etween the silver and the dross.

"Another thing in the crucible is our ational ideal of life. Everything in ur country, our mode of government, he body of our laws, the Christian hurch and its ministry and its service, ur customs in business, the relationships f man to man and of man to woman, nd rich to poor—are all being searched nd tested, and the alloy in them is eing declared. But what is enduring he fiercest of these cleansing fires is our ational ideal of life. We had almost ost sight, in these last prosperous ears, when wealth was increasing, nd ease had become the common lot, of any ideal of life at all. It was a common remark that the poet of the farther vision found few to listen to his singing. The teachers who were prophets of rebuke and appeal were as much neglected as the Hebrew prophets were by Israel. The men who endeavored to quicken the national conscience, to call men to live in faith in the unseen and to deal in a gracious sacrifice with their fellows, were heard, but their appeal was greatly unheeded. Our national ambitions were shot through with a haughty imperialism, and our colonies and dominions had become our pride, and had acquired a new value as sources of wealth. Many of the gains of the rich were unjust in their excess and base in their source. The pursuit of pleasure not always pure, the craving for ease which often became sloth, the gust of luxury which soon became wastefulness and profligacy, characterized all ranks and classes of the people. The simple, self-denying, austere life of earlier days found its commendation only in the pathetic recitals of our romantic writers, which is the surest proof that these simpler ways belong to the past. Most degrading of all was the easy tolerance with our national vice. All Christian people and all men of earnest mind knew that drunkenness was wasting the treasure, impoverishing the well-being, corrupting the bodies and ruining the souls of the people. Yet their pleading voices availed little in the legislature, and availed less with large masses of the people. But this gross-passioned and earthly ideal has been put into God's crucible. Now, as never before, there has been passed a condemnation on our imperial ambitions, our unjust profits, our trivial pleasures, and, above all, on this devastating vice of drunkenness. Even the dullest minds, even the minds which have been given over to secular ideals of life, have been purged of some of the alloy of their thoughts. Already a new ideal of what life should be has begun to dawn on men's minds, and the day may come when even those who go down to their grave in sorrow may understand the grace of God when he puts a national ideal into his crucible.

"A THIRD thing in the crucible is the faith of the Gospel. By the Gospel we mean that love of God in Christ to sinful men wrought out in his life, perfected in his death, made appealing by his Word, so that God and man have been reconciled, and the word of the Gospel is the call to believe and to be at peace with him. Has that message been heard with any clear and urgent note in recent years? Has the Christian Church generally been insistent in the proclamation of the Evangel? Have not other gospels which, as Paul would say, are not gospels at all, been preached with eagerness and heard with complacency? It is certain that one of the truths on which the Gospel depends has been ignored, if not denied, in many quarters in the last twenty years. That truth is that the world is a lost and ruined world; that man, by nature, is evil and needs to be redeemed. The truths of human depravity and moral impotence have been fading out of many minds. By human depravity is not meant that human nature is wholly evil. There is ever the quenchless thirst for righteousness, the enduring, if at times dormant, passion for God. By human depravity is meant that everything in man down to the core of his being is tainted by evil, and that he has a bias to iniquity. 'When I would do good, evil is present with me.'

"But the teaching of late years has been that man at the heart of him is pretty good after all. All he needs is a new social order, a more gracious environment, a better home, a larger wage, a wiser education, a more ample leisure, and he will set out on the moral pilgrimage. No man who looks into the lives of those who possess all that earth and time can give, and no man who recalls his own past life and looks into his own heart, can be cajoled into believing this untruth. Yet for years it has been the latent principle of much of our action and our thought, and it has corrupted the Christian faith.

"Another thing in the crucible is the individual character. Every one of us is being searched, tested and discovered. God is separating, by this war, between the silver and the dross of character in each man. Here, on the one side, is the man who is hoarding his gains and yet stinting his gifts to the homes of the desolate. Here is the man who is carrying on not only business but pleasure as usual. God is separating between these, and the one he is casting out as dross, the other he cherishes as silver.

"The Hebrew prophet wrote that God 'sits' as a refiner. He is declaring God's patience as he waits and watches. All of us are praying our daily prayer for peace. We long for the time when the tranquil blue of heaven will again be overspread and nations will dwell in a brotherhood not of worldly interest, not of law and treaty, not of blood, but a brotherhood in Christ. But God will not send peace until the work of the crucible is done. As one looks abroad upon the nation and its ideal of life, and as one sees so much rebellion against truth and purity, so much self-indulgence, and so much neglect of the Word of Christ, the prayer for a speedy peace is sometimes checked and transformed into a petition that in the midst of wrath God will remember mercy, and that by his grace we shall abide the fire of his crucible, so that we may come forth with a new faith in the great certainties, and a new passion for likeness unto his Son."

The Light of Life

By José de L. y Bonilla

[Jose Bonilla is a Castilian Cuban, educated in an American military school, and is now serving a sentence in a state prision for a forgery committed while he was intoxicated; but he is glad that he was sent to prison, for there he has found the Christ, his Saviour; and when the sentence has been served, José Bonilla plans to serve his Lord as a missionary in Mexico. These facts make this verse, written in prison, of interest.]

MY life was all in darkness,
Clouds of shame obscured my view,
When an angel voice said to me,
"Peace,—the Master speaks to you";
I was lost, my soul imprisoned,
In horror did I dwell,
When the angel whispered gently,
"Peace, the Master's in thy cell";
Oh, I've never been forgotten,—
Blessings from my God outflow—
I shall live in peace and comfort,
Jesus Christ has told me so.
Look! the morning light is breaking,
And the darkness flees away,
I feel my soul awaking,—
The Gospel to obey;
I have found the Saviour's blessing,
I'm happy that I'm blest,
So lead me, O Sweet Jesus,
On thy bosom let me rest;
O God, my guide, my life, my all,
Thou Prince of my salvation,
Oh, leave me not in darkness drear,
My only consolation;
Thou dearest Name of all the names,
Bring peace into my cell—
I thank thee, Master Brother,
Wilt thou with me ever dwell?

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

The President and the People

IT cannot be denied that President Wilson, in his spectacular tour of the West in behalf of preparedness, has made a strong impression wherever he has spoken. He is a facile orator, a master of striking expression, and there are probably few public men who can equal him in popular address. Speaking to half a dozen audiences in a day is a man's work which few would undertake without hesitation; yet he has done this and done it well. Realizing the wisdom of sharing his burdens, instead of carrying them in solitude as he did for a time, he has taken the people into his confidence. He has bared his heart that they might see and understand the struggle he has undergone all these months in regard to the nation's policies. With perfect candor he has recognized that "the love of peace is the predominant passion of the American people." On the one hand, he has encountered the hysteria of military and naval preparedness; on the other he has heard the strong, clear, insistent voice of the nation, demanding that our government preserve its attitude in behalf of national peace, and that it continue to exert its moral force for bringing about world peace. The difficulty of this peculiar situation is reflected in all of his speeches, throughout the entire circuit of 1,800 miles, in the course of which it is estimated that he spoke to audiences aggregating 450,000 souls.

Of course, the main thing is the impression conveyed and the speaker put every ounce of his intellectual powers and his finished rhetoric into the task of convincing his audiences of what he conceived to be the national need and duty of preparedness. It is probably natural that many of his hearers must have been unable wholly to divorce the idea of politics from these addresses. The Administration must go before the country with a program, a plan, a definite purpose.

That the impression received varied in different places was to have been expected. The speaker vividly pictured the world disturbance, which he regarded as full of dangers to this country that had not been suspected in the earlier stages of the war. Yet, even in the presence of these imminent perils, he not only believed in keeping the nation out of war, but he solemnly pledged himself to continue to keep it out of the struggle, if it were possible to do so. But there might come a time, he explained, when it would be impossible for him to preserve both the peace and the honor of the nation. For such an emergency the whole country, Congress included, must stand ready to provide the best means for preserving the honor of the United States. He told them he wanted no big military establishment but an army of trained American citizens, who could step into the duty of national defense easily and intelligently. Our present army he now regarded as inadequate even for the duties of peace. The National Guard is not enough. There are precedents for compulsory training, he reminded them; but a great nation like ours must depend upon the voluntary action of its men for its military force. He resented the suggestion that the munition-makers had given the impulse to the preparedness agitation from the desire to make money. The government could manufacture its own armorplate and munitions. It need not submit to imposition by anybody.

Passing to the navy, he denied that it had been neglected, even in the smallest degree. "We have been slowly building a navy which in quality is second to none in the world. In size," he said, "it is the fourth in the world, though I have heard it said by some gentlemen that it was the second. I suspect that they could give an account of themselves which would raise them above the fourth class." He advocated, not the "sudden creation of a navy," but a program under which, in five years, we could have such a navy as, in fighting strength, would ordinarily take ten years to build on present lines.

Such is the sum and substance of the program which the President has submitted to his Western audiences, and which he has urged with all the power of his eloquence. To what extent it coincides with the views that have been advocated in Congress, and especially by those members who are recognized as leaders in the demand for preparedness, is an open question. It indicated a marked departure, however, from Mr. Wilson's earlier addresses on the problems of the war, when he was the outspoken advocate of peace and humanity, and when he believed that we should not permit this country to be drawn into the military madness that had seized the old world in its grasp. He seems to have traveled far from those original convictions, which were so eminently peaceful that he could see no threat or danger menacing us from any quarter. Now, he sees peril on every hand. The world is on fire; the sky is full of sparks, that may at any moment involve us in a conflagration. Yet he feels that no man can say whether we shall be drawn into the war or not; and it is reassuring to find him saying, with thankfulness, that there is no man in America who can bring on war without the consent of the people. While frankly admitting that his convictions have undergone a change in a year, he still cherishes the hopes that, when the flame is quieted, the opportunity may yet fall to America to help in restoring to the world that rectitude and peace "which alone can bring happiness and liberty to mankind."

Two conclusions may be drawn from the President's tour. Some will regard it as an evangel of war, like the "fiery cross," which was carried from point to point to arouse the people to imminent danger—though such an interpretation might suggest that the President, in some of his more vivid passages, may have been carried away by the current of his own eloquence. Others will accept the addresses as a reaffirmation of the nation's love of peace—not peace at any price, but peace with honor, through sane and sensible diplomacy. Perhaps a third interpretation—and possibly the most accurate of the three—may be that the speeches are simply a statement of the Administration's policy in the present difficult situation. However this may be, no one can overlook in the Des Moines address the President's emphatic rebuke to the advocates of war who urge that we should mix up in the European strife. Such talk he declared to be opposed to the American spirit, which is essentially the peace spirit. And that President Wilson personally knows that spirit, he has made very clear in a single pregnant sentence:

"No voice has ever come to any public man more audibly, more unmistakably, than the voice of this great people has come to me, bearing this impressive lesson: 'We are counting on you to keep this country out of war!'"

Signs of Spring

"SPRING is coming!" So the poets tell us, and they believe it, too, though we shudder to think that it may yet turn out that winter has hardly begun. The editorial desk is covered with manuscripts—written in more or less mellifluous rhyme. "Spring is—coming!" groans the editor. "Sprig is cubbing," sneezes the population of city and country and—almost—the nation. And the population, disdainful of the rhymesters, puts on its rubbers and steps gingerly through the mud, and wraps its muffler tenderly about its throat. For an early spring, as the doctors wisely suggest, may mean conditions that are far from welcome.

"Spring is coming," sighs the romantic urban citizen, as he sits on a park bench and looks vaguely up at the trees, in search, perhaps, of a budding branch or a flowering bough. And then he writes a poem, which, in turn, brings us back to the editorial desk.

Signs of spring are creeping insidiously over the land. One sees straw hats where there have been velvets; one sees flowers — stands of them — on the busy street corners; one sniffs the dampness of the air and one's heart beats ecstatically to the tune of awakening life. And one wonders if, over the sea, spring will bring a bit of hope—if it will be a time of resurrection and forgiveness. One wonders if spring will come with the benediction of green growing things where graves have been.

Spring is coming! And the earth trembles at its approach. For one is never too old to smile at the first blade of grass, or to thrill to the music of the first crooning breeze, or to offer a prayer of thanksgiving at the first song of a bird. But the average man, scenting a possibly false alarm in this midwinter mildness, wisely resolves to keep his heavy overcoat at hand, lest the "roaring winds of March" may set back the hopes of the songsters—both birds and poets.

The Growth of Divorce

DIVORCES in the United States are more numerous than in any other country in the world. Mr. Wilcox, a competent statistician, ventures the opinion that more divorces are now granted here in a year than in all the rest of the Christian world together—more than in the whole of Europe (outside of the Balkan peninsula), civilized Australia, and America. This is a startling arraignment, even if only measurably accurate. Other sources of evidence confirm the extraordinary growth of the divorce evil. According to the last census, there were in the United States 156,176 men and 185,101 women who had been divorced—3 per cent. of the total male and 4 per cent. of the female population of the country. In the twenty years from 1887 to 1906, an average of one marriage in 12 terminated in divorce. In 1906, the divorce total was 72,062, nearly three times as many as in 1870. And the increase seems to be going on, especially in the Sc h and Southwest. Our divorce rate is double tha of Switzerland, three times that of France, five ti s that of Germany, and as large as the combined r s of Australia, Belgium, Sweden, Norway, Holl , Great Britain, Germany, Italy and Hungary. W e marriages have nearly doubled in number in 20 ye , divorces have increased almost threefold. Ju e H. W. H. Thomas of the Supreme Court of Califor , in a thoughtful article on the subject in the Chris n Statesman, calls attention to the serious situat . He questions whether it can be adequately met y additional legislation, although whatever would t d to increase public sentiment in upholding the sac ness of marriage would be a material help. But th e are the plain, hard, undeniable facts with which r country must deal; the divorce tide, rising in ll lands, is here reaching floodmark and threatens e family as an institution. And whatever injures e family, threatens the state itself.

Surely here is a question that touches the v y foundations of society. Some have claimed that th crease of divorces is a symptom of social conditi , and is related in a great measure to the new econo c status of women, and the change in the modern a tude toward the marriage tie. Whatever the ca , the record is sufficiently startling to set the ab t minds to seeking a remedy for conditions that c stantly threaten to become worse.

More Members, Fewer Churches

SUCH, in a nutshell, is the substance of the port of religious conditions in the United St s during the past twelve months, compiled y the Federal Council of the Churches of Ch , which is printed elsewhere in this issue of the Christ n Herald. It is a gratifying showing, especially in v v of the disturbed conditions that prevail through t the world, and which have been felt everywher n our own land. It shows, moreover, that the Christ n faith is moving steadily forward, and that neve s its progress so marked as during times of wide-spr l trouble, when the hearts of the people instinctiv seek the only source of real help and consolatio the Gospel of Jesus Christ. The decrease in the nu ber of churches is easily accounted for by preval t economic conditions, which have led to many cons dations, especially in rural districts that were "o churched." Yet it is worth noting that even in th e instances membership did not decline but rather creased. Protestant membership in all the bo s has gained 653,640 in the year, and 1,700 preac s have been added to the ministry. Such a remark e showing should stimulate all the churches to pre e for the great spiritual awakening that has alre y begun in Europe. Already, there is a sound of e Spirit "in the mulberry trees," foreshadowing e approaching visitation. It is time for our churc s everywhere to prepare to be ready to take advant e of the coming opportunity to win our unchurc d millions for Christ.

Gold Cradles and Wooden Coffins

IT is hard to get some kinds of news into the da papers. It is often hard to keep some items after they get in. An early afternoon editio f a New York evening paper the other day copious extracts from the report of Mrs. Frede k Nathan, president of the Consumers' League, ab t conditions of child labor in New York teneme . They were sad, gloomy lines to read, making o s heart uncomfortable and one's head perplexed. P tures of tiny children four years old working all day m ing pretty artificial flowers. (They could make pre false flowers, but never see or smell real flowe Families of little children working from early morn to late evening. Whole families getting a few cents r the week's work of all. "One family," the rep t declared, "was found in which three women work on flowers made together $4.30 every fifteen da . They made forget-me-not wreaths, and received se cents for one dozen wreaths. Families were fo whose combined earnings were only sixty cents a da . Worst of all was the picture of little children dy because of the long hours and the tainted air. In home after another there were little people with coughs—and stories of brothers or sisters who had di .

Now it happened that the column just next to t report contained the picture of a happy mother a the story of her new baby who will sleep in a cradle gold. Later editions of the paper kept the hap mother's picture and the story of the cradle of go , but one could not find anywhere in the crowd columns that earlier report of the little children b over their work, coughing, withering, dying.

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

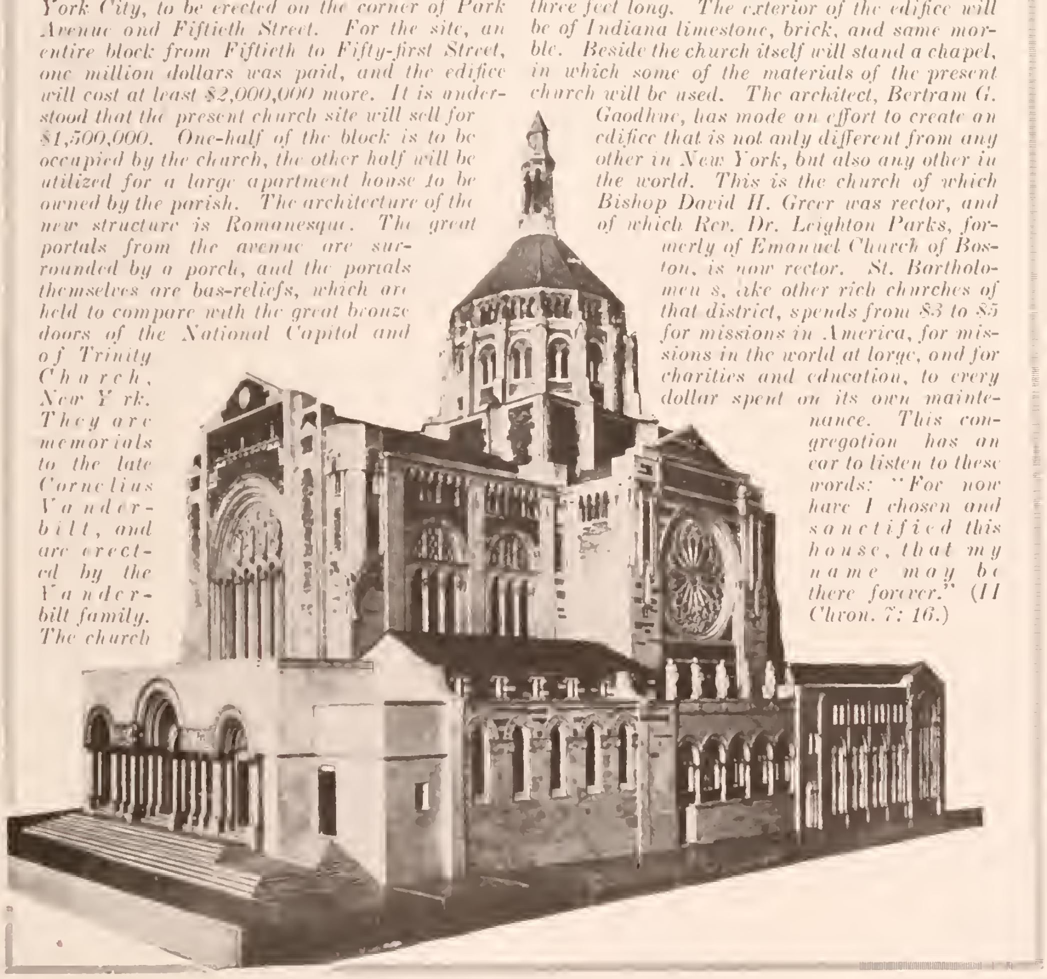
FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Canary Birds and Food

WHEN one watches the tiny canary bird picking at its little box of bird seed, he is not likely to reflect on t large quantity of that food which is een during the year. During the st year the canaries of this country nsumed 4,700,000 pounds of bird sd, which, at the advanced price ised by war's preventing importa- tn, amounts to $258,754.88. They ned their board. God made flowers t poetry of the plant realm, lds the poetry of the lower tes, and song-birds the mel- y of nature. What beautiful, jous little things the ca- ies are! How they brighten d cheer the home! They en know the voice of the n or woman, the boy or gl, and send back an affec- tnate response to it. They l sometimes put the little ak between the wires to ich those who pet and love em. God's care for the ds is thus referred to by rist: "Behold the fowls of air; for they sow not, neither they reap, nor gather into rns; yet your heavenly Father deth them." (Matt. 6: 26.)

St. Bartholomew's New Church

ONE of the finest church edifices on the continent will be the new St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church of New York City, to be erected on the corner of Park Avenue and Fiftieth Street. For the site, an entire block from Fiftieth to Fifty-first Street, one million dollars was paid, and the edifice will cost at least $2,000,000 more. It is understood that the present church site will sell for $1,500,000. One-half of the block is to be occupied by the church, the other half will be utilized for a large apartment house to be owned by the parish. The architecture of the new structure is Romanesque. The great portals from the avenue are surrounded by a porch, and the portals themselves are bas-reliefs, which are held to compare with the great bronze doors of the National Capitol and of Trinity Church, New Y rk. They are memorials to the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, and are erected by the Vanderbilt family. The church will seat 1,300 ordinarily, and there are galleries for 500 more. A feature of the front will be a great vestibule fifteen feet wide and seventy-three feet long. The exterior of the edifice will be of Indiana limestone, brick, and same marble. Beside the church itself will stand a chapel, in which some of the materials of the present church will be used. The architect, Bertram G. Gaodhue, has made an effort to create an edifice that is not anly different from any other in New York, but also any other in the world. This is the church of which Bishop David H. Greer was rector, and of which Rev. Dr. Leighton Parks, formerly of Emanuel Church of Boston, is now rector. St. Bartholomew s, ake other rich churches of that district, spends from $3 to $5 for missions in America, for missions in the world at large, and for charities and education, to every dollar spent on its own maintenance. This congregation has an ear to listen to these words: "For now have I chosen and sanctified this house, that my name may be there forever." (II Chron. 7: 16.)



uther's Wedding Ring

HE betrothal ring of Martin Luther has been ought to the United States, d has been loaned to the ew York Historical Society, here it is now on view in a ss case. The ring is owned Mrs. Maximilian Pinkert, fe of Rev. Dr. Pinkert, of the erman-American department rk of St. Bartholomew's hurch, and also connected th the Sailors' Institute. he ring celebrated the be- othal of Martin Luther to atharine von Bora. For 0 years it was in the posses- on of the ducal family of nhalt-Bernburg, of which atharine von Bora was a ember. The ring is com- sed of an intricate device gold work, set with a ruby, e symbol of exalted love. he design represents all the mbols of Christ's passion. the center is the crucified hrist, and on one side the ear with which his side was ierced. On the other side is a af of hyssop. What a valu- ble heirloom is this ring! Durable ones put into the permanent masonry f church buildings, and beautiful char- ter made out of the precious stones of ought, affection and devotion, can e found as memorials of Luther hroughout the world. Christ thus efers to the ring as the badge of love: And put a ring on his hand." (Luke 5: 22.)

Ushers Important in Service

REV. DR. HOWARD DUFFIELD, pastor of the old First Presby- erian Church of New York City, said: 'Ushering in the church is the science f hospitality and the art of making ne feel welcome and wanted. Ushers re the apostles of the 'glad hand.' he church is heated by them better han by its furnace, or chilled by them nore than by a cold wave." The nanner in which strangers are met at he church door has much to do in reparing their hearts for the worship nd message of the hour. All the politeness ought not to be in the ushers; they should reflect the hospitality of the whole membership. The church is nothing if not a brotherhood, and an atmosphere of sincere affection and prayer is powerful in sanctifying the sermon and bringing souls into the Kingdom. The ushers and members of the congregation, however wealthy or cultivated, should be genuinely democratic in spirit and action, if they would expect the divine approval, or the favor of the people. The poor man out of the factory, and his wife and children with plain clothes who have come up from the ragged districts of the city into the rich church on the avenue, should be treated with the same sincere consideration as the multimillionaire and his family. Fortunately, a large number of ministers and congregations of important churches have the spirit of democracy, the spirit of the Christ, in this regard. The Scriptures are very plain on the subject: "If there come into your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment, and ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place, and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool, are ye not then partial in yourselves?" (James 2: 2-4.)

Taken Alive from Mine

AFTER being entombed by a fall of coal in a mine of the Reading Company near Shamokin, Pa., for a period of ninety-six hours, without food or water, Joseph Renock, a miner, was taken out alive recently. A force of 120 men had been working for four days at the risk of their lives in an effort to rescue the imprisoned man. In thei path they found a large steel car which they had to chisel away. Members of his family were at the mine when Renock was rescued, and the rejoicing was beyond description. The rescued man was rushed to the hospital, and was returned to his home and work again. What a superb type of manhood do we find among these hardy miners! They take their lives in their hands every day away from God's sunlight, to get fuel for the public comfort and convenience, and they will not hesitate an instant in rescuing a fellow-workman in danger or distress. Oh, if men could be so prompt and persistent in saving the imprisoned souls of men! Some are; may the number increase, imitating him of whom it was said: "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." (Luke 19 : 10.)

Swans Released from Ice

DURING the severe cold snap recently, swans were frozen in on a lake at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., and the best part of a morning was devoted to cutting them out of the ice. There was much hissing, darting of long necks and snapping of yellow bills during the liberating process. Crowds of people thronged the shores of the lake to witness the performance. Last autumn a lovely winter retreat was built on an island in the lake for the swans, the cottage being of beautiful architecture, and protected from the wind by thick brush. But the swans paid no attention to the provisions made for their comfort, and preferred in weather not far from zero to sleep out in the water where they could be "tucked in" with the ice, and hence they were fortunate in having some one to chop them out of their predicament and save their lives. Hereafter during the cold season the swans will be fed in the winter-house, in hopes of enticing them into it at night. So many people are like these foolish swans, who do not know enough to come out of the danger and death of the cold into the warm winter quarters provided for them. The swan was excluded from the dietary of the Jews in this forbidden list: "And the swan, and the pelican, and the gier eagle, and the stork, the heron after her kind, and the lapwing, and the bat." (Lev. 11: 18, 19.)

Bridge Whist Mad

DISPLAY notices in the papers of a bridge party given by the wife of one of the wealthy and prominent men in the country, in New York City recently, stated that the winners at each table got as a prize one share of a dividend paying stock worth $117 and that the prizes at the six tables amounted to $702. The papers said bridge games were not new and that large prizes had been played for, but the novelty of the prize justified the publicity. The papers might have said that many of the women of so-called high society have gone mad on the subject of bridge whist, and that the open and wide-spread gambling connected with it has gotten to be a public disgrace. In the legal, technical sense, the game for the stock might not be counted gambling, because the element of loss to either party was wanting. But in a moral sense it was playing a game of cards for cold money, a good deal of it, too, and the bigger the amount at stake the more spice there was in the game. It ought not to take a very tender conscience to see that this is all wrong, and should cease in respectable homes. But the women at bridge do not wait for the wealthy hostess to put up fat prizes, they put their own money into a purse and play for it, the winners taking the cash, the others the empty bag. Fortunes are made and lost in American social life. More than one high society woman is in dire financial distress over the losses of the bridge parties. The police use the sledge hammer and crowbar in raiding the professional gambling hells, not any more guilty of this vice and crime than the magnificent apartments in the hotels, club rooms, and private residences of the cities where the women gamble at whist in their greed to get something for nothing. There are thousands of women in the highest circles of society who are grieved at their sisters who have gone mad over whist. A retired distiller, speaking of the curtailing of the liquor traffic in London, said the reform he thought most needed was to abolish gambling from the drinking house. The society women of America ought certainly to come up to the moral standard of the retired distiller, and "Provide things honest in the sight of all men." (Rom. 12 : 17.)

The Spirit of Mount Vernon

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

MOUNT VERNON HOUSE (front and rear views are here shown) was erected in 1743 for Lawrence Washington, half-brother of George, and was named in honor of Admiral Edward Vernon, R.N. under whose command Lawrence Washington had served during the British expedition against Cartagena in 1741. The property passed into the hands of George after the death of Lawrence in 1752. When Mrs. Washington died in 1802, Mount Vernon came, in accordance with Washington's will, the property of his nephew, Bushrod Washing who in turn bequeathed it to his nephew, John Augustine Washington, from whom it pa to a son of the same name, and in 1858 was bought by the Mount Vernon Ladies' Associat

THE Tired Girl sat looking gloomily out of the car window. Great house-dotted fields of rank grass swept past her—great spaces of low hills rose dully to meet the dulness of the gray sky.

"So this is—Virginia!" murmured the Tired Girl. "So this is—Virginia!" There was a world of scorn in her quiet voice

The schoolgirls in front were chattering. The dark one grasped her companion's arm in a healthily strong grip.

"It was down this bridle path," said the dark one, "that Washington rode when he went to church. Down this very road."

"On a white charger?" supplemented the other schoolgirl, who was tiny and blonde and rather infantile. "Oh, Milly! do you s'pose it was on a white charger that he rode down that path?"

The dark one patted the small hand that gripped hers affectionately. "I'm sure it was a white charger," she answered.

The smaller one wiggled ecstatically, but the Tired Girl on the seat behind them sank even more deeply into her gloom. "Was I ever as young as that?" she wondered. "Could I ever have said such young things?"

More dull fields and gentle hills rolled by. Wooded stretches crept down softly to the car track and lost themselves in other wooded stretches. Once a holly tree grew gaily up from between two green pines.

The dark schoolgirl almost fell out of the window. "Holly growing!" she squealed, and her excited tug almost pulled the small blonde one out of her seat. "Holly growing!" came from the blonde one, echo-like.

"What of it?" whispered the Tired Girl, also echo-like.

The guard came tramping down the aisle, his arms full of post cards. "Best views of Washington's home!" he cried. "Arlington and Mount Vernon! Church he worshiped in! Room he died in! Tomb! Three for five cents!" His voice resounded metallically through the car, and the Tired Girl shuddered at the grind of it.

All over the car folk were buying picture postals—at three for five cents. The schoolgirls were already addressing theirs to chums in the little home town up North. The bride and groom (there are always a bride and groom on the car to Mount Vernon) were sending a whole dozen home to mother. The Tired Girl waved the card-vender away with a limp, rather bored hand, and shrank nearer to the window. Somehow it seemed almost sacrilegious to her to see the eager people buying those almost sacred views—at least very personal views—at three for five cents.

She had the same feeling when she reached the gates of Mount Vernon. The car stopped and the crowd of people climbed off merrily and began to spend their money on popcorn, and candy, and souvenirs, at a little shop that stood near. The Tired Girl shrank from the ash-trays that were stamped with the view of our first President's last resting-place. She shuddered at the cheap china plates with the dignified kindly face painted on them.

"They must even commercialize him!" she murmured as she followed the crowds through the gate and up to the great house that stood out whitely from the greenness of the stately lawn.

It was a beautiful view. Even the Tired Girl caught her breath in delight at the wonder of it. The young groom put his arm quite frankly around his wife, and the schoolgirls stood hand in hand—for once quiet. Far off the Potomac flowed between graceful hills—a blue dream-river with a bit of pearly white cloud nestled in its heart. The lawn of Mount Vernon crept softly down until it seemed to meet the water, and the huge old trees cast long dark shadows on the terraces. Above it all the house stood—snow-white, dignified, a perfect type of high-pillared colonial architecture.

A spell hung over the crowd. Perhaps they saw, in a phantom procession, the brocade-dressed, powdered figures walking grandly across the lawn, down the broad porch.

The dark schoolgirl broke the rather heavy silence. "Seems like a dream—almost," she said softly.

The spell was broken like a pin-pricked bubble, and people began to talk again. The bride and groom hurried to the little stone kitchen that was connected to the house by a small bit of porch. Men and women scampered in through the doors. The Tired Girl paused for a moment on the porch—alone.

"THEY have none of the finer feelings!" she half sobbed—"I've always looked forward to going through Mount Vernon in a reverent way. I can't go at it as if it were a matinée."

"But," said a voice commiseratingly "you mustn't mind that, you mustn't mind it at all! They don't mean anything. It's just their way of being interested."

The Tired Girl looked around. A stately old man stood at her side—a man who had not come up with her on the car. Strangely she felt drawn to him.

"You see," she said rather eagerly, "you see, I'm a bit disappointed. I've been teaching a difficult class in school for two years, saving up money for this trip. And, after all the trouble and privation, I was so tired that I wanted to get away from folks and, well—almost worship by myself. And here I'm swamped with people, and loud conversation."

The man laughed gently. "You mustn't feel that way," he told her "You see, they love Washington as much as you do. But they don't love him in a morbid, hero-worshiping way. They love him, not as a legend, far above them, years back. They love him because he's the Father of the country; because he seems almost alive to them; because they feel as if they know him and he's a friend.

"As for the postals and souvenirs that you find—offensive. Well, those cards will probably go back home to folk who will never see Mount Vernon and haven't enough imagination to visualize it without a picture. Some of those pictures will go between pages of the family Bible—and they will be looked reverently."

The Tired Girl was staring out across the b Potomac. And, as she stared, some of the tiredn crept away—and some of the impatience. She smi as the low gentlemanly voice spoke again.

"We'll go through the house now," said the old m

Through the house they went. They peered i the library and saw Washington's books; they saw flute and the yellow music that rested on the top of worn harpsichord; they climbed the old-fashion stairs and saw the room where Lafayette slept, a little Nellie Custis's bedchamber. They climbed other flight of narrower stairs to a bedroom far fr the others. One could see Washington's tomb fr that window.

"Martha Washington lived in this room after President died," said the low voice, "so that she co see his last resting-place."

The schoolgirls were standing together, quiet They clutched hands. The Tired Girl felt, sudden that after all they had something in common.

Slowly, very slowly, they made their way down stairs, and at the foot the old gentleman bowed i dignified, courtly way. "It has been a pleasure to t with you," he said to the Tired Girl, "and I'm s you feel differently. You don't resent the three-f five-cents postal cards—or the noisy enthusiasm—you?"

"I don't resent anything," said the Tired G warmly; "and I am not even tired—now. Why, I f as if the spirit of Washington had taken me throu his home."

THE car was about to leave and the crowds noisy people were hurrying for the best sea The Tired Girl fell in with the two schoolgirls. Th spoke to her in their frank, comradely way.

"You looked so lonely, going through the house yourself," said the dark one.

"By myself?" echoed the Tired Girl blankly.

"And once or twice we thought you were talking yourself," added the little blonde girl. "We alm asked you if you wouldn't join us."

They had reached the tawdry little shop, and t schoolgirls, giggling, rushed for the car. But the Tir Girl spoke hurriedly to the stolid clerk who lean against the counter.

"I want a plate," she told him, "a souvenir pla With the biggest head of Washington you have stock!"

In a glory of gold and violet and rose the sun w setting. It turned the Potomac into a veritable s of glory; the low little mountains rose grandly throu a mist of color. It rested on the old manor house wi a caress, but the last golden beams fluttered across t quiet tomb with all the gentleness of an eter benediction.

With the cheap plate clasped lovingly in her ar the girl boarded the car.

Among the Workers

REV. W. E. BROWNING, Santiago, Chile, writes: "The crisis occasioned by the European war still persists in Chile, but I feel that the worst is over; business men are beginning to regain confidence, the saltpeter industry in the north, where, as a school, we lost heavily, is again opening up. Good financial prophets are anticipating that 1916 will be a banner year for all Chile."

THE death is reported from Tokyo on October 29 of the Rev. David Thompson, D.D., and on November 21 of the Rev. Theodore M. MacNair, two noted Presbyterian missionaries. Dr. Thompson was born in Harrison County, Ohio, September 21, 1835, and was the first ordained missionary of his church to be sent to Japan. He worked six years before he baptized any one. Mr. MacNair's activity lay in evangelistic and itinerating work, but his lasting and perhaps his greatest service to the church in Japan was in connection with its hymnology.

REV. JAMES A. WALKER, who has been for seven years pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Chicago, will leave his pastorate on February 2 to become an assistant to Evangelist William A. Sunday. He will join the Sunday party at Baltimore, and will take up part of the work Mrs. Sunday has been doing, especially the work of meeting delegates and arranging dates for Bible campaigns.

FOR ten days in November, Kansas Wesleyan University at Salina, Kan., and the University Methodist Episcopal Church united in revival meetings under the leadership of the president of the college. In the ten days there were about one hundred and fifty at the altar and, following the meetings, sixty-seven people joined the church.

REPORTS of the work, during November, Sivert Sorenson and his fellow-workers El Paso, Texas, have just reached the Christi Herald. During the month the three m sionaries visited 260 residences in vari localities and 500 officers and men of the Six Infantry, U. S. A., assisting thirty-one si persons, and distributing altogether 59,0 pages of tracts and religious literature the English and Spanish languages.

DR. J. H. ELLIOTT, formerly of the Moo Bible Institute, Chicago, Ill., who two years has been in charge of the Austr asian Chapman-Alexander Bible Institute Adelaide, South Australia, will return America shortly after February 1 and w resume evangelistic work in this count Dr. Elliott organized the work at Adelai

More Opinions on "Preparedness"

A Reversion to Savagery

IT is a well-known fact that five-eighths of the total population of the world are at war; five-eighths of all the people stand on the brink of savagery. These same people less than two years ago claimed to be civilized and cultured people. No doubt the majority were when they claimed and would be at the present time if it had not been for their listening to the militarist with his savage instinct. They accepted the militarist as their leader to lead them down to their own destruction with banners flying bearing the inscription of "A Reversion to Savagery."

The militarist is always a destroyer, never a builder, except for the purpose of destruction. It is he who has caused the dethronement of kings, who has blotted out peaceful governments and placed their subjects in bondage. The militarist is a parasite whom civilized men should eradicate from the affairs of government. We find every nation infested with these parasites. They are plentiful as fleas on a dog's back. They put the brakes on civilized advancement and retard moral growth. Even our own United States is overrun with them at the present time. You will find them in public places, with their banners unfurled and flying to the breeze, emblazoned with the scare-crow warning—"Preparedness." They would have you believe that the enemy is at the door and that, if we don't prepare he will break in and confiscate our belongings and place us in bondage. This is either the dream of the coward, or the cunning plan of the wolf in sheep's clothing, who expects to steal your valuables while he has you watching for an imaginary enemy. He is trying to get his hands in your pocket, or rather he already has them there, and does not want to withdraw them.

They tell us that in time of peace, we must prepare for war. Why not in time of peace prepare for a continuation of peace? Send the militarist into exile; brand him as an undesirable person to remain among civilized men.

God in his Word tells us that a man who fails to provide for his own household is worse than an infidel. As a hint, why not prepare for your own household, instead of that of the savage militarist?

Inscribe on your banners, "Vox Populi, Vox Dei"—The Voice of the People is the Voice of God. Prepare for Peace. C. I. WATKINS.

New Martinsville, W. Va.

As a Philadelphian Views It

THE favorite cry of the advocates of national disarmament, or peace at any price, is that "the European War proves that preparedness does not prevent war." The answer is: Who says it does? Their case would be more effective if they could show any advocates of preparedness who believe that being suitably armed will prevent war. It would be just as sensible to say that the existence of the Philadelphia police and detective force renders all citizens safe from theft or assault. And the abolishment of said police force would be just as sensible as the disarmament projects of some people, and their opposition to increasing our army and navy. I wonder if these people would live up to their views if confronted with actual conditions which would test them. I wonder if, after a burglar had entered their home, beaten to death some member of their family, and decamped with thousands of dollars' worth of plunder, they would view with complacency, not to mention ardor, a proposition to reduce the police force in that vicinity. I wonder if they would not, perhaps, favor increasing that protection, not, to be sure, with the idea that such protection would render them immune in future, but with the purpose of rendering such an occurrence as improbable as it is humanly possible to make it. CHARLES WILLING.

Philadelphia, Pa.

A Southern Veteran Speaks

INASMUCH as your paper has taken a stand against "preparedness," I wish to give you the standpoint from whence an old ex-Confederate and farmer sees it.

In scanning the world's political horizon, it would seem to be worse than folly for us to go into this extravagance. The European belligerents have beaten themselves into a frazzle, morally and financially. So show us the menacing bugaboo that the professional militarists—Wall street and the munition manufacturers—have up their sleeves. Here is a truism in economics: that all the sources of wealth are the creation of manual labor. The same plea comes up from the wealth-producers that came to Rehoboam against Solomon's oppressive taxation.

There is an axiom that "a burnt child is afraid of the fire." The great labor element looks back with pain when it sees the countless billions we had to foot at the close of our Civil War. I claim that the United States made no debt during that unpleasantness, but that it was done solely by the shrewd manipulators of our finances, to satisfy Mammon's greedy maw. Or look at the Spanish-American War, when countless millions were poured out to give plenty of bonds to bank on, and a standing army to keep the labor striking element in place with fat jobs to army contractors.

Read Isaiah 5th chapter, also Nehemiah 5th chapter, and if you do not see a correct picture of the United States with the aggravation of Sabbath breaking added, I do not know where you would find it.

If the trained militarists from the highest to the lowest lieutenant had to bare their breasts for the "Kilkenny cat" feast, I would say, drive ahead with your killing, as the world needs this butcher shop no longer.

The whole matter resolves itself in this light to me: If the world would spend one half the money to Christianize and save men that is now spent in "preparedness" and killing them, the millennium would be here.

As individuals in governments have to adjust their differences in courts, the sensible thing for nations would be to do the same. I can see no reason why it could not be done, except for those satellites who prey upon their governments and enslave the common people. R. J. MASON.

Bridgewater, Va.

A Year of Religious Growth

IN the Bulletin of Church Statistics just issued by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, progress is noted in all the leading denominations. The figures are by Dr. H. K. Carroll (the compiler of the first Religious Census ever taken by the United States government) and are based on the latest official denominational returns. Where these are not available, approximate figures are given on information derived from other sources. The compiler states frankly that in a number of cases no returns later than those of the 1906 census are available. In a few instances, estimates have been supplied by denominational statisticians.

Dr. Carroll notes that the Jewish figures are misleading. No official denominational statistics have been furnished concerning Hebrew congregations in the last ten years. He estimates the number of adults connected with Jewish congregations at 700,000. The Christian Catholic Church (Dowie), the Catholic Apostolic branches, and the Christian Scientists have furnished no returns of membership. The Bulletin says:

"The European War did not, apparently, seriously affect the prosperity of the Churches of the United States in 1915. There is a net increase of nearly 654,000 communicants. The Catholics added nearly 188,000 to their numbers, the Methodists upward of 144,000, the Baptists nearly 131,000, the Presbyterians over 69,000, of which the Northern body had nearly 53,000 and the Southern almost 22,000. These last are quite unusual gains. The Protestant Episcopal Church is larger than it was by 25,648. The Southern Baptists had an increase of 116,000 and more, and the Southern Methodists of 66,000; adding the Southern Presbyterians the net increase of these three bodies was more than 204,000. The returns for the Disciples of Christ for 1915 are not yet ready. There has been a net decrease, instead of the normal increase, of churches. The actual loss is not large, only 158, but in 1914 there was a gain of over 1,300. Doubtless the hard times that seem to have come upon the churches in the rural regions, and which have led to the closing of a number of churches which were formerly flourishing, and to the consolidation of many others, accounts at least in part for the decrease.

"The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, embracing thirty of the leading Evangelical churches, reports net gains in 1915 of 1,263 ministers, 157 churches and 320,029 communicants. This latter number indicates that this group of churches absorbs nearly half the total gains of the year.

"In their finances, the churches generally have not suffered. The total income for foreign missions was $1,600,000 greater in 1915 than in 1914; that for home missions shows a falling off of about $730,000.

"The increase for the quarter century since 1890 is very large. Denominational groups of 100,000 communicants and upwards, embracing all but about 2,100,000, have nearly doubled their numbers. Having 19,328,000 in 1890 they now have 37,255,000, indicating a net gain for the twenty-five years of nearly 18,000,000, or more than 98 per cent."

	SUMMARY			Net Gains for 1915
DENOMINATIONS	Ministers	Churches	Members	Ministers	Churches	Members
Adventists (6 bodies)	1,233	2,742	106,347	26	76	5,229
Baptists (15 bodies)	13,546	57,520	6,307,055	65	5	130,838
Brethren (Dunkards) (4 bodies)	3,554	1,260	123,844	121	*d*29	2,369
Brethren (Plymouth) (4 bodies)	...	403	10,566			.
Brethren (River) (2 bodies)	224	105	4,903	.		.
Buddhists (2 bodies)	15	74	3,165	.	.	. .
Catholic Apostolic (2 bodies)	33	24	4,927	...	...	.
Catholic (Eastern Orthodox) (7 bodies)	338	419	467,500	*d*3	18	5,000
Catholic (Western) (3 bodies)	19,462	15,302	14,079,208	405	280	187,795
Christadelphians	....	70	1,500	...		88
Christians	1,066	1,360	113,887	. .		. . .
Christian Catholic (Dowie)	35	17	5,865	.	. .	...
Christian Union	360	320	16,300	6	18	1,083
Church of Christ Scientist	2,828	1,414	85,096	156	78	....
Churches of God (Winebrennarian)	440	493	28,650	20	4	3,224
Churches of the Living God (Colored)	101	68	4,286	. .		....
Churches of the New Jerusalem (2 bodies)	147	151	9,713	4	4	42
Church Transcendent	2	3	144	2	3	144
Communistic Societies (2 bodies)	....	22	2,272	...	...	....
Congregationalists	5,923	6,108	771,362	. .	15	8,180
Disciples of Christ (2 bodies)	8,261	11,143	1,522,821	...	...	....
Evangelical (2 bodies)	1,564	2,601	205,255	*d*5	3	10,720
Faith Associations (9 bodies)	241	146	9,572	...	...	. . .
Free Christian Zion Church	20	15	1,835	. .	...	. . .
Friends (4 bodies)	1,471	998	120,712	...	*d*44	*d*1,292
Friends of the Temple	3	3	376	...	...	....
German Evangelical Protestant	59	66	34,704	...	...	....
German Evangelical Synod	1,085	1,378	264,097	27	13	....
Jewish Congregations	1,084	1,769	143,000	...	...	....
Latter-Day Saints (2 bodies)	4,135	1,680	397,000	335	55	22,000
Lutherans (21 bodies)	9,688	15,269	2,434,184	238	*d*951	*d*10,786
Scandinavian Evangelical (3 bodies)	629	857	72,900	...	...	....
Mennonites (12 bodies)	1,476	760	61,331	63	24	3,994
Methodists (16 bodies)	42,088	62,728	7,472,108	163	314	144,079
Moravians (2 bodies)	149	147	21,146	2	4	531
Nonsectarian Bible Faith Churches	50	204	6,396	...	...	....
Pentecostal (2 bodies)	890	878	33,409	88	134	4,613
Presbyterians (12 bodies)	14,012	16,530	2,104,039	69	*d*290	69,148
Protestant Episcopal (2 bodies)	5,621	8,141	1,051,696	*d*8	139	25,648
Reformed (4 bodies)	2,155	2,782	502,602	*d*22	12	23,651
Reformed Catholic	7	6	3,250	...	...	....
Salvation Army	2,961	941	27,664	53	37	207
Schwenkfelders	6	6	1,043	1	...	4
Social Brethren	15	17	1,262	...	...	....
Society for Ethical Culture	7	6	2,450	...	...	....
Spiritualists	...	2,100	200,000	...	...	....
Theosophical Society	....	154	4,714	...	...	....
Unitarians	512	469	70,542	*d*12	*d*6	....
United Brethren (2 bodies)	2,185	4,022	360,387	*d*78	*d*76	17,171
Universalists	656	763	55,000	...	...	....
Independent Congregations	267	879	48,673	...	...	....
Grand Total in 1915	180,604	225,333	39,380,670	1,716	*d*160	653,592
Grand Total in 1914	178,888	225,493	38,727,078	3,810	1,321	782,007

Among the Metlakahtlans

CONTINUING FRANK G. CARPENTER'S NARRATIVE

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

I HAVE come to Annette Island to visit Metlakahtla. This is the seat of the Indian colony brought here from British Columbia by Dr. Duncan, now almost thirty years ago. Every one has heard of Dr. Duncan's wonderful work with the Indians. He is now eighty-four years of age and is still strong and full of vigor. He is sometimes called the apostle of Alaska, and his work with these Indians gives him a right to the title. Dr. Duncan began life as a commercial traveler in England, and at twenty-one he was well on his way toward a salary of $5,000 a year. He was naturally religious, and he decided to give up his work and become a missionary. He went to college expecting to be sent out to India, but instead he was ordered to go to the western coast of British Columbia to work with a tribe of Indians known as the Tsimpseans. (Dr. Duncan represented the Missionary Society of the Episcopal Church.)

These Tsimpsean Indians were then among the most barbarous of any on the North American continent. They believed in witch doctors and were given over to cannibalism. They were hunters and fishers and clothed themselves in the skins of bears and wolves. They had weird dances, during which they wore the skulls of bears on their heads. They had medicine men who wore masks and who tried to frighten off disease with hideous noises. If the demon of disease did not leave, the witch doctors would hack away the sore places on the body of the patient with their knives, or suck or burn away the ailing flesh. They pointed out children and others as possessed of evil spirits and as being witches, and in such cases the tribe felt they must kill those so afflicted. The Indians believed in spirits, and they had certain theories as to the transmigration of souls. On the whole, they were on a very low scale of civilization.

When Dr. Duncan arrived in Victoria on his way to this work, he was told that if he went on to the Indians he would surely be killed. The man who gave him the warning was the head of the Hudson's Bay Company, who, when Dr. Duncan still insisted, said: "Well, my good man, if you are to be killed and eaten I suppose you are the one most interested, and we shall have to let you do as you wish."

It is enough here to say that he converted eight or nine of these tribes to the Christian religion and made them about the most law-abiding and civilized people of the Indian race. They had their own council and they governed themselves. They had their own boats and they established a canning factory and put up salmon for shipment. They learned to make ropes and brushes, to weave and to spin. Dr. Duncan went to England and brought back musical instruments and they established a brass band. They had a schoolhouse and a church with an organ, which they were able to play. They had their market house, their shops, their carpenters, tinners, coopers and other mechanics. They kept the Sabbath and led moral lives. What has taken ages to accomplish with other peoples these Indians, under Dr. Duncan, accomplished in less than thirty years.

The Red, White and Blue Library and Jail Building

ABOUT this time the Church of England sent over a bishop to rule, and Dr. Duncan found that his work was being undone, and he then asked the United States to allow his Indians to settle on our territory. That was in 1887. The matter was much agitated in the United States. Dr. Duncan was supported by Henry Ward Beecher, Phillips Brooks and others, and through their efforts a territory was allotted to him and his Indians on the northwestern side of this island. They came in August and the first thing they did was to erect a flagpole and hoist the Stars and Stripes.

School Recently Erected by the United States Government on Annette Island

The next day a sawmill was unloaded, and the people began at once to clear the forests and erect the buildings for their new homes. They gradually established the most advanced native community in the western part of the North Amerrican continent.

The settlement was called New Metlakahtla and since then the Indians have been known as the Metlakahtlans. In 1891 Annette Island was set aside by Congress as a reservation for them and it was provided that it should be used by them in common under such rules and regulations as might be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Annette Island is fifteen miles long and ten miles wide and is formed by a long mountain on the backbone of which are a number of beautiful lakes. The mountain is wooded and it assumes a purple tinge under the cloudy sky. About Port Chester the land slopes gently down to the sea. Here the trees have been cut away and a few hundred acres have been cleared and divided up into town lots for the buildings. At the left as you come into the harbor you see a silvery cascade tumbling down the slope of the mountain. It comes from Lake Chester, a short distance inland and at an elevation of 850 feet above the sea.

The most conspicuous building in the town is a great white frame structure with two towers. This is the Westminster Abbey of Metlakahtla. It is Dr. Duncan's church and was built by the Indians at a cost of $12,000. It is the largest church in Alaska, and will comfortably seat 500 people. One of the striking buildings of New Metlakahtla is the library and jail. This is painted in the colors of the American flag. The first story is bright red; it is the jail. The second story is snow white; it is the library. The cupola on the top is bright blue.

Close to the beach and running back from it are the homes of the people, several hundred in number. They have glass windows, porches and comfortable surroundings. Wherever there is an uncultivated spot salmonberry and elderberry bushes and fireweed have grown to the height of your waist. The whole country about is clad in perennial green.

LANDING, I walked from the wharf over the long board walk to the offices of Dr. Duncan. He has one building which is his combined study and home. I knocked on the door, and a moment later Dr. Duncan stood before me.

Dr. Duncan is of less than medium height, and he weighs not more than 150 pounds. He has a large head, a bit bald at the crown, but beyond that thatched with silvery white hair. His face is as rosy as that of a baby when exposed to the winds of winter, and his eyes are as blue as the skies that cover his island. He has a heavy white beard, and his face is a benediction. As I looked at him I could not realize that he was eighty-four years of age, and when he spoke his voice was like that of a man in his prime.

Our first talk was about the Indians as he found them when he came to British Columbia. I asked him whether the Indians were really cannibals when he found them and whether he had actually seen them eating each other. He replied that he had seen a woman killed, and had seen the savages eating a boy who had died on the beach. That was almost sixty years ago. He tells me that many of the tribes along the coast of British Columbia at that time were cannibals, and that there were other cannibals north and south of the Tsimpseans among whom he worked. Cannibalism was a part of their religion, and was connected with the rites of their medicine men. He said:

"I had heard of the cannibalism, and one day an officer of the fort ran into my house and told me the Indians were about to kill one of their women. He warned me to keep in and said that I would surely be killed if I attemped to interfere. A moment later another man rushed in and said that the woman had already been killed. We went out to the beach where the crowd of Indians was. They were divided into two bands, each led by a brave who was stark naked. All were howling horribly. They had killed a woman and cut her in half and each of the nude Indian leaders was carrying his half of the woman in his teeth. As we came up the bands separated and each gathered around its leader. They were so crowded together that I could not see. They sat down in tw great bunches on the sand. When they ot up not a vestige of the woman wa o be seen. What became of the flesh I not know, but I was told it was eat and that all had engaged in the fea ”

"Do you mean to say that tl ate the flesh without cooking it?"

"Yes, they must have eaten raw, for, as I say, the woman disap ared. They may have buried the bone the sand."

"You spoke of seeing a boy lled, Dr. Duncan?"

"No, I did not see him kille The boy died of consumption. His bo was laid out upon the beach and was there eaten by the people."

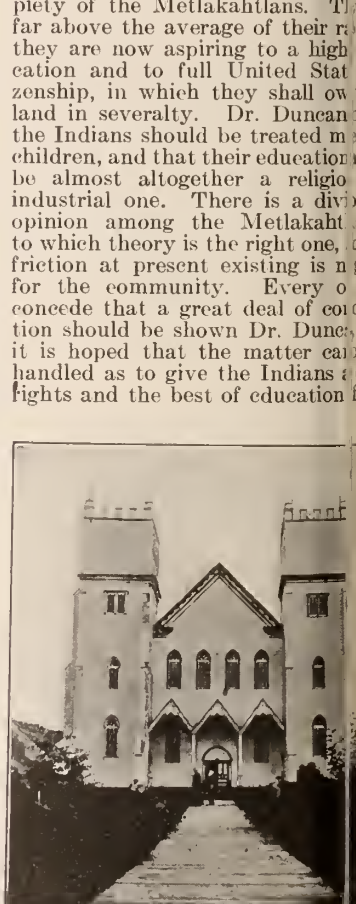
IT was from such material this that Dr. Duncan created the c lized community of the Metlakahtla the present. The community has i own preachers and its own public sp kers. Some of the sermons, in the Tsi sean language, are full of eloquen and beauty. Here, for instance, one urging the people to believe tl the Saviour will take care of them:

"Brethren and sisters: You kn the eagle and its ways. The eag flies high. The eagle rests high. It ways rests on the highest branch the highest tree. We should be l the eagle. We should rest on the ghest branch of the highest tree. That anch is Jesus Christ. When we rest him all our enemies will be below l far beneath us."

Another preacher who had f erly been vicious and high-tempered, eaking of himself, said:

"I will tell you what I feel m lf to be. I am like a bundle of weed loating down the stream. I was goin lown with all my sin, like the weeds, ered with earth and filth; but I cam the rapids, when lo! there was a pol tuck fast and firm in the rock, and I c ched at the pole, and there I am no The stream is passing by and washin away my filth. Christ to me is the e. I hold to him and am safe."

I MIGHT cite other quotati s to show the civilization, intellige and piety of the Metlakahtlans. T are far above the average of their r and they are now aspiring to a high education and to full United Stat citizenship, in which they shall ow their land in severalty. Dr. Duncan inks the Indians should be treated m like children, and that their education ould be almost altogether a religio and industrial one. There is a divi n of opinion among the Metlakaht s as to which theory is the right one, d the friction at present existing is n good for the community. Every o will concede that a great deal of co deration should be shown Dr. Dunc and it is hoped that the matter ca e so handled as to give the Indians civic rights and the best of education facil-



Dr. Duncan's Church, the Larg in Alaska; Will Seat 500 ities without destroying the Christian spirit of brotherly love that has existed between them and Dr. Duncan from the beginning.

I close my letter with the Lord's prayer in Tsimpsean:

"ee-Nahgwah-dum koo tsim lachah-gah Nelootiksh ah Noo-wahnt. Shaha-kshh ntsabbany. Shah-koad-kan tum wah ah halletsohamee. Ne-wahltksh tsim lachah-gah. Kinnam klahgam ah chah quah ahm shkabboo wenayah. Kamkoadan ah naht-ahtackamee, new-ahl-dah dee willah ham hoadamum ah haht-ach-ah-deah gam; Killohmdzah tahtaink umt shpiet t'in shpahlt koad-umt; addah mah al tillahmantkum ah haht-achahdat; Ahwill n'tsabbaniat, ad-dab nahkat kettandat, tilth n'cloadant, addah tum elah-willah wahl. Amen."

Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

THE PRAYER LEAGUE is gradually gaining a "Cradle Roll." Since the organization of the League many letters have come revealing sweet and sacred secrets of home life and asking special prayers for those who were about to face the ordeal leading to motherhood. Not long ago a young wife's mother wrote to ask prayers for her daughter in this time of special need. Four times previously the ordeal had been faced, but each time the little new life had been lost. Now her mother writes jubilantly: "With joy and thankfulness to God and to the League as his agents of love and ministry I can tell you—and am so glad to do so—that she and her baby boy are well. He is a Prayer League boy." There are a good many just such Prayer League boys and girls now, and we know that the members of the League will not forget to ask for God's special blessing upon their lives. Surely these prayer children will bring great cheer and blessing to the world.

Mrs. E. B. writes from Romeo, Mich.: "The Lord has saved one of my sons for whom I asked the prayers of the League about a year ago. He is now a faithful worker in the Salvation Army." Mrs. M. A. H. writes from Kalbell, Mont.: "Three times in the past year at critical points God has answered my prayers." S. W. B. writes from Quincy, Wis.: "About two months ago I requested prayers for my dear wife, who had just been operated on. The doctor gave little hope for her recovery. I want to tell you the prayers were speedily answered and she began to get better right away, and has had no setbacks. We wish to thank all those who prayed for us and also the dear Saviour, who is always willing and ready to answer prayers."

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have also been received from:

W. T. VanV., Gnadenhutten, Ohio; Mrs. E. H., Sodus, N. Y. (for selling farm); Mrs. C. H. B., Polk City, Iowa. A Prayer League Sister, Huntingdon, Pa., C. E. S., Berk Mass.; "Mother," Newport, Pa (for great financial help); Mrs. C. M., Whitehouse, Ky. Mrs. A. A. S., Hackettstown, N. J.; Mrs. J. S., St. Stephen, N. B.; J. R. L., Denmar Me.; L. O. B., Hot Springs, Ark.; M E. Tropic, Fla.; C. M., Buffalo, N. Y (for healing of brother); Mrs. S. E. R. H., Bldr, Va.; Mrs. C. H., Youngsville, Pa.; G. Gilmer, Wash.; L. E. B., Oakland, Cal (for removal of two heavy burdens).

A sad letter came the other day from the New York Tombs written by a man seventy years of age asking prayer for help in his trouble and that some one be sent to see him. Mr. Baker of the Bowery Mission visited him in his cell, giving him counsel and promising aid. He assured him that the members of the Christian Herald Family would join in prayer that he might be relieved of his troubles.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Chattanooga, Tenn.; Bentville, N. S., Canada; Pleasant Hill, Ore. (that God may manifest his saving power in the coming revival meetings); Covington, Ky (in the M E. Church); Knightstown, Ind.; Kingstown, R. I.; Scandia, Kan. (in the M. E. Church); Edinburg, Ill. (M. E. Church); M. E. Church at Sharpsburg, Ill., and Prairie Lea Church; Middleburg, N. C. (in the Baptist Church, and for special blessing upon the women's weekly prayer meeting); Lyons, N. Y.; Spokane, Wash.; Columbia Falls, Mont.; Athens, Pa. Vineland, N. J (in the Mount Hermon Institute); Polk City, Iowa; W. Springfield, Ma.; Mount Pocono, Pa., Windsor, Pa.; the U. B. Churches of Millport, Coneville, Crystal and Oswayo, Pa.; Carrollton, Miss.; Elkhorn, Ky.; Kenesaw, Neb.; Mrs. M. J S. (for a little Holiness Band that has started up here in Landon, Ohio, that it may prosper in number); that the state of Louisiana may win the fight for state-wide prohibition.

Mrs. A. E. C., Mrs. F. R., Mrs. O. D., ask prayers that their sons' minds may be restored; Mrs. F. C. P., Mrs. M. E. K., B. B. B., their daughters'; A Broken Hearted Mother, that daughter's mind may be strengthened; Mr. and Mrs. R. B. S., that depressions and delusions may be entirely removed from daughter's mind and that she may return home; Mrs. F. B. C., that daughter's, brother's and own mind may be strengthened; Miss J. S. W., that brother's mind may be restored and strengthened; Mrs. A. C. L., that mother's mind may be restored. Twenty-one other friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for other relatives, friends or themselves; Mrs. A. E. C., that I may be healed of eye trouble which threatens blindness; Marie, that Mrs. C.'s sight may be restored. Mrs. C. A. G., Mrs. R. F. W., Mrs. M. E. R., Mrs. M. S. H. ask prayer that their sons' eyesight may be restored. Seventeen other friends ask prayers for the restoration or strengthening of sight for other friends or relatives or for themselves.

Sixty-four friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Eight parents ask prayer that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit; Mrs. E. C. C., Mrs. C. R W., Mrs. D B. R., Mrs. E., their husbands; Miss W. W. that father may be delivered from the habit; An Anxious Sister, that brother may be cured of the liquor habit and his two sons may be saved from forming the habit; another that daughter may be delivered from the liquor habit. Fourteen other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be delivered from this habit.

J. E. D. and W. B. ask prayer that friends may be cured of the drug habit.

E. B., M. E., Mr. and Mrs. W. F. M. ask prayer that their three sons may be saved. thirty-seven parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; twenty-seven wives, their husbands. eighty-nine friends ask prayers that friends or relatives may be converted, including one that a pastor be brought back from the things of the world to God.

Twenty-two readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends.

One hundred and twenty-three friends ask prayer for healing of friends or relatives, including Mrs. N. R., that daughter may have power of speech; and Mrs. E. E. V., that husband may be cured of cancer. Seventy-nine ask prayer for the healing of self.

I. D. H., A. E. R., Mrs. I. W., Mrs. I. V., that husbands' hearing may be restored. Mrs. C. H. B., that a mother's hearing may be restored; A Sad Sister, that sister's hearing may be restored; A. A. S., that mother's and own hearing may be restored. Sixteen others ask prayer for restoration of hearing for friends, relatives or for themselves.

Sixty-five friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Seventy-two friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including Mrs. M. B., that an old afflicted mother may have a home and be comfortable and cared for; O. A. M. that a friend's child and husband be reconciled to her; Mrs. M. B., Elkhorn, Ky., that church may be cleared of debt. Mrs. E. V. B., St. Cloud, Minn., that husband may receive a call to preach the Gospel. Mrs. O. C. J., Conway, Mo., that husband may receive a call to evangelistic work; M. S. E., Cincinnati, Ohio, that a minister may get a parish.

One hundred and forty-three friends ask prayers that friends or relatives may be healed, including B. S. that three brothers may be restored to health, and F. M. N., that grandchild may be cured of paralysis of hand and side. Ninety-nine ask prayer for healing of self, including three who ask that they may regain the use of limbs, another, Miss I. M., to regain the power of speech.

Mrs. M. E. W., asks prayers that daughter's hearing may be restored; Miss M. L. P., that sister's and own hearing may be restored. Twenty-one other friends ask prayer for healing of hearing for other relatives or friends or themselves.

Sixty-two friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Sixty-nine friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including one that a broken engagement may be renewed; N. E. H., that matters in a business trouble may be brought to a successful settlement; another that brother and his wife may be reconciled.

The Minerva
98¢
The Edna Mayo
98¢
The Newport
$7.75
Charles William Stores
New York Styles
Charles William Stores
New York City

FREE

The Largest Fashion Book Published

Write to day for your free copy

Have you received your copy of this big Fashion Book? More than 500 pages of new merchandise! 82 pages in actual colors. You will say you never saw such values! Send a postal card for it or mail the coupon below today!

In this book you will find, just as more than a million of our customers already have, that the wearing apparel you buy from the Charles William Stores gives you greater value than you ever before have secured, even when you bought by mail!

The Charles William Stores have built their business on the idea that money-saving, mail order prices should be extended to Merchandise of Quality. This won us more than a million customers in two years!

Another idea, which the Charles William Stores alone have, is the idea of a great group of specialty stores—43 of them—all managed with the same capital. Each store is under the direction of a man devoting his entire time to the one store, yet each store has the big cash-buying facilities which come from uniting the purchases of 43 stores.

The Newport Skirt Sport skirt of summer weight Corduroy with latest style pockets and belt. Can be worn with Newport coat or separately. Sizes 22 to 30 in. waist 34 to 42 in. length. State size and color No. 424A738 white; No. 424A739 rose; No. 424A740 Copenhagen blue. Prepaid $2.98

Coat and skirt complete . . $7.75

The Newport Coat Sport coat of summer weight Corduroy. Sateen lined. Sailor collar and cuffs of white Corduroy and belt to match. Can be worn with Newport skirt or separately. Sizes 32 to 44 in. bust. State color and size. No. 49A305 rose with white trimming; No. 49A304 Copenhagen blue with white trimming No. 49A306 white with rose trimming. Prepaid $4.98

Coat and skirt complete $7.75

The Edna Mayo Waist Voile with square collar, front frills and cuffs of Voile in contrasting shade. Pin-tucked, back and front. Collar, cuffs and front of waist trimmed with Irish pattern lace. Size 32 to 44 in. bust. State size and color. No. 424A2246 white trimmed with rose; No. 424A2247 white trimmed with Copenhagen blue. Prepaid 98c

The Minerva Voile trimmed in front and across back with embroidered Organdy. Collar of embroidered Organdy, edged with filet pattern lace. Front of blouse also filet lace trimmed. Deep hemstitched, turn-back cuffs. White only. Sizes 32 to 44 in. bust. State size. No. 424A2248. Prepaid 98c

Every day hundreds of letters like this are received:

"I received the goods which I purchased from you. They are far better than can be bought elsewhere for twice the money." J. B. C. Snow, Barney, Ga.

"The suit of clothes which I ordered from you was perfect in fit. I don't think I could have gotten a suit here for $20.00 as good as the one you sent for $15.00. Ray D. Godfrey, So. Fairles, Vt.

This book combines fifteen complete specialty stores, illustrating and describing everything in wearing apparel for all the family, together with a Jewelry Store showing more than 3000 items; sewing machines at lowest possible prices, and a dress goods store with a complete stock of dress goods, trimmings, notions, etc.

Free Prompt Delivery

Orders are filled and shipped promptly, and everything you order from us is sent prepaid. If your purchase is not entirely satisfactory, return it at our expense, and your money will be refunded.

SEND A POSTAL OR MAIL THE COUPON TODAY

Name . . . .
R. D. Route or Street No. . . . .
City and State . . . .
Please send your big Free Fashion Book the one which you say is the finest ever issued, to the above address.

The Charles William Stores
43 Stores Building
New York

Charles William Stores New York
AT THE NATIONS GATEWAY
43 Stores Building, New York

CRÈME SIMON
The Velvet Complexion Maker
Genuine Beauty

is imparted to Milady's delicate skin by the use of this incomparable face cream. Made by J. Simon & Co., Paris, France.

Poudre Simon—a genuinely pure rice powder and Savon Simon, a distinctively pure toilet soap, are two other delightful members of the Simon Family of pre-eminent toilet accessories.

CREAM, 45c, 75c and $1.25
POWDER, 40c and 75c
SOAP (one size only), 50c
At All Good Dealers

FREE A handsome and practical CREME SIMON diminution mirror sent free for the name of your dealer.

MAURICE LEVY, Sole U.S. Agent
Dep't "G", 15 W. 38th St., New York

$3.25 Postpaid

LADIES! Ease your feet. Send for free catalog telling all about our Neat, Noiseless, Flexible, Comfortable, unlined Vici Kid O'Sullivanized PILLOW SHOE. New shoes easy as old ones. No breaking in required. Fit and feel like a kid glove. O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on all styles.
PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept 3
184 Summer Street Boston, Mass.

PIANO TUNING AT HOME

A LUCRATIVE PROFESSION easily acquired. Anyone can learn. Our PATENTED TUNE-A-PHONE METHOD makes success more certain than best oral instruction. Guaranteed. Write for FREE BOOKLET, telling how our STUDENTS MAKE BIG MONEY.
Niles Bryant School of Tuning, 22 Inst. Bld., Battle Creek, Mich.

Folding BATH TUB

Costs little, no plumbing, little water. Weight 15 pounds, folds into small roll. Full length baths, far better than tin tubs. Lasts for years. Write for special agents offer and description.
Robinson Bath Cabinet Co., 4065 Factories Bldg., Toledo, O.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it, write
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96. Washington, D. C.

6% NET
For 36 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No. 709.
$25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving Investors
PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, Kans

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 3 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge.
RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Tycos THERMOMETERS
Ask your Dealer for the genuine Tycos Fever Thermometer. Look for the name Tycos in red.
Write for Booklet
Taylor Instrument Companies, Rochester, N.Y.

PRAYERS For Public Worship, Private Devotion and Personal Ministry. A Complete Guide to Devotion. This book is helpful to all, for home and public use. Cloth postpaid $1.00.
M. E. MUNSON, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Does YOUR Church Need a New Organ?

Or new furnishings? How much is needed to complete the interest on the mortgage? What amount does the Missionary Society need to complete the fund they want?

We have a plan whereby $100.00 or over can be obtained through the members of your church. If interested address the

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT
CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York

The Seven Helpers

International Sunday School Lesson for February 27. Acts 6

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." Gal. 6 : 2.

No one is excused from his burden. It is remarkable to notice the slender, upright and elegant figures of Eastern women, resulting, we are told, from the carriage of weights on the heads. Burdens rightly borne develop our torpid muscles, elicit in ourselves and others new traits of tenderness, thoughtfulness and unselfishness, and discover resources in God that had never otherwise been recognized. Our own burdens rightly borne enable us to understand the burdens that others are carrying and help them. A poor burdened soul will instinctively turn from a hundred wise and well-meaning comforters to the one who has gone through its own experience. There is an instant sympathy and mutual help between those who have trodden the same path. The wonderful fact is that directly one begins to lift another's burden, one is sensible of the lightening of one's own. It is recorded of a French countess that one morning she rode at the head of a merry party to the hunt, and was crippled for life within an hour. Finally, after much repining, she transformed her splendid chateau into a home for incurables like herself, and entered on a life of exquisite happiness and usefulness. Thank God if your own burden gives you the key to help the burden-bearers of the world.

The Business of Helping Folks

By Arthur H. Howland

THE beginning of the story of Stephen. The chapter we study today begins with a note of discord; it ends with the picture of a man's face so beautiful, so pure, so kind, so spiritual, that those "looking steadfastly" on it felt it to be as "the face of an angel." Stephen is one of the most charming characters in the Bible. We think of him along with Jonathan and St. John, and Esther and Ruth. Next week we are to study the sad story of his death. Today we review the events leading up to that.

It all probably began with that innate, almost ineradicable feeling the Jews had that they were essentially nearer to God than other people; that it was impossible that other people should be quite as near and dear to God as they. This feeling made all sorts of trouble in the early church. It kept cropping out again and again. Intense Judaists came to one place after another where Paul worked and tried to upset what he had done (see Acts 13 : 50; 14 : 19; 18 : 12; 23 : 12; Gal. 2). They felt that the Gentiles, if they could be Christians at all, would need to become circumcised and adopt all the traditions and ceremonies of the Jews. But the particular "murmurings" which mark the beginning of our chapter were not caused by prejudice against actual Gentiles, but by a prejudice even against those Jews who spoke and read Greek instead of Hebrew. Some of the Jews scattered far from the home land kept up their familiarity with the ancient language and the ancient books. Others adopted the Greek language and read the Greek version of the Old Testament, called the Septuagint, instead of the Hebrew. Conservative Jews, who clung to the old speech and the old writings, were prejudiced against this other class of Jews, whom they called "Grecians."

When the daily distributions of food and supplies were being made in the new Christian community, it happened that some of the Grecian widows did not get their just share. They complained to the apostles about it, but these busy preachers felt that they could not take the time from their work of preaching, praying and studying to look after the details of this daily distribution of food. It would be useless to discuss whether or not this was a mistake upon the part of the apostles. It could hardly be called a mistake, because the work of teaching and directing such a great multitude of believers would doubtless leave them no time to superintend personally work of charity. On the other hand there seems to be no doubt that in the present day spiritual leaders are apt to drift too far away from the daily, physical, material needs of the people. There has always been a tendency to minimize a service to the body, whereas Jesus urges us to remember that the cup of cold water to the thirsty, the morsel of bread to the hungry, the garment to the naked, the visit to the homeless, the prisoner and the sick are deeds truly spiritual and divine.

At any rate the arrangement was made that seven men be especially appointed to have charge of this work of distribution. Notice the requirements even for this sort of work in the early church: "Men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom." Stephen is further characterized as a man not only full of the Holy Ghost but also full of faith. If there is time it might interest the class to trace out so far as possible the later history of these men. Philip was the evangelist who went down to Samaria and conducted the wonderful revival there, afterward preaching to the eunuch of Ethiopia. The 21st chapter of Acts shows him dwelling at Cæsarea with four spiritually-minded daughters. Acts 21 : 8 makes it clear that this Philip was one of the seven deacons rather than the Philip who belonged to the twelve apostles. Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon and Parmenas are not referred to again in the New Testament. Nicolas is referred to as a proselyte, that is, one who had originally been a Gentile but had accepted Judaism. There was a tradition in the later church that this Nicolas was the founder of the sect of Nicolaitans whom Jesus rebuked so sternly in his words to St. John (Rev. 2 : 6-15). Clement of Alexandria said that Nicolas himself was a good man but was the innocent cause of the heresy bearing his name, which arose from a misunderstanding of some of his sayings.

The seventh verse is another of those beautiful word pictures revealing the sweetness and splendor of the church life of those early days: "The word of God increased; and the number of disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." Verse 8 gives us another element of Stephen's character. Since he was full of faith and full of the Holy Spirit he was, of course, also full of power and did great works.

As had happened before, these manifestations of divine power aroused the anger of outsiders. The Libertines, who opposed him, were not a class having any particular religious or moral beliefs; the word as used here has no such significance as it bears now. The Libertines were a class of Jews whose fathers had been slaves under the Roman government. They had been captured in the expedition of Pompey to Palestine about 53 B.C., sold as slaves in Rome, and freed some time later, many by a decree of Tiberius. They had been banished from Rome, and numbers of them had since resided in Jerusalem. Just why these people and some Jews from Cyrenia, Alexandria, Cilicia and Asia should have led the dispute against Stephen we cannot tell. It simply happened that the attendants of this particular synagogue did not like what he said and did, and so led the attack against him. So today we see individual congregations or other local groups of Christians standing together to oppose certain teachings and movements. But Stephen was more than a match for these opponents. We must remember his equipment, full of the Holy Spirit, faith and power and wisdom; so "they were not able

SANITAS
MODERN WALL COVERING

CANNOT collect dust c germs and you can wipe clean with a damp cloth.

Made in every style and design to ha monize with the furnishings of eve room. Your decorator will show y latest patterns.

We have helpful booklet and assortme of samples ready for you.

Write for it today.

THE STANDARD
OIL CLOTH CO., Inc.
320 Broadway, N.Y.C.
Dept. 3

"I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer, "Worth more than a farm," says another. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it.

For Children Also

The Natural Body Brace

Overcomes WEAKNESS and ORGANIC AILMENTS of WOMEN AND MEN.
Develops erect, graceful figure.

Brings restful relief, comfort, ability to do things, health and strength.

See What It Will Do For You

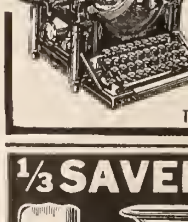
Does away with the strain and pain of stan g and walking; replaces and supports misplaced ernal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straigh s and strengthens the back; corrects stooping sl lders; develops lungs, chest and bust; relieves l kache and nervousness. Comfortable and easy wear.

Wear It 30 Days Free at Our Ex nse

Write today for illustrated booklet, meas ment blank, etc., and read our very liberal pro ition.
HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body B e Co.,
171 Rash Building SALINA, K ISAS

UNDERWOO S
At Less Than 1/2 Pr e

10 Days' Free Trial 5-Year Gua tee



RENTED
APPLYING RENTAL on P E, or SOLD
for CASH or on EASY PAY NTS

A typewriter is almost as ch a necessity in the home as in ffice. Let us send you one on 10c fre trial. Get a world fame nderwood. Ask for circula p. 71. Write for agency pro tion.

TYPEWRITER EMPORIUM, Chicago (1 1892)

1/3 SAVED Buy Direct From MANUFACTURER

Do Your Own Plumbi
and Heating — NEW HA EASY W

Get our "HANDY-MAN" FREE BOOK. Every home nee Shows new home improvements and everything in plu and heating supplies EXCLUSIVELY at wholesale p Any handy man can install our goods with this Free Boo Free easy installing plans. $500,000 plants behin guarantee. WRITE TODAY.

The Hardin-Lavin Co. 40 yrs. at 4555-65 Cottage Grove Ave. Chic

The Little Mother W o Sits at Home is a story of exquisite sentiment, stirring d ly both men and women.
At all Bookstores. Net $1.00.
E. P. DUTTON & CO., New Y k

WHITE Campines, GOLDEN Campines, SILVER Campines SPECKLED S ex, SICILIAN Bu ups, BLACK Orpingt (Nabob-Empress Strain). Eggs, Dayold Chicks. Pound cks BUFF Orpington Pound Chicks from prize winners ready delivery NOW. Standard Brooder Stove $13. Catalog free Stamps appreciated. THE NABOB CO., Gambier, Ohi o ist the wisdom and the Spirit by whi he spoke." We shall learn next wee what was the result of this attack on e part of ungodly and prejudiced peo e against this saint and servant of (d.

E the chief lesson of this chapter s a sson of Christian helpfulness. It s positive duty of the church to min er to every need of humanity. We annot say of any such need: "Th is not the affair of the church." For rtable homes, clean air, sufficient foo for every member of every household an opportunity for every one to wor for his daily bread, and a just sha in all the proceeds of his labor; ade ate care and protection and help n e of sickness; compensation for acci nts received while at work; the righ of childhood to play; the right of eve one to an opportunity to study and o read and to get at least some glin ses of culture; the need of every life r some form of recreation and amu ment—these are all not only legi ate duties but imperative demands upon the church of Jesus. Even t ministers cannot give time for the al details of such work, they must lead nd inspire the others in it. They must find time to help; they must make time o help. And they should be leaders f t forces which are working for a reco truction of society which will provi e for all these fundamental rights f n. This is not secular work but holy work. And the church has need toda of precisely the same sort of men s were these seven helpers of the eed people of the early church: "M of honest report, full of the Holy Gho and wisdom, whom we may appoin over this business."

Y it is work not only for men, but for omen as well, for young people and tle children. How are the needy ari in your own community and its neig oring towns and cities? Are the poo nd sick looked after, the workers prot ted, the prisoners cheered? Have the ildren learned the joy of picking and acking flowers for sick folks in neig oring hospitals, of going to the win ws of old folks or sick folks to sing f carrying baskets for those who hav ittle or nothing to eat?

C sses of girls and young ladies will e interested to learn more about the rk of deaconesses. These "seven help s" were later called deacons. Still ter this office was opened to women s w l as men, and now in a number f nominations many women hold this nk of deaconess and are carrying on is same beautiful work. Even thos churches that do not recognize the cclesiastical rank of deaconess prov e similar work for young women who ill give all or part of their time o it.

The How Column

ond ed by Frank L. Brown, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

Ho o Obtain Class Interest in Lesson Teaching (Continued)

T nanage a lot of twelve-year-old East de boys in New York is something of problem. This is how one teacher did : "teach standing, before the blackboard, egi ng with an object or interesting fact q tion—or a half drawing appealing to urio y. Have also used Miss Slattery's meth of having the boys write out an answer o a estion at the close of the lesson as to hat ey did or would do with the teaching of he evious week's lesson. This answer is and to me and read by me. The lessons hic always hold their interest best are emp ance lessons, using experiments, charts f ph iology, or drawings; missionary lessons ith riking stories of adventure, showing eal ls and pictures; true stories from lives f w -known men when they were boys or art on their careers; stories of brave girls —an ing heroic."

A acher of fifteen live boys in the early eens ses athletics as a starter. "I usually alk out baseball, as they are all interested it. Then I try to apply it to the lesson of he c ."

In ew York City a teacher interests his lass f boys through handling the Book. On f my methods is to have the boys read tu a verse of the lesson from the Bible nd n stopping them in the reading to ask or t ir interpretation and ask the class as w le whether that interpretation was heir I always tie up the previous lesson to he c of the day. Near communion seasons I direct their thought to the privilege of their uniting with the church."

A Connecticut teacher of forty ladies: "I use a question box. In addition I often ask members to teach the class. Occasionally I bring a speaker on city work or other matters of interest."

The teacher of a class of fifty young men in a Brooklyn Sunday school varies the lessons by introducing for a limited time a special series of lessons like Fosdick's "The Meaning of Prayer" and "The Manhood of the Master." Some man of prominence comes at certain intervals to testify to the power of the Bible and Christ in his life.

Brief experiences from many teachers follow:

"I am interested myself and encourage discussion."

"I have their respect and have no trouble."

"I give them each a topic to look up."

"I put questions to the inattentive."

"Lecture method and questioning combined."

"Use the practical every-day application of the power of God's Son to save and keep."

◆

Do You Know Your Bible?

HERE are the Prize Winners for the 1915 Bible Contest:

FIRST PRIZE: Mrs. Susan A. Glover.

SECOND PRIZE: Miss H. P. Axtell, Miss Ethel Barber, Mrs. John Bissett, Mrs. Arthur DuBois, Miss W. Nicholson, Annie G. Stine.

THIRD PRIZE: Mrs. Lettie Cobb, Mrs. J. W. Floyd, Mae Granger, Sister Lena Rasch, Mrs. G. L. Snyder.

On the Half Year contest no one fulfilled the requirements of having every answer in every list correct, but we are awarding first and second prizes as follows:

FIRST PRIZE: Mrs. Susan A. Glover.

SECOND PRIZE: Hattie Baldwin, Miss Ethel Barber, Mrs. John Bissett, Mrs. C. C. Brown, Mrs. Lettie Cobb, Lillian Cox, Mrs. Arthur DuBois, Mae Granger, Richard Galley, Mrs. Delia Harris, M. D., Miss Flora A. Johnson, Miss W. Nicholson, Mrs. G. L. Snyder, Annie G. Stine, Mrs. Edwin D. Ward.

Honor Roll for List No. 10. Half- Year Contest List No. 5

Mrs. J. A. Andrea, Hattie P. Axtell, Hattie Baldwin, Mrs. John Bissett, Mrs. O. G. Beard, A. D. Bliss, Rose Bovard, Mrs. C. C. Brown, A. R. Bryon, S. R. Buckwalter, Mrs. Lettie Cobb, Lillian Cox, Mrs. Arthur DuBois, Elizabeth Esmond, Mrs. J. W. Floyd, John A. Freeman, Mrs. Eliza J. Fuller, Richard Galley, Mrs. Susan A. Glover, Mrs. I. Volucia Guppy, Mrs. Maria L. Harkness, Mrs. Delia M. D. Harris, Jessie C. Hill, Mrs. J. R. Hissem, Jennie E. Holmes, Miss Flora A. Johnson, Mrs. B. Marek, Mrs. Lydia E. Martin, M. E. Miller, Miss W. Nicholson, Mrs. Clement T. Paull, Sister Lena Rasch, Mrs. James A. Smith, Rosa Stevenson, Annie G. Stine, Mrs. Anna Stockmon, Annie Tipton, Mrs. Edwin D. Ward, and one unsigned list from Box 22, Marion, N. C.

Correct Answers to List No. 10. Half-Year Contest List No. 5

I AND II TIMOTHY AND TITUS

1. (a) Eunice. II Tim. 1:5. (b) Lois. II Tim. 1:5. (c) Greek. Acts 16:1.

2. (a) Derbe, Lystra and Iconium. Acts 16:1, 2. (b) He was of good report. Acts 16:2.

3. (a) Ephesus. I Tim. 1:3. II Tim. 1:8. (b) II Tim. 1:8, 16; 2:9. (c) His cloak and books, especially the parchments. II Tim. 4:13.

4. (a) I Tim. 4:13, 15; II Tim. 2:15; 3:14-17. (b) I Tim. 1:4, 16, 23; 6:4-5, 20; II Tim. 2:14, 16, 23. (c) I Tim. 1:3; 4:6, 7, 16; 6:3-5, 20. II Tim. 1:13; 2:2; 4:2-5.

5. (a) "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand." II Tim. 4:6. (b) "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith." II Tim. 4:7. (c) "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day." II Tim. 4:8. (d) "To all them that have loved his appearing." II Tim. 4:8.

6. (a) "Titus, mine [illegible] son after the common faith." Titus 1:4. (b) "Titus, my brother." II Cor. 2:13. "My partner and fellow worker." II Cor. 8:23.

7. (a) Nicopolis. Titus 3:12. (b) Zenas and Apollos, Titus 3:13. (c) Zenas was a lawyer. 3:13.

8. (a) To Jerusalem. Gal. 2:1. (b) Crete, Titus 1:5. (c) Elders 1:5 and bishops 1:7.

9. (a) "That the aged men be temperate, grave, soberminded, sound in faith, in love and patience." Titus 2:2. (b) "That aged women likewise be reverent in behavior, not slanderers nor given to much wine, teachers of good things." Titus 2:3. (c) "The young women to be sober, to love their husbands and children, to be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands." 2:4, 5. (d) "Young men likewise exhort to be soberminded." 2:6.

10. (a) "Soberly, righteously, godly." 2:12. (b) "Who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all inquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Titus 2:14. (c) Abundantly. Titus 3:6.

Food Bonbons

First Sold by

Candy Stores

Puffed Wheat and Rice, nowadays, fairly dominate grocers' shelves. And millions of homes are serving them as ideal cereal foods.

But a curious fact is that candy shops first adopted Puffed Grains. And used them in nut-like confections.

Tit-Bits by the Bowlful

They are still used like nut-meats in candy, and as garnish for ice cream. For never was a nut-meat so flavory, so flaky and so crisp.

But they are mainly served by the bowlful, with sugar and cream or in milk. And these bubbles of grain, thin, airy and toasted, form breakfast and supper delights.

Puffed Wheat	Except in Far West	12c
Puffed Rice		15c

Corn Puffs—Bubbles of Corn Hearts—15c

These are the reasons for Puffed Grains, outside of their fascinations:

Puffed Wheat supplies whole-wheat nutrition. The grains are complete, and shaped as they grew, though puffed to eight times normal size.

All Puffed Grains are steam exploded. Every food cell is shattered. So digestion is easy and complete.

The three comprise Prof. Anderson's scientific foods. And by no other process was any cereal ever so fitted for food.

Still the best fact is that folks like them.

The Quaker Oats Company

Sole Makers

(1178)

Mellin's Food Babies

Merrill H. Wallace
Keyport N.J.

Verna K. Spear
Youngsville Pa.

James H. MacNeil
Coleraine Minn.

Carmen E. Scanlon
Manawa Wis.

Boyd T. Allen
Tannersville N.Y.

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON LUTZ

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

MARGARET EARLE, school teacher and "tenderfoot," mistaking a water stop for her station, was left behind on the desert plain of Arizona. A passing half-drunken rancher told her that her station was twenty miles away. She started to go to the rancher's camp, but she found his company less desirable than loneliness. The rancher reported his erstwhile passenger to his wife and the eight men in the bunk house. One of them was young and "different." He saddled two horses and went in search of the girl. He found her, reassured her, set her on a horse and returned with her to the ranchhouse.

The first sight of the bunk house was not very reassuring, but the Boy had told her that "Mom" Wallis would look after her and there was no alternative but the desert. The Boy left her at her boarding-house late the next afternoon, but left with her promise to see him again. Afterward she met the Rev. Frederick West and a dog. She liked the dog. Margaret and the dog and "Bud" Tanner, the son of the house, became fast friends. "Bud" gave all the help needed in the important business of getting settled, and the Rev. Mr. West found his help unnecessary and the road to better acquaintance somewhat difficult. Margaret showed a decided preference for Bud's company. They inspected the school together after she had dismissed the minister. The next day Bud escorted Margaret to Sunday school—there was no other service—and on the way back the Boy met them and the three met the Rev. Mr. West.

CHAPTER XI—Continued

THEY watched him for an instant, for indeed he was a goodly sight upon a horse, riding as if he and the horse were utterly one in spirit; then Margaret turned quickly to go into the house.

"Um! Ah!—Miss Margaret!" began the minister.

Margaret turned and said:

"Miss Earle, if you please!"

"Um! Ah! Why, certainly, Miss—Ah! Earle, if you wish it. Will you kindly remain here for a moment? I wish to speak with you. Bud, you may go on."

"I'll go when I like, and it's none of your business!" muttered Bud ominously under his breath. He looked at Margaret to see if she wished him to go.

"William may remain, Mr. West," she said sweetly. "Anything you have to say to me can surely be said in his presence."

"Um! Ah!" said West unabashed. "Well, I merely wished to warn you concerning the character of that person who has just left us. He really is not a proper companion for you. Indeed, I may say he is quite the contrary, and that to my personal knowledge."

"Mr. West, I thought I made you understand that Mr. Gardley is my friend."

"Um! Ah! Miss Earle, then all I have to say is that you have formed a most unwise friendship, and should let it proceed no further. Why, my dear young lady, if you knew all there is to know about him, you would not think of speaking to that young man!"

"Indeed, Mr. West, I suppose that might be true of a good many people, might it not (if we knew all there is to know about them)? Nobody but God could very well get along with some of us."

"But, my dear young lady, you don't understand. This young person is nothing but a common ruffian, a gambler, in fact, and an habitué of the saloons. I have seen him myself sitting in a saloon at a very late hour playing with a vile, dirty pack of cards, and in the company of a lot of low-down creatures——"

"May I ask how you came to be in a saloon at that hour, Mr. West?" There was a gleam of mischief in the girl's eyes and her mouth looked as if she were going to laugh.

The minister turned very red indeed. "Well, I—ah!—I had been called from my bed by shouts and the report of a pistol. There was a fight going on in the room adjoining the bar, and I didn't know but my assistance might be needed!" (At this juncture Bud uttered a sort of snort, and placing his hands over his heart ducked down as if a sudden pain had seized him.) "But imagine my pain and astonishment when I was informed that the drunken brawl I was witnessing was but a nightly and common occurrence. I may say I remained for a few minutes, partly out of curiosity, as I wished to see all kinds of life in this new world for the sake of a book I am thinking of writing. I therefore took careful note of the persons present, and was thus able to identify the person who has just ridden away as one of the chief factors in that evening's entertainment. He was, in fact, the man who, when he had pocketed all the money on the gaming table, arose and taking out his pistol shot out the lights in the room, a most dangerous and irregular proceeding."

"Yes, and you came within an ace of being shot pa says. The Kid's a dead shot, he is, and you were right in the way. Served you right for going where you had no business!"

"I did not remain longer in that place, as you may imagine," went on West, ignoring Bud, "for I found it was no place for a—for a—ah!—minister of the gospel; but I remained long enough to hear from the lips of this person with whom you have just been walking, some of the most terrible language my ears have ever been permitted to—ah—hear!"

BUT Margaret had heard all that she intended to listen to on that subject. With decided tone she interrupted the voluble speaker, who was evidently enjoying his own eloquence.

"Mr. West, I think you have said all that is necessary to say. There are still some things about Mr. Gardley that you evidently do not know, but I think you are in a fair way to learn them if you stay in this part of the country long. William, isn't that your mother calling us to dinner? Let us go in; I'm hungry."

Bud followed her up the walk with a triumphant wink at the discomfited minister, and they disappeared into the house; but when Margaret went up to her room and took off her hat in front of the little warped looking-glass, there were angry tears in her eyes; yet she must not cry, for dinner would be ready and she must go down. Never should that mean little meddling man see that his words had pierced her soul.

For, angry as she was at the minister; much as she loathed his petty, jealous nature, and saw through his tale-bearing, something yet told her that his picture of young Gardley's wildness was probably true. It was just what had come in shadowy instinctive fear to her heart when he had hinted at his being a "roughneck"; yet to have it put baldly into words by an enemy hurt her deeply; and she looked at herself in the glass half frightened. "Margaret Earle, have you come out to the wilderness to lose your heart to the first handsome sower of wild oats that you meet?" her true eyes asked her face in the glass, and Margaret Earle's heart turned sad at the question and shrank back. Then she dropped upon her knees beside her gay little rocking-chair and buried her face in its flowered cushions and cried:

"Oh, my Father, let me not be weak, but with all my heart I cry to thee to save this young, strong, courageous life and not let it be a failure. Help him to find thee and serve thee, and if his life has been all wrong—and I suppose it has—oh, make it right for Jesus' sake! If there is anything that I can do to help, show me how, and don't let me make mistakes. O Jesus, thy power is great. Let this young man feel it and yield himself to it."

She came down to dinner a few minutes later with a calm, serene face on which was no hint of her recent emotion, and she managed to keep the table conversation wholly in her own hands, telling Mr. Tanner about her home town, and her father and mother.

But West had retired into a sulky mood and uttered not a word except to ask for more chicken and coffee and a second helping of pie. It was perhaps during that dinner that he decided it would be best for him to preach in Ashland on the following Sunday.

CHAPTER XII

WHEN Lance Gardley came back to the Tanners the sun was preparing the glory of its evening setting.

Margaret was waiting for hi the dog Captain beside her, wa back and forth in the unfenced do and watching her mountain. It relief to her to find that the m occupied a room on the first flo kind of ell on the opposite side house from her own room an mountain. He had not been that afternoon, and with Capta her side and Bud on the front d reading "The Sky Pilot" sh comparatively safe. She had r Bud for an hour and a half and thoroughly interested in the stor she was sure he would keep the m away at all costs. As for Capta and the minister were sworn enen this time. He growled every tim came near or spoke to her.

She made a picture standing w hand on Captain's shaggy, noble the lace of her sleeve falling bac the white arm, her other hand rai shade her face as she looked away glorified mountain, a slim white looking wistfully off at the s The young man took off his hat an his horse more softly as if in the pr of something holy.

The dog lifted one ear and a t passed through his frame as the drew near; otherwise he did n from his position; but it was e The girl turned, on the alert at and met him with a smile, an young man looked at her as if an had deigned to smile upon him. was a humility in his fine face th well with the courage written ther smoothed away all hardness fo time, so that the girl looking at the light of the revelations of the ing could hardly believe it had true, yet an inner fineness of perce taught her that it was.

The young man dismounted an his horse standing quietly by roadside. He would not stay, he yet lingered by her side talking few minutes, watching the sunset pointing out its changes.

She gave him the little packag Mom Wallis. There was a simpl collar in a little white box, and leather-bound book done in suède with gold lettering.

"Tell her to wear the collar think of me whenever she dresses

"I'm afraid that'll be never, said the young man with a pi smile. "Mom Wallis never dresses

"Tell her I said she must dre evenings for supper, and I'll mak another one to change with that bring it when I come."

HE smiled upon her again, that dering, almost worshipful sm if he wondered if she were real all, so different did she seem fro idea of girls.

"And the little book," she we apologetically; "I suppose it was ish to send it, but something she made me think of some of the lin the poem. I've marked them for She reads, doesn't she?"

"A little, I think. I see her now then read the papers that Pop b home with him."

"Of course, I suppose it is ridicu And maybe she'll not understand a it; but tell her I sent her a mes She must see if she can find it i poem. Perhaps you can explain her. It's Browning's 'Rabbi Ben E You know it, don't you?"

"I'm afraid not. I was inten other things about the time when I supposed to be giving my attentio Browning, or I wouldn't be what today, I suppose. But I'll do my with what wits I have. What's it abo

"It's the one beginning,

> "Grow old along with me!
> The best is yet to be,
> The last of life, for which the first was
> Our times are in His hand
> Who saith, 'A whole I planned, > Youth shows but half; trust God: se > nor be afraid!'"

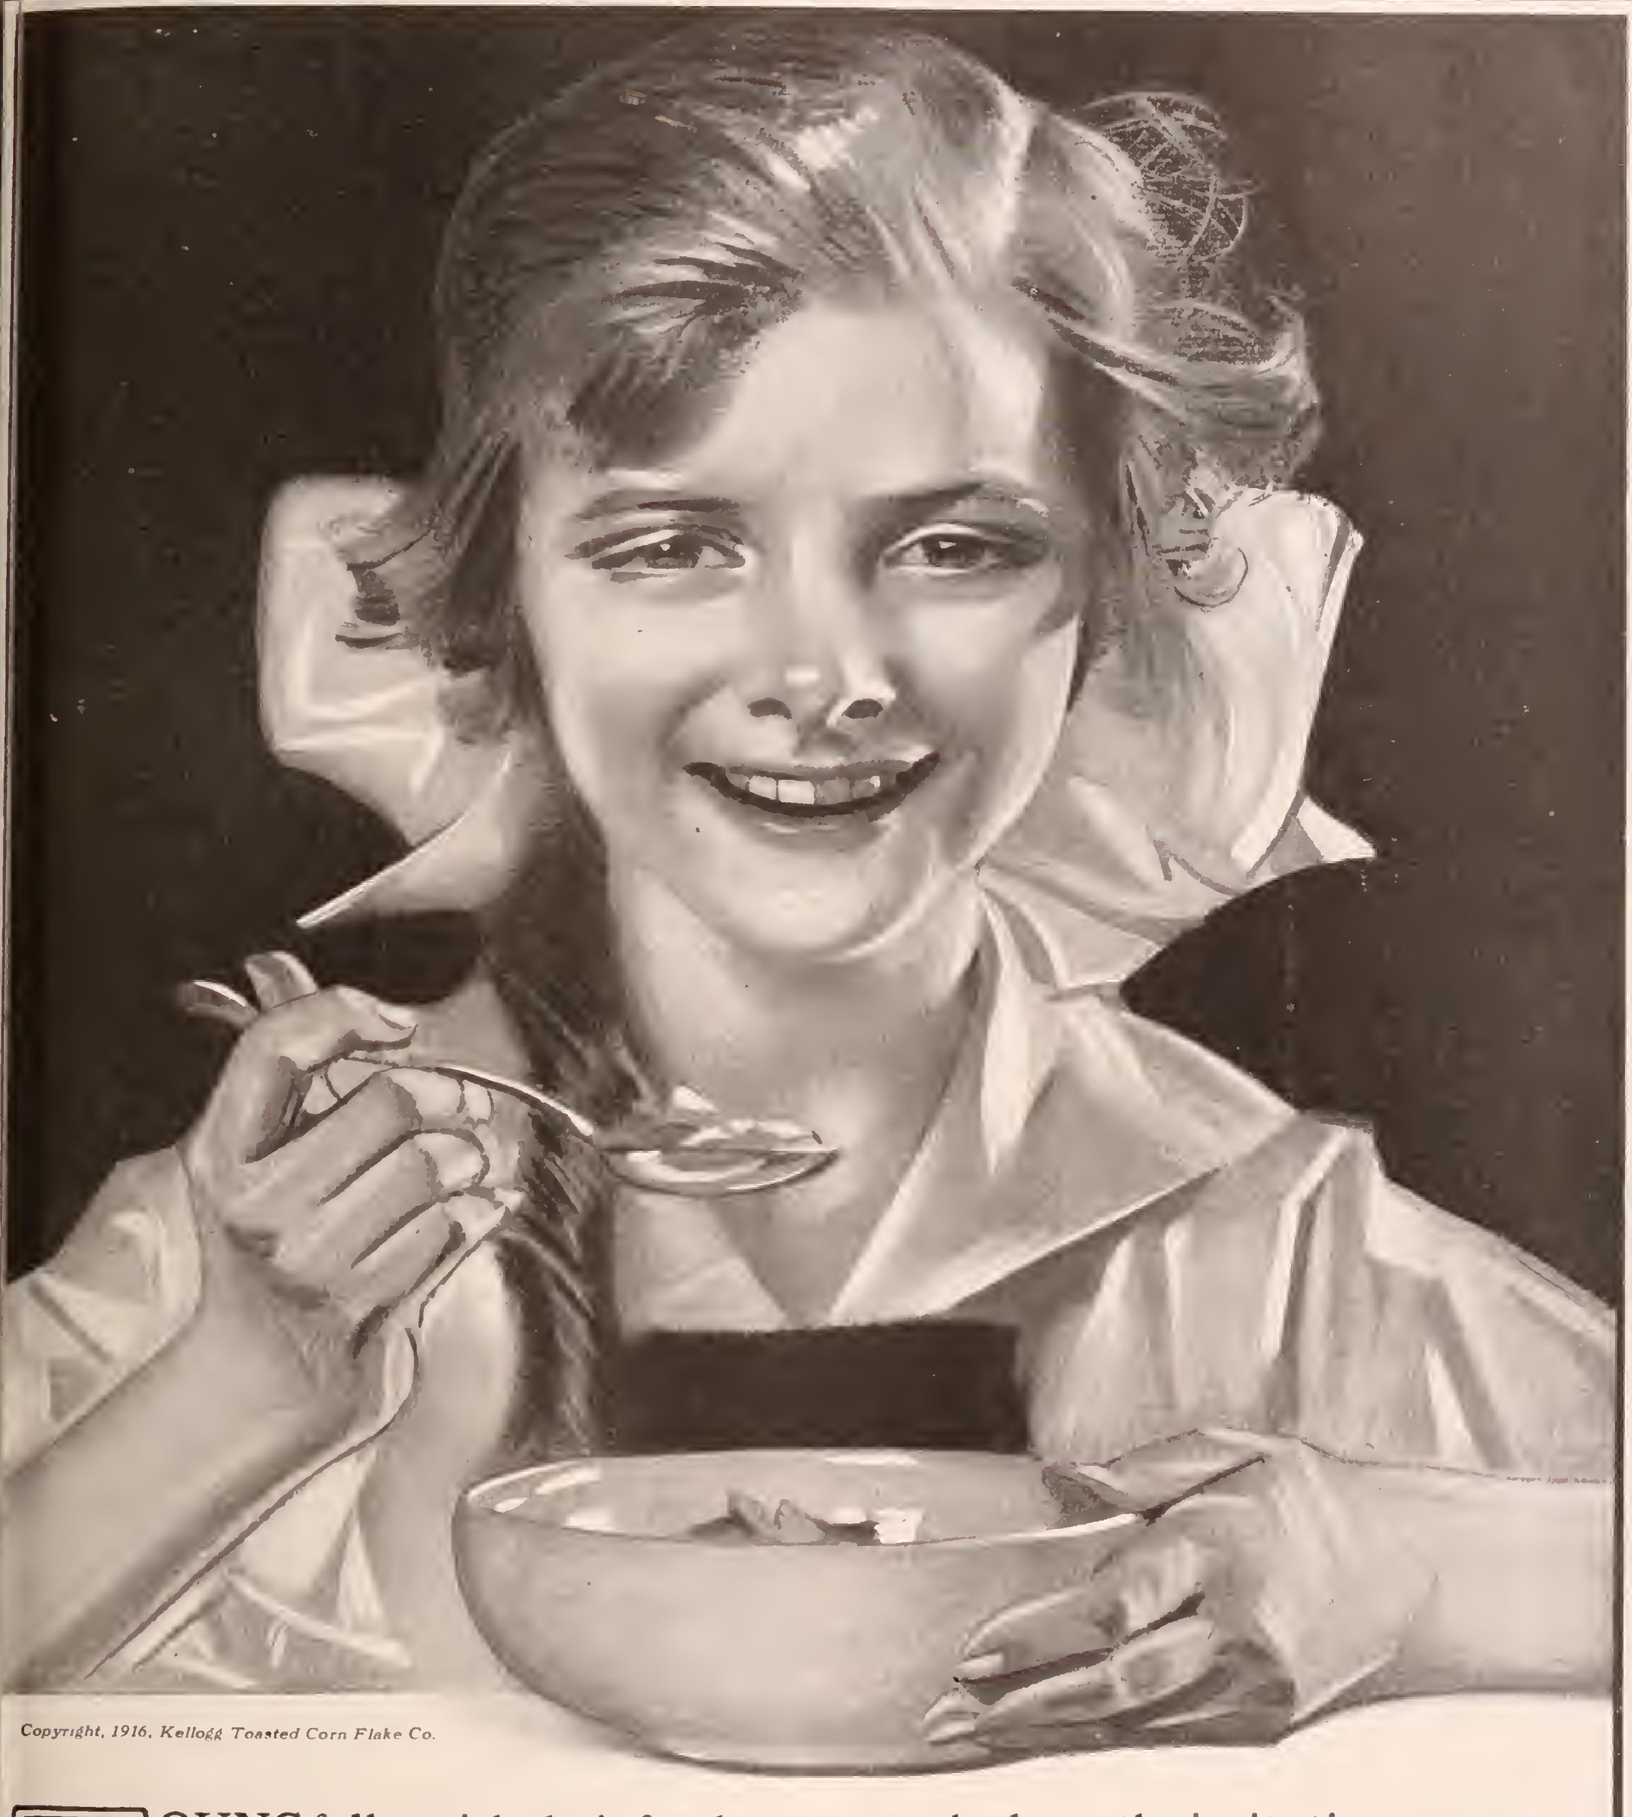
He looked down at her still with wondering smile.

"Grow old along with you!" he

Continued on page 206



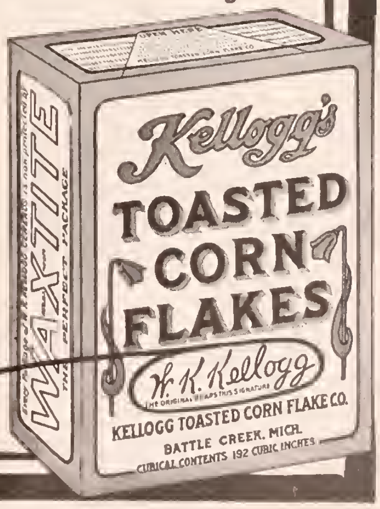
Copyright, 1916, Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co.

YOUNG folks with their fresh, unspoiled palates are the real judges of flavor. They enjoy the crispness, the wonderful good taste of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes—and they are the ones who keep the imitations away from the table.

The crispness and flavor of Kellogg's are there—five million breakfasts a morning—and no telling how many times between meals.

It is a remarkable fact that there is no storage space at Kellogg's. Each day's production is shipped crisp from the ovens in the Kellogg WAXTITE package—that keeps the fresh, good flavor in and all other flavors out.

W. K. Kellogg



WAXTITE
THE PERFECT PACKAGE
Kellogg's
TOASTED
CORN
FLAKES
W. K. Kellogg
KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKE CO.
BATTLE CREEK, MICH.
CUBICAL CONTENTS 192 CUBIC INCHES

Get Your Range
At Wholesale

[illegible] manufacturer. Save big [illegible] get the best that's made [illegible] latest styles—fuel [illegible] Cash or easy payments. 30 days' trial 365 days' approval [illegible]

Stove and Range Book
FREE

500 styles and sizes
$100,000 guaranty
We pay the freight and ship within 24 hours.
We also make Malleable Steel Ranges

Write today
Ask for catalog
No. 103

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO.
Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

Stoves, Ranges, Gas Stoves, Furnaces, Metal Kitchen Kabinets and Tables

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"
Trade Mark Registered

The Most Brilliant Flower in your Garden this Year

CANNA FIREBIRD

This grand Canna introduced by us three years ago is now universally recognized as the Beat Scarlet Green-leaved Variety in existence. You won't have to go out to your nearest public park to admire it when you have it in your own garden. Price, 3 for $1; Each 35c. Prepaid with Catalog.

Gladiolus Bulblets "Kenwood" Mixture 25 prepaid for 20c. with 160 page catalog. Bulbs, Seeds, Plants. "Special Gladiolus List" Mailed FREE.

CHICAGO 31-33 W. Randolph St. VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE NEW YORK 43 Barclay St.

"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' With the MORLEY PHONE. I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right.

"The Morley Phone for the DEAF is to the ears what glasses are to the eyes. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over one hundred thousand sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Bldg., Phila.

REVERSIBLE "Linene" COLLARS
TRADE MARK

Send 2 Cents
in U. S. Stamps to pay postage and we will send you free a starch-finished
SAMPLE COLLAR
State size and which style wanted

VAN DYCK
RUBENS

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

CONDON'S NEW LIGHTNING RADISH

Finest Early Radish in Existence. Ready to eat in 14 days. To introduce Our Northern Grown "Sure Crop" Live Seeds we will mail you Big Package "Condon's New Lightning Radish" and our Mammoth Illustrated 1916 Garden and Farm Guide. Send name and address on postal today sure. FREE Condon Bros., Seedsmen. Rock River Valley Seed Farm Box 606. Rockford, Ill.

SHOEMAKER'S BOOK on POULTRY and Almanac for 1916 has 200 pages with many colored plates of fowls true to life. It tells all about chickens, their prices, their care, diseases and remedies. All about Incubators, their prices and their operation. All about poultry houses and how to build them. It's an encyclopedia of chickendom. You need it. Only 15c.

C. C. SHOEMAKER, Box 905 Freeport, Ill.

BARGAINS IN SEEDS

Hundreds of special offers in seeds and plants at bargain prices. Don't buy until you have seen our beautiful new catalog and special liberal offer, mailed free if you mention this paper.

Iowa Seed Co., Dept. E., Des Moines, Iowa

POULTRY PAPER

44-124 PAGE periodical, up-to-date, tells all you want to know about care and management of poultry for pleasure or profit. Four months for 10 cents.

POULTRY ADVOCATE, Dept. 29, Syracuse, N. Y.

MONEY FOR YOUR CHURCH

Your Church Organizations can make money through our very liberal proposition on the well known SKAT preparation. Write SKAT CO., Hartford, Conn.

A Voice in the Wilderness

Continued from page 204

gravely, and then sighed. "You don't look as if you ever would grow old."

"That's it," she said eagerly. "That's the whole idea. We don't ever grow old and get done with it all, we just go on to bigger things, wiser and better and more beautiful, till we come to understand and be a part of the whole great plan of God!"

He did not attempt an answer, nor did he smile now, but just looked at her with that deeply quizzical, grave look as if his soul were turning over the matter seriously. She held her peace and waited, unable to find the right word to speak. Then he turned and looked off, an infinite regret growing in his face.

"That makes living a different thing from the way most people take it," he said at last.

"Does it?" she said softly and looked with him toward the sunset, still half seeing his quiet profile against the light. At last it came to her that she must speak. Half fearfully she began:

"I've been thinking about what you said on the ride. You said you didn't make good. I—wish you would. I—I'm sure you could——"

She looked up wistfully and saw the gentleness come into his face as if the fountain of his soul, long sealed, had broken up, and as if he saw a possibility before him for the first time.

At last he turned to her with that wondering smile again.

"Why should you care?" he asked. The words would have sounded harsh if his tone had not been so greatly gentle.

Margaret hesitated for an answer.

"I don't know how to tell it," she said slowly. "There's another verse, a few lines more in that poem—perhaps you know them?

"All I could never be,
All men ignored in me,
This I was worth to God, whose wheel the pitcher shaped.

I want it because—well, perhaps because I feel you are worth all that to God. I would like to see you be that. I hope you will excuse my speaking," she added. "I—it seems there are so many grand possibilities in life—and for you—I couldn't bear to have you say you hadn't made good, as if it were all over."

"I'm glad you spoke," he said quickly. "I guess perhaps I have been all kinds of a fool. You have made me feel how many kinds I have been."

"Oh, no!" she protested.

"You don't know what I have been," he said sadly, and then with sudden conviction, as if he read her thoughts:

"You do know! That prig of a parson has told you! Well, it's just as well you should know. It's right!"

A WAVE of misery passed over his face and erased all its brightness and hope. Even the gentleness was gone. He looked haggard and drawn with hopelessness all in a moment.

"Do you think it would matter to me—anything that man would say?" she protested, all her woman's heart going out in pity.

"But it was true, all he said, probably, and more——!"

"It doesn't matter," she said eagerly. "The other is true too. Just as the poem says: 'All that man ignores in you, just that you are worth to God!' And you can be what he meant you to be. I have been praying all the afternoon that he would help you to be."

"Have you?" he said, and his eyes lit up again as if the altar-fires of hope were burning once more. "Have you? I thank you."

"You came to me when I was lost in the wilderness," she said shyly. "I wanted to help you back if I might."

"You will help—you have!" he said earnestly. "And I was far enough off the trail too, but if there's any way to get back I'll get there."

He grasped her hand and held it for a second.

"Keep up that praying," he said. "I'll see what can be done."

Margaret looked up.

"Oh, I'm so glad, so glad!"

He looked reverently into her eyes, all the manhood in him stirred to higher, better things.

Then, suddenly, as they stood together, a sound smote their ears as from another world:

"Um! Ah!——"

THE minister stood within the doorway, barred by Bud in scowling defiance, and guarded by Cap, who gave an answering growl. Gardley and Margaret looked at one another and smiled, then turned and walked slowly down to where the pony stood. They did not wish to talk here in that alien presence. Indeed, it seemed that more words were not needed.

So he rode away into the sunset once more with just another look and a handclasp, and she turned, strangely happy at heart, to go back to her dull surroundings and her uncongenial company.

"Come, William, let's have a praise service," she said brightly, pausing at the doorway, but ignoring the scowling minister.

"A praise service! What's a praise service?" asked the wondering Bud, shoving over to let her sit down.

She sat with her back to West, and Cap came and lay at her feet with the white of one eye on the minister and a growl ready to gleam between his teeth any minute. There was just no way for the minister to get out unless he jumped over them or went out the back door.

"Why, a praise service is a service of song and gladness, of course. You sing, don't you? Of course. Well, what shall we sing? Do you know this?" And she broke softly into song:

"When peace like a river attendeth my way,
When sorrows like sea-billows roll,
Whatever my lot thou hast taught me to say,
It is well, it is well with my soul."

Bud did not know the song, but he did not intend to be balked with the minister standing right behind him ready no doubt to jump in and take the precedence; so he growled away at a note in the bass, turning it over and over and trying to make it fit, he managed to keep time and make it sound a little like singing.

The dusk was falling fast as they finished the last verse, Margaret singing the words clear and distinct, Bud growling unintelligibly and snatching at words he had never heard before. Once more Margaret sang:

"Abide with me, fast falls the eventide;
The darkness deepens; Lord, with me abide!
When other refuge fails and comforts flee,
Help of the helpless, oh, abide with me!"

On and on sang Margaret, just because she could not bear to stop and hear the commonplace talk which would be around her. Song after song thrilled through the night's wideness. The stars came out in thick clusters. Father Tanner had long ago dropped his weekly paper and tilted his chair back against the wall with his eyes half closed to listen, and his wife had settled down comfortably on the carpet sofa with her hands nicely folded in her lap, as if she were at church. The minister, after silently surveying the situation for a song or two, attempted to join his voice to the chorus. He had a voice like a cross-cut saw, but he didn't do much harm in the background, and by and by even Mr. Tanner quavered in with a note or two.

Finally Margaret sang:

"Sun of my soul, thou Saviour dear,
It is not night if thou art near,
Oh, may no earth-born cloud arise,
To hide thee from thy servant's eyes."

During this hymn the minister had slipped out of the back door and gone around to the front of the house. He could not stand being in the background any longer; but as the last note died away, Margaret arose and, bidding Bud good night, slipped up to her room.

There, presently, beside her darkened window with her face toward the mountain, she knelt to pray for the wanderer who was trying to find his way out of the wilderness.

To be continued

PRICES SPLIT ON Split Hickory Buggie

$39.25 and up is my new direct-from factory price on a genuine Split Hickory—famous the world ove for beauty, style, comfort an long service. Don't buy a vehicle of any kin until you get my big free catalog. See fo yourself what a saving you can make. 15 snappy styles to choose from—all guaranteed tw years. Pick out the rig you want and I will give yo to prove the quality and convince you that a genuine Split Hickory is the best buggy you can buy at any price.

30 Days FREE Road Te

FREE MY BIG 1916 CATALOG
Write for this free book today. Also ask for my special Harness and Farm Wagon Catalogs. Sent free on request.

H. C. Phelps, Pres.
The Ohio Carriage Mfg. Co.
Station 221 Columbus, Ohio (12)

Vapo-Cresole
"USED WHILE YOU SLEEP"
ESTABLISHED 1879.

for Whooping Co h, Spasmodic Cr p, Asthma, Sore Th t, Coughs, Bronc s, Colds, Cata

Don't fail to use Cresolene for the distressing, and fatal, affections for which it is recommended.

It is a simple, safe, effective and drugless trea

Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Wh Cough and relieves Spasmodic Croup at once.

It is a boon to sufferers from asthma.

The air carrying the antiseptic vapor, inspired with breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throa stops the cough, assuring restful nights.

Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatm Diphtheria.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 36 years o cessful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by Druggists

Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. can't harm you. Of your druggist or from us 10c. in stamps

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FRE

To try in your own home 30 days free, no matter you live. Show your friends. Send it back at o pense if you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of sands in daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, of high grade material, beautifully finished, smoo sign, guaranteed for ye our Two Million Dollar

Ask your dealers to you Hoosier Stoves. for our big free book ing photographs, desc large assortment of and designs to select explaining our free Send postal today. your name and ad plainly. No obligation

HOOSIER STOVE
164 State St., Marion,

1916 Model

Rider AGENTS Wan d

in each town to ride and show a n model "RANGER" bicycle Write special offer on a sample to introdu DELIVERED FREE on approval 30 days' trial. Send for big free catal particulars of most marvelous off made on a bicycle. You will be ast at our low prices and remarkable 94 STYLES, sizes and colors in R bicycles. Most complete line in An Other guaranteed models $11.95, $14. $17.60. A few good second-hand bi taken in trade, $3 to $8 to clear.

Tires, lamps, wheels, sundries, parts, bicycle supplies at half usual prices. Do n until you get our catalog and offers. Writ

MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. G-71, CHIC

Snug Comfort for Tired F

in Parker's Arctic Socks
Reg. in U. S. Pat. Off.

healt bed-chamb sickroom. than st slippers. rubber boots absorb p tion. Made of knitt lined with soft white wool fleece. Wash shrinkable. Parker's name in every pair. sizes at dealers or sent postpaid for 25c a

J. H. PARKER CO., DEPT. C, 25 JAMES ST., MALDEN,

ACORN UNI-LI FRE

Turns night into day. 300 candle power. Carry as a lantern; use anywhere as a lamp. Wea proof. For house, barn, garage, and around the farm. Write for big offer. Special opportunity to farm stockmen and motorists. Agents big money. Write tonight.

Acorn Brass Mfg. Co., 951 Acorn Bldg., Ch

SAMPLE OUR SEE

Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Ea Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce, 10c to customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG F

C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore,

The War in Europe

Continued from pa e 190

Nov ber, while the classes called here fore, the younger men, should be read a month sooner, both sets too late for rticipation in the campaign this sum er.

T British theory of the war is that it w continue to 1917, and that the troo on hand and in the training cam enlisted under Kitchener's recrui g appeals (1,200,000, in the field, 1,60 000 in the camps), together with the lonials, will enable Great Britain to g through the coming spring and sum er; in the autumn, when by this theo Germany will be running short of n, she will add all these newly prep ed men to the forces she has left.

In Albania the Austrians are rapidly near g Durazzo, which Essad Pasha's force the Serbians, and Italians, are leav g with equal rapidity in the opposite irection, and the occupation of this town may be expected soon. Ales and San Giovanni di Medua have passed into the possession of the Aus ans, who are now south of the Miri River but a few miles from Durazzo. Three weeks more most probably will e this entire Dalmatian coast, from he northern border of Montenegro to t southern border of Albania, complete cleared of the enemies of the cent l empires. The military effect of the aring of this coast will be to give the eutons several additional naval base directly facing the Italian coast and ly a few miles therefrom, which acq itions may or may not have import t naval consequences.

O he Greek frontier all is quiet, and thou there are various rumors afloat relat e to an advance on or from Salonica, thing seems to lend support to a mov ent by either side, except unconfirm reports in the French newspap Le Temps, that the Fifth Turkish Arm is actually moving toward the nort astern Greek border. If this turn out to be the fact it would be sign ant of an impending movement of som ind by the Teutons.

T British announce victories in the Kam un, both for themselves and the Fren , and General Smith-Dorrien also ports that he is clearing the Ger man out of British East Africa. These cam igns, it would seem, can only have one end. The recent appointment of S th-Dorrien to the charge of these oper ions indicates that Great Britain desi s to get possession of Germany's Afri n colonies as soon as possible. The may be very valuable for trading, or empting to trade, for European territory in the peace negotiations when they come.

According to statements made by David G. Pinckney, member of the Council of the Institute of Ship Workers, London, freight rates are now at extraordinary heights. Coal freight from Cardiff to Genoa, which in July, 1914, was seven shillings a ton, is today seventy-five; grain freight from the Argentine, then twelve shillings, is now 150.

There are indications that Great Britain and France have begun negotiations for another loan in the American market; the amount sought is reported to be half the previous loan, or $250,000,000, and the time of issue about two months hence. The quotations of the former loan have recently advanced appreciably, and British exchange continues to rise. The sudden departure from New York of J. P. Morgan outward bound, lends color to this rumor.

The Russians and Turks have had several hard fights on the Caucasian front to the north of Erzerum during the week, with honors rather equally divided. Erzerum itself, according to the Russians, is either at the point of being besieged or the siege has actually begun. The bulletins from this front are extremely contradictory, and it is very difficult to get any clear idea of the actual situation in this important field of operations.

In Persia, too, the Russians have been very active, and draw attention to the fact that their columns operating in Central Persia are nearing Kut-el-Amara, the town in Mesopotamia where General Townshend's army is bottled up by the Turks. This seems a trifle premature, as the nearest point to this town at which the Russians are in Persia is, as the crow flies, 210 miles therefrom. Over any known camel route the distance is over 250 miles, through the first part of the way, a very rough mountainous country, succeeded by a 140-mile strip of desert. Erzerum, from near which point a strong Russian force is also stated to be advancing to the relief of Kut, through the Tigris valley, is about 550 miles away.

In Mesopotamia itself there is nothing new. The army of relief is still twenty-three miles down the Tigris from Kut (and the Tigris is reported to be still rising) while the Turks remain in their former positions, though near Felahie a British scouting party was wiped out, and the Arabian irregulars gathered in 1,000 camels from the enemy.

A Portrait of Washington

Continued from page 189

a da which is consecrated to thine own serv e and for thine own honor."

T Sunday evening prayer reads as follo s: "O most glorious God, in Jesus Chr my merciful and loving Father I ackn wledge and confess my guilt in the eak and imperfect performance of the uties of this day. I have called on thee or pardon and forgiveness of sins, but o coldly and carelessly, that my pray s are become my sin and stand in need of pardon. I have heard thy holy Wor , but with such deadness of spirit that have been an unprofitable and forg ful hearer, so that, O Lord, though I ha done thy work, yet it hath been so n gligently that I may rather expect a cu e than a blessing from thee. But, O G , who art rich in mercy and plenteous redemption, mark not, I beseech thee what I have done amiss; remember am but dust, and remit my transgres ons, negligences and ignorances, and over them all with the absolute obe ence of thy dear Son, that those sacri ces which I have offered may be acce ted by thee, in and for the sacrifice Jesu Christ offered on the cross for me; for s sake, ease me of the burden of my sins and give me grace that by the call of t Gospel I may rise from the slumber f sin unto newness of life. . . . The weak petitions I humbly implore thee o hear, accept and answer for the sake of thy dear Son Jesus Christ our Lor Amen."

F m the Monday morning prayer: "Increase my faith with the sweet promises of the Gospel." And from the Monday evening prayer: "Take care, I pray thee, of my affairs and more direct me in thy truth. Defend me from my enemies, especially my spiritual ones. . . . Pity the sick, the poor, the weak, the needy, the widows and fatherless, and all that mourn or are broken in spirit."

There has been wrought into one of the windows of the Washington Memorial Chapel at Valley Forge this ejaculatory prayer: "I commend the interests of our dearest country to the protection of Almighty God, and those who have the superintendence of them to His Holy keeping." Washington's nephew, Robert Lewis, stated that Washington daily knelt in prayer at home with an open Bible before him. In a letter to General Armstrong, Washington said: "I am sure there never was a people who had more reason to acknowledge a divine interposition in their affairs, than those of the United States; and I should be pained to believe that they had forgotten that agency, which was so often manifested during our Revolution, or that they failed to consider the omnipotence of that God, who is alone able to protect them."

SUCH was the man, first in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen, whom artists and sculptors have striven to portray on canvas and in marble for a perpetual stimulation of American ideals.

Coal Bill $40 Less
More Heat—Few Ashes—Healthful Air

Here's the Letter
"The UNDERFEED is giving the best of satisfaction, and it is with pleasure that I write you regarding it.
We use soft coal costing $4.50 per ton. Hard coal here is $8.50. I estimate we saved $40 on our coal last winter. Furnace is easy to manage. No waiting until 10 A. M. to get heat up as with our old top-feed. I remove ashes once or twice a week, and only a small quantity. Before we could not grow flowers on account of gas from other furnace. Now we can. To my mind it is the best heating apparatus to be had. I am proud to be the owner of one."
(Signed) E. E. LORD, Peterboro, Canada

A Big House in a Cold Part of Canada

Saving of 1/2 to 2/3 Coal Cost Guaranteed the UNDERFEED Way

When a big, successful concern says to you: "We guarantee to cut your coal bills 1/2 to 2/3," you've simply got to listen.

And when on top of this saving you can have cleaner and better heat, it all means that you cannot afford to let the opportunity go unnoticed.

For instance, read the letter shown to the left. It is from a cold part of Canada. It tells of more and better heat for less money the UNDERFEED way. And it is only one of thousands of just such others which we will send you for the asking.

Please don't ignore this, but sign and mail the attached coupon and get more money-saving facts about the Williamson UNDERFEED which today is saving money in 35,000 homes all over the country. You incur positively no expense or obligation in sending the coupon.

WILLIAMSON NEW-FEED UNDERFEED Furnaces and Boilers
CUT COAL BILLS 1/2 to 2/3

The "Candle" Principle
Coal is fed from below in the New-Feed UNDERFEED. That means the clean, live coals are always on top—never smothered—but in direct contact all the time with the most effective heat-radiating surfaces.
No smoke, gas or dust, because these valuable heat elements must pass up through the fire and be converted into clean usable heat.

Easy to Operate
A boy of twelve can easily operate the UNDERFEED. No stooping. Everything wonderfully simple and effective. Adapted to warm air, hot water or steam. Because of its scientific feed principle the UNDERFEED will burn the cheaper grades of coal as effectively as the more expensive grades. That's a first great saving you're always sure of.
Send the coupon today—NOW. Remember, the saving of one-half to two-thirds coal cost is actually GUARANTEED the UNDERFEED way. The coupon also brings a very interesting book, "From Overfed to UNDERFEED," free, which pictures and describes it all.

THE WILLIAMSON HEATER CO.
825 West Fifth Avenue CINCINNATI, OHIO

The Williamson Heater Co. 825 West Fifth Ave. Cincinnati, O.
Tell me how to cut my coal bills from 1/2 to 2/3 with a Williamson New-Feed Warm Air....Steam or Hot Water....(Mark X after system interested in) Name.......................Address.......................
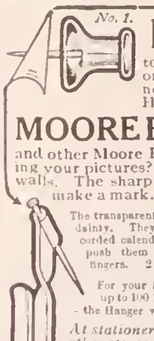
My Dealer's Name is.......................
DEALERS: Let us tell you about the New-Feed UNDERFEED and our 1916 proposition. Both are winners.

Earn Big Pay as a Tree Expert

From a farm hand at $25 a month to a tree expert at $3000 a year — from monotonous grind to a fascinating, healthful, respected profession—that is the rise of the man pictured here, P. E. Hudson, Jamaica, L. I., N. Y. Through the Davey course of training by mail hundreds of young men, like Hudson, have improved their condition in life. You have an equal chance. A few months study, at home, in your spare time, will fit you for any of the following positions — Tree Surgery, City Forestry, Park Superintendent, Fruit Growing, Tree Surgery and Fruit Growing, City Tree Expert, Forestry. These fields are uncrowded; you will have more demands for your services than you can fill. Write today for book, "Adventures in Success," and tell us which of the professions listed above especially appeals to you.

THE DAVEY INSTITUTE OF TREE SURGERY, 415 Oak St., Kent, Ohio



No. 1.
It's a Shame to drive ordinary nails or tacks into your newly-papered walls. Have you ever tried and other Moore Push devices for hanging your pictures? They will save your walls. The sharp steel points scarcely make a mark.
MOORE PUSH-PINS
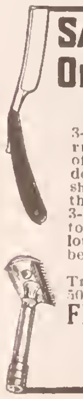
The transparent glass Push-Pins are neat and dainty. They're just the thing for pretty silk corded calendars, pennants, etc. You simply push them in with your fingers. 2 sizes. . . . 10c per packet
For your heavy pictures, hallracks, etc., weighing up to 100 lbs. use Moore Pushless Hangers - the Hanger with the Twist. 4 sizes. 10c per packet.
At stationery, hardware, Woolworth and other stores or send 10c for samples and illustrated booklet: How to Place Your Pictures.
No. 25
MOORE PUSH-PIN CO., 105 Berkley Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

RED COMB
POULTRY FEED

Feed For Eggs!
Now is the time to make your layers produce—while the price of eggs is soaring.
Free Book
By Experts
Just out. Tells how to feed for eggs — how to develop poultry for market and show. Your name on postal brings it. Get the book. Then go to dealer near you who handles Red Comb. Ask for Red Comb Meat Mash—the great egg-maker.
Edwards & Loomis Co., 343P No. Elizabeth St., Chicago, Ill.
Also Manufacturers of the Famous Red Horn Dairy Feeds



SAVE YOUR FACE
OIL YOUR RAZOR
Rust causes razor dullness. 3-in-One absolutely prevents rust on the minute "teeth" of every razor blade. Always do this before and after shaving: Draw blade between thumb and forefinger moistened with a little 3-in-One. If an "ordinary" razor, oil strop, too. Then—strop and have the most luxurious shave of all your life. Oil blade again before putting away.
3-in-One is sold everywhere in 3 size bottles: Trial size, 10c; 3-oz., 25c; 8-oz., (half pint) 50c. Also in Handy Oil Cans, 25c.
FREE—Generous sample and scientific "Razor Saver" circular.
3-IN-ONE OIL COMPANY
42 CM. Broadway, New York City

Guaranteed
Everbearing
Strawberries

Free for Testing
A pair of mated EVERBEARING STRAWBERRY PLANTS FREE if you will report as to your success with them. Will bear loads of big, red berries from June to November. We have counted 480 berries, blossoms and buds on a single plant. A postal will bring the plants, also enough seed of the new CEREAL FETERITA to plant a rod square of ground. Also a pkt. of perennial ORIENTAL POPPY seed. Send 10 cts for mailing expense or not, as you please. Write today and get acquainted with THE GARDNER NURSERY COMPANY
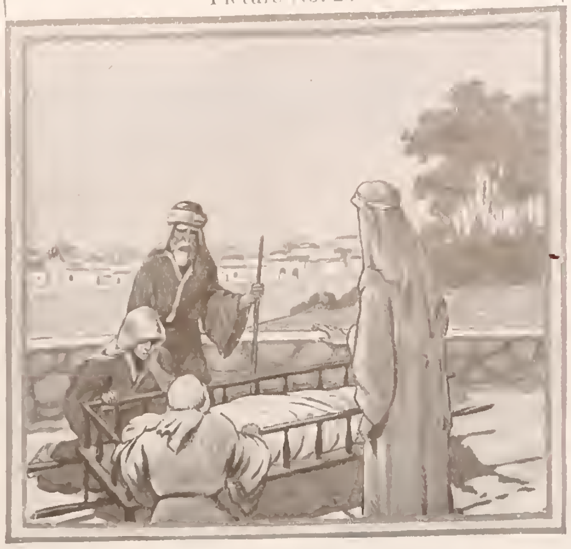
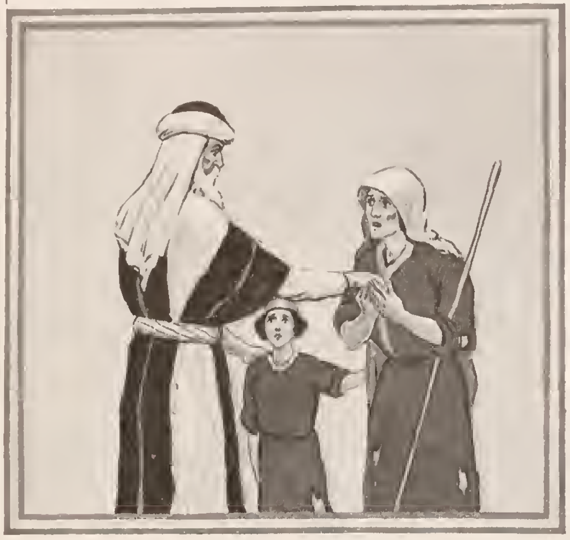
Box 769, Osage, Iowa.

TYPEWRITERS FACTORY TO YOU
Look at these bargains! Typewriters Rebuilt in our own Factories, and guaranteed for one year.
Underwoods $25 to $50 Royals $25 to $65
L. C. Smith $30 to $55 Olivers $20 to $45
Brand new No. 2 Smith Premiers $45
Special this month
Remington Visible No. 10, $38.50
We have others, of course. Send for catalogue describing them. Branch offices in principal cities.
AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE CO., Inc., 345 Broadway, N. Y.

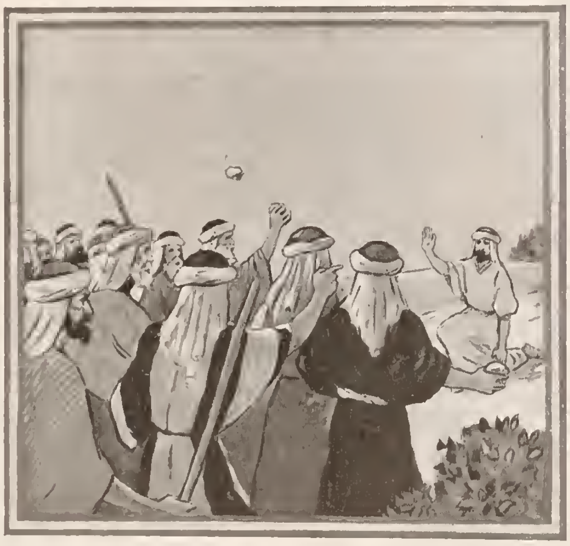
Picture No. 25



Picture No. 26



Picture No.27



THIS COUPON
May Be Either Cut Out or Copied

Date, ...1916.

The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.
Gentlemen:—I accept your offer No.——, as explained on page from which this coupon is taken, in the Christian Herald of February 16, and enclose $——.

(Note to applicant:—See matter to the right for texts of different offers.)

Name . . . .

Address . . . .

Mothers and Fathers;
Ministers and Teachers;
Aunts and Uncles;
Big Brothers and Sisters;
Grandparents and Godparents:

Anybody and everybody interested in the welfare of at least one boy or girl!

Do you realize with what lasting effect you can utilize the Christian Herald

Bible Picture Contest?

Let us explain:

WHY YOU SHOULD INTRODUCE THIS CONTEST TO YOUNG PEOPLE YOU KNOW

HOW old is your boy,—or your girl? If the answer is "nine" or "nineteen," or anywhere between, you are concerned in this discussion.

Granted that you have made provision for schooling, church attendance, Sunday School, good reading, moral training, social development, excellent home surroundings, and all that—

Yet the fact remains that Youth can't constantly be at these things. Young people must have recreation in plenty. Now, masters of pedagogy insist that we inject the element of entertainment into study, if we would get the best results with Youth. And the Christian Herald has evolved a method whereby the routine stud of the Bible and religion may be mos refreshingly re-enforced in accor ance with this pedagogical principl Our Bible Picture Contest makes tremendous appeal to the play i stinct that is in youth—and in mos of us. The serious worth of th contest is proven in many way and its full educational value wi be almost unconsciously obtaine by every participant, young an old.

So, if there is a boy or a girl i whom you are interested and whos mind you would have stored wit Bible truths, by all means introduc that boy or girl quickly to our Bib Picture Contest.

SOME FACTS ABOUT THE CONTEST

Now is the right time to start in the Bible Picture Contest. We are up to picture No. 27 today. The important consideration is that NO ANSWERS WILL BE ACCEPTED BY US UNTIL AFTER THE 60TH PICTURE HAS APPEARED—MORE THAN TWO MONTHS OFF YET. The pictures already published can be had from us at the nominal price of one cent each, or all free as explained below.

All members of the family may compete, each for himself or herself.

The Contest consists of fitting appropriate Bible verses to pictures. No picture can be really hard to solve; for the reason that all answers are in the booklet "Gems from the Bible," and whichever text or texts supremely fit are the best answers. You can find the best answers; but you must look for them, in "Gems from the Bible."

Don't waste time recording an answer for a pictu unless that answer is a Bible verse CONTAINED I THE BOOK "GEMS FROM THE BIBLE."

Answers may be submitted (all together, at the en each written below the proper picture drawn by yo but you will undoubtedly prefer—as is permitted the Rules—merely to write your answers in the alrea arranged spaces of the pamphlet which we call Reply Book. Then you need not draw any pictures. T Reply Book is a kind of blank book, with one page s aside for the answers to each of the sixty pictures. Wh you receive it, you will see that the submitting of yo answers becomes as simple as "A, B, C."

"Gems from the Bible," Reply Book and all the pictu to date (free), as well as full Rules, object lessons a general information, constitute the Contest OUTFI

HOW THE BIBLE PICTURE CONTEST OUTFIT MAY BE OBTAINED

NO. 1. The Outfit will be sent at once, and a year's subscription (new, renewal or extension) to the Christian Herald entered up, any given address, on receipt of two dollars.

NO. 2 If you send in $2.00 in fulfilment of offer No. 1 for yourself, you will of course receive the Outfit; but if you are sending t subscription for some one else (not now on our list), and you yourself are a subscriber, then—in addition to the Outfit sent that person you too will at once receive an Outfit, free. That means two Outfits.

NO. 3. The Outfit will be sent at once to any subscriber who sends in $1.50 to pay for a new subscription obtained.

NO. 4. The Outfit will be sent at once on receipt of any of the following subscription combinations (new or renewal):
(a)—One year to the Christian Herald; and one year to the Modern Priscilla, a monthly magazine for the home, for $2.50.
(b)—One year to the Christian Herald; and one year to the Orange Judd American Agriculturist, a first class weekly farm pap which will come to you edited for your own section of the country, for $2.50.

In filling out the coupon, which you see on the left, state that you are enclosing $2.00, and mention Offer No. 1 or Offer No. 2; or th you are forwarding $1.50, and mention Offer No. 3; or that you are sending $2.50 and mention Offer No. 4 (a) or offer No. 4 (b). In a of these cases, write your own name and address on the coupon; and give address(es) of other person(s), according to Offer you are acceptin on separate piece of paper.

ADDRESS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York Cit

REMEMBER THE $3,500 IN CASH REWARDS

$1,250 is First Reward; Second, $625; Third, $350; and 416 Other

A GOOD CHANGE

A Change of Food Wo:ks Wonders.

rong food and drink cause a lot of troble in this world. To change is firsaid when a person is ill, particularly fro the stomach and nervous troubles. As n illustration: A lady in Mo. was brght around to health again by leang off coffee and some articles of foo that did not agree with her.

e says:

'or a number of years I suffered wit stomach and bowel trouble which kep getting worse until I was ill most of e time. About four years ago I leftoff coffee and began using Postum. Mystomach and bowels improved right alo, but I was so reduced in flesh and so rvous that the least thing would ovcome me.

'hen I changed my food and began usi Grape-Nuts in addition to Postum. I li d on these two principally for about fou months. Day by day I gained in fles and strength until the nervous trole had disappeared. I feel that I owmy health to Postum and Grape-Nuts.

'usband was troubled, for a long tim with occasional cramps, and slept bac. Finally I prevailed upon him to ave off coffee and take Postum. Aft he tried Postum for a few days he foul that he could sleep and that his craps disappeared. He never went bac to coffee." Name given by Postum Co Battle Creek, Mich.

stum comes in two forms:

stum Cereal—the original form—mu be well boiled. 15c and 25c package stant Postum—a soluble powder—disves quickly in a cup of hot water, an with cream and sugar, makes a delous beverage instantly. 30c and 50c ins.

th kinds are equally delicious and cos about the same per cup.

'here's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

EW OIL LIGHT
Beats Electric or Gasoline

Write for FREE BOOK
telling all about the wonderful new Aladdin Mantle Lamp that burns 50 hours on a gallon kerosene (coal oil.) No odor, smoke or noise. Tests by Government and 33 leading universities show it gives twice as much light as best roundwicamps on half the oil. Lights entire room with po white, steady light that saves the eyes. Won Go edal at the Panama Exposition. Guaranteed.

10ays Free—Send No Money
Vn we send you the Free Book, we will tell you hovou can try the Aladdin 10 nights in your own hor without risking a cent—we even prepay charges. Be first to write from your locality and get our spel introductory offer. Write our nearest office today r Free Book and particulars of free trial.
MATLE LAMP CO., 1255 Aladdin Bldg., Chicago
Largest Coal Oil Mantle Lamp House in the World
Als ffices at New York City, Portland, Montreal, Winnipeg

Y CAN MAKE BIG MONEY delivering the Aladdin am neighbors. Sample Free to responsible men wh now us they mean business. Give full information ow long you have lived in community, whether hav ig or auto to work in country, what territory you pre, etc. We furnish capital—no investment necessar Write quickly before territory is taken.

Mae Your Spare Time Profitable are establishing hundreds of additional ocagencies for the Christian Herald.

devoting only your spare time in the ntest of the Christian Herald, you can earn te for particulars.

A STEADY INCOME.

CHISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, N.Y.

POMPEIAN OLIVE OIL
ALWAYS FRESH
HE STANDARD IMPORTED OLIVE OIL

Sta a Friendship-Maid-Link-Bracelet

ONLY 12c
ST ING SILVER
ROLLED GOLD

We give you one LINK absolutely Free to each bracelet. Friends give or exchange others. Links only 12c. each with 3 initials engraved FREE. Send to-day for one or more, stating whether Rolled Gold, Sterling Silver, beaded or plain desig With your first order for one or more Links we send FREE a bea ful black ribbon so you can start wearing your Links at once.
Frie hip Jewelry Co., 83 Chambers St. Dept. 516, New York

E. RN MONEY Showing Queen Fabric dress goods. Honest, ambitious women wanted. Salary or com. Whor part time Experience unnecessary Be first in your loca. Queen Fabric Mfg. Co., Dept. 430, Syracuse, N. Y.

The Correspondence of Professor David Smith, D.D.

Please give me your opinion with regard to the meaning of confession. A child about nine years stole a few Christmas cards from a shop, and some years after, when wanting to be right with God, she sent money to pay for them and asked forgiveness, but withheld the name. Do you think that sufficient confession? She is now a married woman, and the question has troubled her lately. Ought she to have told her name? She does not know now if that shop is in existence or not. Do you think she has what is called a morbid conscience on the matter?

THE lady has fulfilled the utmost letter of the law of confession, and may freely set her mind at rest and trouble herself no more. The law is that reparation must be commensurate with the injury, neither less nor more. The loss of the cards was, in this instance, the whole of the injury, and the payment has made it good. Nothing more is required. To go farther would be not merely superfluous, but a positive wrong, an aggravation of the original injury. It would be a twofold wrong. (1) To the lady herself and her family. It would expose her and them to a gratuitous humiliation. There is no spiritual value in voluntary self-mortification. When our sins find us out and put us to public shame, we have no right to complain, and should bear it meekly; but self-exposure is no duty, and we should accept it as a merciful dispensation when we are saved from open humiliation. And all the more when our exposure would involve others. It is a sacred duty to shield those who love us from shame on our account. (2) Confession would be an injury also to the merchant. To a good man there is nothing more painful than the humiliation of a fellow creature; and unless that merchant be destitute of humanity he would exclaim: "Why did you tell me? Of course I forgive the wrong, and it grieves me that you should have subjected yourself to this self-abasement. Your confession has hurt me far more than the wrong you did me." It is possible that he might be a heartless fool, and then he would extend the wrong by telling the story and exposing the lady and her family to ill-natured gossip. It would probably be unjust to say that she has "a morbid conscience"; but brooding always tends to make one morbid, and a just appreciation of her offense would save her from this danger. Certainly she should not make light of it and dismiss it as a mere childish peccadillo. It is, no doubt, a trifle, but trifles have a moral value. The act may be little, but the issue is great. DAVID SMITH.

The College, Londonderry.

◆

She Wanted to "Git Book Larnin'"

ONE morning early in November last, Alice J. came with her old grandmother to enter the Mayesville Institute, Mayesville, S. C. Alice is fourteen years old and is a very bright girl.

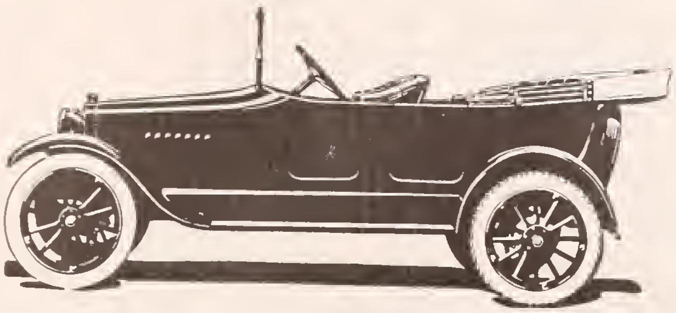
When the superintendent, Emma Wilson, asked what was wanted, the poor old soul said, "I brung dis yer chile to yo' school. She wanter larn her book and she wanter larn to sew, so she kin make clothes. Alice cry every day to come to school, but I ain't got no money to pay fur her schoolin' an' I brung along dis yer bag er potatoes to give you, if you will please, ma'm, take her I'll do all I kin fur her, but I tell you de truth, I cain't do much. So please, ma'm, take her in yo' school an' do the best you kin for her She ain't got no mother nor father. She is got a good head an' won't give no trouble."

Alice listened without saying a word When told that she could not be admitted, she began crying and pleaded most piteously to be allowed to come to school. She said, "Jes a little while. I'll work fur you and do all you want me to do. Please, ma'm, let me stay" The superintendent did not have the heart to turn her away.

There are many who, like Alice, are eager to "git book larnin'," but who are so pitifully poor that it is out of the question, unless some generous-hearted person comes to their aid. Many of these poor boys and girls have been helped by the readers of this journal, and in almost all such cases the benefactors have the satisfaction of knowing that their protégés have "made good."

Any one who is interested in Alice or other girls of her class can be fully informed concerning the Mayesville Institute by writing to the Christian Herald, to which all contributions should be sent in aid of the work.

SAXON "SIX"
A big touring car for five people



Plenty of room for five

Everyone is comfortable in a Saxon "Six." The driver and his seatmate have plenty of leg room. And three large people can find easy sitting in the wide tonneau.

People who enter the Saxon "Six" for the first time are astonished at its roominess and comfort. Some may have thought of a Saxon as a small car. But Saxon "Six" is not a small car. It is really a big car. It has the longest wheelbase and greatest inside width of any car in its price class.

It has long cantilever springs of vanadium steel. They cradle you over bumps and smooth out the unevenness of rough country roads.

Other big winning features of the Saxon "Six" are: Saxon high speed motor, giving wonderful power and flexibility; yacht line body, the most beautiful type of automobile body ever designed; light weight, the modern principle of motor car building—ample strength but no excess tonnage to waste gasoline and tires; two-unit electric starting and lighting; demountable rims; 112" wheelbase; 32x3½" tires; Timken axles.

And above all this car is a "Six." Once you have fully experienced the steady pull, the luxurious smoothness, the freedom from gear shifting that only a "Six" can give—no lesser car will satisfy you.

SAXON
Strength Economy Service

Let your nearest Saxon dealer give you a demonstration.

Write for our interesting booklet, "Saxon Days." Address Dept K.

"Four" Roadster	$395	"Six" Touring Car	$785
With detachable Coupe top	455	With detachable Limousine top	935
Delivery Car	395	"Six" Roadster	785

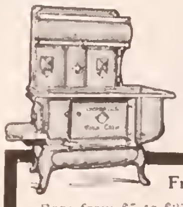
Saxon Motor Car Company, Detroit

(275)



Factory Prices
Save $5 to $23

Freight Paid A Year's Trial

Save from $5 to $23 by buying direct from factory. 55 years' reputation back of every stove. Our long experience and big output gives you a better stove or range at less cost.

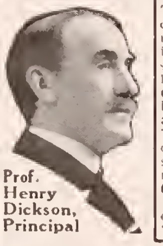
Gold Coin Stoves and Ranges

Use one for a year—money refunded if it doesn't prove absolutely satisfactory. We pay freight, guarantee safe delivery and send every stove ready to set up. BIG FREE CATALOG Send for it now. See why improved features of Gold Coin Stoves help you save fuel and bake better Write today.
GOLD COIN STOVE CO., 11 Oak St., Troy, N. Y.

The Key To Success
Stop Forgetting

Increase Your Efficiency

The secret of business and social success is the ability to remember. I can make your mind an infallible classified index from which you can instantly select thoughts, facts, figures, names, faces. Enables you to concentrate, develop self-control, overcome bashfulness, think on your feet, address an audience. Easy. Simple. The result of 20 years' experience in developing memories of thousands of students. Write today for copy of my book "How to Remember" and Copyrighted Intensely Interesting Memory Test Free, also how to obtain FREE copy of my book "How to Speak in Public."



Prof. Henry Dickson, Principal

Dickson School of Memory, 701 Hearst Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Famous Singers Praise
LUDEN'S MENTHOL CANDY COUGH DROPS

Let LUDEN'S guard your voice —keep nasal passages clear, and throat healthy. No narcotics; no coloring. Have many uses.

LUDEN'S
Menthol Candy
COUGH DROPS
LUDEN'S NAME ON EVERY DROP

In the Yellow Box 5c

WM. H. LUDEN
Manufacturing Confectioner
READING, PA.

ARMY AUCTION BARGAINS

Saddles	$3.00 up	Army Revolvers	$1.65 up
Bridles	.90 "	" B-L Rifles	.98 "
Team Harness	21.85 "	" Swords	.35 "
Leggings, pair	.15 "	" 7 Shot Carbine	3.50 "
Tents	2.85 "	New Uniforms	1.50 "

Colts Cal. 45 Revolver $7.45. Ctgs. 1c each. 15 Acres Government Auction Bargains illustrated and described in 420 large page wholesale and retail cyclopedia catalogue, mailed 25 cents East and 30 cents West of the Mississippi River.
Francis Bannerman, 501 Broadway, New York

A VACUUM CLEANER ON FREE TRIAL

The Reeves $5 Vacuum Cleaner is guaranteed to take ALL the dust from both rugs and furniture Delivered at your door on 30 days' free trial. Send for booklet.

AGENTS WANTED

THE REEVES V. C. CO.
130 Broad Street Milford, Conn.

"We'll just put him on Sanatogen"

WHAT a happy thought prompted that decision! He wasn't his "old self" at all—and try to mask it as he might, his face showed only too well how poorly he felt. And so when a friend—with conviction born of experience—spoke of Sanatogen, they "put him on Sanatogen."

Sanatogen—combining the tissue-building properties of a FOOD with the invigorating qualities of a TONIC—rejuvenated his appetite, improved his digestion, brought rest to his nerves, made good the over-drafts upon his energy—and little by little brought back that old-time vigor and sprightliness and joy in living.

Perhaps you have not yet had this happy thought—perhaps you haven't yet "put him on Sanatogen."

Then simply let us tell you this: Over 21,000 physicians have testified in writing to the value of Sanatogen after having observed its effect in daily practice. So, too, have hundreds of famous men and women whose very names must be convincing—people who know from personal experience the restorative help that Sanatogen gives. It is a verdict that cannot be mistaken.

When will you give Sanatogen the opportunity to help him, or her, or you?

Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere in sizes from $1.00 up.

Grand Prize, International Congress of Medicine, London, 1913

Hon. Wm. E. Chandler, Former Secretary of the Navy, ex-Senator from New Hampshire writes:
"Sanatogen is a pleasant nutriment for cases of impaired digestion. It strengthens without irritating and promotes vitality in feeble folks."

Lady Henry Somerset, the prominent social reform advocate writes:
"Sanatogen undoubtedly restores sleep, invigorates the nerves and braces the patient to health. I have watched its effect upon people whose nervous systems have been entirely undermined and I have proved Sanatogen to be most valuable."

Sanatogen
ENDORSED BY OVER 21,000 PHYSICIANS

Send for a free copy of "Nerve Health Regained." If you wish to learn more about Sanatogen before you use it, write for a copy of this booklet, beautifully illustrated and comprising facts and information of the greatest interest. Tear off this as a reminder to address

THE BAUER CHEMICAL CO.
26F Irving Place New York

Young People's Topics for February 27

Exterminate the Saloon! Why? How?

Christian Endeavor. Hab. 2 : 1-14

WHY? Because the saloon ruins minds, bodies, homes, communities, nations. A learned and prosperous Parsee in a recent conversation with the writer declared that strong drink had ruined the great Parsee kingdom in Persia, and declared that he could not understand how a nation of intelligent people like the United States could tolerate this institution, which will surely bring about the nation's downfall if it is not destroyed. When we are not interested in this business of destroying the saloon it is because we have no fear that this enemy will ever conquer any one personally dear to us; but this is a thing we can never be sure of. We remember the sad and powerful testimony of Governor Paterson of Tennessee, who tells how the curse of drink overthrew his only son and how the anguish of this experience led him to become a worker for prohibition. But even if we were sure that no one dear to us would ever be stricken down by this enemy, still our care for others, the love for them which Jesus will put into our hearts if we will let him, should fire us with a determination to do all we can to take away this temptation and danger that is despoiling lives by the myriads.

How? The anti-saloon forces have their work well organized. They work by localities, finding out just where there is a likelihood, first, of bringing about local option, and then using that power of the popular vote to make the state or county dry. Christian Endeavor has adopted the slogan, "A Saloonless Nation by 1920." We can cooperate by stirring up public sentiment in our own locality, by cooperating with the official organizations working against the saloon, particularly the Anti-saloon League, which has abundantly demonstrated its sagacity and power in this crusade, and by doing all we can and getting others to do all they can to make the politicians who represent us in the State legislature and in Congress feel desperately uncomfortable until they have allied themselves on the side of prohibition. One very important detail of our work is a circulation of temperance literature. Get people to read such books as George Randolph Chester's "The Enemy," one of the most powerful temperance stories ever written, and Vance Thompson's "Drink and Be Sober," which is being circulated by the hundreds of thousands and doing untold good. Watch the pages of the Christian Herald for a new illustrated story written in the form of short letters accompanied by striking pictures by Remington Schuyler, portraying the upward path of temperance and the downward path of drink.

The Gold of God

Epworth League. Rev. 3 : 18; Matt. 13 : 44, 45, 46

GOD and gold! These two words are constantly getting tangled. Many people make gold a god. Some people who think they are serving God are really serving gold. Jesus used the word Mammon for gold, and said emphatically, "Ye can not serve God and Mammon."

But our lesson today is about some gold that God himself has. Not the gold that is an enemy of God, nor his rival, but gold that God himself possesses and distributes. He offers it frankly and plainly in this verse from the Revelation: "I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich." Jesus, speaking about the riches of God, said: "The kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field. Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto the merchantman, seeking goodly pearls; who when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it."

What are these riches of God, riches that he offers to bestow upon every soul for the asking, riches so great that it is a good bargain to part if necessary with every earthly possession to receive them? Riches of forgiveness, riches of love, riches of holiness, riches of power, riches of opportunity to help others, riches of immortal hope, riches of wondrous spiritual friendships, riches of endless spiritual joy—this is God's gold.

Christian Prospects in Asia

B. Y. P. U. Ps. 98 : 1-9

"I HAVE decided to become a Christian because I wish to be like Christian men whom I have observed—a man with a pure heart, strong blood, true patriotism and perfect zeal. I believe that Christ is able to save China." In these words Hon. Wen Shih Tsen, Commissioner of Foreign Affairs for Chekiang Province, stated his reasons for becoming a Christian. He was among the converts of the great Sherwood Eddy meetings of China year before last. At Dazia, in Chusan Island in East China, when there was difficulty in renting a house for Gospel work and there was some talk of giving up the Baptist Mission there, native Baptist Christians made up their minds to put up a building of their own. A lot was purchased; men of the church leveled the ground; their earnestness attracted the attention and help of their friends, and now the building is complete and paid for. There is a large auditorium, a day schoolroom, living room and guest room for the pastor, outside rooms for store-room, dining-room, kitchen; upstairs six good-sized rooms, the veranda running the full length of the house, and all this without any expense to the missionary society. So the high people and low people of China are coming to Jesus.

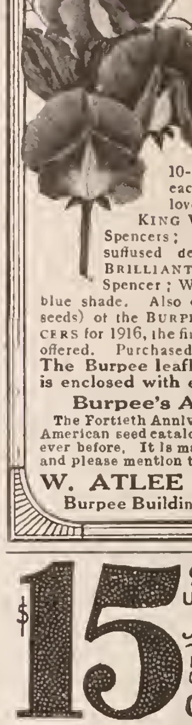
In one place a Baptist school meets in a Confucian temple. Rev. George E. Whitman, the principal, writes: "The classroom was dark and cheerless; no singing was allowed, but the voice could be raised to any pitch in prayer or instruction. For a time, during the hot weather, we moved the class into the main hall, where the god of literature presided. He sat in solemn state while we talked of things beyond his ken."

Baptist work is prospering in Burma and India. Last year 3,863 converts were baptized in Burma. Evangelistic work is hampered in India for lack of workers, but victories are being won. One minister, Rev. J. W. Stenger, of Mellore, baptized 133 converts last year; Rev. J. M. Thomssen reports 240 baptisms. A splendid work for criminals is being conducted by Rev. S. W. Bawden at Kavali, South India, in which he has the active cooperation of the government. Special work is also being done for Indian students. In the Bengal-Orissa Mission there is a Baptist membership of 1,600 in the nineteen organized churches. There are 4,000 pupils in the mission schools.

The following figures from the 1915 report of the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society are full of interest. The Burma Mission: Added by baptism during the year, 3,549; present total church members, 68,762; pupils in Baptist schools, 33,527; pupils joining church during the year, 550. Assam Mission. Baptized during the year, 754; present total of church members, 13,694; pupils in schools, 5,629; pupils joining church, 304. South India Mission: Added by baptism during the year, 3,357; present total church members, 69,090; pupils in Baptist schools, 21,379; pupils uniting with the church, 418. Bengal-Orissa Mission: Added by baptism during the year, 74; present total church members, 1,617. China Mission: Added by baptism, 740; present total church members, 7,085. Japan Mission: Added by baptism during the year, 399; present total church members, 3,920.

◆

I have been a devoted reader of the Christian Herald for a number of years, and I believe it to be the grandest Christian paper on earth. It takes the righteous view on every question. No person could read it without being benefited, and my earnest prayer is that it may live long, and become an indispensable guest to every part of the globe. N. V. DUDLEY.
South Bend, Wash.



Burpee's
Swee
Peas

Six Superb
Spencers

For 25c we will ma one regula 10-cent packet (40 to 50 seeds each of ELFRIDA PEARSON, lovely pink, of gigantic size
KING WHITE, the best of all Whi
Spencers; MRS. ROUTZAHN, rich bu suffused delicate pink; VERMILIO
BRILLIANT, the most brilliant scarl
Spencer; WEDGWOOD, a beautiful ligh blue shade. Also one large packet (90 to 10 seeds) of the BURPEE BLEND of SUPERB SPE
CERS for 1916, the finest mixture of Spencers ev offered. Purchased separately, would cost 60
The Burpee leaflet on Sweet Pea cultu is enclosed with each collection.

Burpee's Annual for 1916
The Fortieth Anniversary Edition of the Leadi
American seed catalog—is brighter and better th ever before. It is mailed free. Write for it tod and please mention this publication.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO
Burpee Buildings Philadelphia

$15 95 Upward ON TRIAL
American
FULLY GUARANTEED
CREAM SEPARATOR

A SOLID PROPOSITION to send new, well made, easy running, perfect skimming separator for $15.95. Skims warm or cold milk; making heavy or light cream. Bowl is a sanitary marvel; easily cleaned.

ABSOLUTELY ON APPROVAL
Different from picture, which illustrates our large capacity machines. Western orders filled from western points. Whether dairy is large or small write for handsome free catalog. Address:

AMERICAN SEPARATOR CO.
Box 4184 Bainbridge, N. Y.

"LAWN PARK" COOP
Saves Your Chicks
The Wire Park, which pulls out like a drawer, es hen and chicks fresh grass, air and sunshine ng the day; closes at night and in storms. This p meets every demand; portable, with removable or for easy cleaning; roomy, light, durable, sa y.

LAWN PARK BROOD COOP

IT TELESCOPES!
PROF
Agai t
Hawks, s, Weasel o.

Made of galvanized metal; repels vermin. Size, n.
18 in. x 24 in. x 48 in. Pays for itself in chicks an or saved. Write today for free circulars, special p id offer and how to turn work into pleasure and fit.
CYCLONE MFG. CO., DEPT. C; URBANA, O.

10 Sample Pkts. of Flower SEEDS FREE

1 Pkt. Asters, McGregor ixed
1 Pkt. Fancy Pansies, eous
1 Pkt. Sum. Cypress, Bur Bush
1 Pkt. Peony Poppies, le
1 Pkt. Snapdragon, Gia 'd
1 Pkt. Clove Pinks, Spi weet
1 Pkt. Alyssum, Always ooms
1 Pkt. Mignonette, Old orite
1 Pkt. Candytuft, All C
1 Pkt. Petunia, Free F ering

Send 10c to pay packing, po , etc., and we will mail these 10 pk lected seeds with full instructions, a 20c premium envelope which gives you more than the seed FREE

OUR GREAT SPECIAL BARGAIN CATA GUE
SENT FREE—OVER 100 FLOWERS SHOWN IN ORS
McGregor Bros. Co., Box 714 Springfiel hio

Choicest Roses and how to grow them, described in our free 98-pa Rose and Floral Guide. Nearly varieties—14 in colors—"the c n of the world's best roses." A lants are guaranteed to gro and bloom. Send for your Guid day.
The CONARD & Jones Co. WEST OVE Box Pa.
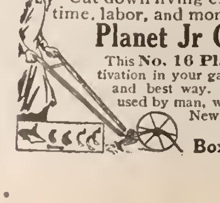
Rose specialists. 50 years' ex ience



Grow your own Vegeta es
Cut down living expenses. Easy t ave time, labor, and money by using Planet Jr Garden Tool
This No. 16 Planet Jr will do all cultivation in your garden in the easiest, kest and best way. Light but strong. be used by man, woman or boy.
New 72-page catalog free. rite
S L Allen & Co
Box 1202D Philad hia

Libby's
California ASPARAGUS

Delicious as a salad
Delightful as a Vegetable

The thoroughly distinctive flavor of the famous Sacramento Valley Asparagus, so frequently commented upon by visitors to the Coast—may now be enjoyed upon your home table at any season of the year.

You will be surprised at its moderate cost.

At Your Grocer

Libby, McNeill
& Libby
CHICAGO

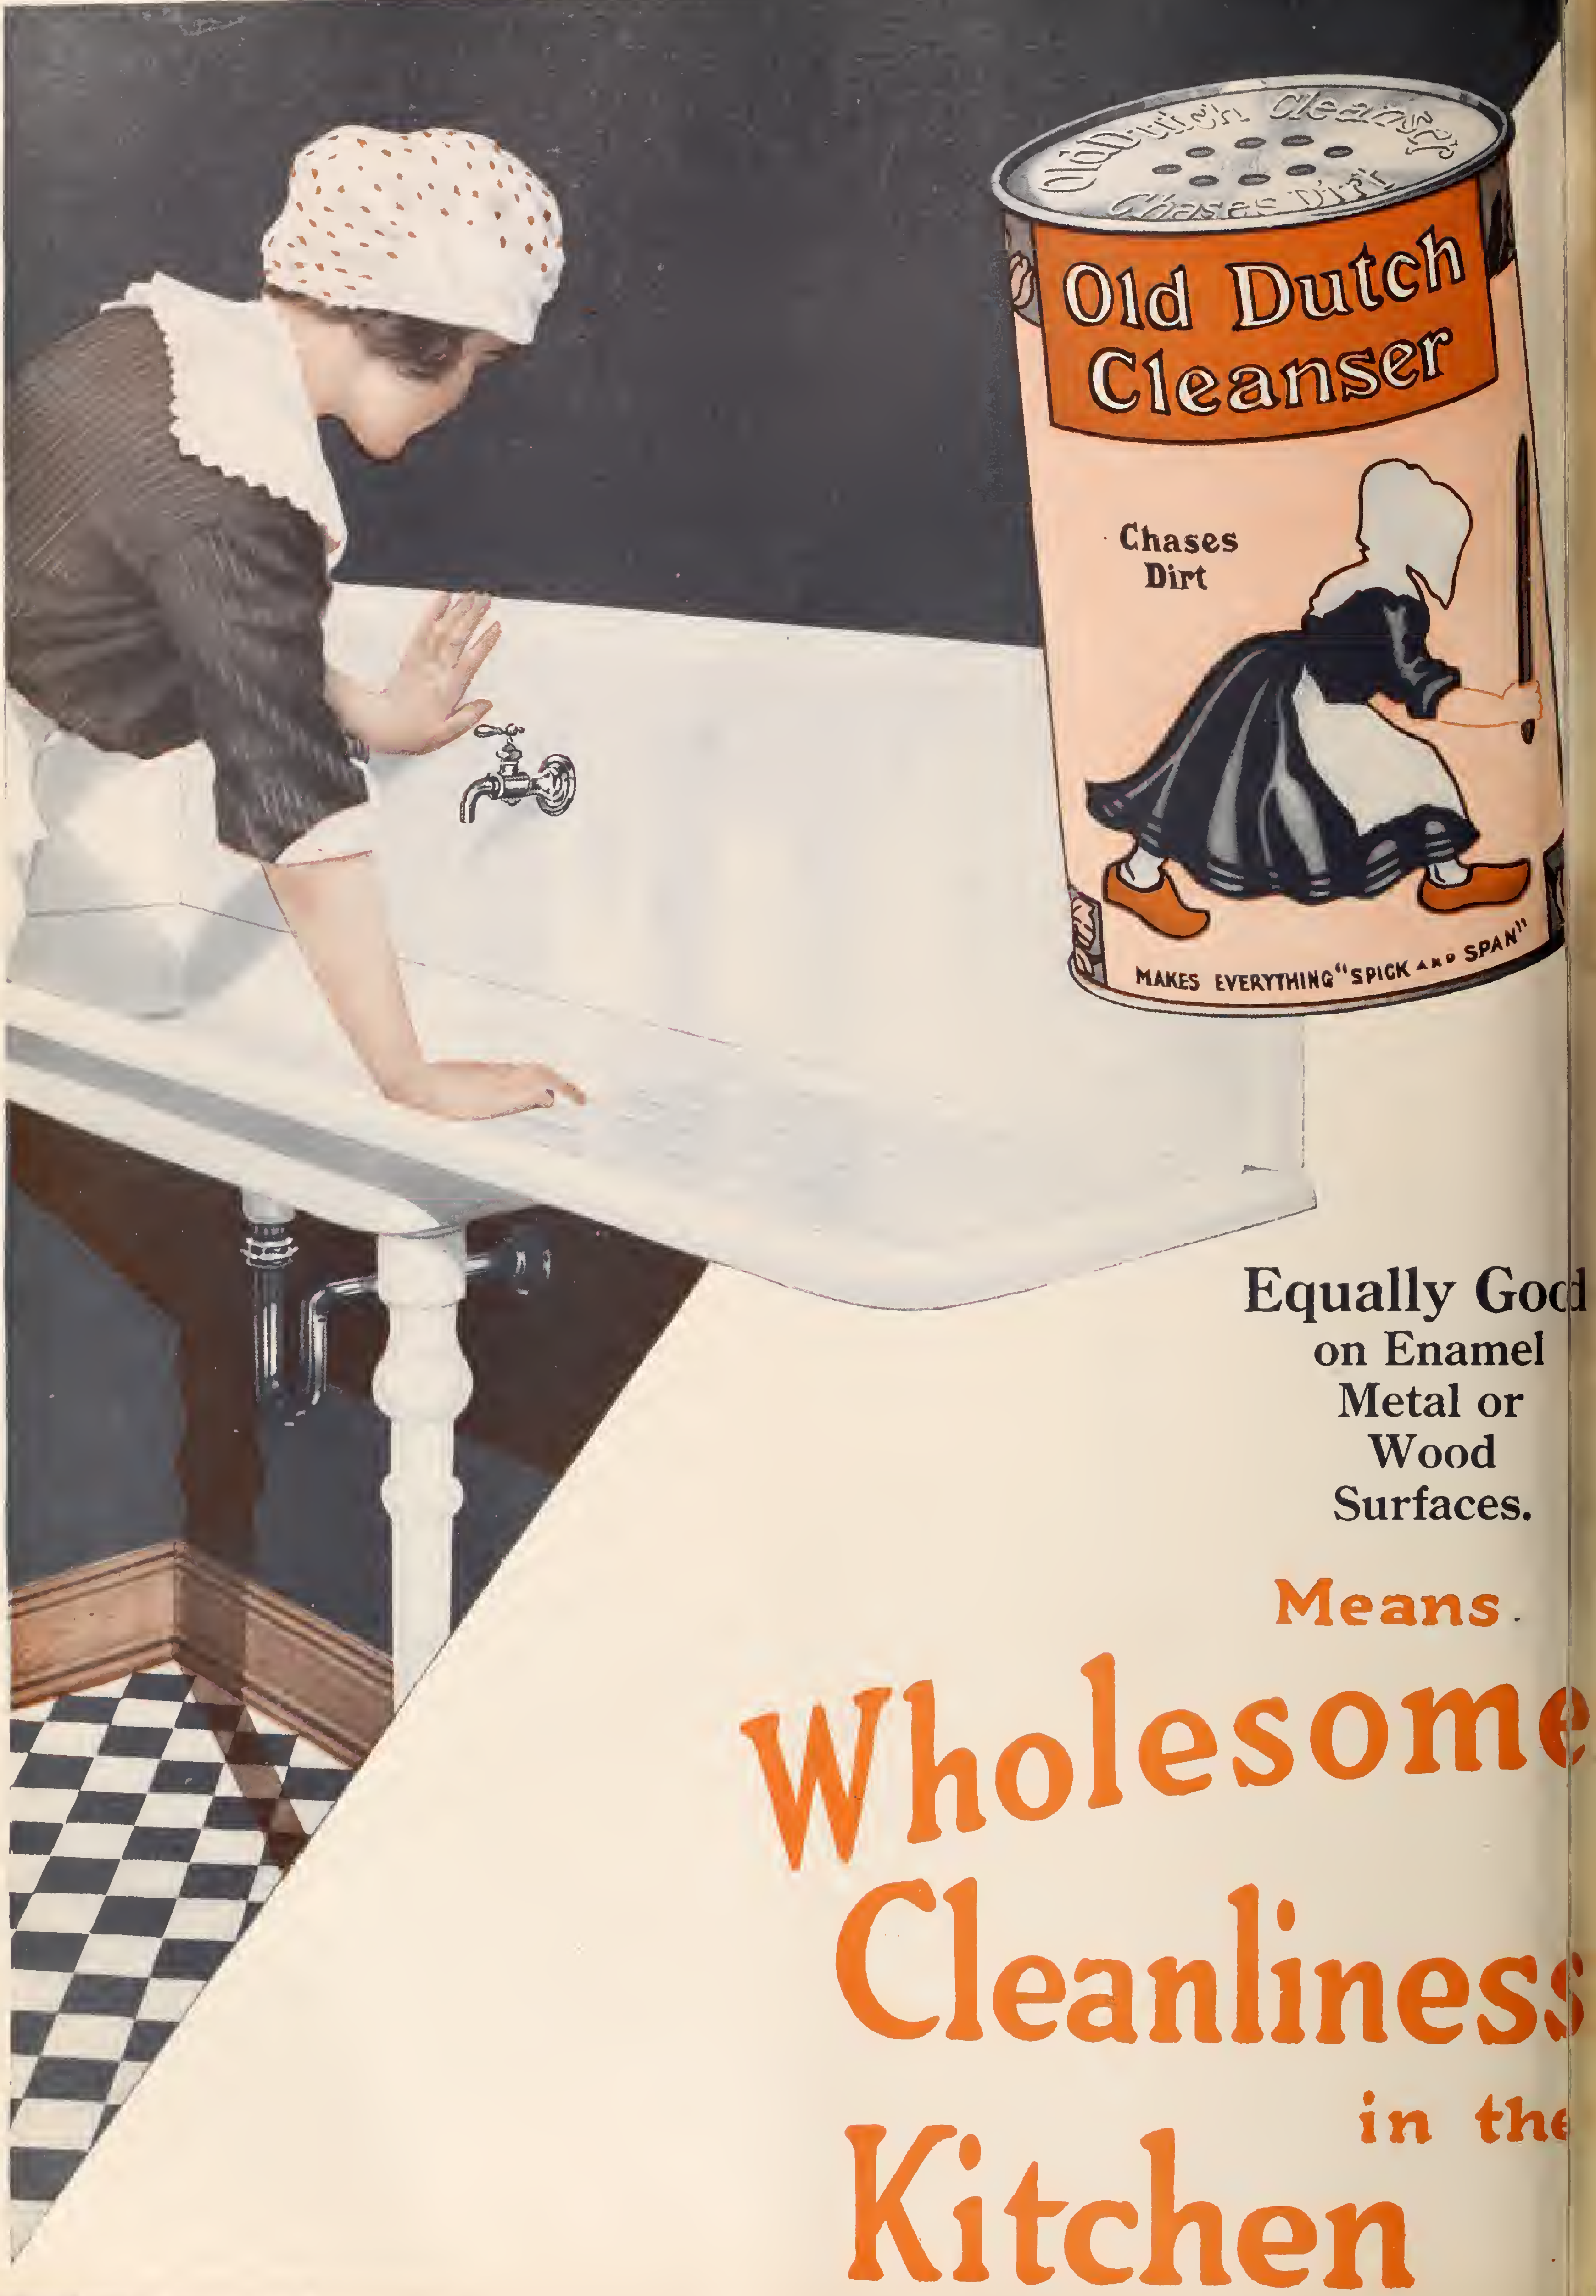
Libby's Asparagus and lettuce, with green pepper rings and hard boiled egg slices, with cream cheese. French dressing.

Libby's Asparagus tips, lettuce and capers. Italian dressing.

Libby's Asparagus and lettuce, hard boiled egg yolks and paprika. Mayonnaise dressing.

Libby's
Mammoth Green
California Asparagus
Libby, McNeill

Libby's Asparagus, either hot, with drawn butter, or cold with French dressing.



Old Dutch Cleanser Chases Dirt
Old Dutch Cleanser
Chases
Dirt
MAKES EVERYTHING "SPICK AND SPAN" Equally Good on Enamel Metal or Wood Surfaces.
Means Wholesome Cleanliness in the Kitchen

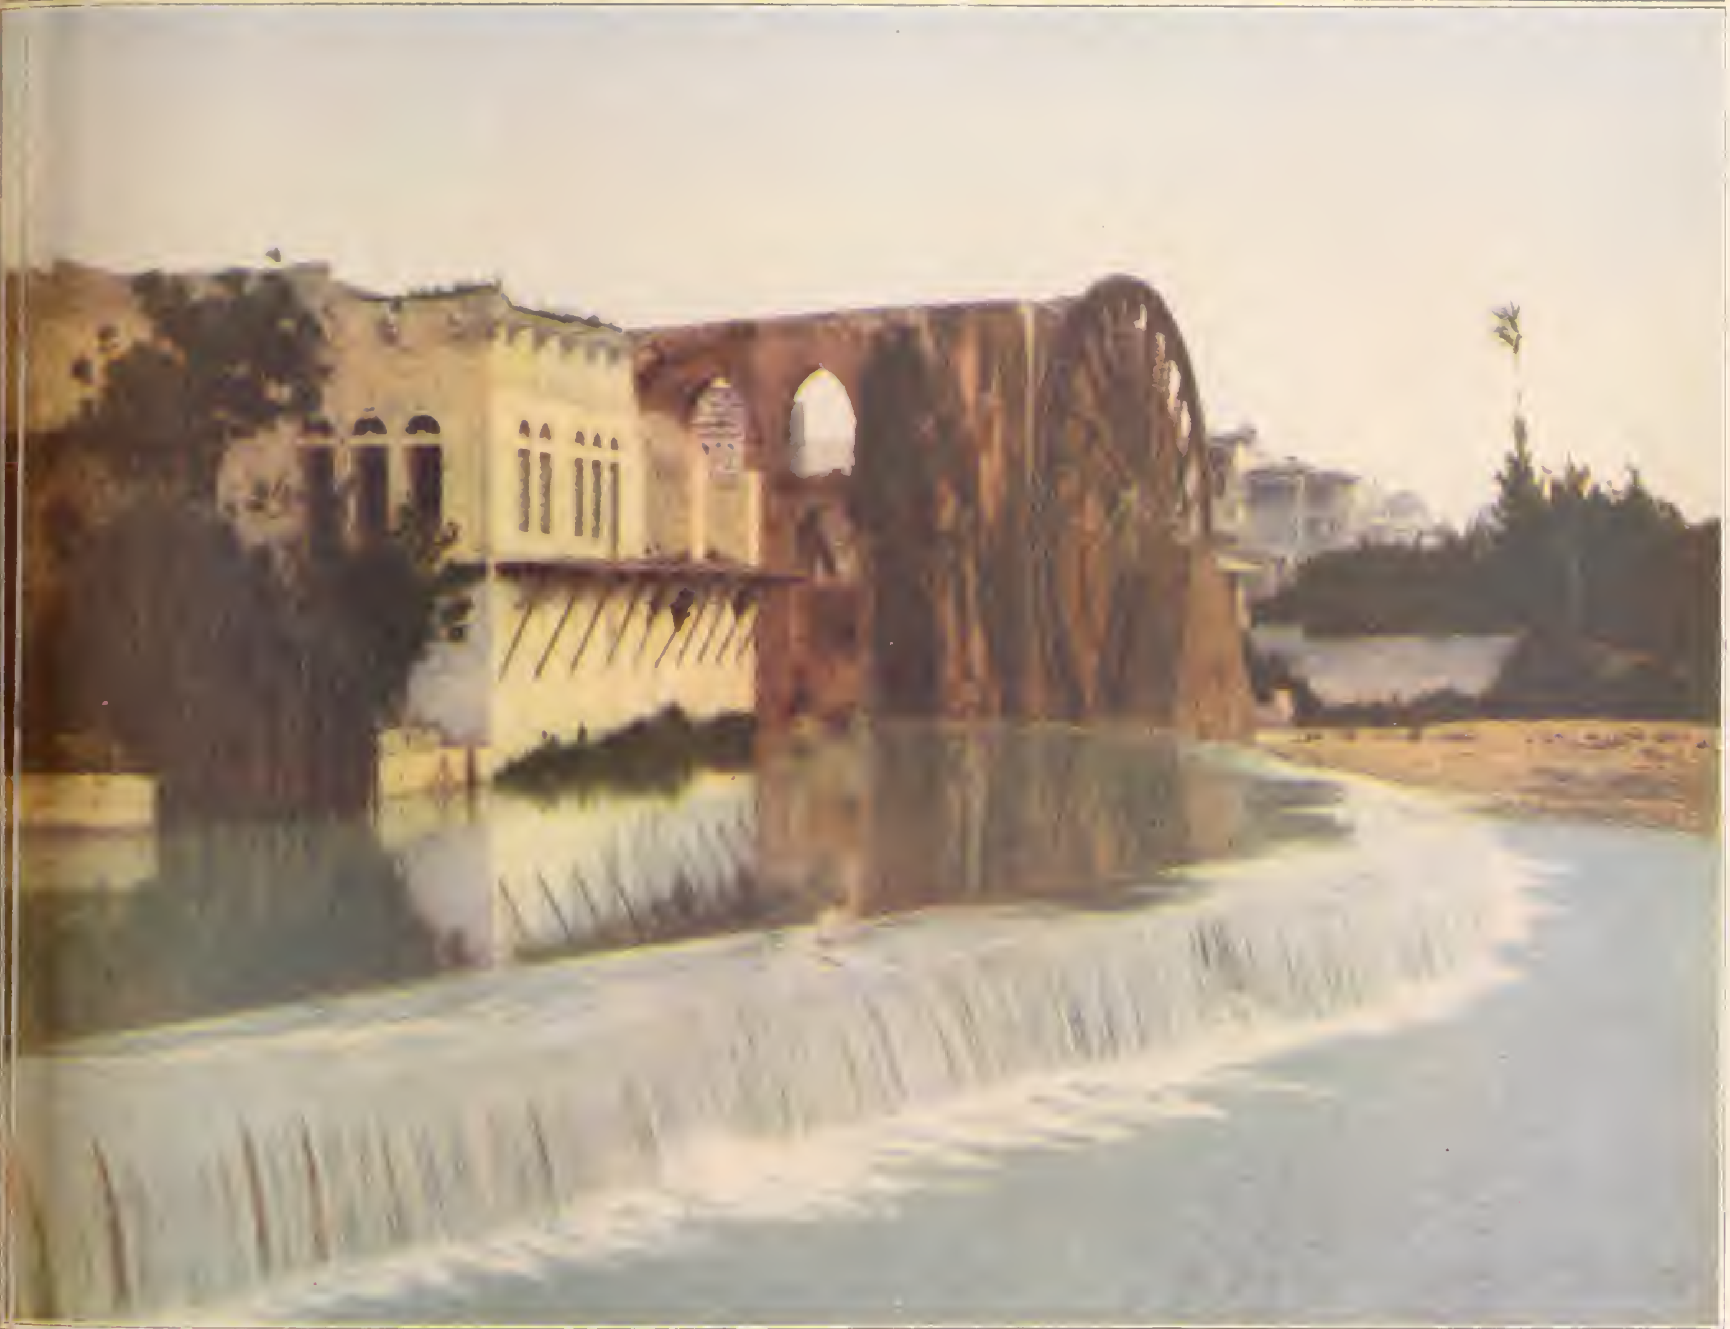
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SU CRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PU ISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 23, 1916

VOL. 39—NO. 8. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



(Description inside.)

Photograph by Maynard Owen Williams

ONE OF THE WATER WHEELS OF HAMATH

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

W. S., Philadelphia. Have we any positive knowledge of the existence of Paul? Does any historian mention him distinctly? Surely his life and letters ought to have given him a positive and distinct place in history outside the Scriptures.

Paul could doubtless have won a place in his contemporary world so prominent as to have given him room in the records made by the secular chroniclers of his own day. But he chose deliberately to live a life that would make him despised and unknown. We must remember that history is largely a record of military achievements. Paul had nothing to do with the destinies and development of the Roman Empire. And so far as his Epistles went, while we recognize now their profound philosophical, spiritual and ethical value, they were after all letters to little groups of humble people who held to a faith despised and ridiculed by the rest of the world. To the Jewish people he was simply a noisy heretic and blasphemer; to the Roman Empire he was simply a captive charged by his fellow countrymen with some incomprehensible and insignificant theological crime. The proof, however, of Paul's existence and work rests upon indisputable evidence. His letters are referred to by the earliest church fathers, whose writings date back almost to his own time. The references in his letters dovetail into the records of Luke's book of Acts. And there are many proofs in earliest church history of the profound impression he made on the early church, which indicate a most forceful personality.

E. J. H., Arlington, R. I. The picture, "Eight Bells in the Tropics," was painted by Professor Schnars-Alquist. We do not believe it represents any particular ship.

Subscriber, Athens, Ga. Your sickness has probably made you morbid and despondent. There are temperaments so constituted that they give way to hallucinations, which make even what are meant to be deeds of kindness on the part of others seem to be the reverse. Our physical condition often gives color to our thoughts and feelings, as smoke or mist may obscure the sunshine although the sun is still there. You should pray to be given a better frame of mind, a clearer understanding and a firmer trust in God's goodness and in the love of your friends. From your letter we should judge that you have misinterpreted them, though not intentionally. Pray for a more hopeful outlook, and do not hesitate to talk to those nearest you, for we believe they will be disposed to do all they can to help you and to brighten your life, by reassuring you of their love and thoughtfulness for your comfort. Ask God for his dear Son's sake to take all enmity and distrust out of your heart, and then—come what will, greet it with a smile. We shall be glad to hear from you again.

Professor Ernest P. Horrwitz of Dublin University sends us this interesting note: "In a recent issue of the Christian Herald attention was called to the derivation of the Gipsy dialects from Sanskrit and the Old Prakrit vernaculars which have sprung from Sanskrit. Some of the grammatical forms and vocabulary used by the Welsh Gipsies to the present day are almost identical with their Sanskrit equivalents. In particular the numerals of Aryan India (dwi, tri, chatur, pancha, etc.) and of the Romany of Wales have a startling family likeness. The reason is that the vagrant gipsy tribes, on their wanderings from the Gangetic valley via Egypt and the Bohemian forests, kept the old Prakrit of their Indian sires sacred and secret as a thieves' jargon."

G. T. B., Bellingham, Wash. A minister said recently that the ransom for the world's sin was paid to Satan. If this is not true, then to whom was the ransom paid?

This idea that Christ by his death paid a ransom to the devil is an odd attempt of ancient and medieval theologians to explain the mystery of the atonement. But it is wholly unsatisfactory, and has not been seriously considered in modern times. The idea of atonement grows out of the idea that there is some obstacle in the way of God's forgiveness of man, something that must be removed before God can forgive. Theories of the atonement fall into two general groups: those that find the obstacle to forgiveness in God, in his justice or his moral law, and those that find the obstacle in man himself. According to the former theories, the "ransom" means that Christ's death pays whatever is due the claims of justice or law. God's justice or God's law is satisfied by that death, so the sinner is redeemed, Christ's death being the ransom. Even if the appeal of the cross is only to man and not to God, Christ's death is still the ransom because by the power of its influence the sinner is set free from his sin and its results. In this case no one could be designated as receiving the ransom; just so, when a mother's grief brings back a wayward boy, her grief is his ransom, though it is not paid to any one. But all varieties of this second group of theories are apt, after all, to bring us back to the first; we see, in all these explanations and illustrations, that the payment of pain and grief is made to the whole moral universe. That is, things being as they are, some such redemption must be paid. And the moral universe is simply an expression of God's nature; so we may say, without making God seem in any wise harsh or cruel, that the debt is paid to him.

Subscriber, Fairview, Montana. How is it, in view of the church officers mentioned in I Cor. 12 : 28, that we do not have apostles and prophets in the present-day church?

In this verse Paul is describing the church as it existed at the time of his writing. Some of the twelve apostles were at this time still alive and Paul himself claimed to be a true apostle because he himself had seen the Lord. (I Cor. 9 : 1; II Cor. 11 : 5; II Cor. 12 : 11. See also the greetings of most of his epistles and I Cor. 15 : 8-9.) The office of prophet, however, was clearly meant to continue. The gift of prophecy is referred to frequently in the New Testament and seems to be equivalent to our modern church acts of preaching, testimony and exhortation. The particular duty of the prophet, even in the Old Testament, is not to foretell events, but to receive messages direct from God, which he repeats again to the people. In this sense the modern preacher should and must be a true prophet of God. Teachers are recognized in the church now as then, and the preacher combines in his office the work of prophet and teacher as well. "Miracles" and "healing" should accompany the modern church as they accompanied the church of the early day. "Helps and governments" are as much in need now as then, while the gift of tongues may be put down last, as it was in the day of Paul. You ask whether any church believes in all the spiritual gifts mentioned in this chapter. We think that all the churches recognize these gifts as possible. But, on the other hand, it is perhaps not necessary to believe that Paul was giving here a rigid, unalterable, formal list and plan of organization for the church. Note particularly that bishops, elders and deacons are omitted from this particular list, offices which some denominations hold to form the chief and most distinct classes of ecclesiastic organization.

K. L., Jamestown, N. Y. It is a difficult task to win a backslider, and especially one who, in addition to neglect of spiritual things, has been engrossed for many years in worldliness. Yet in the case you mention in your letter, there is one very marked and hopeful sign. His fears and anxiety are in themselves evidence that God's spirit has not been withdrawn, but is still striving with him and urging repentance and return. He has not fallen beyond hope; if that were the case, he would be wholly indifferent. He should take courage, go to the mercy seat in true repentance and ask forgiveness for the sake of him who has assured us that no one so coming will be denied or "cast out." Let him remember that the divine mercy is abundant, and that our Father is more ready to bestow it than we are to receive. The experience of the past years with all their sufferings and disappointments will no longer weigh on him as a burden, for Omnipotence can lift it and remove it far from him.

Reader, Detroit, Mich. The passage in Num. 32 : 23 should be studied in relation to the earliest Bible passages on the same subject, i. e., the impossibility of hiding our sins from God. Adam, conscious of guilt, tried in vain to hide from God. Cain, in Gen. 4 : 7, was warned, when he harbored evil thoughts of Abel, "if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door." So Moses, in warning the Israelites against disobedience to God (Num. 32 : 23), told them that they could not hide their sins from the eye of Omniscience; that they would assuredly be caught in the pit they had digged, and that judgment would fall upon them. Observe that in the passages quoted (in Gen. 4 and Num. 32) there is the promise of divine favor and blessing as the reward of obedience. In Ps. 103 the divine mercy and forgiveness are extolled, and shown to be boundless and freely given to all who love God and come to him in the spirit of penitence and faith. He not only forgives our sins but removes them far from us, that they may not trouble us any more. The expression employed in the 12th verse of the psalm is indicative of entire acquittal of guilt and freedom from the penalty of sin.

R. D. S., Troy, N. Y. What qualifications should a young man have to become a minister of the Gospel?

The one essential qualification is a real experience of evangelical religion. The man who tries to preach without having a clear experience of the divine life in his soul will have a hard and heavy road to travel. Of almost equal importance is a real passion to help and to save other souls. The truly successful minister is usually conscious of a special divine call to preach the Gospel. He feels not only that he may do so or would like to do so, but that he must do so. He declares with Paul, "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel!" He hears the voice of Jesus saying: "Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain." Love for God, love for souls, the conviction that he must preach—these are the chief requirements. Besides a mastery of the Bible itself, the mind should be stored with the most important facts of secular history and church history, the principal doctrines of theology and the fundamental rules of effective speaking. Voice culture is important. But the chief study next to the Bible itself is the study of man. Much of our present-day theological training has a tendency to take a man out of close touch with his fellows. The best training is to go among people, finding out how they live, how they think, what they long and strive for. Economic and industrial movements must be studied sympathetically and the principles of sound economics, so far as possible, mastered. The preacher must feel that it is his duty not only to save individual souls, but to help in the reconstruction of society to bring it into conformity with the standards of Jesus. Some of the best preaching today is done by men who labor at other tasks for their living and preach without pay just because they love the work. It is not always necessary to leave one's calling to become an effective preacher, reformer and soul-winner.

Mrs. E. B. G., Milton, Pa. Will you print in your paper just how and where and when each of the apostles died? Once when I was in Greece (I have been there twice) I was shown a chapel built on the spot where Andrew was said to have been crucified, and people tell me here it is not correct. Am I right?

According to the accounts preserved by tradition, Matthew was martyred in a city in Ethiopia; Mark was dragged through the streets of Alexandria in Egypt, till he expired; Luke was hanged upon an olive tree in Greece; John died a natural death at Ephesus in Asia; Peter was crucified at Rome, and, according to his request, with his head downward; James the Great was beheaded at Jerusalem; James the Less was beaten to death with a fuller's club; Philip was hanged against a pillar at Hierapolis in Phrygia; Thomas was slain with a lance, at Coromandel, East Indies; Bartholomew was flayed alive; Jude was shot to death with arrows; Simon Zelotes was crucified in Persia; Andrew was crucified, says a tradition, at Patras in Achaia; Matthias was beheaded; Barnabas was stoned to death by Jews at Salamis, and Paul was beheaded at Rome in the reign of Nero. Such was their fate according to legends and traditions that have been handed down through the centuries.

E. M. H., Walum, N. D. The phrase, "As it were," is used in the same sense as "so to speak." It is a rather awkward phrase, and might be avoided by slightly changing the form of the sentence.

H. J. M., Greensburg, Ind., writes: "The brightest star in the eastern sky at the present time is Sirius in Canis Major, in southeast; more nearly east are Castor and Pollux; all three are of the first magnitude."

Puzzled, Illinois. What is meant by the commands against all swearing in Matt. 5 : 34 and James 5 : 12?

All Orientals have the habit of extravagant swearing. They summon the Deity to witness to their honesty, and take all sorts of fantastic oaths. The harm of this is twofold; it is blasphemous and it is a temptation to falsehood. A man will make a false statement, and then to get it believed will take an oath. Jesus was making a plea for truth and for reverence. Cultivate the habit of truth, was his advice. Say precisely what is correct and true, and establish such a record for th- fulness that no appeals to a higher pow are necessary. He points out that no tter what form the oath may take it reall oes back to God himself, for God is the sou of all things. It has been held by alm all Christians that this prohibition does n for-bid the taking of an oath required b the state, for, since there is so much fals ood abroad, the state needs the protection t an oath gives. But even this avails but litt for often a man who will tell an untruth w not be forced by a formal appeal to the De to tell the truth. The pledges taken und the circumstances you mention are of so sol n a nature that they would seem to be justi ble.

Reader, Mesa, Colo. When one who has d a sinful life is trying to be a Christian nd conscience keeps reminding of past . is that sin actually forgiven? If so, wh oes not God take it out of memory?

As the Christian grows in grace his f ner sins should get farther and farther int the background of his consciousness. It is to be expected that he will forget them altog her. Paul certainly never forgot that he had een a sinner, that he had been a blasphen of Christ and a persecutor of the church. But this by no means indicated that these sin had not been forgiven. As a matter of fact i an open question, scientifically, whether or t it is a good thing to make a special effort the will to shut these things out of the con ous memory. Sometimes in the vehement ug-gle to do this we get greater mental tr ble. The thing that we try to crowd out and get often lies as a hidden trouble in the su on-scious mind and manifests itself in unex ted ways in the conscious experience. The ing to do is to leave all the past with God. C ess where confession is necessary. Make r tu-tion where restitution is possible. Then ve all the past trustfully with God, believin im to be true to his declaration: "I, even I, he that blotteth out thy transgression."

O. B. G., Moberly, Mo. The to, "United we stand, divided we fall," was ob-ably suggested by the passage in Matt. 25. It has long been used in patriotic address he first recorded American use of it bein he words of John Dickinson of Revoluti ary days: "By uniting we stand; by dividi we fall." In his poem, "The Flag of our U n," George P. Morris gave the nation's watc ord as "United we stand; divided we fall."

Miss M. A. Browne, Hornitos, Calif., ds this interesting suggestion: "A paragra in the Young People's Topics in the Chr an Herald set me to thinking of the dea nd dumb and the needed reforms in their b alf. Mrs. Macy's success with her pupil has o ed a channel for thought and emulation. By making a few minutes' daily exercise wit he manual alphabet compulsory in all sc ols, from kindergarten to normal, the ent language would soon become generally kn n. Deaf children, especially semi-mutes, uld then enter public schools. Mingling ith hearing children, and being entitled t he same consideration, the deaf would u on-sciously acquire the habits and mann of hearing people. Herding them togeth in institutions tends to make them a di ict class. Naturally many now occupying zy quarters with fat salaries would oppos he movement, although fully conscious o he advantage it would be to the deaf an he states that support them."

A. C., Washington, D. C. The me lly irresponsible are not to be judged by he standards that are applied to those wh are sane and wholly responsible. They hav not the same moral consciousness, nor can ey justly be held to the same accountal y. The laws of man recognize this fully, a in civilized countries provision is made fo he maintenance and safe-keeping of the ec-tives. Our heavenly Father who is th just and merciful will not be less consid ate than worldly men of those whose clo ed minds keep them permanently in the c di-tion of children.

J. W., Chicago. Prov. 26 : 4, 5, th gh apparently contradictory, are not reall so. Verse 4 says substantially that it is better be silent than to answer folly with folly. ee Isa. 36 : 21.) V. 5 means that where a f sh person needs to be convicted of his foll or his own belief in his superior wisdom, his may be accomplished by replying not in y. but to folly, with such an answer as will en his eyes to his own foolishness. (See an 19 : 11.)

◆

AN ENTHUSIASTIC READER

I love to read tho Christian Herald I should miss it if it should stop coming I hope to be able to take it as long as I live.

Orland, Calif. Mrs. Susan Nels

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD
An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

© Underwood & Underwood

"Will the Panama Canal Ever Become a Practical Waterway between the Eastern and the Western Oceans?"

What Is the Matter with the Panama Canal?

Can the Slides Be Controlled? Will Gatun Dam Sink?

By A WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENT

BEFORE undertaking to set forth and analyze some of the known facts concerning the hoodoo that has beset the Panama Canal from the time of its announced opening to date—it is open yet—a better understanding of the situatic will be had by reciting a few historical facts prior to nd including the adoption of that route.

n isthmian canal to connect the Eastern and Wtern Oceans had been the dream of many Americastatesmen for more than a hundred years. When thUnited States battleship Oregon made her famous ru of 12,000 miles in 1898 from the Pacific to the Atntic around Cape Horn, that desire crystallized ina demand for the construction and ownership of su a military and commercia highway.

e United States had the che of two routes—one acss Nicaragua and Costa Ri, utilizing Lake Nicarag, for about thirty-five mis, and the other across th Isthmus of Panama. whe a French company, unr the direction of De Leps, the builder of the Su Canal, had attempted to bul a canal and had failed, th failure being part of a naonal scandal.

e reports of engineering conissions were overwhelming in favor of the Nicaragu route, where the climate wa salubrious, as against thanama route, the survey of hich lay partly through a stilential swamp, and a cal treaty was negotiated wi Nicaragua and Costa Ri by the United States.

hile the Panama route wacarefully gone over and exained, it was not serious considered, and chiefly forhese reasons:

e swampy and generally unalthful condition of the cotry, where the employes of the French Compa had died like flies.

e fact that the route of thanal was intercepted by thhagres River, which in thainy season is a torrential strm, and there was then nonown way to control it.

e general instability of the ground and the prability of no more secure foundations than slime at aterial points on the route.

e writer has personally discussed the Panama ro with one of the engineers employed to examine it, ho has frequently asserted that the Panama ro was wholly impractical and an engineering imssibility.

NICARAGUA, which had the endorsement of the late Senator John T. Morgan of Alabama, who gave the best years of his life to fostering the Isthmian Canal project, was selected, and the necessary treaty negotiated, but before the treaty was ratified, Mont Pelée on Martinique blew its head off and an earthquake scare swept over the Central American countries.

One seismologist undertook to show that the Nicaragua route was on the direct line of an earthquake belt extending across that section of Central America, up the Pacific on past the Aleutian Islands.

This was a good opportunity for the French Panama Canal Company, whose franchise would soon expire, and therefore become worthless. The Martinique scare was industriously magnified at Washington, with the result that a sudden change was made to the Panama route, supposed to be outside the earthquake zone, although an earthquake on the Isthmus of Panama had done much damage in 1621, again in 1882, with a recurrence of tremors since the canal has been under construction, while the Nicaraguan route has remained immune

© International News Service

Removing a Slide During the Early Stages of Construction

The failure of Colombia to ratify the treaty with the United States for a canal across Panama, the so-called revolution of Panama, the treaty with that mushroom republic, the payment of $40,000,000 to the French Company and $10,000,000 more to Panama and about $345,000,000 for construction and defense, are recent historical events known to all.

And now the United States has the canal and it doesn't work. The opening date was postponed several times, and on the date when the President and a part of the American navy were to pass through it en route to the Panama Pacific Exposition in celebration of the completion and opening of the canal, it was impassable for almost all kinds of ships except airships.

THE cause of the frequent blockade of the canal is technically known as "slides." They have been so numerous that the public has lost track of the number. The size of them can be imagined from a statement by General Goethals, who built the canal, made at this writing, that a slide is now on its way at Gold Hill, estimated at from 500,000 to 750,000 cubic yards, which in three months has moved 175 feet.

Until recently the layman has supposed these slides to be due entirely to gravity—that is to say, the high ground at the deep cuts sliding into the canal. In fact, he has been repeatedly told that when the embankments and hills beyond were reduced to a certain level, the slides would cease. Several times the announcement has been made that the slides were conquered.

Then the public began to read descriptions of how the bottom of the Canal had risen to the top, forming islands in the waterway.

The manner in which this upheaval takes place is well described by Mr. Donald F. MacDonald, geologist of the Canal Commission. He wrote:

"The large slides are not the mere slipping of relatively loose material off a relatively solid base slope, but include a slow movement or deformation of the base slope itself to depths well below the bottom of the excavation. This often involves a 'swelling' upward of the rock floor of the cuts." As to the suggestion that retaining walls be put in to prevent this, he says:

Continued on page 246

A New Call for Service

To Carry the Gospel to the Millions of War Prisoners in Europe

WHILE more than half the world is at war, and our own land is discussing "preparedness" with a view to possibilities, there are multitudes of God's people who hold that the hosts of Christian believers should be in the battle, though not with carnal weapons. They believe that it is a duty to do all that lies in our power to carry the message of salvation to the millions of war prisoners in the various European countries. As a beginning of this great work a door has been thrown wide open which will admit the workers to the great prison camps of Germany, Austria, and Poland, where 2,500,000 captives are now held. Besides native Russians, there are Letts, Esthonians, Calmuks, Kirghises, Crusins, Mingrels, Lithuanians, Poles, Mohammedans, Jews, Cossacks in great numbers, and natives of Little and White Russia. What a twentieth century Pentecost may be in store for the Christian Church if these hordes of prisoners of war can be reached by the Gospel! Away from their native land and home, separated from all of their usual occupations, with scarcely anything to do, with very little if any literature in their native languages, filled with melancholy longings for something that is beyond their reach, and heartsick when they think of their homeland—nothing could be imagined more sad or pitiful than the condition of these multitudes of prisoners of war.

Pastor William Fetler of the Evangelical Church of Petrograd, who is now in this country and who is familiar with the situation abroad and especially as it concerns the great military prison camps, declared to the writer that such an opportunity as is now presented may not come again in a century, and possibly never. He regards this open door to Gospel work among the war prisoners as the greatest challenge that has been made to the Christian Church everywhere, but especially to Christian America. He says:

"The United States is practically the only great free country not touched by the war's horrors. Many Americans have made large profits out of the war. Alongside of the story of riches thus acquired, another story could be written on a pure white page—the story of America evangelizing the nations held in the grasp of war. The American Christian churches can write this story if they choose. Surely when the world is awake to see its opportunity, the church also should be equally vigilant to see her opportunity. Let us trust that this message will not be like that of a voice crying in the wilderness which passeth unheeded.

"Suppose that out of every thousand men among the war prisoners of Russian nationality only one should be definitely saved by the work we have in view. Out of the whole number of such prisoners that would mean not less than from 2,500 to 3,000—another Pentecostal number. Now it is known that practically every Russian convert becomes a missionary. He is bound to bring the good news to others. What Russia needs badly is more evangelism; more witnesses of the grace of God in their hearts. And when the war comes to an end and the prisoners of war are exchanged and return to their native land, with them will go back the thousands of soldiers who have been born again by the Word and the Spirit. In their captivity they will have obtained eternal freedom; arriving in their native towns and villages, they will be brand new witnesses of the story of the Redemption. And thus the message of salvation will be carried north and south, east and west, and the blessing will multiply a thousandfold. From such individual sources, which get their blaze and their impulse from the Christians of America, the fires of religion will spread throughout Europe, and in this way we may see one of the greatest revivals the world has ever witnessed."

That this great opportunity has occurred to other minds who have been observant of spiritual conditions in Europe, is made evident by the testimony of a number of prominent spiritual leaders with whom the Christian Herald has recently discussed the subject. All or nearly all see in the present situation an unmistakable invitation to spiritual effort. It is the war of the Gospel, as distinguished from the war of the sword and cannon. In a limited sense it has already begun, for there are a few devoted workers in the field; but what are they among the millions of prisoners? Pastor K. A. Moden of Stockholm, Sweden, the Rev. Jacob Bystrom, formerly member of the Swedish Parliament, and the Rev. Benander of Stockholm Theological Seminary, are now helping the war prisoners on spiritual lines. Pastor Lohman of Freienwalde and others have begun a work, but write of the great need of Gospel literature in the prisoners' own languages. One pastor writes, "We have no real good Christian literature, except New Testaments. May God help us, that we may be enabled to help our strange war-guests in turn. It is a tremendous task before us."

The secretary of the Christian Tract Society in Cassel, Germany, writes: "We have a splendid opportunity of reaching over 2,000,000 Russian captive soldiers in our camps. One of our Russian Mennonite brethren visited a camp with Rev. W. Schulze, and was permitted to address the prisoners. The success was touching." There are forty-four of these camps in a single province, Pastor Lohman adds, where Scriptures and tracts are needed. It can be readily understood that it is only dire necessity that prompts such an appeal to meet a spiritual opportunity which may never again present itself.

General View of the Largest of Germany's Prison Camps, Where Over 10,000 Men Are Under Detention

ANOTHER pastor, after visiting the great prison camp in Stargard, writes: "In this camp there were over 10,000 men, distributed in forty companies. They greeted me joyfully, and we gave about a hundred copies of 'The Good Comrade' in Russian and 'The Messenger of Peace.' We received a harvest of thanks, but soon our resources were at an end. There were Stundists, Baptists and other evangelical believers among them. While we were speaking many stood around us, and it seemed that the difference between a converted and an unconverted man was clear to all of them, even to the Russian Jewish soldiers standing near. Some of the Poles wanted pocket Bibles, one asked for a hymnbook, two Russians begged for a Bible each, or at least for a Russian New Testament. Of course they have no money to pay."

Another pastor, Rev. W. Grimm of Schwerin, writes of a visit to the prison camps in Parchim and Güstrow: "There is a great desire, especially among the Russians, for the Scriptures. They almost tore them out of my hand. Again and again they begged me to bring them the Bible in Russian. But thus far I have been unable to do it."

THEN we have the testimony of some o the prisoners themselves in letters appealing fc the Gospel. One Russian prisoner in the camp of Sc heidemühl writes: "With joy I receive and read our literature. The Lord is working by his Spirit i our camp. Already seven men have been conv ed. Many inquirers are coming with questions. I ase send some tracts in the Russian language, also T staments in Russian, a Bible in Russian, and o in Lettish."

Another Russian writes: "I have the honor ost humbly to request you to please send to us, Ri ian war-prisoners, spiritual literature and explanati s in the Russian print."

A letter from a Lettish war-prisoner in the risoners' Camp of Senne in Westfalen, Germany, ds: "Most humbly and heartily do I thank you fc the books which I received on the 2d of November. Not only I, but also my comrades, are glad, who ead them. We ask to send us more books either i the Russian or the Lettish languages. Again I any times thank you. I hope that you will find me good people who will sacrifice some kc cks for that purpose, and for the rejoicing c the war-prisoner."

These are samp of many other letters the same character.

BELIEVING T AT the oppor ity presented for do a great Gospel work a ong the war prisoners one that would speciall ommend itself to the r lers of this journal, the ristian Herald has ai l in the organization c the "American Comi tee for Gospel Work a ong War Prisoners." Announcement of thi act was made in last v k's issue, and the comn tee, which includes le ing pastors of the dif ent Protestant deno nations and laymen minent in Christian ort, invites the heart cooperation of the ristians of Americ in carrying through a enterprise which, der God's blessing, nay mean the beginnin of a glorious Gospel ampaign, with innum ble souls won to Chris It proposes to print and distribute, by pe nal workers in the son camps, Bibles, staments, Gospels and Scripture portions, ginning with the R ian prisoners and gradually extending as the wor advances. It will also print, in the various langua s of those it is designed to reach, a variety of other rature of a spiritual character, suited to the ne of the work. Churches and allied organizations, Wo n's Missionary Societies, Men's Leagues, Christia Endeavorers, Epworth Leagues, Baptist Young Pe le's Societies, Sunday schools, and the membe of Prayer League circles, can all have a share i his crusade of Gospel dissemination. Every dolla and every dime will count in the work accomplished

Arrangements are now under way for a eld Committee in Europe, to take charge of camp tation and distribution. The committees will rve gratuitously, and every contribution will the ore go into the cause undiminished. All contribu ons for the "War Prisoners' Gospel Fund" shou be addressed to the Christian Herald, Bible House, ew York City. Every gift will be acknowledged.

◆

The Vision

I saw my Lord! But sense was dim;
  My vision fainted at the sight;
He hid my soul, or I had died
  Before the splendor of his light.

His wingèd watchers filled the sky;
  The heavens before his footsteps bow;
His hurts are healed, His brow is crowned!
  My Lord is King of Glory now.

Mary M. Bow

I'm Going Home

TRANSCRIBED BY CYRUS KINGSBURY

THERE was a fellow tried to help me up last summer. He'd been just the same as me, only worse, he said. "Just living to drink."

Now, I'm no regular bum, but I can't help drinking. Lost every job I ever had on account of booze. Used to have good jobs at first. Guess that lady who told me I had a hard face was about right.

This fellow last summer told me there was a place down on the Bowery where they made men out of rummies. Say! Do you know, this fellow looked pretty good to me. He held down a good job, too! He said two years and fourteen days ago he looked worse than me, and that's going some. Two years and fourteen days ago he got the right hunch. Says he, "You go down on the Bowery below Houston Street, and they'll make a man of you," says he. "I know you got it in you." Say! that was the first kind word I'd had for near three years. I sure felt like crying.

But it was summer time then, and I forgot all about it. But you know that real cold night, not long ago? It caught me out near New Rochelle. I got a job shoveling coal for half a day. Fellow gave me a raincoat and a meal. Say, that raincoat covered up most of my rags but I couldn't cover my face. It kills me for a job most everywhere. They spotted my face first off. I'm no panhandler; I'd a heap rather work than beg. But I can't seem to quit the stuff that's made all my trouble. You know I got a mother somewhere. I got a sister, too, but they wouldn't want me, not as I am now. We haven't written for two years. I'm working into New York for the winter. Thought it would be better than the country. A face like mine isn't so strange in the city.

Not far from New Rochelle I struck a swell-looking place. All big houses and lots of trees. Looked like a park. Thought I could turn up something there that'd get me into the city.

AT the first house I tried, I got a good scare. The lady there, say, she was a good one all right. She told me I'd better hustle right out of that village and dodge the policemen. They were a hard bunch and would beat me up. They'd beat up a tramp just the week before. She gave me a piece of paper, which said she knew me, and that I was going home. She gave me a big chunk of bread; and she said, "Hurry now, so's they don't catch you."

I was scared. Say, a pard of mine was sent up once for a year from one of those private villages. You know the cops caught him going through the village just at dark. He happened to have an extra hat in his pocket, which the cops claimed was for disguise. They framed it up on him. Say, and they beat him up awful.

I took to the ditch alongside the tracks, and got away safe.

Last night I got to near Harlem. One of those Guinny rag-pickers on the dumps let me sleep in his shack. I helped him bale a lot of newspapers and rags that evening, so I didn't get much sleep that night.

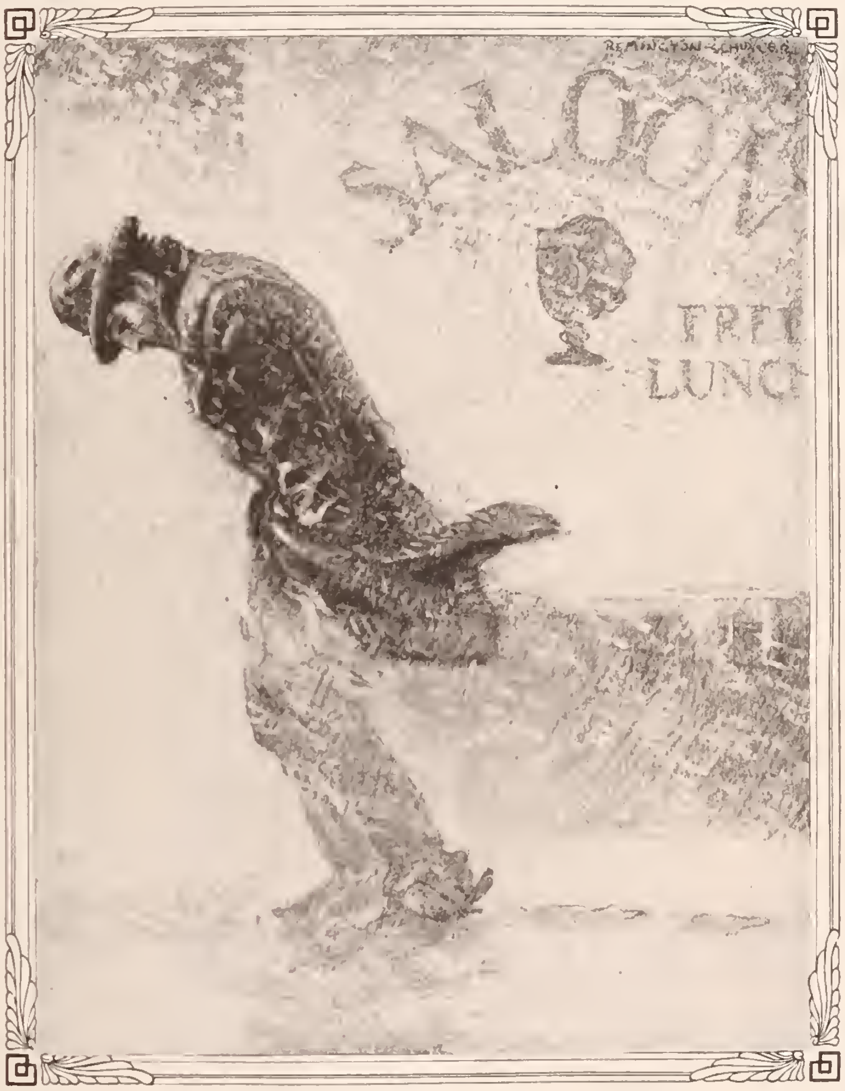
But he was a good Guinny and he let me sleep late. He didn't seem to have any food to spare. Maybe he thought I didn't want any of that great big onion or that great big dirty chunk of bread he was eating. But say, would you believe it, I caught that Guinny kneeling down and praying.

You know that fellow last summer I was telling you about, Well, he told me about a story that they told him down at that Bowery place. It was all about a young fellow just like me who ran off from home; raised Cain with his money; then had hard luck; and had to eat the food that they gave to the hogs.

But one day he was thinking it all over. He figured it out. It was up to him to go home and tell his old father he was sorry. He was going to say "Give me a hired man's job because I'm not worthy to be called a son." So he up and started home.

And what do you think? That father of his was a good one all right. His father saw him coming a long way off. He didn't wait till his son got home so's he could rub it in good and hard. No, not that old dad. That fellow's father that I'm telling you about saw him coming; a long way off. He ran out and grabbed that son and kissed him.

Say, that must have made that son feel kind of good. I'll bet he felt sorrier than if his old dad had cussed him out. That old father was so happy because that boy of his had come back, he fixed him all up in good clothes and loved that boy a lot. That's what helped that poor kid the most of all, all that love. That old father kept saying, "For my son was dead, and is alive again; he was lost, and is found."



"I guess I'm tired, my feet slip so much. I'm going slow."

That fellow last summer said he had found his father down on the Bowery just two years and fourteen days ago.

So I'm going home. Yes, that's what's been running through my head all last night and this morning. I'm going home. I'm going home to that father down on the Bowery. Maybe he'll not pick on me. Maybe he'll just be glad that I've come back home.

IT'S been a cold rain all day long. Not so very hard, but steady. This old raincoat's gradually soaking through. I've been coming now nearly four hours. I'm not very strong. I've not had a drink for a day. No food either. But I guess I'll make home all right, and that Bowery Father will say, "Why, here's Jim. Come in, Jim, we've been waiting for you a long time."

Say, wouldn't that be fine?

Can't seem to make much headway. My wet shoes feel so heavy. But I'm shuffling along. I keep saying, "I'm going home. I'm going home to that father of mine." That's all that keeps me going. I'm so tired I just want to lie down.

Crossed the Harlem River. Seems a long time ago.

A cop just looked at me kind of hard. First off, I thought he was kind of sorry for me, but I couldn't be sure. I can't take the chance. Say, he might stop me reaching that home I'm going to. Can't seem to help being scared of those cops. You know they beat up my friend once? Remember I told you about that? I couldn't stand them watching me so close. Made me feel as if I'd done something wrong. So I've taken to the streets along the river.

It's getting toward evening, now. It's growing darker. I'm happy, 'cause I haven't seen a cop for a long time.

I hadn't noticed that it had quit raining. But it's snowing. Not much snow. Just a little light snow. I guess I am tired, my feet slip so much. I'm going slow.

Across the river I can see a big electric sign. It tells about how much you want a cracker. I was just counting up how many boxes of crackers I could eat. Up in front I can make out another sign. It keeps flashing, "There's health and strength in our brand of whisky." The liars!

First I look at that cracker sign across the river and then at that whisky sign up ahead. One makes me feel so hungry, the other makes me mad. If I only had all the money I've thrown away on drink, I could live like a prince. I could have all the crackers to eat, and a warm place to eat them in.

SAY, it's awful cold now. I've been thinking if I only had one drink. That would set me up and get my legs going better. I got to thinking, just now, that if I had a drink I could swim across the river to that cracker place; and maybe they'd give me a box of crackers, 'cause I'd come so far.

I thought for a moment I would jump into that dark, swift water. I started down, but then I happened to think that that Father down on the Bowery would say, "Why, where's Jim? You know we're expecting Jim home this evening."

But I had to quit that river street, 'count of those two signs; they kept pulling me too hard. For a while I could see them every cross street. I hated them. I'm glad it's snowing harder. I can't see them any more.

There's been a nail sticking into my foot for a long time. I can't seem to get around to tend to it. It's jabbing pretty hard. Now I think there are two of them. If it wasn't snowing so hard I'd stop and fix it.

My water-soaked shoes look like they'd fall to pieces, 'specially the left one. Can't seem to feel much in that leg anyway. The snow and wind seem to be getting through me pretty keen.

Just passed a laundry. It was all lit up, and there's men in there. I can see them sweating in their shirt-sleeves. Think of it! Sweating! Why, I only sweat in summer. I wish I had a job in that laundry. Think how good it would be to sweat on a cold winter night!

My shoe busted right near a cop. I didn't dare to stop, so I shuffled the rags of it along in the snow for a whole block. My bare foot was right on the snow.

I'm sitting by a fire. A night watchman fellow, who's keeping up the fire in a street engine boiler, is letting me get warm. He's a good pal all right. He gave me a piece of thin board and helped me make a new sole for my shoe. We tied it on with some of my rags and the linings of my pockets. Say, do you know what that fellow told me? If I'd stick around with him till midnight, he'd give me part of his hot grub. They brought it at midnight. He'd just got this job and was broke himself, or he'd give me the price of a meal.

I pretty near quit right there, I was so beat out and tired. But he said to me, "Where were you going?" I said, "I was going home, I got a Father down on the Bowery." Then I began to laugh, and I laughed and I couldn't quit laughing. Then I began to cry. I heard him say, "Poor kid, he's going nutty."

I kept saying, "I'm going home, I got to go." So I broke away when he tried to make me stay. I'm plugging on.

THAT shingle kind of makes me limp. There's no give to it. My other shoe seems full of red-hot nails. I'm so covered with snow now I guess the cops won't be able to tell nothing about me. Most of them are in doorways out of the storm. They won't bother me, I guess.

I saw a string of sausages in a store. I was thinking I could eat just about two years and fourteen days of them. "Two years and fourteen days of sausage," I said, "two years an'"—and then I began to laugh—and I laughed an'—an' then I cried.

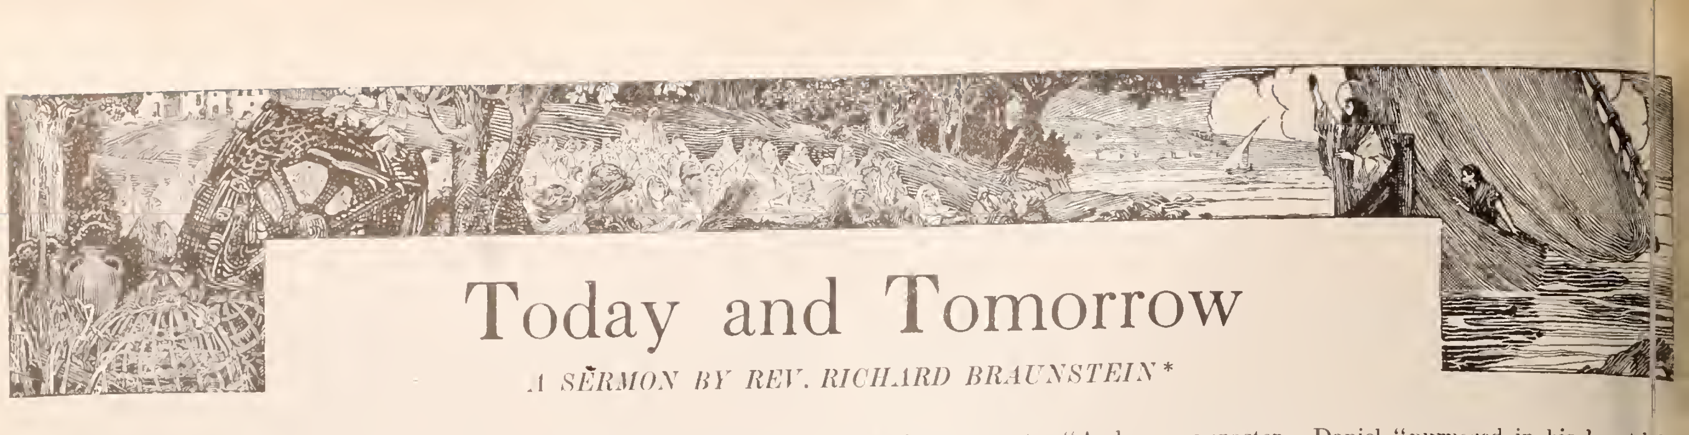
I passed a meat wagon backed up against a curb, near a slaughter house. The driver was inside, and for a moment I thought I'd just bite a piece of that raw meat off that leg of beef. I got afraid, though, they'd catch me and not let me get along home.

A fellow was bringing up a tray of something hot from the cellar of a bakery. The wind blew the paper cover off. They were buns steaming hot. Say, I nearly thought I'd stumble against him, to upset him, so's I could grab some of that hot bread. But that might keep me from getting to my Bowery Father.

So I'm just shuffling on.

I just tried to pull a piece of something out of a garbage can. Under the snow it looked like food. But it was froze solid. I'm not strong enough to budge it.

Continued on page 251



Today and Tomorrow

*A SERMON BY REV. RICHARD BRAUNSTEIN

TEXT Ex. 8:10. "And he said, Tomorrow." II Cor. 6:2. "Now is the day of salvation."

PHARAOH said, "Tomorrow!" Paul said, "Today." The difference is between the man who knows the value of time and the present, and the man who does not. A recent writer says: "Tomorrow is the harvest time of good intentions. It is the day when every man does his duty. The sinner expects to be a saint. The dishonest man intends to be honest. The immoral man will be moral, and the selfish man benevolent." Tomorrow evil habits will be overcome, evil tempers curbed, and rebellion against God will be put down. Christ will be enthroned. Self will be dethroned. Tomorrow we will be all we ought to be and do all we ought to do. Tomorrow we will call on that sick friend, write that letter, read that book. Tomorrow we are going to right-about-face and do better, because in our heart of hearts we know that is what we ought to do. But not now. Tomorrow, or when we have more time.

We do not stop to consider that the great things that are being done are being done by people who do not wait, do not put off, do not defer, until some more convenient season. The world advances by the labors of busy men and women. In any church, in any business, where real work is accomplished, it is done by people who are busy. The idle never find time for anything. Postponement ends in a negative. The world would stand still if everybody said "tomorrow." Tomorrow is a first cousin to Never and somewhat of a relation to Sometime.

Tomorrow is the slogan of the dreamer. Today is the battle-cry of the doer. Of course we have heard and admired and even used for convenience' sake the old maxim, "There is no time like the present," and that other watchword of industry, "Never put off until tomorrow what you can do today." But usage has worn off the glitter and familiarity has bred contempt. These sayings are extremely useful in connection with our business interests and pleasures, and all sources of material and immediate gain. As Hugh Black says in his book, "The Open Door": "Men dream of a time when things will be easier for them, when the strain will be relieved and they can get breathing-space to come to some definite decisions. As they are securing the means of living, life itself is slipping away from them. Those who halt, standing first on one foot and then on the other, do not really count in the game. The greatest question ever asked of man was, 'What shall it profit to gain the whole world and lose the soul?' But men are everywhere losing the soul and not even getting the world. It is worse than tragedy, it is farce!"

WE are prone to place the material above the spiritual. We are apt to place the worldly in the foreground and push spiritual values in the background. We labor for the bread that perishes, and languish for the Bread of Life. We are perfectly willing to admit that procrastination is the thief of time in temporal affairs, but postpone soul-building for some future date. When it comes to religious interests, what a wonderful land is tomorrow! It can be reached by a roseate highway replete with the blooms and blossoms of ease and opulence. But kingdoms are not won by way of the primrose path of dalliance. The route to the Celestial City is not an easy journey. No soul is saved without a Calvary. Emancipation is not acquired without sacrifice. Heights are not attained without a climb. Straight gates are not entered unless we strive. Doors do not open unless we knock. Treasure is not found except by digging. The pearl of great price is not discovered until we search. If the golden age will be tomorrow, it will only be thus as the fruitage of today.

Work is today. Play is tomorrow. Today we are to set in motion those forces that make the miracles tomorrow. If we earnestly desire to be Christian men and women, we must do those things that will make us Christians. Grace is a growth. Righteousness is a process. Character is an evolution. Today we must fill our lamps and trim our wicks. Tomorrow we enter into privilege. The man who is ready is the man who has done those things which make him ready when the call comes.

THERE is a waiting time to every opportunity. It is to be spent in getting ready. The Bridegroom is on the way. Let us prepare for his coming. There is an outer court to every throne room. It is here that we put on the wedding garment. "And they that were ready went in." Getting ready is today's work. Tomorrow we receive the reward. Today is the appointed time, the day of salvation. Now is the accepted time, the psychological moment. This is the decisive hour. Whatever else we may do we cannot, we must not neglect our soul's salvation. We cannot with safety reverse the order of today and tomorrow. We cannot arrive at salvation without making the journey. We cannot receive the reward without meriting it. Every day the call comes. Every Sabbath the bells peal forth their summons. Every day the verdict is "too late" for countless multitudes because they tarried. We are continually exhorted and reminded at every turn concerning the uncertainty of life. Our answer is, "tomorrow." Tomorrow may not dawn for us.

We are interested in the discussion of preparedness. Whether there are two sides to the question of national defense or not, if we are in doubt as to what attitude to assume, there is only one side to the question of soul-preparation, and only one logical attitude we can take. It can be expressed in one word. Some would have it tomorrow. The word is: Today. It is now! Shall we be ready when the angel brushes us with his wing? Shall we be enabled to answer with calmness and dignity when our names are called? Can we go out on the great adventure with hope eternal in our hearts? Can we go with eager step and smiling face, with faith in him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life"? Can our souls ring with the melody of a Easter hope?

ETERNAL life begins in this sphere. Immortality becomes a certainty when the soul surrenders to God. Life is continuous; the Christian life cannot be divided between a "Now" and a "Then." Death, to be sure, is something in between. As Emily Dickinson wrote: "Death is but the porter of my Father's lodge, or the hired man to let down the bars for the tired flocks to come under the Shepherd's care, to the securest fold, their wanderings done, their bleatings at an end." To her a marble stone was a "guide-post." So, when we make the great decision, we are heirs of immortality. Life is no longer a "fitful fever," with clanging discords, confusing elements and chaotic mixtures. We shall face the future with calm. We shall look toward the dark unafraid, because we are facing the Light. We shall walk the new road in security because we are walking in the Way. We shall not grow faint or weary because we are finding sustenance in the Bread of Life. Pilgrims indeed, but like unto him who is going home. The mansion is waiting. The place is prepared. "If it were not so I would have told you." Thus is the dictum and assurance of the Master.

Every day we say "tomorrow" is a day lost to peace, a day lost to hope, a day lost to the pleasures of the Christian life. Every day we say "tomorrow" we lose the joy of service, of working in the Kingdom. Every day we postpone, we lose our opportunity of helping in making the world better. When we say "tomorrow" we drift. The drifter is without chart or compass, with no voice with which to still the winds and calm the waves, with no way to find the rocks and shoals.

The Arctic ship, Fram, drifted in the polar ice, but it drifted with a purpose. Dr. Nansen had a logical reason for his action. Another legitimate mode of drifting is under a blue sky, in some safe craft, on smooth waters. But life is not an Arctic expedition, neither is it a midsummer holiday. We cannot make life the sport of fate, the creature of circumstance, the playfellow of chance; Calvary and its sacrifice have meant too much for that. The riches paid for a human soul cannot be computed.

No one ever drifted to the eternal life. We must decide; we must array ourselves on the one side or the other. There is no neutral ground. "He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." George Eliot said: "You cannot entertain God and the devil on the same floor." To drift is to proclaim that it does not matter. It is to subscribe to the blind creed that everything will come out right in the end. We cannot gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles. We reap as we sow. "When God gave man reason," said Milton, "he gave him freedom to choose, for freedom is but choosing." "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve!" Happy is the man who says, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord." Twice glad is he who makes that decision today. Trouble crosses our path that we may conquer. Difficulties assail that we may overcome. Temptation comes that we may master. Daniel "purposed in his heart." He made that purpose the rudder of his life.

VERY often earnest people ask, "How may I now when I am a Christian, and my soul has and an anchor?" No one can find the answer from th- out. It comes from within. "The kingdo of heaven is within you." The testimony must me from the heart. The regenerated life expresses elf. "I am so happy I could sing all the time," said on- vert. "Why?" he was asked. "Jesus Christ w hed my sins away," was his answer. This feeling the assurance of salvation. Paul said, "I know wl n I have believed." To him all things had become ew. "I felt my heart strangely warmed," said W ley. "A day came at last when I felt the shackles ere falling off, and as if the mountains of snow a ice were melting within me," said Christmas E ans. "My soul flowed out in love to God, to his way and his people—yes, to all mankind," said Lorenzo ow. "Before my conversion I worked toward the oss; but since then I have worked from the cross. hen I worked to be saved. Now I work because am saved," said Moody. Good news desires an let. It is something we cannot keep. The true Chr ian is one who is not contented with his own salv on, but is unsatisfied until "all the world" has een reached. True Christianity fosters the zeal hat made Paul cry, "I must go to Rome also." W ead that when Jesus found Philip, Philip found Nath ael. When Andrew was converted, he went and to his brother Peter. The finding of Peter gave t the world the great sermon preached at Pentecost, hen three thousand souls were saved. This is ho the early church gained its membership. Gibbon his "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" d otes a whole chapter to this. He says in part: " became the most sacred duty of a new convert to use among his friends and relatives the inestimable essings he had received."

Prayer-meeting attendance is a sign of gr ing grace when it leads to a deep sense of obligation. Attending church is a source of inspiration to a ken an interest in civic reform, and spurs the memb s to take a part in the movement toward man's l terment. Christianity does not mean getting of things. It means getting into things and tran rming them with the teachings of the Gospel. True Christianity is dynamic. The kind that say "tomorrow" is static. Christianity is not dress p de. It means that we are under marching orders. t is not a rest; it is a fight—the fight of faith. Th ross is our standard. The hymns of the faith a our martial music. "There is no discharge in that ar." Jesus always viewed things in their totalities, t in fragments. The tree is vindicated by its uit. Words are made good by deeds. Life is aut nticated by conduct. So also faith ripens into e ression. The internal and the external are requi l to complete the Christian act. The internal is regenerated heart. The external is a regenerated eart expressed in works. It is the outward sign an invisible grace.

THE world is dying in its sins. Let us has n to bring the Great Physician. Multitudes e in want. Let us not linger in some delusive dre n of tomorrow in going to the rescue. Hearts are eaking; we must not tarry with the balm of ead. Burdens are being borne; let us apply the yok that is easy. The messengers of God must not lo r in the halls of Vanity Fair. When we refuse the reat Commission committed to our keeping, we are olding back that which the world needs. "The ng's business requires haste." Jesus said: "I m do the works of Him that sent me while it is called day, for the night cometh, when no man can rk." What if he had put off until some tomorrow th usiness of redemption? What if all men and w men. everywhere, of all time, who have helped ma the world better, had said "tomorrow"? What missionaries, apostles, sages and reformers had said "tomorrow"?

About a year ago, Harold Begbie gave us a ook, the message and challenge of which was only h appreciated. In its pages with graphic pen he drew a picture of what happened when, for one day hose who believed in God lived as if their belief wa rue That day changed the world. Pentecost w repeated. And the logic of the book is in the fa that what happened was not in the realm of the imp ible Pentecosts rain down from heaven when are ready to entreat their coming. "Today, if wil hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

---

*Pastor M. E. Church, Olive Bridge N. Y.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

The Price of Liberty

SUNDAY, February 27. Mark 9:26. "And the spirit cried, and rent him sore, and came out of him." Evil never surrenders its hold without a sore fight. We never pass into any spiritual inh tance through the delightful exercises of a pic , but always through the grim contentions of the bat -field. It is so in the secret realm of the soul. Ev faculty which wins its spiritual freedom does so at e price of blood. All our finest virtues smell of bat -smoke. Apollyon is not put to flight by a courteo request; he straddles across the full breadth of the ay, and our progress has to be registered in blood and ears. This we must remember or we shall add to all e other burdens of life the gall of misinterpretatio We are not "born again" into soft and protec l nurseries, but into open country where we suck stre gth from the very terror of the tempest. "We mu through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of (d."

d it is even so in the life of the nation. Who ever kn a social evil yield without terrific struggle? Wh a nation grapples with one of its iniquities, the evi pirit cries and rends it sore. Every noble law up our statute books which widens the empire of fre om was won through blood. Social or political fre om does not descend upon us in our sleep, gently dis ing like the dew. Freedom comes to peoples thr gh convulsions, through tempestuous contests, thr gh long and weary trampings in the noon and mic ight. If we set ourselves to oust some evil pos ssion, the established spirit will cry and rend us sor In these holy realms we get our blessings at a price.

t the worst convulsion is usually just when the fin conquest of an evil is almost assured. It is in the st gasp that our antagonist reveals extraordinary res es of strength. The hardest conflict is always jus before the devil is expelled. Let us therefore tig n our belts when our enemy calls out all his for Just then the bonds are breaking. Just then the ranny is failing. At him again! In these high rea s the darkest hour is just before the dawn.

J. H. J.

The Christian a Shining Light

MONDAY, February 28. Isa. 60:1-11. "Arise, shine, for thy light is come." Among all natural ph omena, none is more strikingly beautiful than su se. The prophet here dips his brush in the glowing lors of an Eastern dawn. Jerusalem, like all the su unding landscape, is enveloped in thick darkness, wh suddenly the herald beam of dawn smites the hig st cupola or pinnacle of her temple, which flashes wit the soft golden light. Her light is come and the glo of the Lord is risen upon her; and immediately the ommand goes forth, "Arise, shine, nations shall co to thy light."

e lesson for us all is obvious. If God hath shined in ur hearts, it is for us to give the light of his kn ledge to others. We have been brought out of da ness into his marvelous light, that we should shi as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of Lif We are not to give men ourselves but Christ. W re only reflectors. The weary world turns from hu an reasonings and philosophies, and says to the ch ch, "Stand up there in the morning glory, and tel s what you have seen, and heard, and handled of e Word of Life."

one of the churches in Rome there is a picture, sit ted at such an elevation from the floor as to be pr ically invisible; but a mirror has been so arra ed as to reflect it to the level of the visitor's eye; it thus that the church is to reflect the glory of the un en Lord and to be changed in the process into his lik ess. But how silent and gentle is light! Though it aps across space with inconceivable velocity, it br ks on the world without starting an over-blown ro petal to the ground. Would that Christians w as pure and all-pervasive as light, and as gentle!

F. B. M.

To Find the Peace that Abides

TUESDAY, February 29. Isa. 32:17. "And the work of righteousness shall be peace: and the effect of ighteousness, quietness and confidence forever." E rson said: "The great man is he who in the m t of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the se nity of solitude." Peace is an inner possession. Travel cannot give it. Money and fine homes are often associated with strife and anxious unrest. Even work, that high blessing of humanity, is surrounded with urging restlessness and cares that line our faces and disturb our souls. Our peace comes too often only in flashes; it is not abiding rest; it is not "quietness and confidence forever." Yet we must learn how to secure the spirit of peace in the midst of activity and responsibility. Isaiah in another phrase, predicting the character of the Christ, said: "And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him." It is toil unsevered from tranquillity that we all are seeking.

Why was Jesus, the indefatigable worker, serene in the middle of crowds, calm at joyous noisy feasts and even in Gethsemane, surrounded by the soldiers of the Roman guard coming to lead him to the cross? Isaiah gives the answer: "The work of righteousness shall be peace: and the effect of righteousness, quietness and confidence forever." Jesus carried with him the consciousness of doing right—it was a constant idea with him that everywhere and in everything he was doing the will of God his Father.

It is the habit of keeping in our minds the sense of doing right that makes our rushing, busy life tolerable, thrilling the common task with a golden note of quiet peace. I once looked into the face of a man who had, with no little struggle, given up the dearest thing of his life, because to retain it would have been dishonor. I shall never forget the expression on that man's face. Righteousness had won with him, and its reflection was "quietness and confidence forever." C. S. C.

Three Utterances of Jesus

WEDNESDAY, March 1. John 20:19-31. "Jesus came and stood in the midst." Evidently he was clothed in the spiritual body, not subject to all the laws governing physical life. Thrice he uttered the salutation, "Peace be unto you." The first time he accompanied his words with the indication of his wounds. "He showed them his hands and his side." This was the peace of forgiveness, which falls on conscience-stricken hearts as the dew distils on the parched herbage. "Look at the wounds of Jesus," cried Stanfritz to Luther, and there is no other sign which can give rest to the penitent. This is the peace of the evening hour, when we come back from the soil and fret of the world, and need to have our feet washed and our hearts quieted.

The second time the message of peace was accompanied by an injunction to go forth to the world, as he was sent from the Father, on the great errand of world-evangelization. Then he breathed on them the Holy Ghost, which shortly after was to descend as a mighty rushing wind. There is no other way of remitting sin save when we preach the Gospel of reconciliation with the Holy Spirit accompanying our message. This is the peace of the morning, when we go forth to our post of service and duty, working with heads or hands at our appointed task, but conscious that our Lord has equipped us for any eventuality by the previous bestowment of the Spirit.

The third utterance of peace was when Thomas was especially in mind, and he was invited to assure himself that it was no phantom or ghost that had appeared, but One who had heard, remembered, was filled with infinite solicitude, and was there in very deed. Here is the peace of the noontide, when the glare of the world makes the spiritual unreal, and the Master calls us back to the eternal. F. B. M.

Prayer Gives Us New Views of God

THURSDAY, March 2. Matt. 17:21. "This kind goeth not out save by prayer." Many forms of religious practice have changed in the passing of the years; some have disappeared altogether; but prayer has survived and today is more a reality among men and women than ever before. There must be some reason for this in the elemental needs of human nature. Something happens in the life of the person who prays that does not occur in the prayerless life. To refuse to study the means of reaching God and opening the highest realms of our happiness through prayer is to severely handicap one's career and to separate ourselves from one of the greatest sources of power and success.

If prayer was only a subjective experience, a form of meditation simply, would it have persisted in the life of men? While God does not change the absolute laws of the universe to please the whim of an individual praying selfishly, the exercise of prayer opens the nature to the appreciation of God's ways with men reinforcing our moral and spiritual energies by making us conscious of the certainty of an eternal world, and giving thereby a new meaning to our existence.

Men pray and find a change in their point of view, and this change affects their circumstances. In Mr. Begbie's book, "Twice-Born Men," we are told of a criminal who was a burglar at thirteen years of age. He was proud of his misdeeds and lived a good part of his life behind prison walls. One day in prison he became conscious that his life was wrong, and for the first time in his life he prayed. His prayer was the request that God would send some one who would help him to live a respectable life. He continued praying after he was released from prison, and one night in a religious meeting the answer came and the desire to steal passed from him never to return. Prayer changed him from a burglar to a useful citizen.

This man prayed for a definite objective reality, and through it he gained the freedom of his soul. You get a new point of view of a sunset from a mountain-top; you receive a new point of view of God and your life in prayer. C. S. C.

Jesus the Reconciler

FRIDAY, March 3. Philemon 11-25. "Thou owest to me even thine own self besides." The question was whether Onesimus had robbed Philemon when he absconded from his service and made for Rome. It was not impossible that he had obtained his sailing-passage in this way, and the apostle with his frank generosity offers to make good any loss his friend has sustained—"Put it to my account." In our modern speech, the apostle wanted to be debited with the loss that had been incurred. Probably Philemon and he had entered into a partnership agreement, so that there was no difficulty in one partner debiting the other with any deficit, if requested.

But how beautifully this illustrates our own position! We have been runaway servants. In spite of all the love and grace shown to us, we have been unfaithful and have wasted our Master's goods. Is it not absolutely true that we have robbed him? But Jesus brings us home, and reconciles us to God by his blood. God in him reconciles us to himself. He knows and we know that the divine estate has suffered, and is always suffering, from our delinquencies and failures; but the Redeemer says, "Charge all that loss to me. I will bear the whole brunt, odium, and loss. Leave me to pay unto the uttermost farthing by my obedience unto death." We may face our great accusers under the shadow of these words, and shall we not live as those who owe to him not only this debt of 10,000 talents, but our own selves also? We are evermore his by indissoluble bonds. Love so amazing, so divine, shall have our soul, our life, our all. F. B. M.

The Song in the Night

SATURDAY, March 4. Ps. 42:8. "Yet the Lord will command his loving-kindness in the daytime, and in the night his song shall be with me." David had many nights of sorrow, in which he poured out his soul in prayer and praise. He often sang the minor strains of richer melody from the depths of his anguish. Wailings are as essential as pæans in the development of true manhood. In our night of pain, we have often exclaimed with the psalmist, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God." "Come, Ye Disconsolate" has wafted many an aching heart Godward. "O Love, That Wilt Not Let Me Go" has borne millions of sorrowing ones up to the bosom of compassion, where blindness beholds, sorrow sweetens; where the night breaks away into the morn that shall tearless be, and where life shall richer, fuller be, forevermore.

Trials too sacred for speech find wings in song, and the soul rises to where but thinly the veil intervenes. So we may almost see "the faces we have loved long since and lost awhile."

Job in his affliction cried out: "Where is God thy Maker, who giveth songs in the night?" Millions have found these words true, amid the pestilence that walketh in darkness and the terror by night, singing, "I know that my Redeemer liveth"; "He giveth both grace and glory, for his mercy endureth forever." How often, in singing, the soul in visions floats away, as on a river of life and light, to the haven harbor of heaven! E. W. C.

A Week in the World's News

"REJOICE WITH THEM THAT DO REJOICE." This week's Christian Herald is the largest yet produced by our presses. This copy contains 111 columns of reading matter (27¾ pages), and has the usual beautiful art cover. In addition, it carries 77 columns (19¼ pages) of advertising. Greatly as we would like to give our readers the same quantity of reading matter every week, we, in company with all periodicals that are not in large part supported by denominational or other such funds, are dependent for our chief manufacturing income on the advertising we secure. In order to produce such a paper as the Christian Herald at the low price at which it is published, it is necessary for us to make the paper well worth while to national advertisers. The present number is splendid testimony to the high favor in which the Christian Herald has come to be regarded by the best class of advertisers (we annually turn aside a large amount of advertising that is offered us, because it is not the class that we care to present to our readers). We want you to note that only a trifle over one-third of the total space of this issue is occupied by the advertising, and all the balance is of the best grade of reading matter and illustrations. We are proud of our advertising columns, and if you wish to help us to produce numbers of this size and quality more frequently, you will encourage these friends of yours and ours by reading their messages and giving them your business. It may interest you to know that the standard applied by the management of the Christian Herald to offered advertising copy is this: "Would we recommend this article to the members of our own family?" And if it is decided that we would do so, then we gladly recommend it to you, our readers. So, rejoice with us that advertising of such quality is making it possible for us to produce an increasingly better and larger publication and do your part to keep this up.

BLOCKADE QUESTION STILL OPEN. The settlement of the Lusitania matter brings to the fore the still unsettled question between Great Britain and America regarding the Allied blockade of Germany, and the British interference with neutral commerce. It has been expected that the British reply to the last American note would be forwarded early in February, but it was announced in London on February 9 that the reply would probably not be received before the end of the month. It is interesting to note in connection with this question the recent suggestion of the Manchester Guardian that Viscount Bryce, former British ambasssador, be sent to the United States with full powers to adjust the blockade controversy.

SECRETARY OF WAR RESIGNS. The resignation of Lindley M. Garrison, Secretary of War, was sent to the President February 10 and accepted. Henry Breckenridge, Assistant Secretary of War, also resigned. The resignations followed a correspondence which began with a letter to the President on January 12. Mr. Garrison felt that the Continental Army scheme was absolutely essential to the welfare of the country and thoroughly disapproved of the plans of the House Military Affairs Committee, which is working along lines for expansion of state militia under Federal control. He also felt that the Clark amendment to the Philippine Islands Bill providing for independence within four years was a serious mistake. He felt that the President should take a stand on these questions which the President felt it improper to take. In a sense the resignation of Mr. Garrison marks the failure of the Continental (or compulsory) Army plan.

CHINESE REBELS GAIN. Chinese rebels were reported on February 10 to have captured the important city of Luchow in the southern part of Szechuen province. Dispatches state that there has been almost continuous fighting in this province for several weeks, with the revolutionary forces victorious in nearly every engagement.

BRITAIN BARS BARLEY. On account of the shortage of mercantile tonnage caused by the withdrawal of ships for militai and naval purposes, the British governme has issued a list of materials the importat n of which will be restricted. Wood pulp, tc cco, fruits and sugar imports have already een restricted, and now barley for the mal g of spirits has been added to the list. The estminster Gazette is authority for the sta ent that the United Kingdom has been im ing a million and a half tons a year of ma ials for the breweries.

CONGRESS HEARS THE OTHER DE. Testimony before the Military and ival Affairs Committees of the House on Fe ary 8 showed that all American officers w not carried away with the notion of our h essness. Rear Admiral Victor Blue, Chief the Bureau of Navigation, stated that the event of trouble in the Pacific the An can navy would be ready for defense imme tely upon its transfer from the Atlantic. The admiral said: "The navy is prepared t neet any enemy it can possibly meet in the ific at the present time." He declared tha here was now no appreciable shortage the authorized complement of any ship. eral Miles opposed the Continental Army lan, saying: "It would be a very dangero step toward centralization and would a tremendous power into the hands o ome future President. It is un-American." eneral Miles said that the coast fortificat s of the United States were equal to those any country, and he ridiculed the possibility the landing upon American shores of a hosti orce large enough to be dangerous.

NEW EXPLORATIONS IN C NA. The American Museum of Natural His y is sending an expedition under Roy Ch nan Andrews to search the little known p s of China for rare forms of animal life. Th xpedition will leave this country early in rch.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS. O ebruary 7 two bills leading toward prepa ness passed the House of Representatives v out a dissenting vote after considerable ate. Both were administration measures. oth were supported by minority leader Ma and by Speaker Champ Clark, majority der Kitchin taking no part in the discussio By the first of these bills each congressman uld appoint three instead of two midship to

Continued on next page

© International Film Service

Hickman, Ky., Inundated by the Mississippi's Flood

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Independance Belge

LATE during the week ending February 11 a report was in circulation that the captor of the Appam, alleged to be the German armored cruiser Roon, had been captured after a three hour battle a couple of hundred miles northeast of Bermuda by the British armored cruiser Drake, but this report turned out to be unfounded. Since the beginning of the war approximately 990 vessels of all classes and types, with an estimated gross tonnage of about 1,878,000 tons have been destroyed directly or indirectly as a result of the conflict. Great Britain has lost most heavily, with a total of 1,192,500 tons. This does not include captured vessels.

A very important financial conference between the Treasury ministers of the Allies took place in London this week, extending from Monday to Thursday, probably preliminary to further extensive borrowing operations.

One air raid during the week derived considerable importance from the character of the machines used, seaplanes. It was made by the Germans on the Kent coast on February 9, the town of Ramsgate and the Isle of Thanet being visited, but there were few results of any kind. This is the second raid made with seaplanes, and it would appear that the Germans were for some reason giving this form of aircraft an exhaustive tryout. The British government has now decided to create a ministry of aviation, to safeguard England against further attacks from the air.

In the west on the end of the line extending roughly from Ypres to Arras, the conflict has gone on steadily day and night and the struggle has been intense. The Germans have made small gains on this front, noticeably near Vimy, directly north of Neuville and to the northwest of La Folle wood, and have taken a few prisoners and some artillery. These small results, however, give no commensurate idea of the intensity of the struggle, which has been the fiercest since the fighting around Lens last September.

This fighting has been almost entirely between the Germans and the French. The casualties on both sides have been extremely heavy, but this carnage has not been sufficient to slow up the fighting which is still going on as these lines are written, even more fiercely than previously. The object of the Germans is said to be to force a way through to Dunkirk, the most northerly of the French seaports; yet quite possibly the taking of Arras and a drive through to Amiens, the most important railroad center in northern France, is fully as important in German eyes.

Another sector in which fierce fighting has been going on during the whole of the past week is along the Somme River, south of Arras. Here, in spite of the stubbornness of the combat, however, neither side appears to have made any gain of the slightest importance.

North of Verdun, the Germans have installed at some unknown spot hidden from the aviators, one of their big guns, and at intervals during the week have been dropping shells on that fortress and its vicinity. One afternoon in the space of little over an hour ten fell, the French, however, stating that the damage done was insignificant. The French made an air raid on Smyrna, the famous port of Asia Minor, starting from warships off the coast, and report that they killed several hundred Turkish soldiers, besides sinking seven ships in the harbor.

In Galicia, on the front immediately to the northwest of Tarnopol, there was considerable activity on the part of the Russians, whose infantry delivered repeated attacks on one of the Austrian advanced trenches, which they succeeded in penetrating for a time, though ultimately driven back. As the weather is stated to be improving on this Galician front, we may expect this activity to continue and even increase, particularly as the Russian war minister, during the week, declared that Russia was now well equipped with artillery and had an abundance of munitions of war of all kinds, besides men in any quantity.

It seems fitting to call attention to the really extraordinary work of relief and humanity which is being accomplished on the French battlefields by that purely American organization, the American Ambulance, once more. This service has recently been extended both in the field and in Paris to meet the ever present needs and now has in daily active operation over a hundred and sixty cars, all driven by young Americans who have volunteered their services. Everything about this Ambulance is American, even the dollars which support it, and according to the statements of the French authorities, it has been doing the best work done by any organization on the front.

This is mentioned now because the indications are that next summer the fighting will be fiercer and more widespread than any time heretofore, which means that this organization and the others like it will have a very much increased strain put on their resources, and as these organizations are winning honor and respect for the word "American," all of us should take a moral, if not a material interest in them.

The Prussian casualties to date, not counting the Wurtemberg, Saxon and Bavarian and naval lists, amount to 2,377,378 of which about half are permanent losses so far as future military service is concerned.

The news which reached us from Madrid during the early part of the week that 900 German troops and 14,000 native auxiliaries have crossed the border separating Spanish Guinea from the Kamerun, probably marks the successful termination of the French and British attack on that German colony and its complete conquest by them.

At the beginning of the war the German colonial possessions in Africa numbered four: Togo, the Kamerun, German Southwest Africa, and German East Africa, the first three of which now have passed into the possession of Germany's enemies, leaving only German East Africa unconquered. In this latter colony there are more white troops than in the others, and the native troops ar omposed of better raw fighting material, l at the outbreak of the war the colony w prepared with munitions and artillery. we are liable to see some rather hard fi ing therein before it succumbs to the attack the Allies, though probably if the war co ues another year the ultimate result is ertainty.

The movement against Egypt an the Suez Canal is again the subject of more less gossip. One Munich paper informs us t the advance will take place in the spring, ar hat the attacking force will be under th ommand of Prince Leopold of Bavaria, v , it may be remembered, commanded one the German armies in the invasion of Pola and Russia last summer. Prince Leopol has passed much time in Egypt and has th fore more knowledge of the local condition han the other German leaders of high n ary rank.

The straws which flutter in the first p s of a coming breeze seem to indicate with r sonable certainty an almost complete cha , in the very near future in England's m ary organization, a change which will exten om the head of the War Office to the fiel ommands of the various armies. The War fice itself may be put in the hands of a ci ian, and it is the gossip of well-informed cir s in London that Lord Northcliffe is making ery effort to be that civilian.

The military control has already een vested in General Robertson. Where ord Kitchener will be sent to see active vice again, is an interesting matter of specu ion. Salonica can probably be eliminated, b use the commandership-in-chief on this fron as, by agreement between France and En nd, entrusted to a French general, and it dly seems likely that he would be remov to make room for Kitchener. As to Mesopo nia, the stake in this campaign is very lar far larger than Americans in general hav any idea, and worthy of a man of Kitch er's renown. But there is another field ere, though no actual campaign is pendin the situation is delicate and, for all we know the contrary, approaching possibly the te, and where Great Britain's actual stake far larger than in any other field—Egypt a the Suez Canal.

Continued on page 249

Ani polis, and by the second $600,000 is app priated for the addition of launching way at the New York and Mare Island navy yar The new ways would permit the layi down of two battleships, which have not t been begun although authorized more tha a year ago. Both bills passed the Sen February 9. The section of the Immigra n Bill requiring the registration of all Ori als within the United States has been mad the subject of many remonstrances to Wa ngton from Japanese and Chinese in the Uni l States. Colombia is also reported to be pleased with the proposed change in the trea by which she will receive $15,000,000 inst d of $25,000,000 for the loss of Panama. On ebruary 5 the Vocational Educational Bill as reported favorably to the House by the ommittee on Education. According to the port, most American boys and girls leav school at fourteen years or earlier, and at l t 2,000,000 boys and girls between fourteen nd sixteen are now working for wages. The are unskilled at that age and unfit for resp sibility. Each year a million young peo are required to maintain the ranks of our orking population. The bill proposes tha he Federal government support teachers in a iculture, industry and home economics, in s e schools, the work to be administered by ederal board cooperating with the states. It pears probable that the Continental Arm plan will be greatly modified.

C AL MEN SAY NO. The Anthracite Coa Companies have refused to grant the twe per cent. advance in wages and recogniti of the union, which the United Mine Wo rs of America have asked. The Anthra c industry is still working under the awa of the commission appointed by Presiden Roosevelt. The operators claim that the hts of organized labor are fully protected by e open shop principle established by this com ission. The award of the commission was ade in 1902 and controlled for thirteen yea The miners claim that living costs hav dvanced 40 per cent. and wages only 5½ r cent. The operators claim that living cost have advanced but 16 per cent., and tha he workers' earning capacity has gone up per cent. The coal operators claim that to g t the demands of the union would mean an rease of sixty cents a ton in cost to the con ner, or a total added cost of $28,000,000 in year s output. The operators and min have until March 31 to get together, at ich time the strike order will become effe ve if no settlement has been arranged. The perators in the bituminous field have ann nced that it is impossible to grant the de ds of the union and have offered to make a ne contract at the old scale

I THE INTERESTS OF PEACE. It was ann nced on February 4 that Mr. Bryan had acc ed membership on the Permanent Pea Committee organized by the Ford exp tion, and at the right time will proceed to ckholm. Mr. Ford is said to have a new eace plan in preparation, to be launched at early date.

T O MUCH GOVERNMENT. Executiv ficers representing 37,000 miles of electric rail ys of the American Electric Railway Ass ation met in Chicago on February 4. The rincipal problems were those of securing cap l and of governmental regulation It was ated that public commissions were not incl d to allow public utility companies to earn bove six or eight per cent., while many ind rial companies average around 19.3 per nt., and that this fact handicaps the pub utility corporations in making extensio and improvements. Senator Oscar W. U ewood of Alabama said that, taken as a ole, the transportation system of the Un d States is breaking down. If there were no provement, the country would demand gov nment ownership, which he thought wou be unfortunate He favored private ow ship and government regulation, but he d that we must consider the wisdom of sub tuting one master for the forty-nine ma rs who now regulate our commerce, and tha he main trouble with our regulation of rail ys is that our law has been destructive rat than constructive and that it has been pie ueal and not comprehensive.

IMBING THE SOUTH POLE Captai l K. Davis, commander of the ship Au a, connected with the Shackleton South Pol Expedition, feels certain that Sir Ernest Sha leton has succeeded in reaching the pol The expedition started from the Wed del iver some time in November and is expec l to reach Ross Sea in March

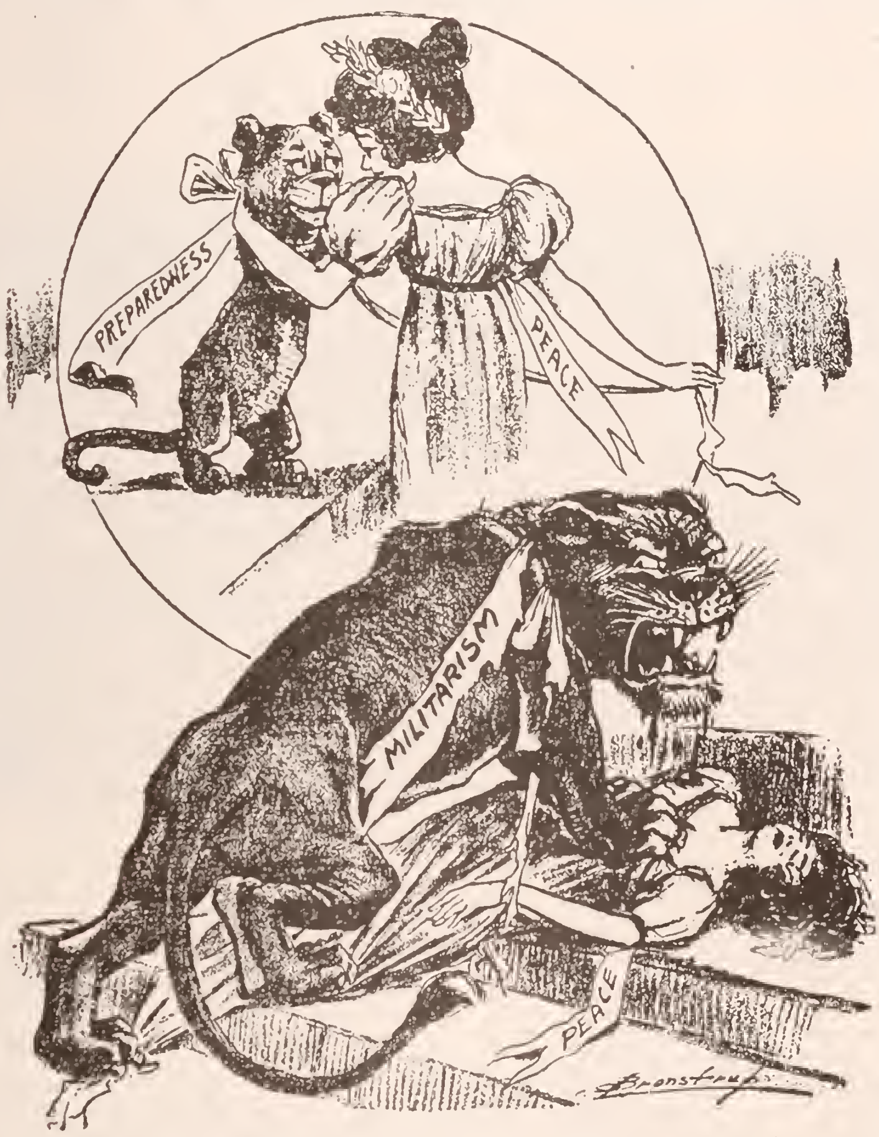
J PANESE LINER IN COLLISION. On Fe ary 2 the Japanese liner Daijin Maru was sur in the China Sea in collision with the ste ship Linan The collision occurred at nig Twenty-one persons were saved and 16 ere lost.

I SH TRIBES STILL CANNIBALS Ad es from Sydney, Australia, carry the inf nation that in December a cannibal feast foll ed an intertribal fight among the islanders the southeastern coast of New Guinea. Aft the fight, in which a score or more were sla the bodies of those who had been killed we brought to the coast. A cannibal orgy foll ed. The magistrate of British New Gu a set out with constables to arrest the murderers, and at last reports the police were still on a hunt for the man-eaters.

BIBLES BY THE TON. On January 14 the British and Foreign Bible Society forwarded a shipment of 260,000 Bibles, weighing eleven tons, to the prisoners of war in Russia. The Bibles were printed in German, Hungarian, Polish and Bohemian.

ANOTHER PANAMA FAIR. The little Republic of Panama is having an exhibition of its own which was formally opened on February 6. The United States has the largest and most interesting exhibit.

FAMOUS CONGRESSMAN DIES. Colonel William P Hepburn, for twenty years representative in Congress from the Eighth Iowa District, and author of the Hepburn Law, prohibiting railway rebates, died on February 7 at his home at Clarinda, Iowa. Colonel Hepburn was a leader in Congress during the administrations of McKinley and Roosevelt.



"A Dangerous Pet" [Reproduced from the San Francisco Chronicle]

LA PAZ EN ROUTE. According to reports received by way of Panama, a part of the city of La Paz, capital of Bolivia, in which are the market, barracks and museum, as well as residences of the poorer classes, has been undermined and is sliding into the Choqueyapu River, the section of the city which is sliding being about 1,600 yards long.

PENSIONS FOR EPISCOPALIAN PRIESTS. The proposed pension system for the Protestant Episcopal Church has been adopted by forty-five out of sixty-eight dioceses. The plan of the system was given out in New York February 7 by Bishop Greer. Under the plan ministers of the church who are disabled or who retire at the age of sixty-eight, will receive a pension of at least $600 a year. The pension fund will be administered by a corporation created by the New York legislature, to be known as the Church Pension Fund. It is expected that the remaining twenty-three dioceses will adopt the plan during the year. Each parish is expected to pay into the fund an amount equivalent to 7 per cent. of the rector's salary.

BREAD RIOTS IN LISBON. On February 4 a bomb was exploded in Rua Tobago in Lisbon, the explosion killing a corporal and wounding two privates of the Republican Guards. Several bombs were exploded in other quarters, and street cars stopped running. The explosions were part of a series of bread riots due to high food-prices, and the agitation is reported to have spread to outlying places, where mobs broke open farmers' barns and carried off the grain.

ANGLO-JAPANESE ALLIANCE UNPOPULAR IN JAPAN. Correspondence of the Associated Press from Tokyo contains a report showing a considerable undercurrent of dissatisfaction in Japan with the alliance with Great Britain, many prominent Japanese feeling that the alliance binds Japan's hands and prevents her from taking the position of predominance in the East which she feels to be her right. There has been a considerable controversy in the press of Japan which the semiofficial newspapers characterize as exceedingly regrettable. In connection with this undercurrent of dissatisfaction, distribution of Japanese emigrants in other countries is noted as follows: Of a total of 359,716, there are in China 120,959, and 1,555 more in the British protectorate of Hongkong; 5,298 are in Manila, 79,642 in the United States, 90,808 in Hawaii, 2,381 in Mexico, 11,959 in Canada, and about 21,000 in South America, mostly in Peru and Brazil.

IN POVERTY'S TRENCHES. In a recent report of the Committee on Industrial Relations, figures given by Surgeon General Blue of the Public Health Service are quoted to show that 50 per cent. of the deaths from certain diseases can be prevented; that 250,000 men women and children are killed each year in the United States, and 4,700,000 are wounded, in our economic and industrial processes. These figures do not include 100,000 American babies born in poverty who die before they reach their first birthday. Comparisons are made between prosperous communities and communities less prosperous. In Brookline, Mass., the infant mortality is 76 per thousand. In South Bethlehem, Pa., it is 233 per thousand. In East Orange, N. J., the rate is 78 per thousand, and at Fall River, Mass., 229 per thousand. It is apparent that where the people work the hardest, the babies die the fastest In Fall River, Mass., on account of the low wages in the mills, many mothers are forced to work. The death rate of families where the mothers work is 303.6; in other families where the mother does not work, 160.5. It is estimated that proper care and relief from the burden of poverty would save at least 100,000 of these babies every year.

PLUS A FEW PAILS KICKED OVER. The Department of Agriculture on February 1 announced that the value of the 1915 milk production of the United States is estimated at $2,320,000,000, based on an average price of twenty cents a gallon paid to producers for 11,590,000,000 gallons, equivalent to 115 gallons of milk per capita of the population.

ONE MONTH OF SOBRIETY. Reports from Oregon, Washington and Idaho covering arrests in the month of January, the first month under prohibition, show that arrests for all causes had decreased nearly two-thirds over the same month last year.

RUSSIA FROZEN IN. It was officially announced on February 5 that the Russian port of Archangel had at last been frozen in, in spite of strenuous work by large ice-breakers purchased in America last year

FIFTY THOUSAND FOR BIBLE STUDY. In connection with the Billy Sunday meetings in Philadelphia 40,000 men had been organized into classes for regular study of the Bible. Chicago will welcome the evangelist in September, 1917, and the committee that has the preliminary work in charge has set its goal at 500 classes of 100 men each. They believe that with 50,000 men studying the Scriptures they will be able to reach and to reclaim many of the 5,000 boys in their teens who are reported as juvenile criminals, and that such a body of earnest Christians can do a great deal toward the final overthrow of the saloon in Chicago.

CANADIAN ELECTIONS DEFERRED. In order to prevent the raising of partisan issues during the war, all parties in the Canadian Parliament joined, on February 8, in passing an address to the British Parliament asking an amendment to the British North America Act, which would extend the term of the present Dominion Parliament for one year.

LUSITANIA CASE APPROACHES SETTLEMENT. It was announced from Washington on February 8 that a final settlement of the Lusitania case was in sight. The German ambassador was quoted as saying: "Everything is substantially all right, but it is not finished." An official of the American administration is quoted as saying that the latest German proposal was "substantially satisfactory."

CASH REGISTER CASE ENDED. The Sherman anti-trust law case against the National Cash Register Company ended February 1 by the filing of a consent agreement by the attorneys for both sides. In the agreement, the company yields to all the demands made by the government as to its methods of doing business.

FIRE DRILL PROVES ITS VALUE. A disastrous fire in the building occupied by the Western Union Telegraph Company in Kansas City endangered the lives of 350 operators on the third floor. Exit by the stairways was blocked by the fire, but as a result of constant fire drills, the building was emptied quickly and methodically without even an injury to any person in danger.

A HAVEN FOR REFORM. The press states that a woman, said to be the Sophie Lyons who over twenty years ago was the head of an international band of pickpockets, shoplifters and confidence women, but who reformed and has for twenty years been gaining wealth by judicious investment of her money, has offered property in Detroit valued at about $25,000 for the establishment of a home for the reclamation of children with criminal tendencies and for the protection of young men just released from prison until such time as they can get a new start.

DR. EATON RESIGNS AND RECONSIDERS. At the morning service on Sunday, February 6, Dr. Charles A. Eaton, who has been for seven years pastor of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church, New York, presented his resignation, explaining that he had worked hard for twenty-five years in the pastorate and felt that he needed a rest, and also that he wished to devote himself to writing, in order to reach a larger audience on the subject of a new advance by the Christian Church. At a meeting of the congregation the following evening Dr. Eaton was requested to withdraw his resignation and was given a vote of confidence. It is asserted that he will remain as pastor of the church.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

A Chance for You to Help!

To the Readers of the Christian Herald: Unusually great demands have recently been made, by a large number of varied and worthy causes, upon the charitable people of America. In this time of almost universal need we are gratified beyond measure to know that you have responded to these calls with your characteristic promptitude and generosity.

For this reason we have delayed somewhat making our annual appeal to you on behalf of one of the causes that, perhaps, lies nearer to your heart than any other—the Bowery Mission.

For over twenty years the major portion of the financial burden involved in running this world-famous institution has rested upon your shoulders, and nobly have you borne it. When, in 1896, this "Light in a Dark Place" seemed likely to be extinguished, you came to its help, and it has kept shining with increasing brightness ever since.

What a record it has made! Thousands of precious souls brought "out of darkness into light" every year; vast numbers of homes reestablished, and families reunited; multitudes of human beings literally saved from starvation, from becoming criminals, from being consigned to the cold charity of city institutions, from lonely deaths on hospital cots, from burial in Potter's Field; hosts of men uplifted from the pitiful condition of drunkards into that of sober men; while tens of thousands of workless men, slowly sliding down the hill into industrial impotence and social degradation, have been recovered and transformed into decent, self-respecting citizens.

These Bowery Mission converts can be found almost everywhere: in the factories of every great city, on hundreds of farms, on the railroads, in the mines, on the ranches of the West, on the plantations of the South. We know you join with us, dear friends, in thanking God for this wonderful record, and in praying for his aid in maintaining it.

But with the very increasing development of the work the needs are greater than ever, and we earnestly appeal to you for further financial help.

The nightly meetings continue to fill the auditorium to its utmost capacity. After every meeting men are gathered into the Brotherhood who really mean business. Next morning the Free Labor Bureau takes them in hand. While permanent jobs are being found for them temporary work is provided in the Mission Industries, the Labor Settlement at Tuckahoe, and the Farm at Yorktown Heights.

We now earnestly and confidently ask you not to allow this blessed work to suffer for want of money. There is no other institution doing exactly what the Bowery Mission does. It not only aims at the conversion of a man's soul, but, when that happy event is accomplished, it seeks to help the man on, step by step, to the perfect establishment of his manhood and citizenship.

If every reader of this appeal would contribute a little, and at once, the needs for the year would be forthcoming. Send it on, then—a check, or money order, or postage stamps, the moment you have finished reading this column, and address it to the Treasurer, Bowery Mission, care of Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

With many thanks for all your kind help in the past, we are

Yours sincerely,
Geo. H. Sandison,
Mrs. Louis Klopsch,
Otto Koenig,
Theodore Waters,
J. G. Hallimond,
President.
The Trustees.

God's Call to the Church

There is a great deal of hysterical writing and thinking, in these days, to say nothing of hysterical speaking. The nation seems to have been touched with the war madness that afflicts Europe. Men are looking expectantly to the church. From it they hope to receive the inspiration of spiritual guidance. If the church failed the people of Europe in their time of crisis, and forsook its faith and dependence on God for the arm of flesh, may not the church in America do likewise?

It is a time for the pastors and people of our Christian churches to put "God First" over and above all; to raise the standard of righteousness and to make it clear to the whole world that it is in earnest, and sincerely in accord with the divine teachings of Jesus Christ. To exorcise this spirit of madness we must elevate the Cross, not as a symbol of hate but of love for all men.

God is calling to America. If we stop and listen, we may hear the call sounding in tones that cannot be mistaken. Hitherto he has kept us out of the world-conflict, because we have trusted in him and have preserved our high and noble ideal of world-service to humanity. Shall we yield to the madness and sacrifice all these glorious ideals now? Can the church fling away so lightly the faith men have had in its teachings?

God has his witnesses in this land of ours, and they must stand firm and true for what they know to be right. There are Christian statesmen, too, who know the right "and, knowing, dare maintain." They will put "God First" whatever shibboleth others may raise. They are fortified by the prayers of millions who believe in peace and who rely on God's power to keep our country free from the foul stain of war, if we only trust him fully. They believe that he has a higher mission for the United States to fulfil than any that has yet devolved upon us, and that he will assuredly lead the nation into the path of safety and high service if we continue faithful to our duty.

Such is our belief, our prayer, our confident hope. All the statesmanship and the preparedness of Europe failed to avert the stroke when it fell—because they had discarded God and left him out of their councils. Let the church in America be true to its mission, no matter what temptations may arise to woo it to a base betrayal. If we remain steadfast and true, faithful to the duty imposed upon us, he will disperse the storm-clouds and the Sun of Righteousness will shine forth, showing us the marvel of the spiritual triumph—

His ways are ways of pleasantness,
And all His paths are peace.

Publicity and the Gospel

Chicago is planning an innovation on a large scale, which may prove to be of inestimable value to Christian churches generally. One thousand ministers are invited to a conference with seven hundred members of the Chicago Advertising Association, with a view to the improvement of church conditions and the extension of church influence among the people of Cook County. It is expected that some of the leading thinkers in America will speak, and the best experts on efficiency will have a hearing side by side with distinguished theologians and sociologists, with a view to the adaptation of improved business methods to church affairs. This unique movement in religious and social service will attract general attention. Very many churches are only too apt to get into well-worn grooves and to stay there, marking time year in and out, while a few, under the leadership of progressive spirits, make real progress. It may be set down as an axiom in church life as in other activities in this world that the church that is standing still is really running down. It needs a spiritual tonic, an infusion of new energy, a reconsecration, a call to "do something" real and tangible for the advancement of Christ's kingdom. And it needs, in addition, a common sense readjustment of working methods to suit the needs of modern life, to help it in setting forth with all the skill at its command the advantages of Christian fellowship.

It is true there are some who prefer the old-fashioned ways to the new; but religion should be essentially progressive. Nowhere do we find in Christ's teachings justification for "letting well enough alone." His command to the church is "Go forward. Preach, proclaim, publish to all the world." To yield loyal obedience, we must constantly extend our borders, and adopt every justifiable means of winning souls, so that in every way . . . Christ is proclaimed. Isaiah urged long ago: "Enlarge the place of thy tent and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations. Spare not. Lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes." It must not be said of us, when well-meaning people criticize the antiquated methods of some of our churches, that "the sons of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." Here and there a progressive church, pioneer-like, has blazed the way into wider efficiency and greater service. Let others take the lesson and no longer hide their light, but let it shine with ever-increasing brightness.

Mr. Brandeis and the Senate

The Senate has been getting lots of advice on the question of ratifying or rejecting President Wilson's nomination of Louis D. Brandeis to the vacant place on the bench of the Supreme Court. Those opposed to Mr. Brandeis declare that he lacks the "judicial temperament." The New York Times, voicing this fear, states that he would take his seat "with a variety of preconceived nd firmly held opinions . . . con ning social welfare and the social theories upon v ch legislation might be based." The Times declares at the function of the Supreme Court is to stand between the people and the consequences of their vn errors." This is almost an admission that the Sup ne Court has been opposed to true democracy. T se who actually believe in democracy will be gla to enlarge the powers of a man who talks like this om a speech of Mr. Brandeis): "The able lawyers ve to a great extent allowed themselves to be the adj ts of great corporations and have neglected their ol gations to use their powers for the protection o he people." The people need no protection ag ist themselves. They do need protection against he greed, cruelty and injustice of capital. Theories ke these, held by Mr. Brandeis, will make a good fou lation for his efforts to administer justice: "The at capitalistic combinations, falsely so called 'coo ration,' will cease because they are inconsistent th true liberty. But in their place will arise true coo ration; that democratic joining together of me in industry for their common benefit, under which n's faculties will be liberated and developed."

Justice Seabury of the New York State Cou of Appeals said the other day:

> Mr. Brandeis, in character, ability, and professional ipment, is in every way qualified for the office for which has been nominated. His opponents cannot attack him upo ny of these grounds. This is a most fortunate circumstanc It leaves as the only issue and only ground of attack th act that Mr. Brandeis cannot be relied upon as a serv of monopoly and privilege.

Mr. Brandeis is a Jew. We congratulate the ws upon the honor which has been bestowed upon eir race in the nomination of this enthusiastic Isr ite for this high office. He is recognized as the lea of the Zionist movement in the United States. is pointed out that his face is like Lincoln's. His yes show the same deep, affectionate, sympathetic, a ost sorrowful interest in the burdens of others.

Mr. Brandeis's career reveals nothing that fits him for this place. He has demonstrated a ze for justice and skill for obtaining it. Surely if a ma has demonstrated supreme zeal and supreme skill in hat quest his place is on the nation's Supreme Court

A New Scale for Coal Workers

A HALF million men were represented a the recent Indianapolis convention of coal ine workers. The present agreement whic the mine-workers have with the operators e res on March 31 and the convention fixed a new ge scale and formulated a number of demands to be oncluded in the new agreement.

Among the demands of the anthracite wo ers are a twenty per cent. increase in wages; an ht-hour day; recognition of the union; a "more mplified, speedy and satisfactory method of adj ing grievances."

Dr. Scott Nearing has prepared a book o the anthracite situation in which are to be found ny illuminating, some startling statements. He w es: "A visitor to the anthracite coal fields would ver suspect that the workers there were occupi in developing one of the richest of American reso es. The annual production of only three mineral and fuels—pig iron, copper and bituminous coal—ex eds anthracite in value, while the value of the anth ite coal mined each year is twice the value of the gol and four times the value of silver mined annually i the United States." Coal mining has been recogniz by government experts as one of the most dang ous occupations. In 1913 out of 175,310 anthracit nen workers, there were 624 fatal accidents. The U ted Mine Workers of America, in issuing Dr. Nea ng's report, appeal in these words to the American pu ic's sense of justice: "If in twelve years wages inc sed five and a half per cent. while the cost of livi increased forty per cent. what would be your reme for the workers?"

These cold days make a good time for consi ing the claims of the mine-workers. We need the c he digs; he needs also fuel, shelter, clothing, foo for himself and family and a chance at some of fe's better things. Recent wage figures are diffic to obtain, but a government report of 1902 shows t at that date eighty-four and eight-tenths per cent. the anthracite and seventy-three and eight-tenths pe ent. of the bituminous workers were getting less than .50 a day. The coal industry is highly and effic tly organized; it meets a positive, inexorable blic demand; its laborers work at great hazards. hey should certainly have a fair share of its profit and more reasonable working conditions.

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Mother's Undying Love

A DEAR old woman, seventy-eight years of age, came from her home in Rochester to New York City and engaged board at house on Front Street for an indefini period. Early each morning she wt out from her boarding house, and la each evening she came back weary an depressed. She confided to her la lady the fact that twelve years ago he son, thirty-six years old, had sudde y left home without any reason that sh could imagine, and had never re rned. She said she had spent m t of these twelve years hunting fo him; that she got the track of hi several times, but had missed hi; that she got into one city or day to find he had left it only th day before. She said: "I ha learned that there is a pilot w comes into the port of New Y k by the name of Frank P. W sh, which is my precious boy's na e, and I have been down on th East River front among the sa rs and deep-sea men to see if I nnot get some trace of him." O Saturday night she said that th next day she was going over to t Sailor's Snug Harbor on S en Island, and that if she did n get any track of him there she w afraid she would die, as she fe she could not live without hi. Her landlady heard her cryi that night, and on Sunday m ning when she went to her r n to call her she found the dear o mother dead. God had sent h angels to take her to himself. A elegram was sent her daughter a son-in-law, who came and t k her body home for burial. S many mothers' hearts have b n broken by the cruel stroke of a ild. Was there ever any love s ear to Christ's as a mother's l e? Whatever a son or daught may do, whatever other people n y think of them, she never lets t m go. She will hunt them to t river front and into the grave. A yet our dear Lord's love for u is greater than hers, according t these words of the psalmist: "hen my father and my mother f ake me, then the Lord will take m up." (Ps. 27: 10.)

Noted Scholar Dies

DR. JOSEPH JACOBS, the noted Jewish scholar, and e tor of The American Hebrew, d suddenly at his home in nkers, N. Y., the night of Jan y 30. Few men of his race re better known or more highly pected. He was born in Sydney, New uth Wales, and educated in Cam dge, England. He spent most of his e in England, where he won wide ne as a scholar and author, especially i his folklore volumes. In 1900 he ne to this country, becoming one of e editors of the Jewish Encyclopedia, tor of The American Hebrew, and pro sor in the Jewish Theological Semi ry. He contributed articles and vol es on various subjects of importance, d always was counted an authority such subjects. The papers are full the most tender appreciation of his ility, character, service, and charming rsonal qualities. The passing away this well-beloved Hebrew calls to nd a Jew whose great ability, facile n, splendid character and loyal service the highest interest of his race made m such a national favorite. "This ra went up from Babylon; and he was ready scribe in the law of Moses, which Lord God of Israel had given: and the king granted him all his request, according to the hand of the Lord his God upon him." (Ezra 7: 6.)

Resist Flood Damage

DEVASTATING floods have been destroying life and property in different parts of our country. The people are partly to blame, for they have cut away the forests and made the floods more likely and severe. Congress, which has spent fifty years and millions of money trying to dig channels in the rivers with comparatively little success, should also be entrusted with the task of trying to prevent floods by forbidding obstructions in streams, filling in the river bed from the bank to furnish new land for railroads and other industries and uniting with the forestry department of the government in planting trees, shrubs and grass in the naked places near the streams. Such a course persisted in would materially lessen the damage of the floods to property and life. Floods are an exception, as most disasters in nature are. As a rule the waters flow peaceably in the river bed, as they were made to do: "He cutteth out rivers among the rocks; he bindeth the floods from overflowing." (Job 28: 10, 11.)

© American Press Association

A Street Car Driver Retired

ON the last day of the old year Tom Donovan retired as a horse-car driver and motorman after fifty-one continuous years of faithful service. The New York Railways Company has pensioned him at $29 85 a month. In half a century Donovan has seen New York grow step by step to next to the greatest if not the greatest city in the world, each step foreshadowed by the reaching out of the long fingers of the street railways. From the old stage car down through the cable, the elevated, the electric trolley and subway systems, he traces its growth; and many a tale he tells of winter hardships in keeping the surface lines open. Two years ago, after spending fourteen years as a motorman on pretty nearly every trolley road in New York, Donovan was transferred back to practically the last horse-car line in New York, on Chambers Street, and has been driving there since. Although seventy-one years of age, Donovan, with iron-gray hair and mustache, and but slightly stooped as to shoulder, does not appear to be over fifty-one. And he has another distinction also: he is the father of twenty-four children, a good number of whom are living. What a splendid example of constancy and competency Tom Donovan has set! Fifty-one years with the horses' reins or the motor brakes in his hands! He stayed at what might be called the foot of the ladder, and yet he so dignified his humble labor that in point of constant service and honorable conduct he was at the top of the ladder. He was as necessary a factor in the system as the men of money who built the line, or form its board of directors. It takes a great deal of wisdom, tact and character for a street-car man to get even one bar on his arm, indicating five years of service; but for a man to get ten such bars and then add one year and another, as the retired driver did, indicates that he was a real genius in dealing with an exacting company on one side and with the people, some surly, many of them cranks, on the other. The men in the learned professions, the men in their costly automobiles, have not made a more genuine success in life than this prodigy of constant, humble, honest toil. He is the type of that constancy and fidelity of service in the spiritual life which has the promise of a reward. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." (Rev. 2:10.)

Young Girl a Leper

SURROUNDED by books and flowers sent by friends and strangers who are interested in her, a seventeen-year-old West India girl who was taken from her Jersey City home to the Hudson County Hospital for contagious diseases, suffering from leprosy, continues to remain cheerful and hopeful that she will recover. The girl went to a Jersey City physician five years ago saying she had a rash. He brought her to the New York Board of Health for examination. Her malady was pronounced a well-defined case of leprosy, and as there was no institution for her she was sent back to New Jersey to her home. Recently she was taken to the hospital for contagious diseases. Six years ago she came from Barbados and it is supposed she contracted the disease there. There are two other children in the family who it is said show no symptoms of the disease. It is a vast pity for a young girl to have such a disease from which she is likely never to recover. Among the Jews leprosy was considered incurable, and regarded as a type of sin. "And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them was cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian." (Luke 4: 27.)

17 Carnegie Medals Awarded

THE Carnegie Hero Fund Commission at its twelfth annual meeting in Pittsburg recently recognized seventeen acts of heroism and awarded four silver medals and thirteen bronze medals. Pensions which will amount to about $11,000 a year were granted to families of heroes who sacrificed their lives for others. These awards were worthily bestowed, yet these were only the smallest fraction of the thousands of heroes that appear in every department of life in America each year, of whom no especial notice is taken. The element of reward cannot enter as a motive into true heroism, and yet heroic acts have their reward in greater nobility of character and in consciousness of duty performed. In the material and spiritual realm, the saviors of the bodies and souls of men can take up these words of a great moral hero. "There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (II Tim. 4: 8.)

Snake Commits Suicide

A RATTLESNAKE committed suicide in the glass show-window of a drug store in Braddock, Pa., the other day. Joseph Butler, a clerk in the store, witnessed the tragedy. Several weeks ago two rattlesnakes were put in the window on exhibition in a small glass case. The snakes were seen by many residents of Braddock, who were interested in their movements. The female had not been in the case a week before she died. The male refused to eat following the death of his mate, and remained in the case as if dead. One morning Butler was startled by the crash of glass. He ran to the window and saw the serpent biting his neck and tossing himself against the broken show-case. The biting continued for several minutes and then the reptile collapsed and died. Society is full of rattlesnakes with long fangs and sacks of death at the base of them, with tongue of virus and poison pens, to strike and kill their neighbors. These venomous human snakes hurt themselves as badly as they do their enemies. If one end of a chain bind a slave, the other end of it binds the master in as abject a servitude. The thief steals most from himself. The man overcome by envy who tried to throw down the monument of a rival was caught under it as it fell and was killed. The man who hates his brother and becomes a murderer is always a spiritual suicide; he is the rattlesnake biting itself to death. One of the saddest pictures in literature is that where Byron has remorse turn upon itself, and bite itself to death. For all the wounds of human serpents and human sins a remedy has been provided. 'As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life." (John 3: 14, 15.)

Blind Beggar an Impostor

A BLIND beggar was recently arrested as an impostor in Brooklyn. The authorities claim that he lives in Kingston, Pa., where he owns seven houses. His receipts were from $7 to $15 a day. Magistrate Reynolds sentenced him to the workhouse. Some dishonest people make believe they are blind, to get money by begging. But as a rule really blind people are happy and honest. This man will have time at hard work to reflect on his fraud, and it is to be hoped he will go to the One who opened the eyes of the blind when he was in this world to have his spiritual blindness cured. "And immediately he received his sight, and followed Jesus in the way." (Mark 10: 52)

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

CHAPTER VII Continued

FROM the center of the plain rose an arch of cathedral-like proportions. Earth has nothing like it. It was not a simple arch, but octagonal, and many-towered. From tower to tower graceful galleries stretched, the latter so delicately wrought as to remind one of Napoleon's reference to the tower of the Antwerp Cathedral as "lace-work in stone." Beneath the center of the arch, four highways crossed so that eight avenues there converged. It was the Arch of Victory. I heard at first the low murmur, and then the loud acclaim of a multitude. A great host approached to the sound of music. In their midst was a white-veiled company, lily-crowned, and bearing garlands of flowers. As they stood before the arch, a solemn and breathless silence fell upon them all, lasting for a moment, then broken by the swelling harmony of a seraphic chorus proceeding from a gallery of the archway. I have never been a singer or a player upon any musical instrument. The thought of heaven as a temple of music never attracted me. Now and here I felt the spell of music; nay, more, I felt it in myself, as though it were the awakening of a new faculty, or of one that had always been dormant. It was as though I had hitherto been deaf, and now my ears were unstopped. It was as if I had suddenly been endowed with the ability to understand and speak a new language.

THE song I heard was of ineffable sweetness. Through it all there was a sustained high note, flutelike, and far-reaching. It was a song of triumph, of strife patiently sustained, of the will to overcome, which essentially is victory. It ended with a climax of melody. Then every veiled face was uncovered, and I saw the countenances of the conquerors. Like John on Patmos, I asked, "Who are these arrayed in white, and whence came they?" My guide answered: "These are they who, while in the flesh, fought the good fight of faith; they loved truth and earnestly contended for it; they resisted evil tendencies not alone within themselves but in their times; they kept the faith when faith was hard to keep; they are more than conquerors because, struggling for the redemption of the race, they made it possible for others to conquer. The more than conquerors are such as dare to conquer for the rest." "Tell me of some of them," I said. "I will tell you of three," he replied. "There is one whose personal conflict was primarily with inherited tendencies to grossness, to animalism." Directed by his glance, rather than by his hand, I saw a face which, while calm, had graven upon it the indelible record of spiritual warfare. It was the face of one who had suffered, who had been baffled and beaten back, yet never had surrendered. My guide continued: "And there is one who saw in Christ the beauty of all worlds, and was among the first to be his witness in a land where error reigned. Cast out by friends and family, repudiated by the one to whom his troth was pledged, deprived by unjust law of his patrimony, naught prevailed to turn him from his faith. He had indeed in time abundant reward in the other world, for most of those who once had turned against him became themselves disciples of his Lord. But, even so, he lived his life in the midst of hostile conditions. Yet, long as he lived, he was a comrade of the Cross. This is the beginning of his heavenly reward." Directing me toward another, he said, "The woman you see was a Salvation Army officer. A brand plucked from the burning, she became a flaming messenger of grace. Old habits grappled with her; old friends and companions derided her; old thoughts which had worn grooves in her brain asserted themselves, but she found safety from them all in the vigilant and self-denying life of a soldier: Christ's soldier was she, and she overcame by the blood of the Lamb, and the word of her testimony."

AS he ceased speaking, the silvery blare of trumpets sounded, and the garlanded company entered, and stood beneath the very center of the arch. I witnessed their coronation. Angel hands laid a crown upon every victor's brow. The crowns were of every imaginable loveliness—gracefulness of leaf, delicacy of flower, permanence of gold, luster and iridescence of gems. Before they moved forward through the arch, every conqueror received a polished white stone, symbol at once of acquittal, election, conquest and hospitality. Then they moved away as another host approached. My guide and I followed. Looking back, I saw what had not been apparent before; that the arch was surmounted by a crown which flashed with light as though set with unnumbered stars.

A poet, recently deceased, once wrote some verses in which, quite reverently, he intimated that heaven would not be heaven to him if there were no night there. He loved the twilight—that period of the day which our fathers used to call "early candle-light." Well, he knows ere this, for he was a saintly man, that heaven lacks nothing that may be desired by any soul admitted there. While there is no night there, I discovered that the Father has made provision in that world for those to whom night brings balm and soothing. Far to the east of the Arch of Victory my guide showed me the Vale of Night. It lies between high and overtowering cliffs. At the entrance is a zone of twilight. At the heart of it is darkness, which, were this a land of weariness, would "kiss down the lids of tired eyes." Does music sound more musical at night? There are flowers that open their chalices only after the sun goes down. Certain it is that here the air was strangely full of mystic cadence and of fragrance. I heard the faint melodic ripple of falling waters, and from afar the piping of a whippoorwill. But I missed the stars—"the friendly stars"—from their places in the arch of night. On every side, however, were twinkling lights, the phosphorescent glow of fireflies. And I was to see the stars—not indeed above me, but reflected in the surface of a lake. The cliff, beneath which our path lay, shut out the sky from direct view, but the mirror-like lens of the pulseless water perfectly imaged the sky to which it was open.

I know not how long it required to pass through the Vale of Night. Time was not for me in the timeless world. Our exit, like our entrance, was through a region of semi-darkness—of mild half-lights. I thought, "How an artist like Corot would find in this place the beauty which on earth he sought so long!"

CHAPTER VIII

I DID not speak aloud the name of the fan us artist who excelled in landscapes in w h even commonplace objects are transfig d in the atmosphere of morning and of eve ng twilight, but my thoughts were evidently kn wn to my guide. As we passed together out of he twilight realm, he explained that they wh in their mortal lives are interpreters of bea y cease neither their study nor their labor w en they enter the immortal land. Free from he burdens of the flesh, with clearer vision and h finer faculties, they are able to accomplish h re what they only attempted There. He told e that in the heavenly world there are gallerie of art and temples of music; that here the ts and graces of poetry and music, far from b ng unused, are employed in the praise of God nd in the instruction and comfort of his redee ed people. Best of all, I learned that many wh n their earth-lives never had opportunity to c i- vate the apprehension, much less the express n, of the beautiful, here are taken under the tui on of celestial instructors.

I quote the very words of my guide: " is the delight of God's messengers and ministe in this world to feed the mind-hunger and ass ge the soul-thirst of many a child whose m al growth was limited by poverty and by he blinded reason of their elders. Not long go there entered here through the Children's te a girl whose life ended on your planet when e was scarce more than an infant. Yet had e been a wage-earner, with others no older an herself, in a factory in a sea-coast town. er strength was overtaxed, and she faded li a blighted flower, chilled and killed by the call s- ness and cruelty of those who forget that in heaven their angels do always behold the fa of the Father.' She had never seen a beau ul picture or heard good music, yet in her re moments of play she had made sketches in e sand and had fashioned with it figures w h, had an artist seen, would have presaged a g at career. I saw her when she entered first e Temple of Beauty. I stood beside her as e gazed at the wonderful work of a painter o came here half a thousand years ago. is artistry, while yet in the flesh, is the glory of e of your hemispheres. He painted upon is knees and mixed his colors with prayer. e best work he did while in the flesh was on a dim prophecy of his handiwork here. The c ld gazed hungrily at the masterpiece and crie 'I also can paint.' The factory child is a pup of the Italian master whose life on your pl et ended centuries ago."

BEYOND the twilight zone my compa on and I stood at the edge of another pl n. At sight of it I exclaimed, "Land of magnifi nt distances!" Horizon stretched beyond hori n; a thousand thousand uplifted hills lay beyon he plain; the light lay upon the hills in te er tones, pure, warm, golden; beyond the ls were purple mountains. Here and there on e plain were groups of wonderful buildings. I visited several of these and entered a few. e of those I entered was the Pavilion of the P t. Perhaps the English poet who wrote " e Pleasures of Memory" may have dreame of some such place as this.

On the walls of a single chamber of imm se length and breadth I saw the history of the world. The physical evolution of the planet appeared in a series of shifting panoramas, in which a formless void gave place to a slowly sloping sphere. The days—ages—of creation as recorded in Genesis succeeded each other swiftly but with great distinctness. I saw the first human figure that ever stood "God-conquered, with face to heaven upturned." Then, as in a series of swift flashlight views, the progress of the human race was imaged forth. Armies marched and counter-marched. Geographical boundaries shifted. New nations were born, some as in a single day, others more slowly. I followed with eager interest the rise of Israel. At last I saw a star glide across the East and take its place above a stable in a Syrian town. Shepherds left their flocks while an unearthly light hung above the hills. Angelic voices chanted a song of "peace among men of good will."

A little later I saw a Cross uplifted from a stony skull-shaped mound, and then an empty tomb and an emerging Victor. I saw the little band of praying disciples at Pentecost, and the descending Dove. I could trace the rise of the Christian Church as a moral and spiritual force in the midst of the Roman Empire. I saw Rome decline and fall. Darkness fell upon the earth, succeeded by a dawning light, the Renaissance; then a brighter light which brought both heat and radiance to the hearts of men. It was the Reformation. "Chieftains and bards and keepers of the sheep," kings and warriors, saints and martyrs and founders of empires, and an innumerable host of those who have no place upon the recorded pages of history, all passed in inconceivably quick but definite vision before my wondering eyes.

My escort said, "It is all here. Naught on earth has escaped the infinite cameras of the sky. Earth's sounds, also, whether breathing benediction or reeking with blasphemy, borne by ether waves, are recorded upon the sensitive but indestructible tablets of eternity. Are there those who think to hide anything from the eyes of God? Naught that happens upon your planet is unimportant. The lives of the rich, clad in purple and fine linen, and the lives of the poor, who swarm in hovels or starve at the gates of the great; mothers bending over cradled babes and fathers with open arms waiting to welcome returning prodigals, all, all, are in the light of God's countenance." "Are these the books by which, our Scriptures say, we shall be judged?" I asked. He answered, "The books of judgment are not here, yet are these records sure witnesses concerning earth. Moreover," he added, "this is but one chamber in the Pavilion of the Past. Into the other chambers you may not enter, for they concern other worlds than yours."

"THERE is a palace here," my guide resumed, "above the entrance door to which the title reads, 'The Plan of Every Life.' There immortals see with vision clarified from doubt and mystery the perfect will and pleasure of the Eternal concerning themselves from the moment of their birth in the world of time to the moment of their birth into the timeless world. Not one redeemed child of earth has ever entered that place and looked upon God's plan for him who has not come out with praise and blessing on his lips. Infinite goodness and unsearchable wisdom guard every plan from error. Only One has ever seen the definite plan of his life as it appears here who has not also seen how at one point or another, or at many points, his life was at variance with that plan." I knew what One he meant—"the perfect Life, in perfect labor writ."

I longed to see God's plan for my life, but my guide reminded me, "Have you not the Book? Have you not the example of the Perfect One?" I said, "I can think of no more swift and certain condemnation than that which must follow the comparison of the most perfect life on earth with the life of the Master. Yet it has been revealed to us that we are to be judged 'by that Man whom God hath ordained.' What hope is there for any soul?" Deep pity shone from the eyes of my angel friend, as he said, "Have you forgotten that he lived his earthly life for you?" And as he spoke there came to my mind inexpressible comfort in the remembrance of the word of Paul, "For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God."

(Since my return from the journey through Gates of Pearl I chanced one day to open an old book, in which my eyes lighted upon a poem written by George Herbert two and a half centuries ago. My readers are perhaps familiar with it. The thought that comforted me he quaintly puts thus, though I would alter slightly the reading of the last line: Our faults are not His, but—and this is what my guide must have meant,—His, Christ's, merits are ours.

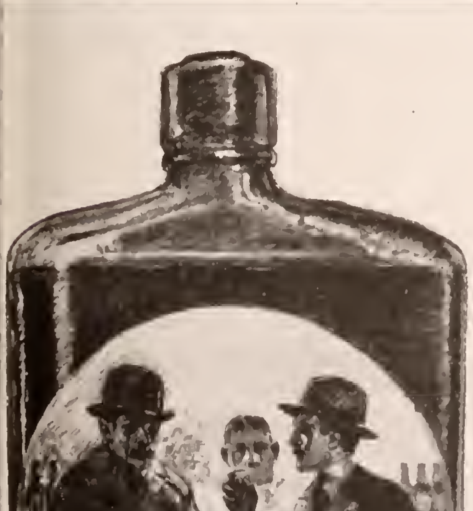
"Almighty Judge, how shall poor wretches brook
Thy dreadful look,
Able a heart of iron to appal,
When thou shalt call
For eve'ry man's peculiar book?

"What others mean to do, I know not well;
Yet I hear tell
That some will turn thee to some, leaves therein,
So void of sin,
That they in merit shall excel.

"But I resolve, when thou shalt call for mine,
That to decline,
And thrust a Testament into thy hand,
Let that be scann'd;
There thou shalt find my faults are thine."

To be continued.

"THE BOTTLE:"—I.



FOR WORSE

Dear John:

Your preachment duly received.

You old deacon, you sound like a graveyard: you missed your calling. You were cut out for a preacher.

Why, if I hadn't been able to take my drinks like a man, I'd never have sold old Ranker that ten thousand order last week, nor that western "rube" the eighteen thousand this week.

Why, old sport, my extra commissions this year will make last year's pay look like a busted balloon.

Forget it. Drink will never get me. I can control my drinking. I'm master of myself.

A little booze is a great little business getter.

Forget your plodding snail-like tactics, and get into the game. So long—

Yours for health, — and wealth —

BILL.

Dear Bill:

Looking at the proposition superficially, it does seem as though you had the best arguments.

I am tempted to think so myself, sometimes.

I have to fight hard to stick to what I have figured out.

I often wonder how the little Bride and I will get through on my present salary.

It is hard not to be envious of you and your present success.

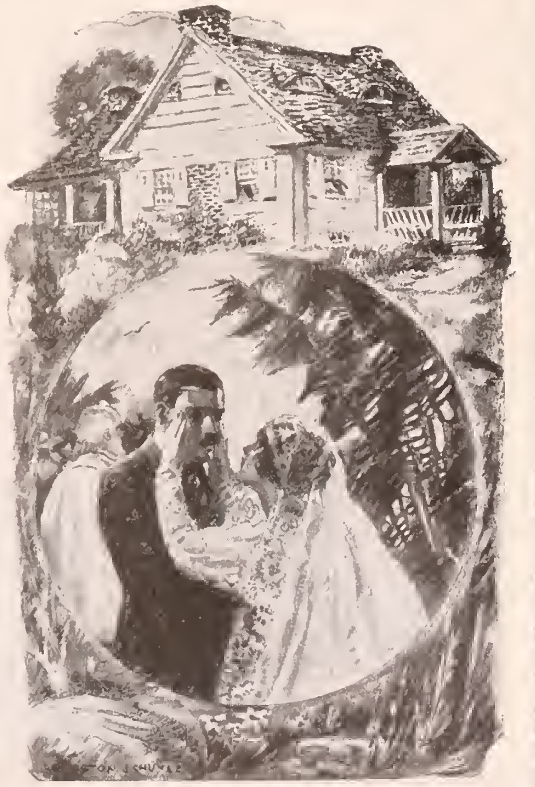
The other night we saw you and Flory go by in a taxi.

But I know I have figured it out correctly. It may take fifty years to prove I'm right, but people are beginning to buy "Service."

I realize I can't force you to agree with me. You yourself will have to make the choice.

Sincerely your old friend,

JOHN.



FOR BETTER

A Missionary College in War Time

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

IN the basement, the thundering roll of balls in the bowling alley can be heard, followed by the staccato note of rattling pins and the thud of the heavy ball on the cushion. On the floor above, dozens of young men are playing games, reading, or listening to the phonograph with its unending repertoire.

On the second floor, a concert is just ending and the treasurer is counting the money that is to go toward Red Cross relief work in the city. The sound of roller skating can be heard in the great open-air rink under the roof. Gaiety and bright lights make the building a scene of delight. But on the side toward the sea, black oilcloth covers the windows, and if one listens carefully he can hear the clatter of the mounted police on the cobbled street outside. It is war time in Turkey. The students who are met here in friendship to forget the terrors that surround them are representatives of a dozen races and a half-dozen religions. The building in which these activities and diverting forms of recreation are taking place is the fine Y. M. C. A. building given by Cleveland H. Dodge and named West Hall, after a beloved professor whose impress still lingers in the college where he spent his life. The college, whose fine buildings rise from the Mediterranean in gray piles in which not a ray of light is visible, is the S. P. C.

Those who know it in America call it the Syrian Protestant College, and know that D. Stuart Dodge, Francis Brown, Arthur C. James and many others are on the board of trustees. But from the Intercollegiate Cosmopolitan Club in New York to the beautiful highlands of Abyssinia and the broad plateau of Persia, this American mission college is known by thousands of alert young men by the familiar name, "The S. P. C." It is their beloved Alma Mater, the birthplace of their broadened life, the dearest home many of them have ever known.

Thanks to the lasting work it has done during the last half century, to its enviable place as a dominating influence in the education of the Near East, and to the sincere diplomacy of its president, Dr. Howard Sweetser Bliss, this great university is again doing its work in the Ottoman Empire in the very midst of the world war.

Several professors in America are soon to return to the school they love, and their presence is needed now in distant Beirut, where more than six hundred students have entered the college, leaving the strict discipline and dire want of the Oriental city for the beautiful surroundings, the freedom and the shelter of America's greatest missionary institution.

Dr. Daniel Bliss and Dr. George Washburn have given up active connection with the colleges which they developed, but Robert College at Constantinople and the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut are continuing their work in the Ottoman Empire while war is paralyzing national life and want is rife among the starving people.

THE work of the last year was not without its difficulties. Turkey had abolished the Capitulations, and many educational institutions had to close their doors entirely. Three British subjects on the faculty were in constant danger of being taken to the interior as hostages; the head surgeon of the college was in charge of a medical mission to southern Palestine and later aided in the Red Cross work in Constantinople; fifteen of the leading medical students were with him, comforting the Turkish soldier under the most trying conditions.

Members of the faculty and of the student body were not only called to the front from time to time, but the relief work in the large city of Beirut was largely in the hands of college and mission authorities. It was a difficult and dangerous year, but the college work continued and more than fifty students were graduated, with an equal number from the Preparatory Department.

Picture more than a score of fine buildings rising from a bluff overlooking the blue Mediterranean, and backed by the snowy length of lofty Lebanon. Imagine these buildings crowded with typical college students

Syrian, Persian, Greek, Armenian, Turkish, Egyptian, Abyssinian, Arabian, Jewish and scattered nationalities from South Africa to Newfoundland and from Brazil to India. Look in at the fine laboratories and museum; sit in the midst of hundreds of red tarbouches and hear these alien hundreds sing the hymns you learned at your mother's knee; or sit in the gaily decorated grand-stand with high officials of church and state and watch two evenly-matched teams, that have defeated teams from the English warships in soccer, struggle with might and main and clean, hard play for the annual trophy.

Students of the "S. P. C." in Front of the Post Memorial Museum, Beirut

Stand at the finish line beside some long-gowned Arab from the desert and hear him shouting in Arabic to his clean-limbed son to "Win! win! win!"; or visit the stunt evenings and hear declamations, songs and dialogues in twenty different tongues, and you will realize that this is an unusual university, not only in arts and sciences, pharmacy and medicine, agricultural engineering nd dentistry, c nmerce and pr aratory subjects ut also in int national fellov ip and brotherly ve.

I think the ost impressive ent in my life wa ny first attendance at the college chapel. In front c ny seat on the platform were scores of faculty mem rs, seated around the beloved "Dr. Daniel," wit his snowy hair and keen eye. Beyond, stretching in mpact mass of dark red to the doors in the rear c he large auditorium, were the tarbouches or fezz of nearly a thousand eager-faced Orientals. The si-dent announced a hymn and the great organ rst forth in a song that thrills us the more when we ve left America behind. This cosmopolitan grou lid not sing "My Country, 'Tis of Thee." It was a ore inclusive prayer than that. Those hundreds of v es, trained in a dozen languages, united in the fe nt petition, "God Bless Our Native Land." As hat mighty group of fine young men rose to their fee nd burst forth into hearty song, many an accent nly accented the unity of the whole group.

Throughout the last year the relations wit he Ottoman government were most friendly. Sc ral high officials visited the college from time to ne, with guarded but unmistakable shows of frien ip and desire to be of service to the college. The ab shment of the "capitulations" had almost no ect upon the Syrian Protestant College during the ar, and even in the present session important conce ons have been made which allow the college to go on ith its work with only minor changes of policy nd administration.

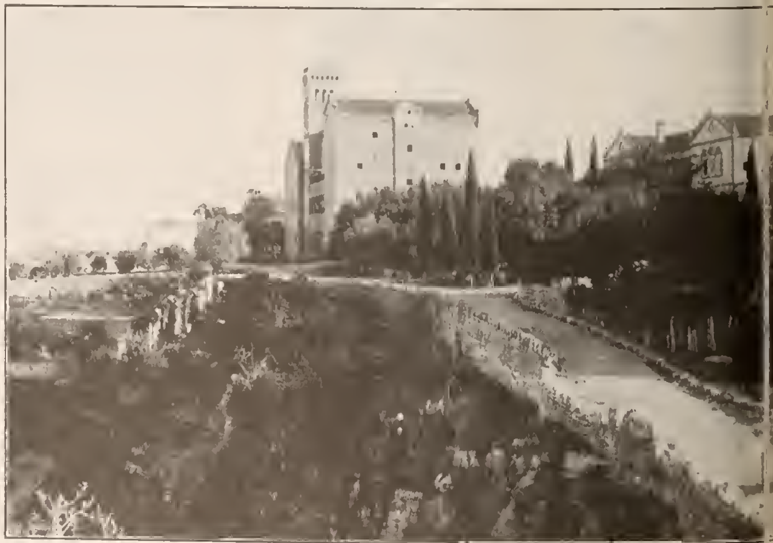
TWO special favors were accorded the s ool during the year when the war was st ng Turkey to its most remote districts. Three d ors of British citizenship were allowed to remain at eir work in the college, except for three days that ere spent at Damascus. The students who belonged t he belligerent nations of Russia, France and En nd were allowed to remain at their books while eir rulers were sending fleets and soldiers to Gallip to smash "the unspeakable Turk." Jewish stu nts from the belligerent countries were allowed to ve the country or become Ottoman subjects, and v in the last few weeks four of my Jewish friends fro he college have arrived in America and are takir up work and study here in New York, none the wor for having been caught within the enemy's borders en war was declared.

Not only has the college continued its own wc in spite of the war, but it has also been an impo nt factor in the relief work among the poor of B ut, and its activities have touched the city life ore intimately than ever. The college Y. M. C. A as nobly risen to its task of "helping the other fel ," and has contributed money as well as the servic of its members to work in the city. During the su ier vacation both teachers and students kept up ed Cross work and maintained a labor bureau in th ot city, instead of going to their summer homes i he beautiful Lebanon. As a result of this unselfish rk, not only on the part of teachers and officers, bu lso by the students themselves, the Christian spiri nd motive of the college have come to be understoo nd admired by the people of the city and the offic of the Ottoman government.

Compulsory attendance on Christian reli ous exercises has had to be given up, but the v untary services have been well attended by studer of all beliefs.

It is a remarkable thing that during the wa wo American institutions that have had so much do with progress in the Near East should continue eir operations almost unhindered. At Robert C ge,

Mecca Pilgrims Crowding Aboard Steamship to Return to Russia. French Warship at Anchor



A View of the Beautiful Campus of the Syrian Protestant College, Overlooking the Sea

Many of the leading men of the Bulgaria of today received their training. At the Syrian Protestant College, hundreds of the leading men of the entire Levant gained their education.

THE work of these two colleges is having a wonderful effect and is uniting men into an international brotherhood. Many tongues are merged for a while at least into the English language, and diverse races are here learning the lessons of international friendship and mutual trust. In Turkey, with a student body drawn from a dozen nations, the Syrian Protestant College is aiming to teach the underlying lessons of neutrality, unity and brotherly love.'

Dr. Howard S. Bliss, addressing the students and officers of the great university, asked them to observe strict neutrality, and added:

'The observance of strict neutrality does not comprise the whole, or, indeed, the chief, duty of a college like ours in this crisis in the world's history. For there is something negative and cold, something aloof and irresponsible, in this word 'neutrality,' and indeed in the thing itself. These fearful days lay a mightier obligation than ever upon all institutions like ours that claim to educate their students in such fashion as to make them factors in the development of true conceptions of citizenship. To this end our college must continue to cultivate in its students courage, stout-heartedness, robustness, vigor, straightforwardness. But in view of these unparalleled events that are plunging the world into suffering and loss, the times impose a still more difficult task: the obligation to study more profoundly than before the structure of society, the foundations of government, the basis of patriotism, the meaning of civilization. Not only must the precepts of philosophy and the teachings of history be reviewed. More time must be spent upon these teachings and these precepts. Moreover, all this study and all this reflection must be in the interest, not of an academic formula, but of a real apprehension of truth that leads to wise and energetic action."

'During the past year and a half, students from the Syrian Protestant College have gone out and fought and died on both sides in the world war. Others have worked in the Red Cross, binding up the wounds of the fighters and carrying the principles of the Good Samaritan and kindly service into the land of the Moslem, under the sign of the Red Cross. This is no crusade, bent on driving the Mohammedan from his native land. This is the benevolent crusade of kindness and friendship that transcends racial bounds and actively illustrates the principles of Christ in the land of his birth.

Many American institutions are doing an admirable service in this year of sorrow and ruin. Not the least useful or picturesque of these is the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut, or as it is known by the many alumni who love it and sing its praises in many lands, the S. P. C. Some there may be who think that the pleasant times enjoyed by the students in this year of war are not to be commended. But there, in that compound, the work of reconstruction in the Near East is progressing at the very time when armies are fighting over the possession of this historic land. And when the war is finished and the country turns to its young men for leaders, the lasting work that the Syrian Protestant College has been doing will be evident in a new spirit of brotherhood in this link-land among the nations.

A Brief Glimpse of Beirut

ON January 25 eight Americans started on the long voyage back to Beirut on the Vasilefs Constantinos. The Greek steamer is to be met at Piræus by the U. S. S. Des Moines, which the State Department is to furnish for the remainder of the trip.

In New York it was the same old story. The hurried departure, the last tender leave-takings, the heartfelt wish for godspeed and a safe voyage in a year of added peril. In far-away Beirut it is different. There the members of this party are greatly needed by those who are overworked in a task to which they are giving their hearts. One doctor is doing the work of three, and anxiously awaiting the coming of Dr. Ward and much-needed supplies.

Little Katherine Nickoley is taking as her contribution to the exiled community a small supply of stick candy for the children of the missionaries, who have not tasted such a treat for many months. Beirut is not only shut off from the news of the world, but also from foreign supplies; and even the products of the country are scarce. There is little fuel for cooking or lighting and sterilizing apparatus. Alcohol and kerosene cannot be carried on the Vasilefs Constantinos, which has to pass through seas in which mines and submarines may cause danger. It is not for the Americans alone that the supplies are being taken. Medicines, bandages and other necessities are being taken to the poor, who have been without them for months.

Dr. E. St. John Ward, the leader of the party, has been appointed American Red Cross Special Agent carrying Red Cross supplies from Washington to Turkey, and there is no limit to the amount of relief that he can bring to those who are now tasting the bitter dregs of war, unaided by efficient relief methods.

Miss Jane Van Zandt, who has charge of one of the hospitals of the College, is returning to Syria. She has seen a great deal of the hard work in the Constantinople and Gallipoli district. Professor and Mrs. Nickoley and their daughter are also members of the party. Professor Nickoley is the head of the School of Commerce of the College. Mrs. Nickoley has been a close friend to the native women of Beirut in all times of trouble.

Miss Margaret West is to be the secretary to President Bliss. Her father was the beloved professor after whom West Hall was named, and her mother is the best friend the young American teachers in Beirut have. Miss Margaret Bliss, who is going out to teach in the Faculty School for the children of the foreign community in Beirut, is a graduate of Vassar and a daughter of the president of the college.

Professor James Nicol is returning to Tripoli in Syria, where he is the principal of the newly enlarged Tripoli Boys' School, leaving his family here. Doctor Stanley White, of the Presbyterian Mission Board, expressed himself thus:

"I won't call them heroes. They would not like that. But they are going forth to possible danger and certain privation simply because there is a need for them in that miserable country. The greatest of the old-time missionaries did no more. These workers are answering the call of duty and are doing it gladly. That may not be heroic, but it is Christlike."

Gleanings from the World-wide Field

THE worst typhoon that ever struck the province of Camarines, the Philippines, arrived on the morning of October 23 (says issionary letter). The storm seems to have come in from the Pacific at the town of Tobaco, in the province of Albay. The greatest loss of life occurred in Tobaco, where an overloaded river changed its course and swept a portion of the town, together with some 300 people, out into the bay. Within a day or two forty-eight bodies had been recovered. In the province of Camarines there were twenty-six deaths. There were hundreds of narrow escapes from flying timbers and sheet iron. If the storm had come at night, it is probable that the number of fatalities would have reached at least five or six hundred. Fully 95 per cent. of the buildings of twenty out of thirty-five towns of the province were destroyed. The total population of these towns would reach 130,000 or more. Even strong buildings of concrete, stone and lumber suffered from having walls blown in or roofs torn off. As for the crops, hemp and cocoanut trees suffered most. The former were practically all destroyed. Probably twenty per cent. of the cocoanut trees were destroyed, and the rest were so damaged that they will not yield much for a year or two. My own house was a wreck. Over half the roof timbers had been torn down and the nipa had been torn off, so that the whole roof would have to be remade. Not a tree in town could boast of a leaf and there was little left but stumps of branches. It was hard to recognize the landscape. The river, which ordinarily flows back of the house, was flowing through the yard. This province has certainly never before suffered such chastisement from typhoons as in the last three weeks.

OF the 2,592 delegates at the Boston Convention of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, 95 per cent. were laymen, only 125 ministers being registered as delegates. Ninety-five towns outside of Boston were represented at the convention, which is the best record thus far, exceeding by five towns the record of Manchester, N. H. Following the Baltimore convention, one layman, who had been liberal in his gifts to home missions, has assumed the support of a foreign missionary, and six Baptist laymen have agreed to give $300 a year apiece, each two supporting one missionary.

AT Lancaster, Ky., there passed away recently Miss Mary K. Van Duzee, for thirty-nine years a member of the West Persia Mission in the Urumia station. She lived and worked for a generation in one of the most dangerous and difficult of all the foreign fields, in the midst of wars, outrages and disorder and did her work in the villages and houses of Moslems as unflinchingly as among the Nestorian Christians and the Jews. She taught the girls in her classes and small schools and the women in their homes; and men, both Moslem and Christian, listened with respect and reverence to her wise and faithful teaching. "I often thought and said," writes Mrs. F. G. Platt, who was for years Miss Van Duzee's neighbor in Urumia, "that I knew of no more Christlike missionary, no one who was more truly a winner of souls, than she was. Exceedingly timid by nature, she was to me the embodiment of the truest courage, for she lived many years amid surroundings that brought her fear and agitation; yet she did her work and did it nobly." Miss Van Duzee found at one time an old Mohammedan woman, who used to be a reader, but who had become blind and bedridden. Week after week she made calls on the woman, taking her Testament and reading and explaining it to her. Slowly the woman's mind and heart seemed to grasp the wonderful stories and some of the great truths which were explained so simply and carefully. One day the lesson was about the "many mansions," and it seemed as if the Spirit of God really opened up to her soul the meaning of those words. At the next visit, the woman was too weak to listen to reading or to engage in conversation; but she drew her visitor close to her and whispered: "I am going now; and when I get there I shall sweep out a mansion and have it ready for you."

EVANGELIST BILLY FRIDAY is now in the midst of a revival at the Allegheny Avenue Baptist Church, Philadelphia, Rev. Chas. H. Shaw, pastor. From Philadelphia the Friday party goes to Gloucester City, N. J., then to Paulsboro, where they were successful last year.

THE way of prayer is the path to power. An illustration comes to hand of a church in California. The little congregation had become overshadowed by more powerful neighbors till it was hemmed in on every side. Many families who sent their children to its Sunday school themselves passed its door to the big down-town cathedral. Much disheartened, the pastor was talking with one of his women members. She told him of an experience in Minnesota. The members of a little church had been reduced to a handful; the building was weatherbeaten, out of repair and thoroughly disreputable and they could not afford a minister. The remaining few met to consider disbanding. However, the situation took hold of their hearts; the pathos and humiliation of surrendering a once honored and still needed Christian work seized them. "Let us join our hands in a circle of prayer," said one. Eagerly acceding, they rose, and one after another prayed, and again, and again, as the spirit of God aroused them to a new fervor of faith. Their hearts were shaken and hymn after hymn was sung for joy. They were loath to leave this place of pentecostal gladness, nor did they go until they had unitedly resolved to restore the work. With new zeal they went through the neighborhood, reawakened the faltering, won new disciples, restored the building, engaged a godly pastor, and built up a strong church of two hundred members.

This story the good woman told to the discouraged pastor of Olivet and it gripped him. By his request, she repeated it at the next mid-week prayer meeting. "Why not join ourselves into such a band here?" suggested the pastor; "call it the Olivet Prayer League; Mrs. ———, write the names on the blackboard." So sixteen formed the circle, and in like manner, joining hands, they prayed and sang and were uplifted. On the next Sunday morning, presenting the subject, the number was doubled, and has since been increased to forty, all of whom are sympathetic with the great program of prayer.

Is not this a message of Christ to the churches? No loss can be so serious as the failure to pray. The call must ever be sounded to return to the primaries of religion—to God himself. The work is his, and the power is his, and the blessing is his. And always "when they had prayed, the place was shaken."

Rev. Chester Ferris.

Congregational Church, Los Angeles, Calif.

THE churches of Denver, Indiana, are experiencing a gracious revival campaign, conducted by Rev. Floyd John Evans and party. Nearly 300 conversions and reconsecrations are reported to date.

GIPSY SMITH, JR., and party closed on January 24 a campaign at Macon, Ga., the services overtaxing the capacity of the city auditorium. The campaign lasted three weeks. During February this party is engaged at Somerville, N. J.

THE report of the work of the Evangelistic Committee of New York City for 1915 was made public February 8. The season was from April 11 to August 23, closing earlier than usual because of lack of funds. Meetings to the number of 2,477 were conducted in 8 languages in 118 centers. One tent seating 1,600 was pitched in the grounds of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine and meetings were held there throughout the summer. In the Hungarian district of East Seventy-ninth Street a vacant lot was fenced in, lighted, and used all summer. This work resulted in many decisions, and in eight accessions to the little neighborhood church. Cornetists and student evangelists were supplied to a negro congregation, to several Italian pastors, to a Russian church, and to a Chinese missionary. The Italian work resulted in the conversion of five of a band of anarchists, and in the final breaking up of the band; one of the five converted decided to enter the ministry. The intangible results of such work cannot be measured. Among other tangible results of the 1915 campaign, the report lists the saving of a drunkard, the conversion of a bartender, the prevention of a suicide, the leading of his whole family to Christ by a little Hungarian boy, additions to Sunday schools and churches, the finding of peace by a man who had sought it for thirty years, the development of shop meetings into regular Bible study classes, an Italian department organized in an English church, and the outgrowing of its quarters by a mission.

THE ART OF THE ARTISAN

EVER since the human race was young, men have prized the possession of things and have feared the loss of their possessions. So pride of possession and fear of loss have worked together to create massive buildings and intricate fastenings therefor.

The cave-man carried his possessions into the recesses of some dark grotto and laid his trusty club across the entrance. If he acted quickly enough the club was an effectual bar to all intruders. But if one more quick than he, or with a bigger club, or greater skill in clubbing, came that way the cave changed tenants. Later generations gained added security by rolling great stones into the mouth of their cave, assuring them time to rush to their defense when threatened. Still later generations built their own caves and called them houses and swung oaken doors on wooden hinges and barred them with great logs, but even then they could not leave the house alone, for they could only bar the door from inside.

The early Egyptians had discovered the essentials of the lock many centuries before the cave-men fought their sanguinary combats for their dungeon homes. The Egyptians provided a bolt of wood that slipped through a wooden sheath and engaged a hole in the wooden frame of the door, and they held it in place by three pins that dropped into holes in the bolt and that were raised and freed by three other pins, set in a piece of wood that acted as a key. It was a simple and efficient lock, and embodied every principle that is found in the best locks of today.

The Romans had locksmiths and workers in metal, who may have been responsible for the first Etruscan bronze, and they dealt with iron and bronze bolts that were notched on top and that were held in place by levers that dropped into the notches. The keys raised the levers and threw the bolts, and for centuries this was the type of lock that prevailed throughout the whole of Europe, wherever the metal-working locksmith plied his trade. The variations were almost altogether in the devices to prevent the turning of a strange key in the lock; and the key bits assumed weird and fantastic shapes in the process of being fitted to pass all the obstacles and still operate the lock. The Roman locks were not large and the keys were not cumbersome, but in the medieval days when barons throve and castles reared their battlements above moat and bridge, locks entered into the golden age for locksmiths. The castle door was built of heavy oaken planks bolted together and reinforced with iron. It swung on hinges whose great iron plates were cunningly wrought into semblances of dragons and birds and knights and flowers and signs of heraldry. With fire, anvil and hammer the medieval blacksmith, an artist in design and execution, fashioned from crude lumps of poorly smelted iron, filigrees of metal that reached out across those ancient doors and belied in looks the strength that lay within them. And with his fire and forge he fashioned mighty locks to match those mighty hinges, great bolts, huge levers held in place by almost unyielding springs, and combinations of levers that led the key into a labyrinth through which could safely fare only the key that had been taught the way. The keys grew larger and larger, great iron and copper keys with shanks thicker than a man's finger and bits like giants' digits.

IN those days few men carried keys. Instead, the man of the house stopped discreetly on the far embankment of the moat and called in his best and most wheedling voice, "Yo ho! Yo ho! Open to a friend." Then from the safe protection of that double-barred and bolted door a sleepy voice would answer, "What friend comes there?" When due response and proper identification had been made the great chains would begin to creak, and the bridge would slowly descend across the ditch. Then when the "friend" had approached the door and had been properly inspected by lantern light through the guard's wicket, each great bolt would be thrown back with a clang that reverberated through every castle corridor, and finally the massive key would be thrust into the great lock and the last bolt would slide slowly back; squeaking its protest as it slid. Of course, if the lord of that manor or the king approached the salutation would have been "Open, varlet, to your lord!" and the cringing sentry would have moved more quickly and also with greater noise.

The skill of the locksmiths grew with every dozen years until in the Elizabethan days in England locks had reached their zenith in ponderosity and in devices for thwarting him who sought to enter without right. Yet the only safety behind those locks lay in a never-sleeping sentry and a corporal to watch the sentry. And the keys were so big and heavy that every king had his chamberlain to carry his key, and the chamberlain had a page to perform the heavy work.

COMING to America we see beginning a new era in locks. The colonial days found few dishonest, and locks were little known. A simple wooden bar held shut the door of the Puritan's home, and it was lifted from without with a latch-string. At night the latch-string was drawn in and the family slept in comfort of mind and security of person and possessions. Then followed the iron latch lifted from without by pressure on a spoon-shaped iron thumb-piece. This door was locked by driving a wedge into the guide above the bolt. Then American locksmiths began to make the cumbersome locks that they had learned to fabricate in England, and the American merchant, even through Civil War days and for some years thereafter, carried a copper key that would have done honor to a medieval chamberlain. Yet no lock had been invented that was absolute insurance against loss, and the adage that "love laughs at locksmiths" was borne out by sundry and aggravating incidents in which the goods and wares of honest gentlemen found harbor in the domiciles of gentlemen more clever if less honest.

The American locksmiths early recognized the shortcomings of their locks, and many ingenious devices resulted from their experiments, but it was not until 1840, when one whose name is still indelibly impressed upon the craft began the manufacture of "pin-tumbler" locks, that the unwelcome intruder was effectually barred out at the doors, and, windows being still vulnerable, the market for jimmies was recreated. The secret of absolute security lay in the "pin-tumbler" lock; and this secret found, American locksmiths turned their attention from the merely utilitarian aspects of their trade and began to develop it on its artistic side.

AND as in locks, so in "hardware" in general, the time has passed when the purchaser was left with no choice but to take what there was and make the best of it. The making of hardware is now more than an industry; it has become an art; and art has touched everything of metal that enters into the finishing of a house.

We have for many years heard of period furniture. One year we have bought chairs of the type that "Louis Quinze" affected; another year we have been intent on Sheraton or Chippendale or Adam (the Adam of Elizabethan days), or Queen Anne, or the Tudor or the Tudor Gothic or another of the Louis. Most of us have been supremely ignorant of the efforts that manufacturers in other lines were making to supply us with objects as true to type and as much entitled to our consideration as furniture. It takes perhaps a little more artistic feeling to sense the art value of a chandelier, or a wrought iron hinge plate, or an escutcheon plate, or a radiator, than it does to respond to the appeal of antique oak or hand-carved mahogany. But the American people are learning to appreciate art wherever found and to demand in the things that they have about them an agreement in design and treatment that was once unthought of. The bill of hardware for a house may be as low as $12 or $15; or if it is the house of a millionaire senator on Fifth Avenue, it may be as high as $10,000, and in each case the hardware may fit its environment and lend dignity and beauty and an added grace.

Artistic touches to your home by the hardware man may begin with a hand-wrought knocker on your front door and an escutcheon plate as well, and all the escutcheon plates and hinges throughout the house may show the same agreement. Every drawer-pull and window-lock and knob and bolt and catch may fit perfectly into your general design, and in the various rooms knobs and plates can be varied and ornamented to match the hangings or to fit some individual liking of the occupant to be. One manufacturer shows knobs enameled to match the window hangings of a boudoir, another has produced a little escutcheon plate for milady's chamber, which was such a gem of the metal-worker's art that he actually had it plated and presented it to his wife as a pendant to be worn on a gold chain about her neck.

Hot-air registers and steam and hot-water radiators no longer intrude their presence upon the eye. The improvement in radiators has been marked. They have been lowered and widened; the ingenuity of engineers has been

Continued on page 247

Turning Mud Streaks Into Highways

IN the early days of a certain Western community it was no uncommon thing in the fall for wagons to be mired to the trucks on the main street and to be frozen in and stay there all winter, only to be dug out and returned to usefulness when the last frost was out of the ground in the spring. Mud has its uses: it is supposed to be necessary to the happiness of growing pork, and, properly condensed and vitrified, it makes good bricks and tile; but as a road material it is sadly out of place. That Western community only began to lift up its head and to claim its rightful place in the company of its fellows when that series of bog holes that separated its business houses became a paved street. A fellow in dirty rags may be as much a man as the one in clean new garments, but he has a hard time looking the part. The community that tolerates a boggy, muddy, sandy excuse for a road is marked thereby as shiftless and unworthy. A good road, well made and well kept, not only gives a community a good name; it reacts upon the community; it is the vanguard of the spirit of progress; and it is not long until the unkempt citizen, who but yesterday was urging a straining team through clinging gumbo, appears upon the new highway washed and combed and newly clothed, master of the throbbing energy of that inevitable companion of the good road, the automobile. When the road is remade, even the woods take on a look of self-respect not present before, the houses along the route receive long-needed coats of paint, the whole community acquires new dignity, and every load that goes to market goes bigger and easier and cheaper than it did before; even the little red schoolhouses came together into consolidated and graded schools, and the churches no longer greet only the "faithful few" when the long rains set in. There is no argument against a good road. The only argument ever offered, the cost, is a misnomer; for good roads cost nothing. They must be paid for, to be sure, but they pay it right back in increased real values and in daily savings in transportation. These are tangible returns. If you live on a streak of mud, it's your turn to start something.

The pictures on the opposite page show graphicall the results of intelligent road improvement. Th two upper pictures were taken in Tennessee. I rainy weather, the highway could scarcely have bee called a road, it was an aggravation. In its presen condition it is more than a highway,—it is a boule vard of progress. The second pair of pictures show a road through the woods of Mississippi, and the third and fourth pairs show the improvement of other Mississippi roads. These pictures are furnished by the Good Roads Bureau United States Department of Agriculture. Goo roads work has not been confined to the south; al sections of the nation have made their contributions t the work of pulling the country out of the mud, bu it happened that the best pairs of pictures submitte to us concerned the south. The patient oxen in th lower picture are pulling a very meagre load whic will be more than doubled on the reborn highwa along which the automobile is speeding.

The World's Greatest Glaciers

CONTINUING
FRANK G. CARPENTER'S NARRATIV

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

I AM on the steamer Humboldt, Lynn Canal, in the ice land of Alaska. There are more than 5,000 glaciers between here and Seward, where our railroad is building. Hundreds of them come down to the level of the sea, and twenty-five are always dropping icebergs into the tidewaters. Alaska is the greatest glacier region of the world, with the exceptions only of Greenland and Antarctica. There are many glaciers in the southeastern part of the territory, and you can see some of the biggest of them by a ride of four or five days from Seattle on a comfortable steamer. You can steam among icebergs as big as a ship amid masses of crystal sapphire right up to the walls of ice, the ends of ice rivers that are flowing down the sides of the mountains. Now and then the tide leaves icebergs on the shores, and the green pines bend over and brush them with their branches.

I am now on my way to Skagway. Looking through my stateroom window, I can see a wall of snow-capped mountains, which are green almost to their tops. Just opposite me is a great field of ice upheld between two lofty peaks. The field is miles in width, and it slopes upward until lost in the clouds. That field is a glacier.

The true glacial region of Alaska begins a little beyond the international bonndary, and it runs from there along the coast for a distance as great as from New York to Chicago. It skirts the ocean and extends for a hundred miles or so back into the interior. The most of the glaciers are north and west of Skagway. They are confined within an area about 100 miles wide and 500 miles long, comprising a territory perhaps as large as the state of New York. This, all told, does not comprise one-tenth of Alaska, but it is that part of the country most frequented by tourists, and it is from their stories that many have received the idea that Alaska is nothing but mountains and ice. The truth is, most of the territory is north of these glacial ranges which border the coast and a great part of it is as dry as northern Dakota or Montana. The Yukon valley has crisp, cold winters and short, dry summers. The winters have clear skies, and the climate is bearable. In summer the whole land is covered with the greenest of green, and the air is most invigorating.

The interior of the country is comparatively low. The coast glacial region is rugged and high. Many peaks kiss the skies at an altitude higher than any other part of the continent. They are so high, so steep and so cold that they precipitate the water that rises from the warm ocean currents that wash southern Alaska, and give the snowfall that feeds the glaciers.

Jeweled Ice Mountains

BEFORE I write more of this region let me show you some of the big ice masses of southeastern Alaska. I have just left the Taku Inlet. It is a fjord eighteen miles long, walled with steep mountains and guarded by islands. In steaming up it you can count forty-five glaciers, and at the end of it come to the famous Taku Glacier, the front wall of which, where it enters the sea, is a mile wide and more than 200 feet high. The great river of ice widens as it goes back between the two mighty hills on each side. A little distance from the sea it is two miles in width, and it continues to widen for a distance of eight miles, where it is lost in a great ice field close to the boundary of British Columbia.

The Taku Glacier is a live glacier—that is, it is moving down to the ocean and is always dropping great bergs into the sea. It is traveling downward at the rate of eight or ten feet a day, and some of the masses which drop are as large as the sky-scrapers of our principal cities. Only a little distance away, so near that it can be photographed by a swing of the camera, is a dead glacier, which shows out on the other side of the hill at the west. This is also about a mile wide, but it seems to end at the shore and no icebergs come from its great dusty wall.

It was at 5 o'clock in the morning that I had my first sight of the Taku Glacier. The sun was already two hours or more high, and its rays caught the icebergs which floated about in the inlet and turned them to sapphires. There were hundreds of these blue ice masses, through which our steamer pushed its way to the face of the ice wall. The steamship was the Humboldt, with a crowd of tourists on board. It took us right up to the glacier, so that we were within 600 feet of the ice when we stopped.

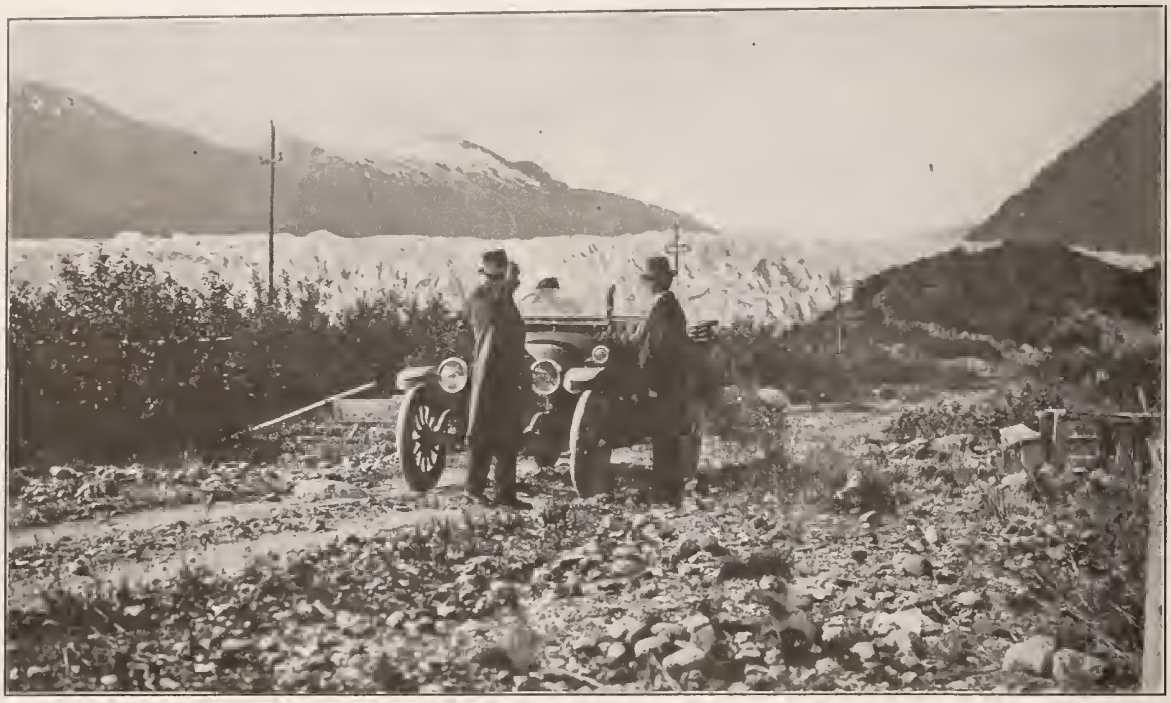
At this moment the sun struck it full and the great wall became one mass of silver frosted with diamonds and sparkling with sapphires. Where the ice breaks off the wall looks like a mighty cutting of the whitest ice-cream. When the berg falls into the water it rises up in gigantic floating masses of aquamarine.

As we anchored the wind came to us over the glacier. It had been warm coming up to the inlet, but here the icy breath of Jack Frost sent a chill to our bones. It was so cold that I could hardly write and this cold continued during our stay.

The ice is melting, and now and then, with a noise like thunder, a great mass slides off into the water. The shooting of a cannon would bring down hundreds of icebergs.

The captain of the steamer gave a number of salutes to show the effect of the sound. As the shriek of the whistle made the air vibrate mighty blocks began to drop from the glacier into the sea. As the whistle continued to blow there was crash after crash, and at one time a mass as big as a New York office building broke away and slid down into the ocean. It buried itself in the water, throwing a mighty spray almost to the top of the glacier and causing great billows to roll out to the steamer. A moment later it rose to the height of a hundred feet above the surface and moved up and down on the surface.

The ice as it comes from the glaciers seems pure enough for ice-cream or even lemonade. The ships sometimes fill their ice chests by lassoing the smaller bergs and hoisting them by derricks on board. For a long time considerable business was done in picking up this ice and selling it to the mining camps and towns. About fifty years ago it was shipped from southern Alaska to San Francisco at $75 per ton, and a little later contracts were made at $35 per ton, the shipments amounting to a thousand tons and upward per annum.



"We were the width of a city street from the glacier, which half filled the valley, bursting forth in a precipitous ice wall"

Visiting a Glacier by Automobile

IT was not far from the glacier that we saw a large deer swimming about in the water. Our steamer passed within 200 feet of him, and a Texan on board said that he could have lassoed him from the deck. The deer had magnificent antlers. Its horns and head rose above the water, and its body could be seen close to the surface. It was still swimming as we moved onward, and we saw some hunters near the shore start out to catch it. They chased the animal this way and that, and finally dragged it into their boat

From Juneau, the capital of Alaska, I rode out in an automobile to see the Mendenhall Glacier. The moraine of this mighty ice mass lies within nine miles of the city. You can leave the busiest section of the liveliest town in Alaska, surrounded by mines and mills, by stores and banks and the other biggest activities of busy man, and within less than an hour be in the heart of the wilds and in the shadow of one of the most famous glaciers of this wonderful territory.

Think of going to a glacier by automobile! I have climbed Vesuvius by a wire cable, and have crawled up the Rigi by the famous cog-railway, but this was my first experience in shooting through the moraine of a glacier in a gasoline car. I went as guest of Mr. H.

"The sun's rays made the icebergs sparkle like sapphires"

"Taku, a live glacier a mile wide and over 200 feet high"

B rends, banker of Juneau, a man who in appearance is the very image of Ja es Whitcomb Riley, and who in good fe wship is quite the equal of the great H sier poet. We rode from Juneau ri t into the woods. Trees from fifty to a hundred feet high climbed the st p walls about us, and elderberry b hes with trunks as big around as m arm leaned over and brushed our w els as we passed. The sides of the ro l were lined with ferns of a dozen va eties and by wild flowers, blue, red an yellow. We passed through great b s of fireweed, garbed in crimson, and ro e over thousands of blue lupins of th hue of the sky. There were also wi l carrots with lacelike blossoms of w te and devilclubs whose flowers we e a fuzzy yellow. In some places th grass was as high as my waist, an the mountain slopes on both si s of the road were the greenest of gr n.

ur way was over the path of the gl ier. The valley through which we w t was once filled with its ice, but it h slowly receded, leaving the ground co ered with cobbles and great boulde s ground round and smooth by their lo g glacial rides. Nevertheless, the fl ers grew among the stones, their re and blue blossoms scattered by th usands over the landscape.

s we came nearer the glacier the si of the boulders increased. Some of th m weighed many tons. They were o white and black granite with here a there boulders of slate. In the w dings of the valley we turned to the ri t and all at once came in plain sight of the glacier. On each side of it were m intains as high as the highest of the A ghanies, and it was the valley formed by these mountains that the glacier half filled, bursting forth in a precipitous ice wall which ran back and gradually rose to the sky line, where it seemed to fill the whole space between the hills and was lost in the clouds.

The face of the Mendenhall Glacier is a mile or more wide. It is a huge corrugated wall of blue and white ice sloping upward into a great field of ice mountains, which in the distance seem to be of marble carved out by a sculptor.

Coming closer we rode almost to the foot of the glacier and there left the car. We then climbed over the rocks of the moraine to the edge of the glacial stream which flows along the foot of the wall. We were not more than the width of a city street from the wall itself. The Mendenhall Glacier, where it bursts forth from the mountain, is not more than a mile wide. It rises almost precipitously, with great gutters cutting its face and with many small holes which the guides tell the credulous Cheechako, or tenderfoot, have been made by the ice worms. They say there are certain worms that live in the ice, and that these are often taken out and eaten by the miners when starving. Indeed, they prove the story by showing a photograph of a miner actually masticating the worms which he is sucking from the ice. The photograph is a real one, but the worms, I am told, are strings of spaghetti.

Glaciers in Flocks

FROM the Lynn Canal westward, running from here for a distance of four or five hundred miles, are to be found the greatest glaciers of Alaska. General Greely gives a catalogue of the names and localities of more than 200 of them, and G. K. Gilbert of the Harriman expedition says their glacial ice covers from 15,000 to 20,000 square miles. These glaciers are mostly found within 100 miles of the ocean, and the largest are on the south side of the coast range. There are eleven wide glaciers on Prince William Sound, and you can stand in Seward and see glaciers all about you on the sides of the mountains. There are two great glaciers in the Mount McKinley region, one of which is forty miles long. The latter is weighted down with broken stones and is said to have a larger moraine than any other glacier in the world.

Among the Prince William Sound glaciers are three mighty ones, named after three of our chief men's colleges, Columbia, Harvard and Yale; and there are five named after women's colleges, Wellesley, Bryn Mawr, Vassar, Radcliffe and Smith. The latter are all cascade glaciers and have mountain streams pouring from under them. Nearly every river in Alaska has its source in a glacier.

Glacier Bay is only a short distance from where I am writing. This body of water is fifty miles long, and it has more than a half dozen glaciers of enormous size. The biggest is the Muir Glacier, named after John Muir, who discovered it. It is three miles wide where it enters the water, and the height of the ice wall is almost 1,000 feet, 700 feet being underneath the surface. The glacier is very lively, and it has been supposed by some to move as much as sixty feet a day, but a fair estimate would probably be one-sixth of that speed. Very few of the well-known glaciers move more than a foot a day, although there are some in Alaska that move five and ten feet, and one in northern Greenland that is said to move over four feet every hour. The movement of a glacier may be measured by laying stones upon or driving posts into the surface. As the glacier moves onward the space between these posts and fixed points on the landscape shows how fast it is traveling.

In addition to the valley glaciers, Alaska has some great ice fields, or ice caps, such as the Malaspina Glacier. This glacier is a great sheet of ice larger than the state of Rhode Island. It has a front of about fifty miles as it faces the sea, and runs thirty miles back into the country to the St. Elias range of mountains. It is really a vast plain or plateau of ice with lakes and rivers, and with hills and mountains of gravel. It is the biggest ice field on the North American continent, although it is only a patch in comparison with the great ice caps of Greenland and Antarctica. The Greenland cap has an area of over 400,000 square miles, or two-thirds that of Alaska. The ice sheet of Antarctica is supposed to cover about three million square miles. It is as big as the United States proper.

The Malaspina Glacier had a series of convulsions about ten years ago which changed its whole surface, twisting the bed rock and uprooting the timber for miles about. In 1912 a lake in one of the crevasses of the Miles Glacier burst through the walls of ice and hurled blocks weighing thousands of tons down into the river. A wave thirty feet high spread over the flats, and icebergs of many tons jammed against the bridge of the Copper River Railroad.

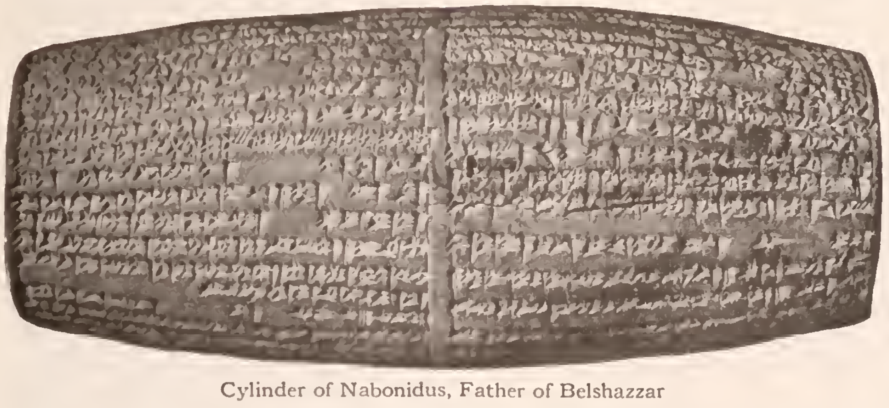
To be continued

More Light on the Bible

THERE has been discovered a cylinder in the Yale Babylonian Collection containing an inscription which is of interest to th student of the Old Testament, as w l as to the student of history. It fu ishes us with the names of the sisters o we Biblical characters, Arioch, the co temporary of Abraham (Gen. 14: 1), a Belshazzar of the Book of Daniel. T former was named En-an-e-ul, and the la er Bel-shalti-Nannar. Sixteen hund d years after the time of the Princess E an-e-ul, Bel-shalti-Nannar occupied t same position her ancient predecessor had done so many years before.

n the Code of Hammurabi there is to b found legislation for several orders of w nen: the Entu, Tigiltu, Qadishtu, Z mashitum, and the Zikrum. Unfortu ately the functions of these orders are n given in the Code. In consequence, n a few scholars have assigned to t se women devotees the evil reputat n given them by Greek writers. The i cription here mentioned clearly shows t t this cannot be applied, at least to E u, the foremost of the orders.

he cylinder was inscribed by Nab idus, the father of Belshazzar. It c tains an account of his restoration o Egipar, an ancient seat of divination, w ch was connected with Egishshirgal, t temple of Nannar, in the ancient c y of Ur. This city is regarded by m ny as identical with Ur of the Chald s, the home of Abraham, in Southern B bylonia. Egipar, as is known from t inscriptions, was the ancient quart s of the Entu order of women. It is n improbable that it was also the s t of the high priest who was called t Enu. The word "Entu" is really t feminine of Enu. The earliest r erence to Egipar is found in an ins iption of Amar-Sin of the Ur dynasty, a out 2300 B.C. Libit-Ishtar, a ruler o Nisin, about a century later, also r ords his restoration of the building. Nabonidus, in his account, tells how i his work of restoration he saw the i criptions of former ancient kings. A ong them he found an ancient mem rial tablet of his royal predecessor, N buchadnezzar, upon which was fashi ed the likeness of an Entu. This r erence is to Nebuchadrezzar I (not t Biblical character), who lived about 1 0 B.C. He found also an inscription of En-an-e-ul, an Entu of Ur, the daughter of Kudur-Mabug and the sister of Rim-Sin (Arioch), king of Ur. The ancient documents and tablets he brought out, and the damaged building he restored to its former state. Its shrines and its appurtenances he built anew; Egipar as of old he reconstructed.



Cylinder of Nabonidus, Father of Belshazzar

There was in connection with Egipar what was called the Majal or "resting-place." This apparently was the residence of the women, or "the nunnery." This building the king also restored to its former condition. "Like a strong fortress," he informs us, he rebuilt it. By the side of Egipar he erected a house for his daughter Bel-shalti-Nannar, whom he tells us he dedicated to the service of the deities Sin, or Nannar, and Nikkal, his consort. "For the service of divination I established her office of divination and brought her into Egipar." This clearly establishes the functions of the order in which such a prominent rôle was played by royal princesses. In other words, they were devoted to the practice of magic.

The character of the divination practiced by the women augurs, whether it was hepatoscopy, or astrology, or the interpretation of dreams by oil bubbles on water, or of other peculiar phenomena, as perhaps monstrosities, etc., is not stated. Since Nannar the moon-god was the ruler of the starry heavens, the father of the stars of the night, "the bearer of signs for the people," it is not impossible that the office had to do with astrology, though this cannot be determined.

It seems reasonable to conclude that Bel-shalti-Nannar was not the name given his daughter at birth, but rather the name given when she was inducted into office. Names of people living in Babylon, the capital of the empire, were rarely if ever compounded with the name of the god Nannar; and, moreover, the element "Bel" ("lord") in the name is not used in names of women. The element En (in the Sumerian name En-an-e-ul) also means "lord," which suggests that the peculiar formation of the name Bel-shalti-Nannar, which means "the lord of victory is Nannar," was due to its having been fashioned after some ancient name of the order. Nannar was the deity to whom the women looked for inspiration in their profession. It is therefore probable that this was her official name.

It is not stated that Bel-shalti-Nannar was the head of the order, but this can be inferred from the prayer of the king at the close of the cylinder, which reads "May Bel-shalti-Nannar, the daughter, the beloved of my heart, be strong before them; and may her word prevail."

The work of restoration was only undertaken after the king had assured himself that it was the desire of the gods that he should do so, by consulting their will through divination. This was done three times. Here also it is not stated what kind of divination was employed, but from the terms used it would seem that it was hepatoscopy, or liver divination. As stated he consulted the wishes of the gods three times, but only the first and third portent was favorable; that is, the signs on the liver of the first and third sacrificial animals indicated that the gods desired the work to be undertaken. Whereupon, the king immediately began to accomplish his task

In addition to his work of restoration, the king augmented the fixed offerings of the shrine. These, he informs us, "he increased more than before." "Everything of its kind I made abundant in Egishshirgal. Every day three sheep as against one sheep, the old fixed offering for Nannar, or Sin, and Nikkal, my lords, verily I provided. Endowments, possessions within Egishshirgal, I made abundant."

Following his account of restoration and provision for increased revenues, he refers to the chief officers of the temple. Unfortunately more light is needed before their functions are understood. In his words he says: "In order to sanctify the bursaggu, and that they may not incur sin, the purification of Egishshirgal and the chapels of the gods, the Enu, priest of the bronze dibba; the seer; the engisu; the imprecator; the chief builder; the builder; the dul-lah-ha, the overseer of the gallum (psalmist?); the custodian; the lagaru, the priest who institutes supplications; the singers, who rejoice the hearts of the gods; the kinishtu priest; the shudnabu, their obligations, their taxes, I remitted; and their income I established. I purified them, and for Sin and Nikkal, my lords, I sanctified them."

The cylinder closes with this prayer: "May Sin, the bright god, the lord of the disc, the light of mankind, the majestic god, whose word is constant, rejoice over my deeds, and love my sovereignty. May he grant me long life, and plenty of descendants for a gift. May I not have an equal; may I not have a rival. During the month, may he assist the working forces of my pious acts. May he establish the coronet of my royalty forever on my head, and establish the throne of my lordship for future days. During the month in my renovating, may I behold thy favorable (and) firm omen. O Nikkal, powerful lady, let my pious act come before thee. May Bel-shalti-Nannar, the beloved daughter of my heart, be strong before them, and may her command prevail. May her deeds be good, a faithful votary; may she not commit sin."

ALBERT F. CLAY,
Babylonian Department, Yale University.

Yes, I sell it and I'll tell you why

Kyanize
KY-AN-IZE
Floor Finish

has gained a national demand as a guaranteed Floor Finish in all colors for all woodwork.

I sell it to the House Owner—and because Kyanize is the hardest, longest-wearing finish for floors and staircases of course it is best for furniture too. The Painters in my town use Kyanize because it means a good varnish job at a reasonable cost.

Our Architects specify Kyanize. And they're very particular about varnishes. I've built up a big Kyanize business on a "money-back-for-the-empty-can" basis, if it isn't all I say it is—and more. And the factory stands behind me.

Then there's

Kyanize
KY-AN-IZE
White Enamel

The white, stay-white—the American-made enamel—that a damp cloth keeps looking always like new.

Kyanize White Enamel is the hard, brilliant, easily cleaned enamel for all white work on wood, metal or plaster—outdoors or indoors.

It won't crack, chip or peel.

It's durable. It covers more surface. It costs less per square yard. It's guaranteed!

Architects, Painters and House Owners are just as enthusiastic about Kyanize White Enamel as they are about Kyanize Floor Finish. You must try it.

There's a Kyanize Agent in your neighborhood. If you do not know him—write us. We will gladly give you his name and address.

ONE GALLON
Kyanize
HIGH GLOSS
WHITE ENAMEL
BOSTON VARNISH COMPANY
BOSTON · CHICAGO · MONTREAL

Boston
Varnish Company
Everett Station
Boston, U. S. A.

More Opinions on "Preparedness"

A Pacifist Program for Preparedness

By Lucia Ames Mead

THE militarists have chosen a clever slogan, which is half the battle. All who love foresight, caution, prudence, believe in preparedness for all probable exigencies. Up to date, the public seems to be unaware that any kind of preparedness is conceivable apart from increase of war preparation except the formation of that far-off world-organization which does not deal with immediate problems and that exercise of brotherly love for which professor and congressman, as much as the man in the street, has a profound contempt.

The pacifist program presupposes the truth of Dr. Charles W. Elliot's recent statement that "the danger of a European or Oriental invasion is almost infinitesimal." It also presupposes that this country could never be successfully invaded, and therefore never needs a citizen army, if it expends its usual naval budget for those submarines, mines and other coast defenses that have prevented the greatest navy in the world from bombarding a single German port and which have prevented the allied fleets from going through the Dardanelles.

While not, at this time, asking for disarmament or limitation of armaments the pacifist does ask for an honest, economized expenditure of a naval budget which shall at least be no larger than was that of last year and which shall be spent solely for purely defensive measures on our coast, and not for still larger battleships, which can only raise the standard of size and expense for the battleships of all nations and which would soon nullify any advantage gained.

The pacifist proclaims that no successful invasion was ever made by any nation fighting beyond the seas, and that no Teutonic or Oriental power could embark sufficient troops with supplies and fuel and artillery and approach our shores without, according to careful calculation, giving us at least two months' warning, and without leaving itself dangerously exposed at home.

The pacifist proposes the following methods to diminish those possible dangers against which all war preparations are now being made, and which would be vastly more effective in promoting security than would be the multiplication of armaments.

1. Demand by the United States government that the Third Hague Conference be called at the earliest possible moment after the war and immediate plans made by the government as to the measures which it will propose to the signatory powers to place on the program for the Conference.

2. Announcement by our government of its intention to ask the signatories to the Third Hague Conference to guarantee with us the protection of the Latin republics and thus abolish all excuse for a great navy in the Atlantic to uphold the Monroe Doctrine.

This doctrine, largely expanded since its inception, is now both vague and menacing to the world's peace. It is impossible to believe that any signatory nation could refuse to join in this concerted guarantee without advertising its intention of future aggression. No nation would have anything to lose by such a guarantee, as it knows our intention to fight for its maintenance, even if we have to do it alone. Such an announcement now could change the whole plan for "preparedness," and open up hitherto unconceived possibilities. It could give us, at no cost, what we now plan to achieve at enormous cost and with ever-increasing danger.

3. Passage of a bill, already approved by the American Bar Association and urged by ex-President Taft, which would give Federal control and protection over aliens.

This would lessen possible friction with Japan and not leave the national government helpless as it was when Italians were lynched in New Orleans some years ago and Louisiana would not make redress.

4. A government commission of Americans of experience in the Orient and one chosen from eminent Orientals to study the adjustment of all difficulties between our country and China and Japan, to the end that justice and good-will be achieved. This should carefully consider Professor Sidney L. Gulick's proposals for a solution of the immigration problem so as to put China and Japan on a par with other nations and, at the same time, prevent any undue influx of Orientals.

5. A promise of independence to the Philippines in the near future and the securing of their neutralization by agreement of all nations interested.

This would enable us, in the words of a naval officer, "to cut down our navy one-half." It would relieve the apprehensions of those natives who dread American exploitation, and the neighborhood of a great American fleet. It would greatly lessen the likelihood of militarism spreading through peace-loving China and the sad diversion of its small resources from education and internal development into costly, short-lived armaments. It would not mean the shirking of any normal obligations but rather the help of 700,000,000 in Asia and America, instead of merely seven to eight million Filipinos. We could still help them in education and doubtless would be asked to supply paid advisers as other Asiatic nations have asked us to do. The price of an eighteen-million-dollar battleship given to the Filipinos for education and administered by ourselves, would be six times as much money as we have ever given them. It will be remembered that they have themselves paid for their education as well as all their other expenses. Our sole gift has been $3,000,000 in the cholera season.

6. The announcement by our government of its policy to take the initiative in forming a league of nations, perhaps beginning with the American republics, and as soon as possible to include all nations pledged to settle all their difficulties between each other by diplomacy, law, or conciliation and to use concerted non-intercourse as a penalty for faithlessness to this pledge.

This non-intercourse, if carried out completely, would involve cancellation of passports, copyrights and patents and the cutting off of all communication by shipping, railroad, wire and wireless, and would prohibit war loans. Such a punishment has never yet been inflicted on any nation. It would become more and more terrible according to the number of the nations within the League. The small states of Europe, like Belgium, Holland and Switzerland, whose joint forces might amount to little, could exercise enormous power in cutting off transmission of supplies. A supertax or higher tariffs might be inflicted on a nation that remained obdurate, the amount received to help offset the losses of the nations most inconvenienced by this non-intercourse. While obvious difficulties will at once be recognized, the question to be considered is, What is the alternative? Every method of coercion has difficulties. Shall we try this or remain content with that which is ruining Europe today?

7. Preparedness to save, for real, defensive purposes, the 600,000 Americans who annually perish from preventable causes, and who have died in less time than Great Britain has lost 600,000 soldiers.

Germany's best preparation for war was her preparation of her citizens' minds and bodies for peace. As an astute business man, George W. Perkins has declared: "We as a nation are unprepared for peace." Ill-health, reckless loss of life, inefficiency, waste of natural resources, clumsy national housekeeping, as well as graft and greed, create an unpreparedness that would seriously handicap us, were we at war.

The pacifist believes in real defense for real dangers, but not in preposterous preparedness for hypothetical dangers.

Upon our decision hangs the world's decision. Today we ourselves are laying the foundation for rivalry, ambition and future trouble. Money, misinformation and fear are about to force us on the downward path that will lead to world conscription and probably a future world war, unless, in the p vidence of God, blind eyes are open in time and a strong hand is stret ed forth to save us from fatal folly.

The Clear Duty of Christia

PERMIT me in this way to giv ny approval to the men who ave taken the firm stand against the mi ary program advocated in our Presic t's last messago to Congress. I ost heartily commend Dr. Sheldon's ar-cut letter on preparedness. It is i ed gratifying to find at least a few en with moral courage enough to sta up and face the war-maddened wor on the Christian ideal. Surely there yet hope for the race! Away forever ith the blind idea that war is sanction by God and the Bible in the Chr ian dispensation. If it ever was allov it was in the Old Testament dispens on, like many other evils. But woe be s if we try to transfer those diabolic id to the Christian era. The man tl is attempting to unite war with ristianity is showing the most ful blindness regarding the essenc of Christianity. Let those who hav not written to their respective repre tatives in Congress regarding the pro sed "preparedness" plan do so at onc As citizens and Christians we owe tl to God and our nation.

Troy, Idaho. O. W. NEWM .

We Should be an Exemplar Other Nations

MILITARY preparedness, the m-ing of ourselves against our ow men, is contrary to the teachin of our Saviour Jesus Christ. If we ow his advice we shall never go amis

No matter how we strive to d ive ourselves, we are nevertheless onfronted with this truth: that all ars have been caused by greed, jea sy, and pride. Surely in this enligh ned age we should be above the spill of human blood for these selfish pur ses.

The proper thing for us as a ion to do at the present time is to rry on the same military progra we would have had had this war ver occurred; and to use our influe to bring about an understanding be een the nations of the world, where all international affairs would be s led by arbitration. This system uld necessitate the retaining of o a small portion of the now existing ies and navies, which would be cont lled by a government of the United N ons of the World; and used for polic urposes.

What we need is world-fello hip, world-cooperation; our aim shou be to strive toward the elimination all wrong; we want to dwell togetl in peace as God intended that we s ld. Warfare is one of the greatest all crimes committed by mankind. We were not put in this world to kil ach other, either singly, in groups, in any other way.

The majority of the people the different nations of the world ar awabiding, peace-loving citizens, th fore the maintaining of the present m ary equipment is ridiculous. It is ight for us to resist lawlessness with ysical force, and so long as wrong ex s it will be necessary for us to main n a police force; but our aim should to cure the wrongdoer, not to kill.

Vaughn, Wash. F. VAN SL E.

Live Peaceably with All M

IN regard to "preparedness," the United States would do all it own "preparing" at first cost, and e out all profit-takers "preparedness," talk would be scarce. If the men who s rted wars had to do all the fighting, ere would never be any more war.

Just think of the thousands o men war destroys soul and body an the indescribable misery of the orpha and widow. D. W. BRO N.

Attica, Kan.

A Talk About George Washington

BY JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE

I wuz the evenin' before the birthday of the immortal savior of our country. I sot by the cheerful fire blaze, knittin' on a blue-an'-white checked sock for my pardner, an' at the same time pensively gazin' on the picture of the immortal George which wuz hangin' up over the bookcase, framed in black walnut.

An' as I sot there, I methought to myself (I could always knit and think), if he wuz livin' now, an' he an' Martha could come and spend his birthday with me what a fuss I would make for him! Thinks I, killin' a hen, or a turkey, or even a gander, wouldn't satisfy me at all. I would feel as if we ort to kill a cow or a ox to do honor to him.

But I wuz interrupted in my sentimental musin's by my pardner, who sot opposite to me in his own easy chair, breakin' out an' readin' to me in the evenin' paper. He often duz that when he finds sunthin' extra interestin'. I guess pardners always do. An' he read me a piece about how a public man in Washington, D. C., had dipped a little deeper into the public purse than wuz usual, though Josiah an' I both knowed that reachin' down into Uncle Sam's pocket wuz nothin' oncommon. No, indeed!

But the idee wuz always obnoxious to me. He see that I looked fairly disgusted to hear such things, an' I told him so, an' he bein' a man, an' the dipper bein' of his own sect, he tried to excuse it off, an' sez:

"'Tain't nothin' to make a fuss about, Samantha; all 'tis, this man's dipper wuz a little bigger than the usual run of dippers that are run down into Uncle Sam's trouser pockets." Sez he, "They all on 'em do it when they git a chance."

Sez I, "I don't believe it, Josiah Allen. I believe there are some honest men in public life as well as private. I don't believe all on 'em will rob and steal."

"Oh, I don't call it stealin', Samantha."

"What do you call it?" sez I.

"Oh, I call it snipin', Samantha. Jest kinder snipin'. Of course it hain't jest right, but it hain't like stealin' out of a private man's trouse's pocket, or stealin' butter or cheese or a bag of beans, to kinder wait on yourself to a little out of the public treasury, to snipe a little from the gover'ment."

I RAISED my eyes to the benign face of George Washington, an' sez almost wildly, "George! George! why couldn't your mantilly, wove of honesty and pure goodness, have fell where it wuz needed most, when you had to leave it to take up the white robes of angels?"

Josiah can't bear to hear me praise up any man livin' or dead, only himself, an' he spoke up real uppish and sez:

"Oh, Washington wuz talked about as much as we public men are today."

"'We'!" sez I. "'We'! You never held an office higher than pathmaster, Josiah Allen; an' I'm glad on't, if it would make a sniper of you, as you call it."

He didn't answer that but sez ag'in in a kinder surly axent: "If you don't believe it, read some of the papers of that day."

"Of course," sez I, "envy and jealousy loves a shinin' mark as well as death duz, an' the more the mark shines the more they aim at it. But do you or anybody else dast to say that George Washington ever waited on himself, as you call it, to a cent out of the public treasury, or ever sniped anything, as you term it, from the gover'ment?"

"Oh, probable not! probable not! and there wuz a good reason for it. There wuzn't anything to snipe."

Sez I, "He'd ruther give five dollars out of his own pocket than took five cents from the country he loved. Oh, Josiah Allen," sez I, as the eye of my spectacles rested on that noble face over the bookcase, "it is a good thing for us once a year, 'tennyrate, to meditate on the doin's of that man, how he jest give his life for his country; left a life of ease and luxury to throw himself into the hard and precarious undertakin' which wuz goin' to end in everlastin' disgrace, if lost. How half frozen and half starved he, who had never knowed what privation wuz, stayed with his sufferin' army, endured all the hardships they did, encouraged 'em, an' when hope seemed lost, knelt on the bare cold ground an' prayed to the God of justice to help 'em in their fight for freedom! When I compare his onselfishness an' devotion, his dantless courage and persistence in the face of such mighty odds, with the money-changers who sell doves in the public temple today, I feel sick at heart."

"Sell doves!" sez Josiah; "that is news to me. Good land! if that wuz so, I guess we farmers that are et up by doves and sparrers would jine in too an' be proud on't; but I guess you got that story from Miss Bobbett or Miss Henzy; it sounds to me like wimmen's talk. Wimmen's heads are too loose put together to hold hard horse sense. I'd like to know where you got that fool idee."

"I got it from the Bible, Josiah Allen."

"From the Bible, Samantha? What has the Bible got to do with politicians or politics today?"

"Not much, I'm afraid," sez I sadly; "but I wuz allegorin', Josiah. You know how the Lord driv' the money changers out of the temple. An' I wuz thinkin' what a long whip it would take to reach all the backs of the money changers today, an' of how the white doves of purity and honor and true patriotism are bought an' sold every day by too many of our public men."

"Sold by who?" sez Josiah, "an' to who?"

"To their enemies," sez I; "by them paid to protect us. Licenses sold to murder body an' soul, plunge the people into poverty an' ruin. Honor sold to the highest bidder. The good of the many sold to the greed of the few. When I think of all this an' then think of George Washington's doin's, he looms up in my mind like a angel of light."

JOSIAH didn't look convinced, he had a sort of a balky look, some like a horse bein' driv' the way he didn't want to go but had to.

An' I went on, "An' jest think, Josiah Allen, how that noble man couldn't tell a lie, an' too many of our public men today can tell 'em jest as easy as fallin' off a log."

"But how do you know, Samantha, that he couldn't lie if he tried to? I'll bet he could."

"He wuz too good to lie; he couldn't do it."

"Well, if that's so, why should anybody be praised up so for not doin' what they couldn't do?"

I wouldn't argy on that pint with him, I felt above it, an' after a minute's pause, Josiah resoomed:

"Oh, I dare say George wuz a tollable likely man; he's been called so for a number of years. But I tell you, Samantha Allen, it don't look well for a married female to call any other man besides her husband a angel. Why don't you call me a angel?"

I bent the eyes of my spectacles onto that small-sized pepper-and-salt clad figger, noted the extremely bald head, the wrinkles criss-crossin' his linement in every direction, an' recalled his excuses for the shortcomin's of his guilty brother men, an' I methought that, though Josiah Allen wuz my choice out of a world full of men, yet he didn't seem to bear any resemblance body or soul to any angel I had ever seen depictered. But before I could open my mouth agin in speech he reiterated his former remark.

"I tell you, Samantha, it don't look well for a married pardner to go round callin' other men angels."

"An' it don't look well, Josiah Allen, for a male pardner to be jealous of a man who has been dead a hundred years."

"I hain't jealous, Samantha, I hain't got a jealous hair in my head."

He see my gaze restin' dreamily

Continued on page 248

"Never Use an Oily Polish on Any of My Furniture—I Want You to Use

JOHNSON'S PREPARED WAX

OILY polishes gather and hold the dust, soiling clothing, linen and everything with which they come in contact. Johnson's Prepared Wax imparts a perfectly hard, dry, glasslike polish—it forms a thin, protecting coat over the varnish adding years to its life. It never becomes sticky or tacky in the hottest weather or from the heat of the body, consequently it does not show finger prints and

It Cannot Gather Dust

Johnson's Prepared Wax cleans, polishes and finishes with one application. It gives Craftsman furniture that soft, artistic polish so appropriate to this style. It entirely removes the cloudiness from Mahogany, restoring its original gloss. There is nothing like Johnson's Prepared Wax for keeping dining room tables bright and tempting—hot dishes have no effect whatever on it.

Every family has dozens of uses for Johnson's Prepared Wax—it is just as necessary around the house as soap. Keep a can always on hand for cleaning and polishing

The furniture, woodwork, floors and linoleum
—In Your Home

The desks, metal cases, cabinets, safes, etc.
—In Your Office

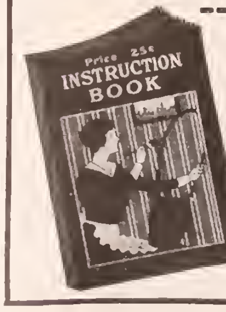
The body, hood and fenders of automobiles
—In Your Garage

Johnson's Prepared Wax is conveniently put up—always ready for use—no tools or brushes required—all you need is a cheese cloth rag.

Automobile Owners!

You will find Johnson's Prepared Wax just the thing for polishing the body, hood and fenders of your car. It preserves the varnish and protects it from the weather—sheds water and does not gather dust—makes a "wash" last twice as long.

We shall be glad to send you gratis a copy of our beautiful new 25c color book "The Proper Treatment for Floors, Woodwork and Furniture." It is full of valuable ideas on home beautifying. No home complete without it.



I enclose 10c for a trial can of Johnson's Prepared Wax—sufficient for polishing several pieces of furniture, a small floor or an automobile. Also send book on home beautifying free.

NAME ....

ADDRESS ....

CITY and STATE ....

Fill out this coupon and mail to
S. C. JOHNSON & SON
"The Wood Finishing Authorities"
RACINE, WIS.

CH2

Conservatism

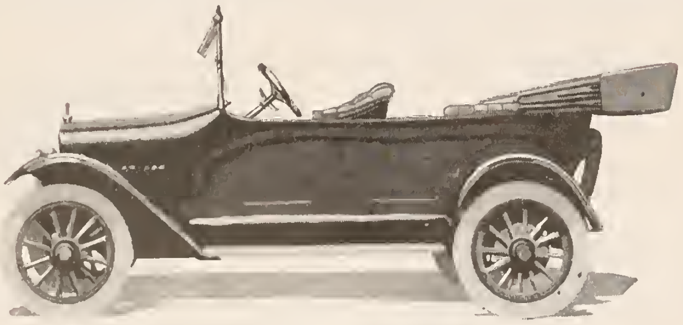
HIGH-SOUNDING and extravagant phrases, as applied to motor cars, are all too common. Thus their force is lost, and they convey no thought other than the impotence of the user.

Unfortunately, too, generalities are often resorted to in the absence of significant facts and convincing evidence.

For every effect there is a cause. The prestige and favor acquired by Maxwell Motor Cars are due to tangible and commanding reasons.

The comeliness of design, the solidity of structure, the economy in upkeep and operation, the ease and comfort in driving and lastly the innate integrity of the whole (exemplified by the World's Motor No-Stop Mileage Record, recently established by one of our stock touring cars)—these are the powerful contributing factors to Maxwell eminence.

Maxwell Motor Car Owners are people who recognize the wisdom of economy. They expect surpassing service and everything that such service implies. They pay tribute to Value and Worthiness whether in man or car.



One Chassis, Five Body Styles

Two-Passenger Roadster	$635
Five-Passenger Touring Car	655
Touring Car (with All Weather Top)	755
Two-Passenger Cabriolet	865
Six-Passenger Town Car	915

Full equipment, including Electric Starter and Lights. All prices F O B. Detroit.

Maxwell

MOTOR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICHIGAN

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON LUTZ HILL

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

MARGARET EARLE, school teacher and "tenderfoot," mistaking a water stop for her station, was left behind on the desert plain of Arizona. A passing half-drunken rancher told her that her station was twenty miles away. She started to go to the rancher's camp, but she found his company less desirable than loneliness. The rancher reported his erstwhile passenger to his wife and the eight men in the bunk house. One of them was young and "different." He saddled two horses and went in search of the girl. He found her, reassured her, set her on a horse and returned with her to the ranchhouse.

The first sight of the bunk house was not very reassuring, but the Boy had told her that "Mom" Wallis would look after her and there was no alternative but the desert. The Boy left her at her boarding-house late the next afternoon, but left with her promise to see him again. Afterward she met the Rev. Frederick West and a dog. She liked the dog. Margaret and the dog and "Bud" Tanner, the son of the house, became fast friends. "Bud" gave all the help needed in the important business of getting settled, and the Rev. Mr. West found his help unnecessary and the road to better acquaintance somewhat difficult. Margaret showed a decided preference for Bud's company. They inspected the school together after she had dismissed the minister. The next day Bud escorted Margaret to Sunday school—there was no other service—and on the way back the Boy met them and the three met the Rev. Mr. West. The Boy rode away and came back just at sunset. He stayed but a few moments, but long enough to learn that Margaret believed that he could make good and was praying for him.

CHAPTER XIII

MONDAY morning found Margaret at the schoolhouse nerved for her new task.

One by one the scholars trooped in, shyly or half defiantly, hung their hats on the hooks, put their dinner pails on the shelf, looked furtively at her and sank into their accustomed seats; that is, the seats they had occupied during the last term of school. The big boys remained outside until Bud, acting under instructions from Margaret (after she had been carefully taught the ways of the school by Bud himself), rang the big bell. Even then they entered reluctantly and as if it were a great condescension that they came at all, "Jed" and "Delicate" coming in last, with scarcely a casual glance toward the teacher's desk, as if she were a mere fraction in the scheme of the school. She did not need to be told which was Timothy and which was Jed. Bud's description had been perfect. Her heart, by the way, instantly went out to Timothy. Jed was another proposition. He had thick, overbearing eyebrows, and a mouth that loved to make trouble and laugh over it. He was going to be hard to conquer. She wasn't sure the conquering would be interesting either.

Margaret stood by the desk watching them all with a pleasant smile. She did not frown at the unnecessary shuffling of feet nor the loud remarks of the boys as they settled into their seats. She just stood and watched them interestedly as though her time had not yet come.

Jed and Timothy were carrying on a rumbling conversation. Even after they took their seats they kept it up. It was no part of their plan to let the teacher suppose they saw her or minded her in the least. They were the dominating influences in that school and they wanted her to know it, right at the start; then a lot of trouble would be saved. If they didn't like her and couldn't manage her, they didn't intend she should stay, and she might as well understand that at once.

Margaret understood it fully. Yet she stood quietly and watched them with a look of deep interest on her face and a light almost of mischief in her eyes, while Bud grew redder and redder over the way his two idols were treating the new teacher. One by one the school became aware of the twinkle in the teacher's eyes and grew silent to watch, and one by one they began to smile over the coming scene when Jed and Timothy should discover it, and worst of all find out that it was actually directed against them. They would expect severity, or fear, or a desire to placate; but a twinkle! It was ore than the school could decide what uld happen under such circumstances. No one in that room would ever da to laugh at either of those two boys. But the teacher was almost laughing ow, and the twinkle had taken the r of the room into the secret, whil she waited amusedly until the two s uld finish the conversation.

The room grew suddenly de hly still except for the whispered g wls of Jed and Timothy, and still the s nce deepened, until the two young nts themselves perceived that it was me to look up and take account of st .

THE perspiration by this tim was rolling down the back of d's neck. He was about the only one the room who was not in a broad gri and he was wretched. What a fearfu his-take the new teacher was making ght at the start! She was antagonizi the two boys who held the whole sch l in their hands. There was no telling hat they wouldn't do to her now. A he would have to stand up for her. Yes, no matter what they did, he would and up for her! Even though he lo his best friends he must be loyal t her, but the strain was terrible. He d not dare to look at them, but fasten his eyes upon Margaret. as if keeping em glued there was his only hope. hen suddenly he saw her face break in one of the sweetest, merriest smiles h ver witnessed, with not one single h of reproach or offended dignity in i just a smile of comradeship, understa ng, and pleasure in the meeting; and was directed to the two seats where Je and Timothy sat.

With wonder he turned towa the two big boys, and saw to his a azement an answering smile upon heir faces; reluctant, it is true, half sh ish at first, but a smile, with lifte eyebrows of astonishment and real oyment of the joke.

A little ripple of approval went und in half-breathed syllables, but argaret gave no time for any restle ess to start. She spoke at once, ju in her pleasant partnership tone ich she had used to Bud when she ked him to help her build her boo ase. So she spoke now to that schoo and each one felt she was speaking j to him especially, and felt a leapi response in his soul. Here at leas was something new and interesting, new kind of teacher. They kept sile to listen.

"Oh, I'm not going to make a s ech now," she said, and her voice so ded glad to them all. "I'll wait till we now one another before I do that. just want to say 'how do you do?' t you, and tell you how glad I am to b ere. I hope we shall like each other imm sely and have a great many good mes together. But we've got to g acquainted first, of course, and p aps we'd better give most of the ti to that to-day. First, suppose w sing something. What shall it be? W t do you sing?"

Little Susie Johnson, by virt of having seen the teacher at S day school, made bold to raise her and and suggest, "Thtar Thpangle B ner, pleath!" And so they tried it but when Margaret found that only few seemed to know the words she aid: "Wait!" Lifting her arm with a etty imperative gesture, and taking a p e of chalk from the box on her des she went to the new blackboard hat stretched its shining black length a und the room.

The school was breathless wa ing the graceful movement of the bea iful hand and arm over the smoot surface, leaving behind it the clear p fect script. Such wonderful writing hey had never seen; such perfect, asy curves and twirls. Every eye i the room was fastened on her, every l ath was held as they watched and s lled out the words one by one.

"Whew!" said Bud softly und his breath, nor knew that he had sp ken, but no one else moved.

"Now," she said, "let us sing, and wh they started off again, Margaret's str g, clear soprano leading, every voi in the room growled out the words and tried to get in step with the tun

TEY had gone thus through two erses when Jed seemed to think it s about time to start something. Th gs were going altogether too sm thly for an untried teacher, if she wa handsome and unabashed. If they we on like this, the scholars would los ll respect for him. So, being quite abl to sing a clear tenor, he nevertheless puckered his lips impertinently, dre his brows in an ominous frown, and began to whistle a somewhat err ic accompaniment to the song. He wa hed the teacher closely, expecting to e the color flame in her cheeks, the nger flash in her eyes; he had tried thi trick on other teachers and it alwa worked. He gave the wink to Ti thy, who also left off his glorious ba and began to whistle.

It instead of the anger and annoyanc they expected, Margaret turned app eciative eyes toward the two back sea, nodding her head a trifle and sm ng with her eyes as she sang; and wh the verse was done she held up her and for silence and said:

'Vhy, boys! that's beautiful! Let's try hat verse once more, and you two wh le the accompaniment a little str ger in the chorus; or how would it do you just came in on the chorus? I bel ve that would be more effective. Le try the first verse that way. You bo sing during the verse and then wh le the chorus just as you did now. W eally need your voices in the verse pa they are so strong and splendid. Le try it now." And she started off aga, the two big astonished fellows me ly doing as they were told, and rea the effect was beautiful. What wa their astonishment when the whole so was finished to have her say, "Nw everybody whistle the chorus sol," and then pucker up her own lip to join in! That completely finish the whistling stunt. Jed realized th it would never work again, not wh she was here, for she had turned th joke into beauty and made them all njoy it. It hadn't annoyed her in th east.

mehow by that time they were all re y for anything she had to suggest, an they watched again breathlessly as e wrote another song on the blackbo d, taking the other side of the room fo , and this time a hymn: "I Need Th Every Hour."

hen they began to sing it, howev, Margaret found the tune went sl ly, uncertainly.

h, how we need a piano!" she excl ied. "I wonder if we can't get up an ntertainment and raise money to bu one. How many will help?"

very hand in the place went up, Je s and Timothy's last and only a lit way, but she noted with triumph th they went up.

All right, we'll do it! Now let's si that verse correctly," and she bega to sing again, while they all joined ar ously in, really trying to do their b .

he instant the last verse died away, M garet's voice took their attention.

Two years ago in Boston two young m , who belonged to a little group of C istian workers who were going ar nd from place to place holding m tings, sat talking together in their ro n in the hotel one evening."

HERE was instant quiet, a kind of a breathless quiet. This was not lil the beginning of any lesson any ot r teacher had ever given them. E ry eye was fixed on her.

They had been talking over the work o ne day, and finally one of them sugg ed that they choose a Bible verse f the whole year."

here was a movement of impatience fr one back seat, as if Jed had scented an ncipient sermon, but the teacher's vo e went steadily on:

They talked it over and at last th settled on II Timothy 2 : 15. T y made up their minds to use it on e y possible occasion. It was time t go to bed, so the man whose room w next got up and instead of saying g d night, he said: 'Well, II Timothy 2 : 15,' and went to his room. Pretty soon when he put out his light he knocked on the wall and shouted, 'II Timothy 2 : 15,' and the other man responded heartily, 'All right. II Timothy 2 : 15!' The next morning when they wrote their letters each of them wrote 'II Timothy 2 : 15' on the left lower corner of the outside of the envelope, and sent out a great handful of letters to all parts of the world. Those letters passed through the Boston post office and some of the clerks who sorted them saw that queer legend written down in the lower left-hand corner of the envelope and they wondered at it, and one or two wrote it down to look it up afterward. The letters reached other cities and were put into the hands of mail carriers, to distribute, and they saw the queer little sentence 'II Timothy 2 : 15,' and they wondered, and some of them looked it up."

By this time the entire attention of the school was upon the story, for they perceived that it was a story.

"The men left Boston, and went across the ocean to hold meetings in other cities, and one day at a little railway station in Europe a group of people were gathered waiting for a train, and those two men were among them. Pretty soon the train came, and one of the men got on the back end of the last car, while the other stayed on the platform, and as the train moved off the man on the last car took off his hat and said in a good loud clear tone: 'Well, take care of yourself, II Timothy 2 : 15,' and the other one smiled and waved his hat and answered, 'Yes, II Timothy 2 : 15.' The man on the train, which was moving fast now, shouted back, 'II Timothy 2 : 15,' and the man on the platform responded still louder, waving his hat: 'II Timothy 2 : 15,' and back and forth the queer sentence was flung until the train was too far away for them to hear one another's voices. In the meantime all the people on the platform had been standing there listening and wondering what in the world such a strange salutation could mean. Some of them recognized what it was, but many did not know, and yet the sentence was said over so many times that they could not help remembering it; and some went away to recall it and ask their friends what it meant. A young man from America was on that platform and heard it, and he knew it stood for a passage in the Bible, and his curiosity was so great that he went back to his boarding-house and hunted up the Bible his mother had packed in his trunk when he came away from home, and he hunted through the Bible until he found the place, 'II Timothy 2 : 15,' and read it; and it made him think about his life, and decide that he wasn't doing as he ought to do. I can't tell you all the story about that queer Bible verse, how it went here and there and what a great work it did in people's hearts; but one day those Christian workers went to Australia to hold some meetings, and one night when the great auditorium was crowded full a man who was leading the meeting got up and told the story of this verse, how it had been chosen, and how it had gone over the world in strange ways, even told about the morning at the little railway station when the two men said good-by. Just as he got to that place in his story a man in the audience stood up and said: 'Brother, just let me say a word, please. I never knew anything about all this before, but I was at that railway station that morning and I heard those two men shout that strange good-by, and I went home and read that verse, and it's made a great difference in my life.'

"There was a great deal more to the story, how some Chicago policemen got to be good men through reading that verse, and how the story of the Australia meetings was printed in an Australian paper and sent to a lady in America who sent it to a friend in England to read about the meetings. And this friend in England had a son in the army in India to whom she was sending a package, and she wrapped it around something in that package, and the young man read all about it and it helped to change his life. Well,

Continued on page 236

SIX MILES FOR ONE CENT

THE SMITH MOTOR WHEEL charges your bicycle with life. More miles—more ease—more exhilaration are yours when you ride the Motor Wheel Way.

Smith Motor Wheel
DETACHABLE

And this new, motor-given power is all vested at your instant command in the handy little lever—right "under-your-thumb."

You already know the Bicyle Way. Take away pedal exertion—the fatigue of hill-climbing—add the magic thrill of power-driving—safe, clean, without vibration—and you have the new Motor Wheel Way.

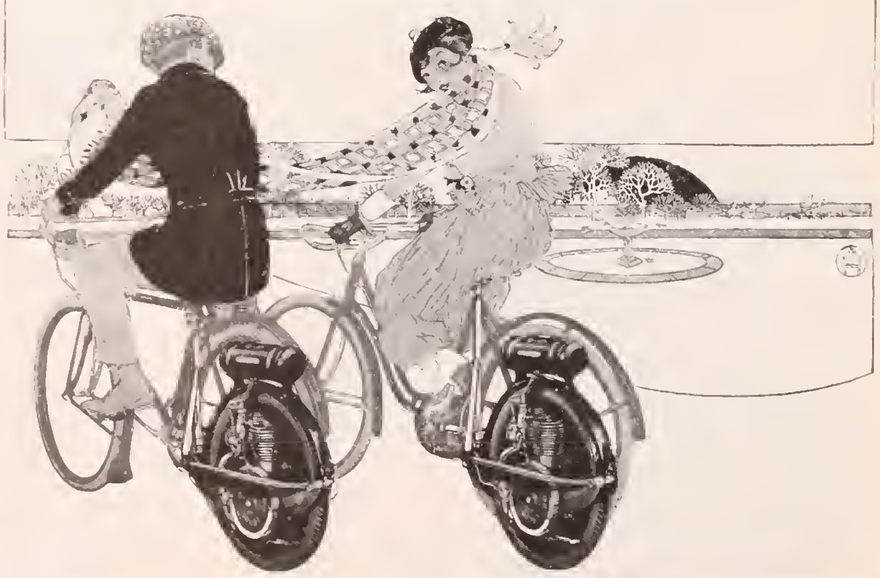
The SMITH MOTOR WHEEL attaches in five minutes. Two easy turns of the pedals start the power-pulse, and away you glide in ease and comfort. Your magic "mount" obeys. No grease or dirt can reach you.

And economy! Six miles for one cent is the low cost. And, withal, you may saunter along at four miles, or tilt the lever until the roadside panorama speeds by at twenty miles an hour.

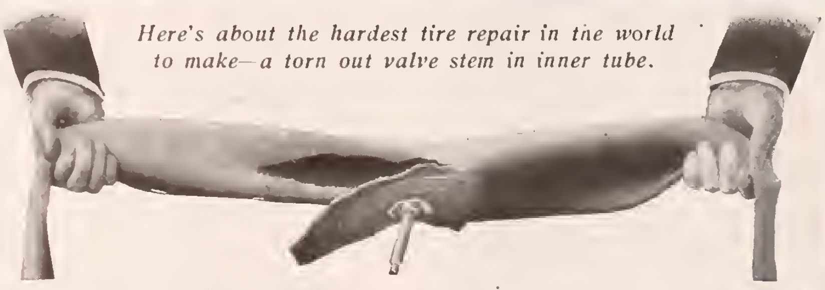
The Motor Wheel Way will be YOUR way after the first ride. The Smith Motor Wheel wins sales on performance. See your dealer or write for our book, "Motorwheeling."

Dealers: A few exclusive territories are still open. Write for full particulars.

MOTOR WHEEL DIVISION
A. O. SMITH COMPANY, Milwaukee, Wis.
World's Largest Manufacturers of Automobile Parts



Here's about the hardest tire repair in the world to make—a torn out valve stem in inner tube.



How Would YOU Repair It?

You couldn't do it with cold patches or vulcanizer—but any one who can drive a car could easily do it with the genuine

TIRE-DOH

TIRE-DOH is the simple, economical handy repair outfit that 500,000 car owners by their continued use during the last six years have endorsed as the standard tire repair outfit for punctures and blowouts.

Requires no heat or tools and can be used anywhere—any time—always successfully.

Makes Permanent Repairs

TIRE-DOH permanently repairs the smallest punctures or the inner tube tears as long as your arm. Two cents' worth of TIRE-DOH is enough for average punctures. Difficult repairs are easy with TIRE-DOH. TIRE-DOH used to fill cuts and holes in casings before they develop into sand blisters and blowouts will add hundreds of miles to the life of any tire. Buy a TIRE-DOH outfit today and carry it always in your tool kit. 10,000 dealers sell TIRE-DOH. If yours doesn't, we'll send it on receipt of price.

Complete Outfits Price 50c and $1.00

TIRE-DOH repairs any article of rubber—gloves—boots—hot water bags, etc.

Manufactured solely by
ATLAS AUTO SUPPLY CO., 690 W. Austin Ave., CHICAGO

This is a photograph of the above torn out valve stem repaired in 28 minutes with TIRE-DOH at a cost of 13c.

"Yes, Grandma Likes

BEST cooks the country over like to bake with Detroit Vapor Stoves. They have found that these wonderful stoves give cooking results equal to city gas and at the same time burn oil and gasoline with a hot steady flame directly under the cooking utensils.

You don't have to "fuss" with a Detroit Vapor Stove Simply light the burners and put the cooking on at once—ju a city gas stove. No waiting fo bu to generate. No asbestos rings r of any kind to burn out or repla e.
troit Vapor Stoves are built to last ry

They come to you complete an ca put in any part of your kitc en.
pressure tanks, no piping neede patented giant burners are or

DETROIT VAPOR STOVES
"Work Like Gas"

BURN OIL AND GASOLINE

ake With This Stove" ar sparing in fuel consumption and utey safe.

nostrate the absolute safety of Detroit
Stves, we have even kindled a bonfire a ghted stove. The fuel in the pipes nsuned but no damage was done to the
A tove that will stand this test is a safe r eher you or your little girl to use.

swtering over a hot cook stove this sumy ung a clean, safe, reliable Detroit Vapor
Stove. You'll save time and money too. The entire cost of running is less than one cent an hour per burner. Cheaper than coal or wood. You can use this stove the year round.

Some dealer near you sells Detroit Vapor Stoves. See him today. Also fill out and mail coupon for our free stove book W7 showing the latest styles and sizes, selling from $10.00 up.

Vpor Stove Company, Detroit, Mich.

(17)

Cut out and mail this coupon today and it will bring you our free stove book W7.

Name ____________________

Address ____________________

____

The Detroit Vapor Stove Company, Detroit, Michigan

"Goody! Goody!"

(It's Fine to Have a FLORENCE)

FLORENCE Automatic Oil Cook Stoves make good "goodies" quickly. They bring kitchen comfort. They are easy to use, clean, safe, economical and reliable. The new models are unusually handsome and substantial.

The Florence is ready when you want to cook to give as much heat as you want, right where you want it—in the cooking, not out in the room. Heat is always under perfect control. Hot summer kitchens are no more. Costs less than a cent an hour per burner.

You can keep one—or four—burners at an intensely hot flame, or merely simmering. To regulate the heat you turn the lever according to the dial.

There are no wicks to trim nor valves to leak. The oil supply is automatically constant. A glass bull's-eye always shows you how much oil is in the tank. Upper reservoir holds a full gallon. We believe the Florence principle the best yet invented for oil stoves.

Florence Glass Door Ovens are perfect bakers, insulated with air space and asbestos, which retains the heat for the cooking. Specially constructed heat distributor keeps baking from burning on the bottom. Rust-resisting white lining with curved corners gives even heat distribution. No heat wasted. Grates firm and run from front to back. No slopping. No spilling. Glass (in door) fits snug, but is easily removed for cleaning when necessary. You can see the cooking. Florence Water Heaters give plenty of hot water—any time. All Florence stoves and ovens are fully guaranteed. Sold by progressive dealers

Send for "Household Helper"—Free

A very interesting book of unusual recipes and household suggestions.

FLORENCE
Oil Cook Stoves

Wickless
Valveless

CENTRAL OIL & GAS STOVE CO.
114 School Street
Gardner, Massachusetts

Made and sold in Canada by McClary Manufacturing Co., London, Ont.

Blue Flame
Automatic

A Voice in the Wilderness

Continued from page 233

I thought of that story this morning when I was trying to decide what to read for our opening chapter, and it occurred to me that perhaps you would be interested to take that verse for our school verse this term, and so if you would like it I will put it on the blackboard. Would you like it, I wonder?"

SHE paused, wistfully, as if she expected an answer, and there was a low, almost inaudible, growl of assent; a keen listener might almost have said it had an impatient quality in it, as if they were in a hurry to find out what the verse was that had made such a stir in the world.

"Very well," said Margaret, turning to the board; "then I'll put it where we all can see it, and while I write it will you please say it over where it is, so that you all will remember it and hunt it up for yourselves in your Bibles at home."

There was a sort of snicker at that, for there were probably not half a dozen Bibles, if there were so many, represented in that school; but they took her hint, as she wrote, and chanted "II Timothy 2 : 15, II Timothy 2 : 15," and then spelled out after her rapid crayon: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

They read it together at her bidding, with a wondering half-serious look in their faces, and then she said: "Now, shall we pray?"

The former teacher had not opened her school with prayer. It had never been even suggested in that school. It might have been a dangerous experiment if Margaret had attempted it sooner in her program. As it was, there was a shuffling of feet in the back seats at her first word, but the room grew quiet again, perhaps out of curiosity to hear a woman's voice in prayer:

"Our heavenly Father, we want to ask thee to bless us in our work together, and to help us to be such workmen that we shall not need to be ashamed to show our work to thee at the close of the day. For Christ's sake we ask it. Amen."

They did not have time to resent that prayer before she had them interested in something else. In fact, she had planned her whole first day out so that there should not be a minute for misbehavior. She had argued that if she could just get time to become acquainted with them she might prevent a lot of trouble before it ever started. Her first business was to win her scholars. After that she could teach them easily if they were once willing to learn.

She had a set of mental arithmetic problems ready which she propounded to them next; some of them difficult and some easy enough for the youngest child who would think. She timed their answers and wrote on the board the names of those who raised their hands first and had correct answers. The questions were put in a fascinating way, many of them having curious little catches in them for the scholars who were not on the alert, and Timothy presently discovered this and set himself to get every one, coming off victorious at the end. Even Jed roused himself and was interested, and some of the girls quite distinguished themselves.

When a half hour of this was over she put the word "transfiguration" on the blackboard and set them to playing a regular game out of it. If some of the school board had come in just then they might have lifted up hands of horror at the idea of the new teacher setting the whole school to playing a game. But they certainly would have been delightfully surprised to see a quiet and orderly room with bent heads and knit brows, all intent upon papers and pencils. Never before in the annals of that school had the first day held a full period of quiet or orderliness. It was expected to be a day of battle; a day of trying out the soul of the teacher and proving whether he or she were worthy to cope with the active minds and bodies of the young bullies of Ashland.

But the expected battle had een forgotten. Every mind was busy ith the matter in hand.

MARGARET had given them ee minutes to write as many ds of three letters or more, beginning th T, and using only the letters in the rd she had put on the board, as they ld think of. When time was called ere was a breathless rush to write a ast word, and then each scholar ha to tell how many words he had, and ach was called upon to read his list. me had only two or three, some had t or eleven. They were allowed to rk their words, counting one for ch person present who did not have at word and doubling if it were two lables, and so on. Excitement ran gh when it was discovered that som ad actually made a count of thirt or forty, and when they started w ng words beginning with R every hea as bent intently from the minute tim as started.

Never had three minutes seem so short to those unused brains, an ed yelled out, "Aw! I only got th !" when time was called next.

It was recess time when they fi lly finished every letter in that rd, and adding all up, found that Tim hy had won the game. Was that sc ol? Why, a barbecue couldn't be n ed beside it for fun! They rushed o to the school yard with a shout, an he boys played leapfrog loudly for he first few minutes. Margaret, leanin er tired head in her hands, elbows o he window seat, closing her eyes nd gathering strength for the after-r ess session, heard one boy say: " al, how d'ye like 'er?" And the a er came: "Fine! I didn't think 'd be that kind of a guy! I thought 'd be some stiff old Ike! Ain't she a p h, though?" She lifted up her head nd laughed triumphantly to herself, er eyes alight, herself new strength ed for the fray. She wasn't wholly fa ng, then.

After recess there was a spe g-match, choosing sides, of course. Because this is only the first day, an ve must get acquainted before we ca do real work, you know," she expla d.

The spelling-match proved an xciting affair also, with new fea es that Ashland had never seen be re. Here the girls began to shine into p ninence, but there were very few od spellers, and they were presently educed to two girls, Rosa Rogers he beauty of the school, and Am da Bounds, a stolid, homely girl with ep eyes and a broad brow.

"I'm going to give this as a pri to the one who stands up the long ," said Margaret with sudden inspir on as she saw the boys in their seats eting restless; and she unpinned a y blue silk bow that fastened her v te collar.

The girls all said "Oh-h-h!" and nmediately every one in the m straightened up. The next few mi es those two girls spelled for dear e, each with her eye fixed upon the y blue bow in the teacher's white ha ls. To own that bow, that wonde l, strange bow of heavenly blue, wit he graceful twist to the tie! What elight! The girl who won that woul e the admired of all the school. I n the boys sat up and took notice, ch secretly thinking that Rosa the be ty would get it, of course.

But she didn't; she slipped up on e word "receive" after all, putting e "i" before the "e," and her stolid npanion, catching her breath aweso y, slowly spelled it right and received e blue prize, pinned gracefully at e throat of her old brown gingham y the teacher's own soft white fin s, while the school looked on admiri ly and the blood rolled hotly up the k of her neck and spread over her e and forehead. Rosa the beauty t crestfallen to her seat.

It was at noon, while they ate t ir lunch, that Margaret tried to t acquainted with the girls, calling st of them by name, to their great rprise, and hinting of delightful p ibilities in the winter's work. Then e slipped out among the boys and wate d the sports, laughing and applauding wh some one made a particularly fine play, as if she thoroughly understo and appreciated.

S managed to stand near Jed and Ti thy just before Bud rang the bell.

"'ve heard you are great sportsme" she said to them confidingly, "a I've been wondering if you'll tea me some things I want to learn. I w t to know how to ride and shoot. Do ou suppose I could learn?"

"ure!" they chorused eagerly, their em rrassment forgotten. "Sure, you cou learn fine! Sure, we'll learn you!"

d then the bell rang, and they all we in.

e afternoon was a rather informal arr gement of classes and schedule for the next day, Margaret giving out slips of paper with questions for each to answer, that she might find out just where to place them; and while they wrote she went from one to another, getting acquainted, advising and suggesting about what they wanted to study. It was all so new and wonderful to them! They had not been used to caring what they were to study. Now it almost seemed interesting.

But when the day was done, the schoolhouse locked, and Bud and Margaret started for home, she realized that she was weary. Yet it was a weariness of success and not of failure, and she felt happy in looking forward to the morrow.

To be continued

he Correspondence of Prof. David Smith, D.D.

I AS reading the other night John 15, hich says, "I am the true vine, and my Fa r is the husbandman. Every branch in that beareth not fruit, he taketh away." So years ago I knew a man who had two son both of them earnest workers in the Ma r's service, one of them an energetic Su y school and adult teacher. The other ha charge of a mission in a poor neighborho They were both "taken away," leaving the ther disconsolate. He had never done an ing in the Master's service, but was like an d fig-tree, cumbering the ground. Can yo explain the reason why the workers are ta away and the sinners left?—M. G.

THE question is twofold: (1) Why should the old father be left? He seems a fruitless branch, and ac rding to our Lord's teaching here he should have been pruned off for th health of the vine. But there is nother parable of our Lord which is n essential commentary on his te hing here. It is his parable of the B en Fig-tree (Luke 13:6-9), and it re nds us of a gracious truth which ha no place in the parable of the True Vi—the truth of the long-suffering of G. There is indeed no room for unfr ful branches in the Lord's vineya; they not only fill places which ot rs might profitably occupy, but w ken the vine, consuming the sap w h should go to the nourishment of th good branches. But the Husbandm is always averse from severity, and he ill not hastily cut off a branch. He te ls it, and affords it ever fresh opportu ty, in the hope that it may yet bear fr t; and only when every remedy ha failed does he abandon it. The p ning-knife is his last resort. It is n slackness when God leaves sinners to c ber the ground; it is long-suffering m cy, allowing yet further opportunity and addressing yet another and another appeal. (2) The other side of the question is why those useful sons were "taken away." And here you really create the difficulty by overlooking the double sense of the phrase. When our Lord speaks of an unfruitful branch being "taken away," it is a gardener's term, and the idea is entirely different when the phrase is used of removal by death. When an unfruitful branch is "taken away," it is in judgment. But when a good man is "taken away," it is for quite another reason. It is for a twofold reason: (1) Because he is useful, and God has need of him for a higher service; and (2) because trouble is imminent, and God would mercifully deliver him—"the righteous is taken away from the evil to come" (Isa. 57:1). In the one case the "taking away" is a judgment; in the other it is promotion and deliverance. And thus a case like that which you describe is no anomaly. It displays at once God's long-suffering mercy to sinners and his loving-kindness to his own. It would revolutionize our thoughts of life and death if we realized that this world is only one of the least and lowest chambers in the universal Father's house and its employments only a preparatory discipline. We are here only apprentices, "serving our time," and when we are fit, he will summon us to an upper room and set us to a nobler work. It is no marvel when promotion comes to a good workman, and it is a mercy to the slacker when he is left. It is a chance for him to retrieve his past, and he should recognize the call to fill the place of the good workman who is gone, that the world may be none the poorer.

DAVID SMITH.

The College, Londonderry.

Little Stories from Mission Fields

R CAMPBELL of Chiengmai Mission, Siam, tells the following incident of pers ring personal faith: "S—, a prominent m in his community, made a public professi of faith in Christ. His wife strongly opp ed the step, and declared she would live w him no longer. S. was quite steadfast, a determined to persevere until every memb of his household should become a Christian. A the end of three weeks he was able to pers le a grandchild to accompany him to c rch. Within a few months his wife and t nty-one of his children and grandchildren h taken their stand on the Lord's side. He m le a feast for 500 of his neighbors and do ed fifteen portions of Scripture, and has cont ed to do all in his power to lead others to a nowledge of the Gospel."

AST spring the governor general of the Philippines sent a Yale College man, who i t the head of the forestry department in nila, to investigate conditions in China, h a view to cooperating in a school of for y. He was the guest of the American Uni sity, and from his report we quote: "To writer the most astonishing thing in China s the amount of land lying idle on hill and untain. The population is overcrowded d desperately poor, yet in the very vicinity, ng perhaps from the outskirts of the con ted villages, rise fertile and unused hills. it trees growing wild prove that they could ily be reforested. Every consideration es that these waste lands be put to the uses which they are adapted. An admirable ginning has been made on Purple Moun n. It has given employment to thousands, d many families are now making a comfort le living on land which would otherwise have nained unproductive. It has resulted in a partment of agriculture, which was opened 1914, and, probably most important of all, is serving as an inspiration for the inauguration of other, and possibly larger, projects elsewhere throughout China."

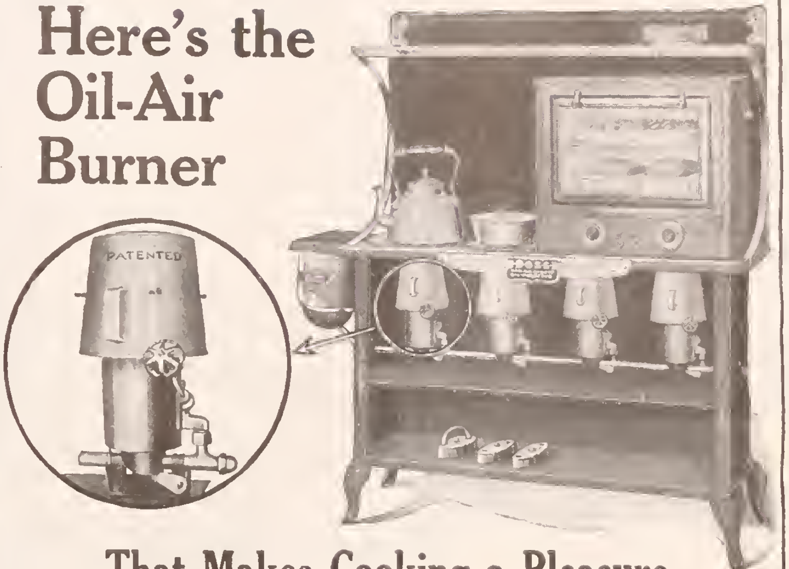
AN evangelistic tabernacle (writes a missionary in Korea) was built by Korean and Japanese missionaries and funds from home. It was the place of union evangelistic work during the fifty days of the government's industrial exhibition, held in Seoul last fall. The exhibition reports more than a million admissions. Over one hundred thousand people attended the tabernacle meetings, and 53,000 of them paid to see the moving pictures of Bible stories shown twice a day in the central room. Cards expressing a desire to become a Christian were signed by 11,316 and 265 Japanese, and all over Korea the local church people are now following them up diligently.

PROFESSOR R. A. BROWN, Merida, Yucatan, Mexico, writes: "Last week the great aristocratic church of Merida was swept clean of its last idol and turned over to the Students' League of Yucatan for its assembly room. A certain Mexican, whose hands were still covered with the dust of the idols he had been helping to smash, said to a friend of mine: 'We saved a few images which we are going to take to the public schools and, standing them up before the children, say, "There you see what a santo looks like, and now you see how he can be destroyed." Then with a hammer the image will be pounded to pieces before the eyes of the children.'"

◆

A GREAT AID IN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK

Received your book "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered." I wish to express my thanks. I wish every Sunday school teacher could have a copy of it. J. T. VINEYARD.
Smartsville, Calif.



Here's the Oil-Air Burner

That Makes Cooking a Pleasure

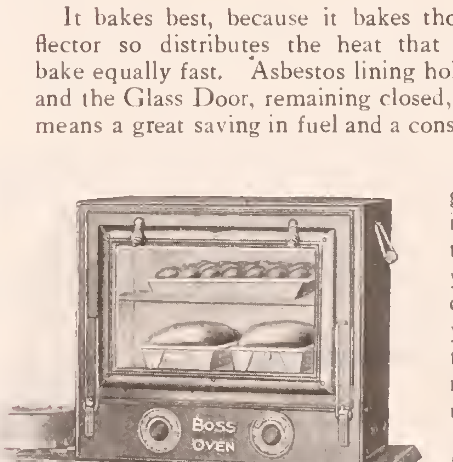
IF you're tired of that hot kitchen, slow cooking, lugging of fuel and ashes, just try a Boss Oil-Air Stove with its Patented Oil-Air Burner. The Boss Oil-Air Stove gives concentrated heat. You can cook, bake or broil anything or heat irons without heating up your kitchen.

And economical! That Patented Oil-Air Burner burns nearly 1000 times as much air as oil. It's a close-up burner, the kind that brings all of the hot blue flame in direct contact with the pot or pan. The oil burner that will make irons sizzling hot. This is a burner of special design throughout and has many advantages over the ordinary burner. The Boss Oil-Air Stove is of substantial construction and handsome appearance. It's so complete and simple that even a child can operate it easily.

ALWAYS BOSS AHEAD
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
STOVES and OVENS

And here's the Boss Glass-Door Oven, neat and efficient—the best oven to use on any oil, gas or gasoline stove. You don't have to burn your hands or chill your pastry by opening a hot, heavy door—just continue your other work and watch the Boss bake you the finest food you have ever eaten.

It bakes best, because it bakes thoroughly. Patented Deflector so distributes the heat that top and bottom shelves bake equally fast. Asbestos lining holds the heat in the Oven and the Glass Door, remaining closed, prevents chilling. This means a great saving in fuel and a consequent saving to yourself.



The Glass Door is guaranteed against steaming up or breaking from the heat. Just to convince yourself that true cooking comfort can be had in your kitchen, write us today for booklets. Your nearest dealer's name sent upon request.

THE HUENEFELD CO.
21 Spring Ave.
Cincinnati, O.

"Watch it bake!"

"There's the cheer of a sunny morning in these walls painted with

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS

Flat-Tone

Do not cover up your walls—paint them with Flat-Tone. The colors are beautiful; the effect is restful. Sunshine merely emphasizes their richness and for indirect lighting they are ideal. Dust and germs cannot hide behind Flat-Tone and soiled spots can be wiped away with a damp cloth. Flat-Tone in just the shade you wish can be bought of the Sherwin-Williams dealer in your town. We will gladly furnish decorative suggestions free. Write us.

TWO THINGS TO SEND FOR

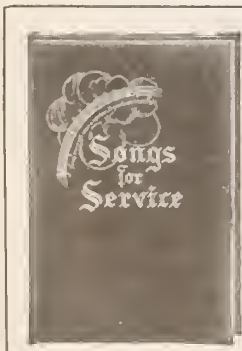
Send 10 cents for "Going to Market," the clever new game that teaches and entertains.

Ask for new, free, helpful booklet, "The ABC of Home Painting."

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS
PAINTS & VARNISHES

COVER THE EARTH

Address all inquiries to 719 Canal Road, N. W., Cleveland, O.
Showrooms—New York, 116 W. 32d St.; Chicago, People's Gas Bldg.; San Francisco, 523 Market St. Sales Offices and Warehouses in principal cities. Best dealers everywhere



A Great Song Book

Sparkling, snappy, invigorating, energizing, appealing, effective and useful, this latest and greatest of Rodeheaver productions has set a new high-water mark in gospel songbook making. Hundreds of churches, Sunday schools and other religious societies are already using it and are expressing unbounded approval and delight. The first to introduce it into your church community will have exercised "winning strategy."

Songs for Service

has 288 pages, is printed from new plates on better-than-usual paper and is finely bound. Orchestrated for 15 instruments. Printed in both round and shaped notes. It is the book used exclusively in the "Billy" Sunday campaigns.
EXAMINE A COPY FREE—Simply state that you will either return it in good condition within 15 days or will remit the retail price. State binding desired.
PRICES—Cloth 35c, limp 25c, manila 20c per copy, postpaid.
Cloth $25, limp $18, manila $15 per 100, not prepaid.

THE RODEHEAVER CO.
1083 MONON BLDG., CHICAGO, 633 LIPPINCOTT BLDG., PHILADELPHIA

Save Money, Room and Fuel

Kalamazoo Pipeless One Register Furnace

SET in cellar—connect with big register set in floor of one of main rooms—heats the whole house with forced warm air—easy to set up—no pipes to fit except smoke pipe.

Free Trial—Cash or Easy Payments

Write at once for manufacturer's factory price. We pay freight and ship within 24 hours. If you prefer a pipe furnace we shall be glad to make up plans free and quote prices. Write today and ask for Furnace Catalog No. 927.
KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., Manufacturers, KALAMAZOO, MICH.
300,000 families using Kalamazoo Stoves, Ranges, Gas Stoves, Furnaces, White Enameled Metal Kitchen Kabinets and Tables.
4 catalogs—say which you want.

We Pay Freight

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"
Trade Mark Registered

Still Unsatisfied

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

IT was a man's prayer in a book that I had received for Christmas; a vital, living prayer from the heart of a man who knew life and the strivings and triumphs and disappointments of life. And I read it many times, for the swing and rhythm of the words seemed to hold a certain martial music; read it down to the last line that sang gloriously:

"God, keep me still unsatisfied!"

As I was reading, the little Questioning Lady came into the room and sat down with her sewing. We call her the little Questioning Lady because she is small, and not very subtle, and because she asks many rather unnecessary, infantile questions. Although she was not the best audience in the world I read the poem through, down to the last wonderful line, again. At the end her question rather disappointed me, though I had almost expected it.

"It, that poem, sounds rather discontented, doesn't it?" she asked.

•

SO many people in this world confuse the words dissatisfied and unsatisfied. They do sound alike, and they do express the same mental pictures; but they are really just as different at the heart of them as two flowers are different, or two people. And more folk in this world, I fear, are *dis*satisfied rather than *un*satisfied.

Once upon a time there were two artists. They worked together, as boys, in the same schools, under the same masters. And their work grew and developed along the same lines. They were much praised by their fellow students, and their teachers regarded them tolerantly and criticized them with more affection than bitterness. And then, finally, the two artists stopped studying under the same teachers, stopped going to school (but no real artist ever stops studying, really). And in their own bare but light little attic studios they began to paint. And each one thought that he was working on his masterpiece—for a masterpiece is nothing to youth.

They each painted a picture, and then critically, rather confidently, they stood back to judge their work.

One of them, standing up tall and young and happy, said: "This is just what I wanted to do—just what I wanted to express! I have shown the very thing that I wanted to show!"

But the other artist, sinking down in a chair, frowned at his picture and spoke aloud in the stillness of his little attic room. "This picture is nowhere near my ideal!" And he smudged the colors together on his canvas, and began to block out another picture that would be greater and more perfect than the first had been.

THE first artist settled down to his work satisfied, not only with the gifts that art had given to him, but with the gifts that he had given back to art. He painted picture after picture, until the erstwhile bare walls of his studio were a veritable sea of color; until the place was cluttered with his work. Sometimes he sold his paintings—often he sold them—but always he kept painting rapidly, more and more and more! And the market grew flooded with his work and the demand ceased. And one day he found the first little picture that he had painted hidden away in a closet. And as he looked at it he knew that his work was not nearly so good as it had been in his student days. And he realized all too late, for his hand was a bit shaky and his eyes could not detect delicate colors as readily as they had, that he had wasted his opportunity to be truly great. And he became dissatisfied.

The other artist, after he had destroyed his first picture, painted another. And then, after that, he painted another—slowly, carefully. But though he did not destroy all of his work as he did the first picture, he continued to be unsatisfied. And because he was unsatisfied, he worked harder, until his technique became more perfect, and his details became more accurate, a he had discovered more wonderful nes of color. And as he worked ov picture after picture, he still tried tc ach an ideal that grew greater day b lay. But, because he was hard to satis , his ideal was hard to realize. Still ooking up, still unsatisfied, he cl bed steadily on until his one-time n ters bowed to the greater skill, and tl critics forgot to criticize in their deligh t his art. And at the time when his iend was discovering the limitations his work—at the time that his frien was beginning to be dissatisfied, this tist laid down his brush with a sigh a felt that, perhaps, he would never be e to reach his ideal. But while he wa still unsatisfied, folk hailed him as a nius.

I KNOW a girl, a nice girl who orks in an office; a girl who does he ork conscientiously rather than brill tly; who is a plodder rather than a nat ally clever girl. She has worked f the same company for a number of ears with no advance in position or ary.

"It's queer," I said one day to girl who works in the same room wit her. "it's queer that Anne doesn't ev get ahead. I've seen folk advanced ight before her eyes who haven't been orking nearly as long as she. Why sn't she get further on?"

The girl looked at me quizz lly Then she laughed.

"At first," she told me, "I wo ered too. I often wondered. And l sed to pity Anne. But now I'm beg ing to understand the firm's attitud

"Just what is the firm's attit e?" I questioned.

"Why," the girl answered, hey look at it from Anne's own po of view. She never thinks that sh sn't well paid. She oftens tells us th she is satisfied with her position; mor han once I've heard her say; 'It's th nly work that I can do!' Often I've li ned as she said: 'I'm very well paid.'

"Well, the firm looks at it in thi ay. They reason out that if she ca do any other work—if she thinks th she doesn't deserve more money—th she doesn't. They say that she kno her own limitations. They say, he's worth no more to us than she is t herself.' And I'm almost afraid tha hey are right!"

"What is the matter with A e?" I questioned. "Why is she wo so little in her own estimation?"

The girl laughed again befo she answered.

"The main trouble with Anne she told me, "is this: Anne is too dly satisfied! You have to be always goi fter something you haven't got to get ahe "

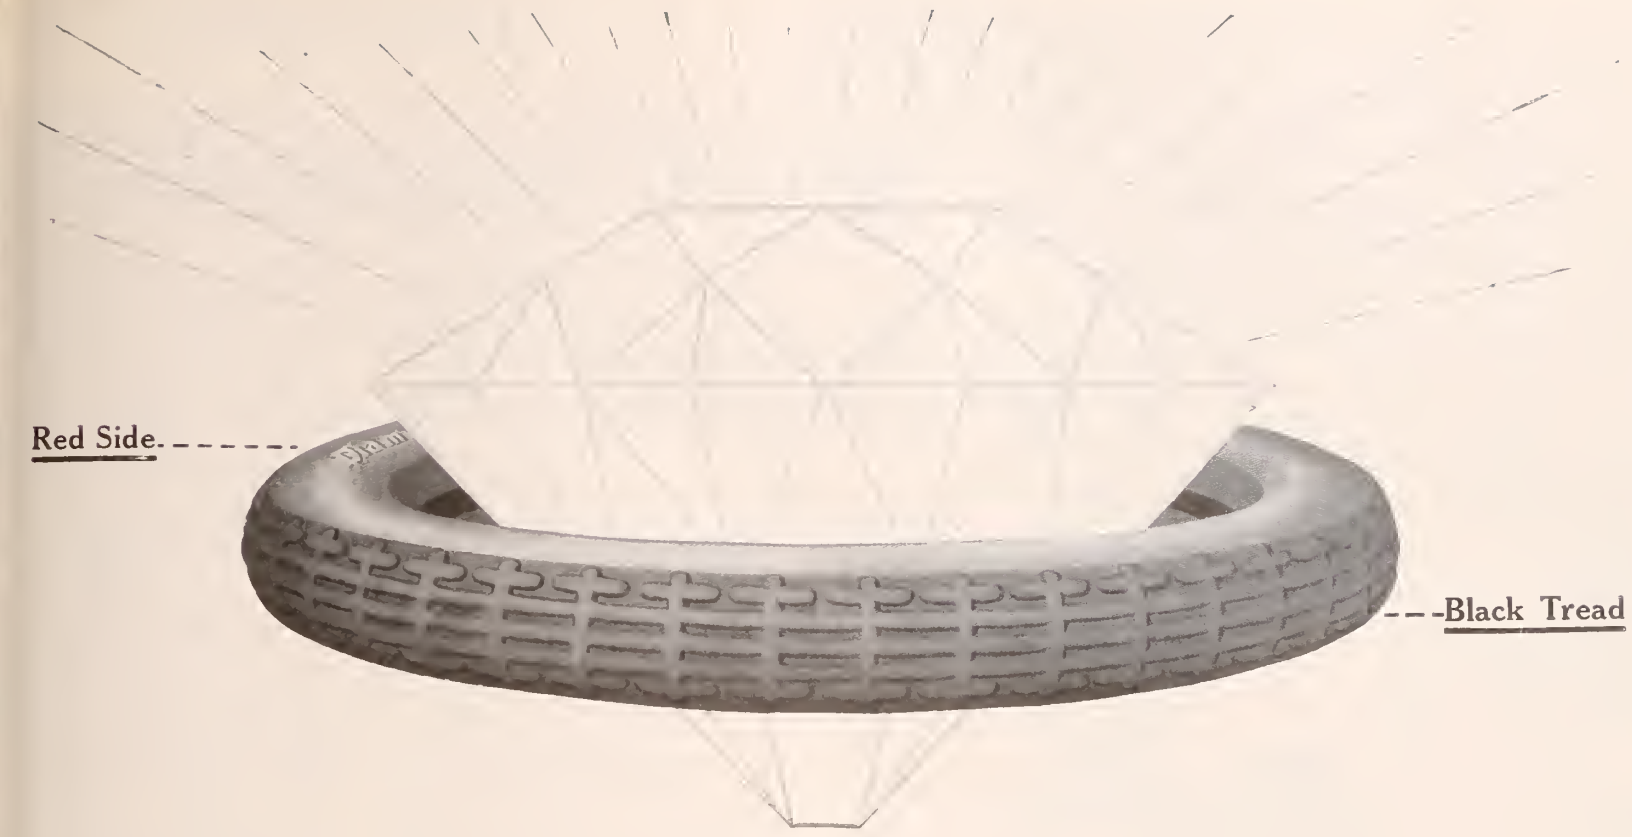
YOU have to be always going fter something you haven't got get ahead! That is the keynote o success. For though it's a lovely aceful feeling to be always satisfi , it isn't energizing, or stimulating. metimes it's deadly uninterestin and tiresome.

Oh, you people in school or lege or business; you career-make or home-makers, don't be satisfied vith the work that you are doing, ven though that work is good. Go u fter an ideal—always. Make your ork better than good! And then, wh you see the wonder of it, perhaps yo will echo the vital, living prayer of th nan who wrote,

"God, keep me still unsatisfie "

◆

GOLDEN WEDDING ANNIV RSARIES. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Nisv der, of Kinross, Iowa, celebrated their tieth marriage anniversary on January 24 914 While on a visit to Brooklyn, N. Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Blodgett of North Germantown, N. Y., celebrated their lden wedding anniversary at the home o heir eldest son. Mr. Blodgett was an o time river captain. He was married to lary Cooley of Kingston, N. Y., on January 866. Their five children, Mrs. Elmer R. sher, Mrs. Wellington Moore, Milton J., Cha s G., and Herbert L. Blodgett, and six gra children, tendered the couple a surprise pa y on the occasion of their anniversary.



Ride now on the new "Velvet-Rubber" Diamond Tires

SINEWY, springy, and strong as the muscle-padded foot of the Greyhound.

Clings to smooth and slippery pavements as the foot of a Fly clings to the ceiling when he ascends, on high-gear, for a better View of the Mountains.

This tough-textured, hard-wearing "VELVET" Rubber of 1916, stretches like a pure Rubber band over such small and sharp Obstacles on the road as might puncture the less elastic, and more brittle, texture of the usual Tire treads.

It thereby absorbs most of the small shocks, jars, and jolts, that not only tend to separate Treads from Fabric, in ordinary Tires, but that also cause an incessant minor Vibration beyond the capacity of Steel Springs to neutralize quickly enough.

Observe, now, that this wonderfully resilient "VELVET" Rubber, used in all Diamond Tires today, is NOT offered as a mere Whimsy of Style, or merely to give a superficial "difference" in appearance.

◆ ◆ ◆

IT is a new, and altogether different, Kind of Rubber, developed through much Research, from materials that give most Flexibility, and most Response-to-Power, in Tires, with a minimum of Friction for maximum Traction.

"VELVET" Rubber can be made by us in Black, Red, Grey, Brown, or Tan color, as the COLOR has nothing to do with the new Components.

This is here mentioned so you may have fair warning of the superficial Imitations that are sure to follow.

Diamond Automobile Tires, Diamond Inner Tubes, and Diamond Bicycle Tires are now made of this Springy, Clingy, Elastic, and Shock-absorbing "VELVET"-Rubber alloy,—the treads of Diamond Automobile Tires being of BLACK, and their sides of RED Rubber.

But, while this color-combination now distinguishes the appearance of Diamond Tires don't conclude that all Black-Treads, or all Red-Sided Tires are of Velvet Rubber.

Because,— any ordinary Rubber can be colored to imitate the APPEARANCE of Diamond Treads, without in any sense imitating the Texture, Composition or Action of the "Velvet-Rubber" in Diamond Tires.

◆ ◆ ◆

RIDE on "VELVET-RUBBER" Diamond Tires, even once, and you will find a new Satisfaction in motoring.

—So Springy, Clingy, Soundless, and Vibration-absorbing are they,—with a Mileage-increase that is mighty comforting to the pocketbook.

Look now for Black-Tread, Red-Side, DIAMOND TIRES,—and compare their moderate "Fair-List" price with what you must pay for ordinary Tires as made by other responsible Makers.

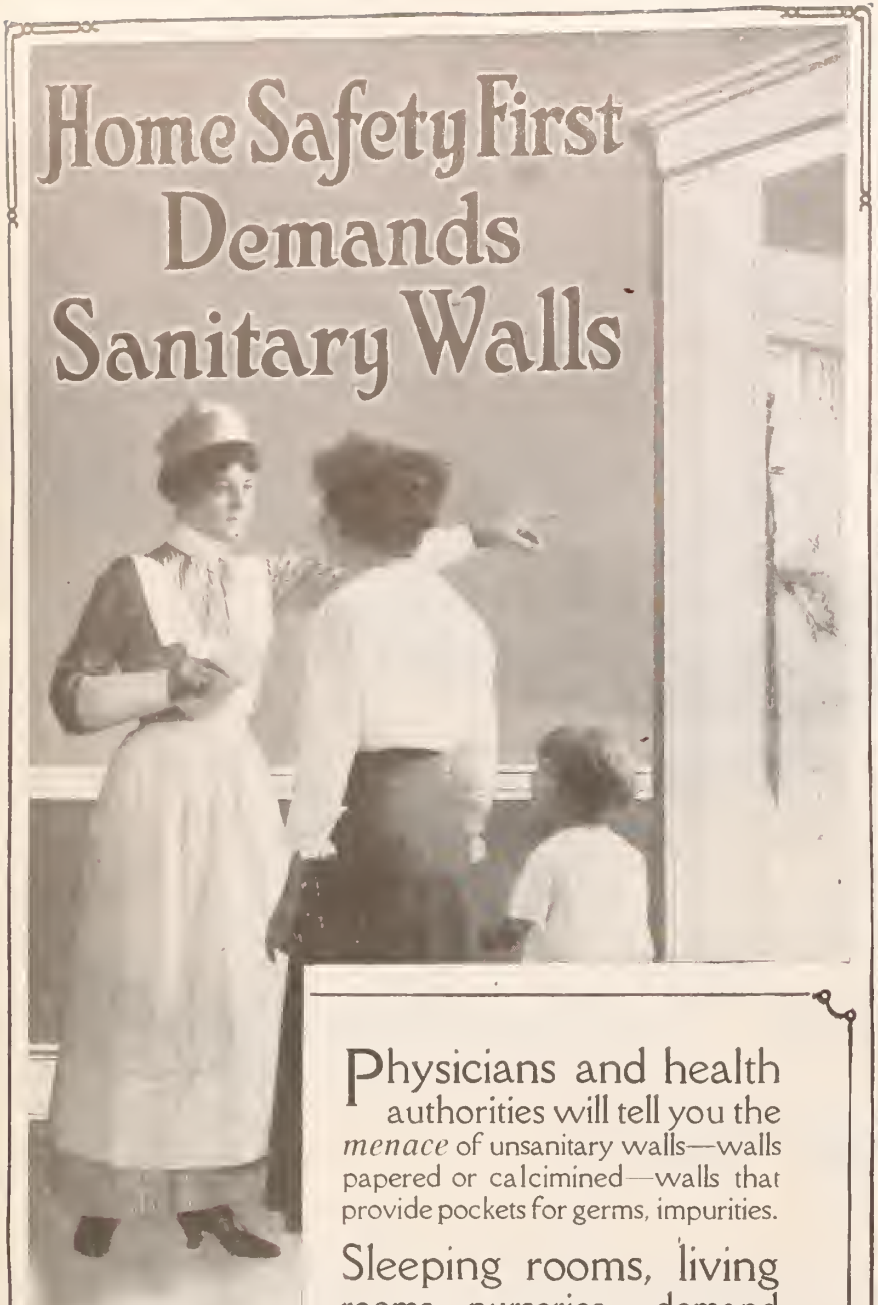
DIAMOND RUBBER GOODS
Akron, Ohio

DIAMOND SQUEEGEE (Non-Skid) Tires



Home Safety First Demands Sanitary Walls

Physicians and health authorities will tell you the menace of unsanitary walls—walls papered or calcimined—walls that provide pockets for germs, impurities.

Sleeping rooms, living rooms, nurseries — demand clean, sanitary walls just as much as they demand fresh, pure air.

Lucas
Lu-Co-Flat

The Beautiful, Sanitary, Washable Wall Finish

—is not only hygienic, but beautiful in its variety of soft, eye-pleasing tones. Smudges, stains and finger-prints are easily removed with an application of soap and water. It is unaffected by steam, moisture or smoke. Lucas Lu-Co-Flat is unique. You will be surprised at its remarkable decorative value as illustrated in our beautiful book—

"The Art of Interior Decoration"

THIS is a book you should have. It contains beautiful color plates, illustrating color-combinations for a variety of rooms for homes elaborate and modest, with detailed descriptions and suggestions for furniture, rugs, hangings, etc. We will send this valuable color suggestion book on receipt of 6 cents and your dealer's name. Address

John Lucas & Co. Inc.
Office 320
Philadelphia, Pa.

The Giant Painter

The Art of Interior Decoration

"Uncle John"

THE first time I remember seeing Uncle John Fourier was on a July afternoon twenty years ago in my father's hay field. Often enough had I heard about him, and the things that one heard were not especially complimentary. His reputation was that of a stingy man—almost that of a miser. His appearance that afternoon sustained his reputation. His shirt was faded, his old blue jean trousers had been patched repeatedly, as was evidenced by the different shades of blue that each patch showed, according to the number of times it had been washed. He wore no shoes, and, looking down from my vantage point on the hay-load, I pitied the old man as he hurried through the stubble in his bare feet. When we came to the barn I asked my father to get him some shoes, at which my father laughed.

Generally my place was on the hay-rake while the wagon was loading, and then in the barn loft stowing away the hay; but that day I was put on the wagon to trim the load. There was no need of a rake. The hay was so thick that it could be forked up without raking. This was the record crop for the farm—five loads to the acre, on a garden patch that had been seeded down.

The day was stifling hot and great black headers were rolling up from the west, so all the help that could be mustered was working to get the hay under cover before the threatened thunder storm should break. Uncle John left his own field to come over and help us load, for he said that it wouldn't hurt his own hay to get wet, but it would be a pity to spoil a good crop like ours.

Some years after this, lightning destroyed the stacks where our entire wheat crop was stored. When threshing time came, Uncle John brought ten bushels of wheat for our empty bins from his full ones. Others among the neighboring farmers did the same, but no one seemed to expect it of Uncle John. Some even intimated that Mr. Mac paid a good round price to Mr. Fourier for that grain. Little did they know that at Christmas Uncle John sent my father a ten-dollar gold piece "to buy a couple of barrels of flour."

In times of famine abroad, or flood at home, "A Friend" always contributed twenty dollars through the Christian Herald, but no one in that rural community ever suspected the real donor.

A FEW days after my father died, Uncle John came over and after much hesitation began to make what I finally understood was an offer of money without interest for my education. For several years he was my banker. At times he would have several hundreds of gold eagles in his safe, anticipating a premium "just like war times." This was generally before election. At last I persuaded him to use the banks more largely. During my student days he charged me no interest, and afterward, when he financed some repairs to the old homestead, he charged one per cent. less than the current rate at the banks.

When Uncle John's wife died (she whom people pitied because of his ways, yet whom he almost worshiped) I had begun my studies in the divinity school, and as the old home church was pastorless at that time, I was often asked to supply the pulpit. To most people Uncle John was the same old heartless, stingy miser that he had always been, but we became closer friends than ever. He had little respect for my sermons. They didn't measure up to those which he still read in old files of the Christian Herald. My theology didn't square with that of the old preacher who had been in the church for so many years. But his outspoken disapproval never dulled our friendship, and he came increasingly to consult me in regard to matters spiritual and temporal.

ONE Sunday, in the winter of 1908, there came as a supply to the church a missionary from China on furlough. He spoke of the great movements in the Orient and of the spiritual and intellectual awakening with such compelling force that Uncle John came away determined to give his mon to foreign missions. Next week, wh l returned, he was full of his project nd armed with the lengthy legal title the Board of Foreign Missions of hi denomination, he made his way t the office of the local squire. Sinc his wife's death he had talked over a nu ber of schemes with me, but this appea to him as nothing else had done. He uld give his money as a memorial o her whom he loved. I suggested sp ific things, such as hospital endowme or the support of a definite work; b he felt that the managers of the m ion ought not to be hampered. He uld give without attaching any strings

An Easterner finds life tolerable he Middle West, if he can still hav his New York daily. Looking throug he Times today, I found a thre ich item stating that the will of an ' ed recluse," who had left all his mon to charity, had been admitted to pr ate in the surrogate's court. Soon no doubt, the old house will be sold an he estate settled up, and whatever i eft will find its way into the mission asury. Just how much there will remains to be seen. The will has be in litigation for two years or more. ast summer, when East on vacation, as haled into court to tell what I ew of the matter. I felt sure tha he probate judge was impressed at Uncle John, though "queer," as hi elatives maintained, never for a mo nt faltered in his purpose to give all at he had for missions. How he save nd denied himself in those last years n ne will ever know. It was that he ht leave the more. "Stingy," p ple called him. And to all outward ap arances people were right; but how tle they knew his heart! He had w ed hard as a boy, had saved always, a his frugality appeared as meanness to st people, because he so carefully co ed his methods of giving.

I HAVE tried in vain to identif he missionary whose sermon that ay did so much for the kingdom, f at that time Uncle John's prop ty amounted to nearly a hundred thou nd dollars. I wish the preacher knew If he was tired (and he must have n, after that long trip out into the coun y), he may have felt the lack of respon or the part of those farmers. He tle knew how far-reaching was the infl ce of his address that day. It is al st time he had another furlough. en he comes home again, maybe he wil nd out. I hope so. It would enco ge him to know.

HALSEY MACOBI

◆

Our Cover Picture

AS the swift-flowing Orontes passes th ity of Hamath, on its journey to Ar ch and the sea, it is made to toil, a to give up some of its precious water to ir ate the fields and gardens of the city. Th devices used are giant water-wheels of the u ershot variety. Affixed to each of the pa les is a small bucket which fills with wate nd is carried to the top of the wheel, more an seventy feet above, and emptied into the c als that carry the water to the mosques an ardens of the city.

There is no more picturesque sight in ria than that of these great wooden wheels, ich turn incessantly day and night liftin he river water to the great aqueducts th remind one of the structures of the Ro ns The axles of these great wheels are of woo no the constant groaning which the diff nt wheels make can be heard in the rem est corner of the city. Each wheel has its wn tone and its own name, and the nati in the city streets know the voice of each.

Hamath is known to the Western wor as the place where the famous Hamathit inscriptions on black basalt were found in 2. The inscriptions, now known to be Hi te, have never been deciphered. Hamath i ne of the oldest cities in the world, being c al with Damascus. It is mentioned in G sis and was the capital of a great kingdom l he time of the Exodus. It is to-day a ra ly growing city on the railway from Ray to Aleppo. Its streets are paved and ly clean, and it is becoming known amon he natives of the whole plain as the best mar of the vicinity, but it is for its picturesque n a. or water-wheels, that this quaint city is k vn to the hurrying tourist and the outside w d.

M. O.

Hardware Dealers and Jobbers

ATTENTION!

TIOLENE has been unusually fortunate in being adopted (after numerous tests and trials) by several of the largest hardware jobbers in the country, and indorsed by them as being the best they could send out to their customers—under their personal guarantee—to insure repeat orders and satisfied users.

Tiolene

"The Oil That's Clean"

has been remarkably successful with this class of trade, and there is waiting for you, Mr. Hardware Jobber and Dealer, an exceptional opportunity to get in on the ground floor and reap a large part of this harvest.

Tiolene, made from pure Pennsylvania crude, especially refined for the Automobile Trade, is practically carbonless and is as near 100% efficient as it is possible for a lubricating oil to be. Fill in the coupon in corner and get full information today regarding the Tiolene proposition.

Tiolene
OILS & GREASES
Tiolene
Tiolene
AUTOMOBILE OILS
CYLINDER OILS
HARVESTER OILS
GAS ENGINE OILS
Tiolene
OILS & GREASES FOR EVERY PURPOSE
OILS & GREASES

1 and 5 gallon cans

Tiona Oil Company

Binghamton, N. Y.

C. H.

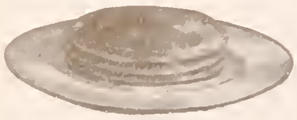
Kindly send full particulars regarding the Tiolene proposition for 1916.

Name..............................

Address..............................

Jobber..............................

Retailer..............................



Add Bran

To Flour Foods

To your bread, gems, muffins, pancakes, cookies.

For every meal have one food that's a laxative.

That will stop drug-taking. It will foster good cheer, good health. And supply you whole-wheat nutrition.

Your doctor will advise it.

But not ground bran, not harsh bran. To be efficient, bran must be flaked. To be dainty, it must be tender.

The right form is found in Pettijohn's Flour, ready for instant use. It's the ideal health flour, delightful in taste and effect.

Pettijohn's

Flour Bran Flaked

This is 75 per cent fine patent flour mixed with 25 per cent special bran flakes. Use like Graham flour in any recipe. Price, 25 cents per large package.

Pettijohn's Breakfast Food is soft wheat rolled into luscious flakes, hiding 25 per cent unground bran. A morning dainty liked by everyone. 15 cents per package.

Order from your grocer. New-tried recipes are on the packages.

The Quaker Oats Company

Makers — Chicago [183]

This Is Dutch Boy
White Lead

WHAT you don't know about white lead doesn't hurt, so long as your painter continues to use it on your house.

Dutch Boy White Lead

protects many a house whose owner thinks of it only as "mighty good paint my painter uses."

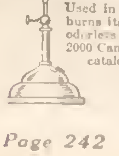
It's an absorbing story, though.

Paint Tips No. 152 tells it.

NATIONAL LEAD COMPANY

New York Boston Cincinnati Cleveland
Buffalo Chicago San Francisco St. Louis
(John T. Lewis & Bros. Co., Philadelphia)
(National Lead & Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

The "BEST" LIGHT



Positively the cheapest and strongest light on earth. Used in every country on the globe. Makes and burns its own gas. Casts no shadows. Clean and odorless. Absolutely safe. Over 200 styles. 100 to 2000 Candle Power. Fully Guaranteed. Write for catalog. AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
470 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

The Death of Stephen

International Sunday School Lesson for March 5
Acts 9: 1—8 : 3

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

'Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee the crown of life.' Rev. 2 : 10.

There was peculiar fitness in this encouragement, because the fire of persecution was soon to break forth among these churches, and the noble Polycarp, who was at this time bishop of the Church at Smyrna, was to seal his witness with his blood. As the steamer enters the spacious bay, the traveler from its deck can descry a group of trees where he was burned as a martyr. His eighty-six years did not save him. But as one stands on that sacred spot, commanding the far sweep of land and ocean, one seems to hear again the voice of the Master bidding his servant to be faithful even to death; and one realizes that always in the dread meeting of death and life, death is compelled to furnish the condition of a more radiant and glorious life. It is invariably so. Nature goes down into the death of winter, but spring and summer weave a crown of life for her brows. The soul dies to sin and self, and each deeper embracing of the cross leads to a fuller participation in the life which is life indeed. The young witness-bearer in counting-house, mill, or store who is stoned to death by mockery and scorn develops beneath it all a kingliness of character that compels the admiration of his persecutors. Not in the next life only, though there perfectly, but also in this, the soul that faces death without flinching becomes crowned, regnant, glorious.

Stephen and Saul

By Arthur H. Howland

DID you ever throw a stone? Do you remember the feeling as the heavy, hard thing slid out of your hands and flew through the air? Did you every try to hit a living thing with a stone? Did you ever succeed? Have you a memory, an old memory of childhood or a fresher memory from a moment of manhood, of an animal's cry when a stone you threw struck soft flesh and made a wound? Can you fancy how these men felt, circled about and hurling stones upon Stephen—how each man watched the stone he threw, marked if it hit, saw the look of pain on this face that was like the face of an angel—how they kept on throwing stones as they saw him growing weaker—how his hands that were raised in prayer were finally smitten down—how his head was bruised—how his face at last was reached and disfigured—how they heard him say: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit!"—how they saw him fall forward—how they kept pelting the prostrate form—how at length it lay still—how they stopped their work at last—how they gathered about him, with stones still clutched in their twitching fingers—how the angry crowd subsided as they said one to another, "He is dead."

A young man had been standing near, not throwing stones, but guarding the outer garments of those who had been doing so. He was at heart an honest and good young man, but his face was by no means like the face of an angel. There was darkness on his face, the darkness of hatred, of bigotry, of spiritual dissatisfaction; on Stephen's face there was light, the light of love, the light of spirtual liberty and content, the light of God. Perhaps these two young men were about the same age. They both worshiped the same God, and both sought to please him. But Stephen had followed a new light, while Saul remained in darkness. Now Stephen had gone forward to still greater light, while Saul silently, and, we may be sure, with a heavy heart, handed back their garments to the men who had put him to death.

Why had these men killed Stephen? Widely differing motives had doubtless been in the hearts of those whose hands had thrown the stones. Some, like Saul, honestly believed that the new heresy, which declared Jesus to be the Messiah, was blasphemous and idolatrous. They felt that in trying to stamp out the worship of Jesus they were being true to the great deity who had said, "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." But doubtless the majority of the men who had condemned and those who stoned Stephen were moved by the same impulse that had led them or their associates to kill Jesus a few months before. Stephen made them feel that God was near, and they didn't like God. He showed them their sins, and they did not wish to see them. Stephen had reviewed truthfully the history of their nation; he made them see again the sins of their fathers; he made them hear again the groans of God's prophets, whom their ancestors had put to death. Like their fathers, they loved darkness rather than light; they loved their own voices more than God's. Their ways were not his ways, neither were their thoughts his thoughts. They had turned every one to his own way, and the spectacle of a man who was going God's way filled them with wrath and hatred.

IT will be interesting to take a brief glance at the Council or Sanhedrin which had condemned Stephen to death. Most of the teachers are already somewhat familiar with the composition of the Sanhedrin, but the pupils too should be made and kept familiar with it. This was an august court of seventy-one elders, who were, since the loss of Jewish sovereignty, the real head of the Jewish people. The court itself can probably be traced back to the seventy elders who assisted Moses in judging and governing the Israelites many centuries before. See Num. 11 : 16, 17; 24-30. We cannot be sure how members were appointed to this court. It is thought most likely that membership in it was to some degree hereditary. The high priest was the presiding officer In earlier centuries his voice had been equal in authority to that of all the rest, but now that the high priest was merely appointed by the Roman government he did not have his former power. The Romans allowed the Sanhedrin great authority. It dealt not only with religious and moral matters, but also political and financial, having some supervision over the imperial taxes. While existing under the Roman law, the Sanhedrin governed according to the Jewish law. It possessed the power of passing sentence of death, but did not have the right to execute the sentence. The members of the Sanhedrin remembered this limitation in the case of Jesus and turned him over to the Roman power to be executed, but in the case of Stephen their anger grew so great that they could not delay. They rushed him out of the city without waiting to get a formal decree of execution and either put him to death with their own hands or instigated the populace to do so.

The first stones were, in accordance with ancient custom, thrown by the witnesses. If life remained after these stones had been thrown, the crowd joined in the ghastly work. Evidently this is what took place here. The anger was so intense that many must have rushed toward the prostrate Christian to take advantage of the opportunity to have a hand in his death. We can be glad that Saul remained passive, simply protecting the clothes of the witnesses. Yet though his hands were bloodless, his heart was guilty enough, and in later years he could not forgive himself for having had this part in the death of Christ's first martyr.

It is strange how people go on making

BLUE STREA

You save two ways when you buy gu anteed Blue Streaks. You pay le and buy fewer tires.
Thousands of riders are doing that ve thing. They have learned that th are no better tires than the $2
Goodyear Blue Streak Non-Skid.
Ask your dealer. If he doesn't ca this tire he can easily get it from a Goodyear Branch.
You can always tell a Goodyear the beautiful white tread with Blue Streak on each side.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Compa
Akron, Ohio

GOODYEA
AKRON
Bicycle Tires

Indoor Clos

More Comfortable Healt ful and Convenient th
the Out-Door Privy

Eliminates the open vault and ce pool, breeding places for ger
Have a warm, sanitary, odor toilet right in your house. No goi out in cold weather. A boon invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health

ABSOLUTELY ODORLES
Put It Anywhere In The House

The germs are killed by a chemical process water in the container, which you empty onc month. Absolutely no odor. No more trou to empty than dishwater. Closet absolut guaranteed. Write for full description and pr

ROWE SANITARY MFG. CO. 230 ROWE BLDG., DETRO
MI
Ask about the Ro-San Washstand---Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

Send Us Your Old Carpe
We Dye Them and Weave
Velvety Ru

Beautiful new rugs in p fancy or Oriental patterns—color you want, any size—totally ent and far superior to other rugs from old carpets.

Rugs, $1.00 and

Reversible, seamless, soft, brigh able rugs, guaranteed to wear 10
Money back if not satisfied.
order completed in three

You Save

Your old carpets are money, no matter how worn.

FREE Write for book of in color, our libera payment offer and full informat

OLSON RUG CO.
Dept A-31. 40 Laflin St., Chica

A VACUUM CLEAN
ON FREE TRIAL

The Reeves $5 Vacuum Cleaner is guaranteed to ALL the dust from both rugs and furnitur. Delive your door on 30 days' free trial. Send for bookl

AGENTS WANTED

THE REEVES V. C. CO.
130 Broad Street Milford, C

MENDETS
PATENT PATCH

Mend leaks instantly in all utensils, graniteware, aluminum, tin, hot water bags, etc. No solder, cement or rivet. Any one can use
Send for sample box, 10c; large box, all sizes, 25c, postpaid. Ag
Wanted. Collette Mfg. Co., Box 302, Amsterdam, N

he s e mistake that Saul and the rest of th Sanhedrin made in thinking that leath an put an end to truth. This s wh makes men who have found the ruth o serene and confident. They are tle what happens to them; they are ich for the truth, and if the truth an helped forward by their death hey e glad. So Paul himself came ater declare that his one hope was hat hrist might be magnified whether t we by his life or his death (Phil. : 2(

Ge he pupils to name all the martyrs hey an remember. Tell them about he ave native Christians in China who ffered torture and death during the I xer uprising of 1900 rather than deny heir new-found Saviour. Ask them name men in more recent years who ave suffered reproach and loss beca e they stood for what they believe to be right, men like the early aboli onists.

As them to mention ways in which peop who are true to God may be calle upon to suffer now; what causes of ri teousness and holiness are meeting position and persecution.

ST PHEN died in peace. Walking S rough the corridor of the Vatican whe ancient Roman inscriptions are exhi ed, one reaches a place where ther eems a sudden change of atmosphe It is here the words begin that can traced far down the corridor: "In ace" (In peace), "Pax." These are epitaphs taken from the tombs of e y Christians in the catacombs. The had died in peace! Before that he omans had died bravely, or anxious or sadly—but these Christians had ied in peace. So Stephen died. So l il died at last after he had found Step n's Christ and lived and labored for h. So we all may die when our hou omes.

The How Column

Cond ted by Frank L. Brown, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association.

How Teach the Lesson in the Beginners' and Primary Classes

IN evious weeks we have given actual m hods used by actual teachers in classes abov the Primary Grade in schools of all kind Here are some plans to interest the youn r children in the lesson teaching.

A lorado teacher of fifty beginners says: "I t to make myself one of the children by mak the lesson just as simple as possible, and I have always gone to Sunday school try tell something that happened when I was ir age to bring out my point, and listen o th stories."

Fr a Kansas teacher of sixty little tots her omes this experience: "I always precede he son with some physical exercise to rest hem then seat them in a comfortable posi-tion cing me, on a large rug; taking care that two isorderly children are not seated to-geth When every one is quiet and comfort-able try to tell the story in such a way that he erest will take care of itself."

A lifornia teacher writes: "I use some ex-ercis or song to compose the children and be-gin once telling the lesson story, using sim-ple rds and not making the story too long. f I lk about stars, I point to them. If I tell two cities, I walk from one point of the roor to the other, having the children see eac ity or place of interest in their minds, tr o make it very real to them."

A rooklyn teacher says: "I try a point of cont t in nature, play and other things that inte t little children."

A Ohio teacher uses the hands as well as the es. "Sometimes I have lead pencils and ve them the lesson to draw. It makes her eel they are helping me."

T heart gate as well as the eye gate is used y a Kansas teacher. "I have no other way han telling the story and loving the oup, letting them know I love them."

Denver teacher says: "I first have order. I ch ge my plans. On one Sunday I will have the ackboard work, one Sunday hand work, and n some Sundays we simply have the less story discussed."

A Colorado teacher of 92 primary pupils wri : "Our teachers briefly review the pre-ced lesson and then tell the story of the day The children are very free to supply any nformation they may have on the sub-ject nd to ask questions."

F m a New York teacher comes this met d: "(a) Pictures covered on black-boa , then uncovered. (b) Drawing during less on blackboard. (c) Bring objects to illu ate. We can borrow objects whenever nee d from our Public Museum. (d) Paper tea g. (e) They bring pictures to illustrate a c ain point which I ask in advance these are nned on the board."

Note This ad appears only once in this publication. Cut it out NOW! Save it! Even if you do not intend to paint this season, some day you will, and you'll be glad to have this to refer to when making your plans.

Vital to House Owners

Special Offer

To the first house owner in each town painting with Zinolin after reading this ad. we offer 10% reduction on the cost of the Zinolin used—and unqualifiedly guarantee Zinolin to be just as revolutionary in every respect as claimed in our descriptive LEAFLET.

The WONDER paint

This LEAFLET is yours for the asking. Write for it. Inform yourself about Zinolin, the "Wonder Paint," before you paint. Know why Zinolin saves you money—why its brilliant luster lasts indefinitely, making your buildings always look newly painted. Know why Zinolin protects better—why its dazzling whiteness cannot be duplicated in any other outside paint—why its colors never fade no matter how delicate the tint when colors are used. Know these things. It will take but one second—it will cost but one cent to write—and know the greatest achievement in all paint history. Then you'll realize fully why you should use

ZINOLIN

"Arnold-ized" ZINC paint

Years before putting Zinolin on the market—even before we tried it out along the seacoast—where the climate is most severe on paint—we knew we had an unusual product. But we, ourselves, were surprised to find how completely revolutionary Zinolin is. Zinolin has caused a genuine sensation. No one thought cracking, chalking, peeling and fading could be entirely overcome. No one thought the life of paint could be nearly doubled—or perhaps—they didn't think about it at all, but just asked their painters to "paint" without specifying any particular paint. That's why you owe it to yourself to write for our LEAFLET to learn all about Zinolin—and to specify this wonderful paint—made only by the Arnold secret process—the only all "Arnold-ized" Zinc Paint in the world.

KEYSTONA—another of our products. Winner of the highest award at the Panama Exposition. The first-created, washable, flat-tone finish for walls and interior woodwork. Imitated—but unsuccessfully. Justly famous for its soft, artistic colorings, extreme durability and big covering capacity. Costs slightly more by the gallon but less for the number of square yards covered. Economical. Hygienic. Use it instead of wall paper.

CERTIFIED PAINTERS. We have arranged with dependable painters in nearly every town who will not substitute other paints when you ask for Zinolin or Keystona, and who know just how to apply them. We will gladly give you the name of our CERTIFIED PAINTER in your town, if we have one, or will communicate with your painter if you send us his name.

WRITE NOW. Don't delay or you may forget—and this whole matter of paints is most vital to you. Send for complete information, giving us your painter's name, today.

ZINOLIN and KEYSTONA are always obtainable at all Paint Stores and most Hardware Dealers.

Keystone Varnish Company
Established 1828
N. B. ARNOLD, President
1600 Keystona Building Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE FRANKLIN CAR

Simplicity and Results versus an Eyefull of Motor Mechanism

JOHN TIMBS, the historian of American invention, says that the history of every mechanical development has been from crude directness at the start to extreme and burdensome complexity—then to a finished simplicity that makes the complex stage seem absurd.

* * *

Fulton's Steamboat had a single cast-iron cylinder and one piston.

Marine driving power was at the stage of enormous quadruple expansion engines when Parsons invented the Steam Turbine in 1884.

In Belfast, Ireland, in 1897, was invented a new type of turbine fan fo moving air.

This application of the turbine principl to the rotary fan, moving vastly large bodies of air than was ever before possible has in less than a generation set many lines of invention forward fifty years and has all but revolutionized certain well known industries.

It is this principle that is behind th Franklin System of Direct-Air-Coolin —the biggest step ever taken in the simplification of the Motor Car.

* * *

Think of it! Here is an engine wit no water to carry, none of the annoyance that go with water—freed the 177 parts of the compl cated water-cooling system

If you want a clear idea just what it means to get r of these 177 water-coolin parts, step into a repair ho Look at the honey-com ra iator, with its 5000 cells, pipes, pump, connections a complex system of na bore water passages, initi trouble from leaks, from mu and sediment, from freezi and boiling.

* * *

Look at the Franklin E gine! The only movin p in the Direct-Air-Cooli System is the air-suctio f and that fan is itself part the fly wheel.

Nothing to get loose, no ing to break down, nothi to oil, nothing to adju nothing to replace.

Franklin Direct-Air-Cooling Gets Rid of these 177 Water-Cooling Parts

1	Radiator.
2	Steel washers for fan bearing.
2	Felt washers for fan bearing.
1	Retainer for felt washer for fan bearing
1	Adjusting nut for fan bearing.
1	Check nut for fan bearing adjusting nut.
1	Lock washer for fan bearing adjusting nut.
1	Bracket for fan on engine frame.
1	Nut for fan shaft.
1	Washer for fan shaft.
1	Lock nut for fan shaft.
2	Nuts to attach fan bracket to engine frame.
2	Lock washers for fan bracket nuts.
1	Fan driving sheave and starting ratchet, lower.
1	Fan belt.
1	Grease cup for fan.
2	Bearings, complete, for fan shaft, (each end).
1	Filler cap for radiator
1	Gasket for radiator filler cup.
1	Strainer for radiator filler.
1	Drain cock, complete, for radiator outlet.
1	Body for radiator outlet drain cock.
1	Sleeve for radiator outlet drain cock.
1	Gasket for radiator outlet drain cock.
1	Strainer for radiator outlet drain cock.
1	Spring washer for radiator outlet drain cock
1	Nut for radiator outlet drain cock.
1	Cotter pin for radiator outlet drain cock.
1	Bracket to attach radiator.
1	Stud plate for bottom of radiator.
1	Stud for radiator bottom plate.
4	Shims for radiator attaching studs.
4	Nuts for radiator attaching studs.
4	Washers for radiator attaching studs.
4	Washers, notched, for radiator attaching studs.
4	Lock washers for radiator attaching studs.
1	Lace for radiator.
1	Hose connection from radiator to motor.
2	Hose clamps.
1	Tie rod between radiator and dash.
2	Cap screws for tie rod on radiator.
2	Lock washers for tie rod cap screw.
1	Shield for under radiator.
1	Fan assembled complete.
1	Fan spider with blades and pulley.
4	Blades for fan spider.
1	Fan shaft.
1	Cone for fan bearing.
2	Ball races for fan bearing.
2	Ball retainers for fan bearing.
16	Steel Balls for fan bearing.
1	Pump.
4	Cap screws to attach pump to engine.
4	Lock washers for pump attaching screws.
1	Pump body, with bushing.
2	Dowels for pump body.
1	Bushing for pump body.
1	Gland nut for pump body bushing.
1	Packing for pump.
2	Pump covers, with bushing.
1	Gasket for pump.
8	Screws for pump cover.
1	Bushing for pump cover.
1	Pump impeller.
1	Pin for pump impeller.
1	Cross for pump driving shaft.
1	Pump shaft, short, for impeller.
1	Pump shaft, long, for outside driving gear.
1	Outside driving gear for pump.
1	Bushing, long, for pump shaft.
1	Bushing, short, for pump shaft.
1	Key for pump shaft.
1	Drain pipe for pump.
1	Cap for pump drain pipe.
1	Grease cup for pump.
1	Brass pipe on top of cylinders, for water circulation.
1	Brass pipe on side of cylinders, for water circulation.
6	Studs for water circulation pipes.
6	Lock washers for water circulation pipe studs.
6	Nuts for water circulation pipe studs.
3	Gaskets for water circulation pipes.
1	Hose connection from radiator to motor.
2	Clamps for rubber hose connection from radiator to motor.
1	Hose connection from pump to motor.
1	Hose connection, radiator to pump.
4	Clamps for rubber hose.
6	Studs to attach water circulation pipes.
6	Nuts for water circulation pipe studs.

With this complicated, trouble-inviting water-cooling system, compare the simplicity of Franklin Direct-Air-Cooling—its only moving part a powerful turbine fan, which is itself part of the fly wheel. No water to carry—no leaks, no freezing, no boiling. The Franklin is the only car that can run 100 miles on low gear, regardless of locality, weather or road conditions, and it holds the world's record for oil economy—1046 miles on a gallon of oil.

Touring Car—$1950, F.O.B. Syracuse, N.Y.
Actual Scale Weight, 2680 Pounds.

FRANKLIN AUTOMOBILE COMPANY, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

THE FRANKLIN CAR

The Most Advanced Type of Motor Construction in the Automobile World

Inspect the Franklin chassis! Notice the freedom fom all torque rods and reach rods. Notice the ce-piece fastening of the full-elliptic springs—eminating the usual links, pins and other forgings.

No superfluous parts to driving system. The sigle-unit direct-connected starter does away with te gears on the fly wheel and the attendant sifting mechanism.

The transmission foot-brake does away with fifty pr cent. of the usual rods, rod ends and pins.

* * *

Consider for a moment what such simplicity reans in the life of the car, in the ease of control, te saving of time, trouble and upkeep expense.

It is the mechanical complexity of the average car tat drives its upkeep cost so unreasonably high.

Nobody knows this fact better than the Used ar Dealer, who is confronted every day with the joblem of selling cars with too much machinery.

The motorist who takes ficiency as his measure of alue, rather than quantity of echanism, should know the ranklin Car—the most adanced type of motor construcm in the automobile world.

* * *

The fundamental design f the Franklin is so far in dvance that the earliest ranklin Cars produced are oing good service today.

The Franklin was the first ur-cylinder car built in merica—and a six-cylinder ar when cars in general were ill in the four-cylinder stage.

The Franklin cylinders had alves-in-head thirteen years efore automobile designers n general took them up.

The Franklin was the first ar with the throttle control—rst with the single intake runk—the first to establish automatic lubrication—the first to use full-elliptic springs without reaches—the first light-weight car, and the only flexibly constructed car today.

It is the policy of the Franklin Company to build a car that will perform a service for the man who owns it and for the dealer who sells it.

* * *

The Franklin is the only car that has averaged 32.8 and 32.1 miles to the gallon of gasoline in two National Tests. It is the only six-cylinder car that ever went 55 miles on a gallon of gasoline.

It is the car that is practically free from tire troubles, and delivers its owners an average of 9630 miles to the set of tires.

It is the only car that can run 100 miles on low gear, anywhere, any time.

It is the car that holds the world's record for oil economy—1046 miles on a gallon of oil.

It is the only car men and women, old and young, can ride in all day without fatigue.

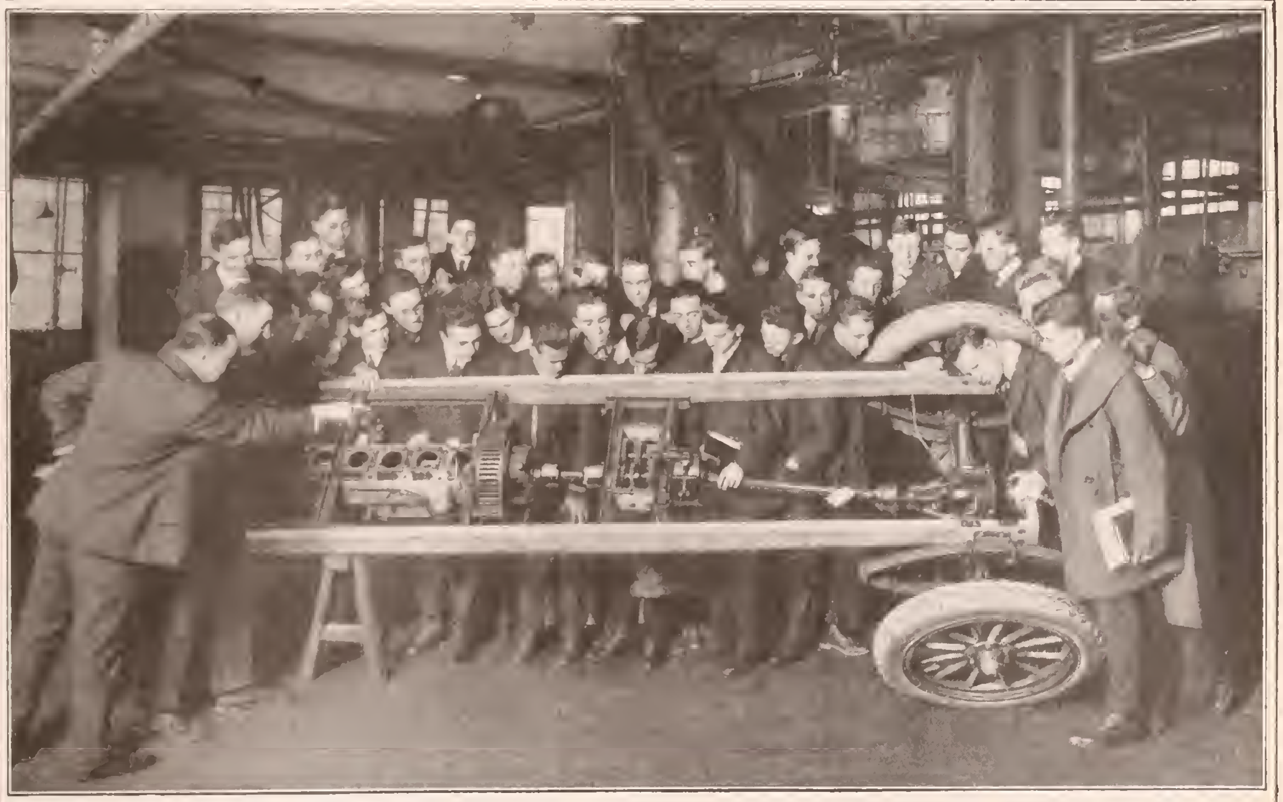
It costs less to run than the cheapest car made.

Performance, service, not "features"—this is the principle of the Franklin Car.



The Franklin Chassis exhibited to the Engineering Class at the Worcester Polytechnic Institute as a demonstration of finished simplicity in motor car design. Notice the freedom from all torque rods and reach rods. Notice the one-piece fastening of the full-elliptic springs—eliminating the usual links, pins and other forgings. Consider what such simplicity means in the life of the car, in the ease of control, the saving of time, trouble and upkeep expense.

FRANKLIN AUTOMOBILE COMPANY, SYRACUSE, N. Y.

Roadster—$1900, F.O.B. Syracuse, N. Y.
Actual Scale Weight, 2566 Pounds.

FORMAN FARM MORTGAGES 6%

During 1915 American Farmers had an income off their farms of over ten billion dollars.

That was more than four times their entire mortgage debt.

Our business is to select and purchase the best of these mortgages and offer them to you for investment.

Write for list B 5

George M. Forman & Company
(Founded 1885) 11 South La Salle St., CHICAGO

AHB

Breaking Traditions

The brutal expression, "Business is Business" has gone the way of all half truths. It is used to excuse a dominating purpose of unfair profits.

The investment business is an advisory one to its clients,—unbiased, frank, and in careful confidence.

We welcome your confidence if you are serious in your desire to improve your financial standing, and if you in turn appreciate thatwe are extending gratis the value of years of training and experience.

Ask us for our Current Offerings, Circular H22.

A·H·Bickmore & Co.
111 BROADWAY, N.Y

53 COMMUNITIES situated in 5 STATES are served by the 12 public service companies comprising the UNITED LIGHT & RAILWAYS CO.

Diversification of service and breadth of territory afford every opportunity for the continued growth of this Company's business.

We recommend for investment the Bonds and Preferred Stock of this Company

Send for Circular

Alfred H. Ebert & Co.
60 Broadway New York City

6 1/2 %

SOUND FIRST MORTGAGES

We pay 6½% Secured by Oklahoma Real Estate worth three times the value of the loan. The demand for these first mortgages in unsettled times indicates their unusual stability. First Mortgages do not shrink in value—they are safe and sure. Interest always paid date it is due. Over $1,000,000 loaned and not a single cent lost to any investor or a single foreclosure sale made. Isn't a first mortgage the right investment for you? Write for booklet describing methods, and lists of loans from $300 to $10,000.

AURELIUS-SWANSON CO., Inc.
40 State National Bank Bldg.
Oklahoma City Oklahoma

14 Strong Bonds

A description of the fundamental economic features of strength behind 14 public utility bonds will be sent on request.

Send for Utility Review A

P. W. BROOKS & Co
(Incorporated)
Stock Exch. Bldg. Philadelphia
115 Broadway New York

Investment and Insurance Counsel

This department is maintained for the benefit of our regular readers; the service is offered entirely free of cost to them, and all correspondence is strictly personal and confidential, in so far as the identity of the inquirer is concerned. Always enclose letter postage and write name and address plainly, addressing your inquiry to Financial Editor, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.

Neither the Christian Herald nor any other publication can guarantee the value of investment securities. We do all we can, however, to make sure of the integrity of our advertisers before admitting them to our columns. Any advice given is an expression of our conclusions, based upon information we believe to be reliable, but we must not be held responsible, should any loss arise from its acceptance.

Answers to Financial Queries

Mrs. E. M., CONNECTICUT. Manhattan Nevada Gold Mining stock was sold by A. L. Wisner, and is worthless.

E. P. D., OHIO. (1) The bonds you refer to are doubtless the Electric Transmission of Virginia first mortgage 5-year gold bonds. (2) Very much so. (3) Send stock to us.

H. B. C., NEW YORK. First and refunding 5 per cent. bonds of the Federal Telephone and Telegraph Company seem to be fairly well secured, despite the fact that there are outstanding sixteen underlying issues of subsidiary companies.

A. E. L., IOWA. Chicago Great Western Railroad common is not entitled to an investment rating. It may be years before any dividends will be paid on this issue. The preferred stock has a considerable degree of speculative attraction.

S. W. P., NEW JERSEY. The troubles which surround the Buffalo (N. Y.) Gas Company seem to be directly chargeable to competition. Natural gas sells in Buffalo for 30 cents per thousand while the manufactured product cannot be profitably retailed for less than $1. The Buffalo Gas Company deals only in manufactured gas.

M. E. I., VERMONT. (1) $27,000,000 New York, New Haven & Hartford's one-year 5 per cent. notes mature May 1, and a portion of the issue will be paid, and the remainder extended. (2) New Haven's fixed charges are now being earned, against deficits a year ago. (3) The weakness of the stock is due partly to a rumor of a proposed issue of preferred stock.

T. B. J., NEW HAMPSHIRE. (1) The firm you refer to has been in the farm mortgage business in North Dakota for over thirty years and claims that not one of its customers has ever lost a cent in either principal or interest. (2) Anglo-French 5 per cent. gold bonds while the war lasts are bound to be subject to speculative moods. At the present price the bonds yield about 6¼ per cent.

Miss M. E. B., MISSOURI. American Real Estate Company's coupon bonds are redeemable after the fifth semi-annual interest payment date. The company requires six months' notice of withdrawal of money. If your bonds have run a longer time than two and one-half years the company will refund the amount of money specified in the contract attached to the bond, the amount varying according to the age of the bond.

Miss D., MARYLAND. (1) There has been as yet no assessment levied on the bondholders of the New York Realty Owners, nor is it likely that one can be levied without the consent of the bondholders themselves. (2) The receivers were appointed as the result of an unfriendly suit in equity, and were appointed for the purpose of conserving the assets of the company. There is no intimation in the papers in connection with this suit, we learn, of the insolvency of the company.

R. W., KANSAS. Cuban Internal Debt gold 5s have a nominal market quotation of about 89. We are advised by a prominent banking firm, however, that if more than two or three of these bonds sought a buyer the market might take wing and fly away. Still, we don't see why this should be so. Cuba's credit, to a certain extent, is predicated upon the moral responsibility of the United States Government, and the default of any Cuban bond seems most improbable.

A. P. D., MISSOURI. No sounder investment security has been devised than a properly executed farm mortgage on valuable land and buildings. Such mortgages usually pay the investor 6 per cent. net and may be obtained in amounts of $1,000 up and in maturities of from one year to ten years or more. Under the conditions you have named we believe you will find a Western loan applicable to your needs. Write to a number of farm-loan bankers and obtain lists of their offerings.

T. B. D., OHIO. Sound railway equipment bonds or notes, maturing serially 1916–23, are sold on a yield basis, ranging from 4.10 per cent. to 5.25 per cent., according to the credit of the road and the kind of issue. Such issues as Atlantic Coast Line 4½s; Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg 4½s; Hocking Valley 4s, Seaboard Air Line 5s, are regarded as gilt-edged investments. In railway reorganizations equipment bonds have usually come ahead of mortgage issues and are paid in full by court decree.

R. C., KANSAS. (1) Wabash preferred "A" stock seems to be a more attractive speculation and, in every present way, a better purchase than Rock Island. (2) Yes, Rock Island Railway stock, selling now around $17 per share, is the same stock that was selling in 1894 above $200 per share, but that was before a gang of financial cutthroats had strangled the road and robbed it of about every material asset that wasn't spiked down to the ties. Somewhere between one hundred and fifty millions and two hundred millions were lifted from the stock and bond holders' pockets.

Mrs. T. C. P., CALIFORNIA. Scores of new motion picture companies have sprung up all over the country, and their stock issues are being sold on the strength of the alleged fabulous profits in the business of producing film plays. Stock-selling prospectuses read like the literature of get-rich-quick mining promoters. Much of the stuff printed in them is moonshine. If the established companies operating with vast equipment and liberal capital cannot make more than a fair return on the money invested, how much less can a new concern hope to make money? Keep away from such risky schemes.

F. A. D., MARYLAND. (1) We cannot supply the information you seek in regard to farm mortgages. If you will write to the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., you will probably be able to get the facts. (2) The farm property in the United States is valued at $40,991,449,090. In reply to your other queries we would reply as follows:

	1915
Gold in circulation	$600,777,874
Silver in circulation	223,583,944
Gold certificates	1,076,637,759
Silver certificates	482,713,988
United States greenbacks	332,035,994
National bank notes	786,643,647
Federal Reserve notes	80,501,710
Miscellaneous currency	2,245,710
	$3,585,140,626
Per capita	35.59

J. A. A., MICHIGAN. Your $4,000 might be invested in the following bonds:

	Price	Income
Harlem River & Portchester R.R. Co. $25,000 1st Mortgage 4s, N & M; due May, 1954	94½	4.30
Southern Railway Company $50,000 St. Louis Division, First Mortgage Gold 4s, J & J; due January, 1951	84¼	4.95
Milwaukee Electric Railway & Light Company $25,000 Gen. and Refunding Mortgage 5s, Series A, J & D; due December, 1931-1951	92½	5.70
Seaboard Air Line Railway Company $100,000 First & Cons. Mortgage Gold 6s, Series A, M & S; due September, 1915	99½	6.00

The last-named bond, unlike the other issues, is not a very seasoned security, and its present price and approximate yield of 6 per cent. indicates its semi-speculative character. The bond is, however, a direct first mortgage lien on 416 miles of road, 86 miles of which are under construction.

This page went to press February 8

6% FARM MORTGAGES

Large and small amounts. Our Mortgages are selected with care, and secured by the choicest lands only.
33 years' experience without the loss of a Dollar.
Send for descriptive booklet "O" and list.

E.J. LANDER & CO.
GRAND FORKS, NORTH DAKOTA
ESTABLISHED 1883
Capital and Surplus One-Half Million Dollars

We're Right on the Ground

5½% Investmei
in Chicago's Business Cen r

Security over 2 to 1. Actual pres t net earnings over 2½ to 1.

First Mortgage Bonds of $500 and $1,000 denominations secured by one of the best paying modern office buildings in the business center of Chicago. Substantial serial payments provide rapid increase in the margin of security. An investment especially suited to investors requiring positive safety and good yield.

Ask for Circular No. 910C.

Peabody, Houghteling & C .
(Established 1865)
10 South La Salle Street Chic o

Stocks and Bon s ON THE PARTIAL PAYMENT PL N

Our convenient method enables you to buy dend-paying Stocks and Bonds in any amou one, five, ten, seventeen, forty—by making a s first payment and balance in monthly ins ments, depending upon what you can affor pay, $5, $10, $25, $40, $75. You receive all divid while completing payments and may sell secu at any time to take advantage of rise in ma

Free Booklet E-2 "The Partial Payment Plan." Gives full information of this method which appeals to thrifty men and women in all parts of the country.

Sheldon, Morgan & Co.
42 Broadway, New York City
Members New York Stock Exchang

Chas. S. KIDDE & Co.
INVESTMENT BANKERS Est 1 8

Test Our Reliability

by advising with us regarding your vestments. We will be glad to render service to Christian Herald readers. deal in Municipal Bonds, one of the sa forms of investment known, because principal and interest is secured by a on property. Your Savings Bank b these Bonds.

Write for offerings yielding 5% to

W.C.T.U. B'ld'g. Chicag Ill.

"MY purchases of Municipal nds from your House have alway een most satisfactory."

Many expressions of good-will simi to the above have come to us since th war started.

We shall be pleased to serve you.

BOLGER, MOSSER & WILLA AN

29 S. La Salle St. Chicago, Ill.
Or izod 1 4

Buy Tax-Protected Bonds N w

While you can obtain the obligations of commi ies in the rich Central Valley of the United States. We can offer you school, road and drainage district all prime improvement bonds, in $1,000, $500 and eve 00 amounts. They will pay you from 4% to nearly %—prices are advancing, write for lists TODAY.

Be sure to have your name placed on our maili list for the new investment magazine, "Inve ment Factors"—sent without charge or oblig tion to all interested in investments.

BOWMAN, COST & COMPANY
Investment Bankers
615 Third Nat'l Bank Bldg. St. Louis o.

400 r. p. m. Chalmers Has Might Without Sacrifice of Pick-Up

This 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers has lots more spirit and go her than her horse-power rating suggests.

As a matter of fact, she is capable of developing super-ous power—more than nine men out of ten dare use.

Chalmers engineering attained an extraordinary peak power in its early laboratory and road tests.

But Mr. Chalmers refused to put his O. K. on an engine superfluous power.

He made a personal analysis of the matter of supreme eed and issued this memorandum to his Engineering epartment:

"I am gratified to note the wonderful performance of e 3400 r. p. m. engine, but we cannot sacrifice acceleration mere might. Keep the horse-power down, get long ileage on gas and make the car perform, because road-ility is one of the big factors in a car of today."

So the Chalmers engineers toned down the horse-power; tained a saving of 33 per cent in fuel; got 18 miles to the llon; and acquired magnificent acceleration results.

And all this without changing the bore and stroke or en the speed of the engine.

She "turns up" 3400 revolutions per minute, which means better than 56 per second.

It's this high velocity to the turn of the crank-shaft that gives the engine such extraordinary power.

Few engines of this size surpass a speed of 2200 r. p. m., and none even approximates the horse-power that this delivers.

Such remarkably high speed in an engine means a crank-shaft that is balanced to the weight of a hair, pistons that perform perfectly, connecting rods that are down to the last gram, but strong.

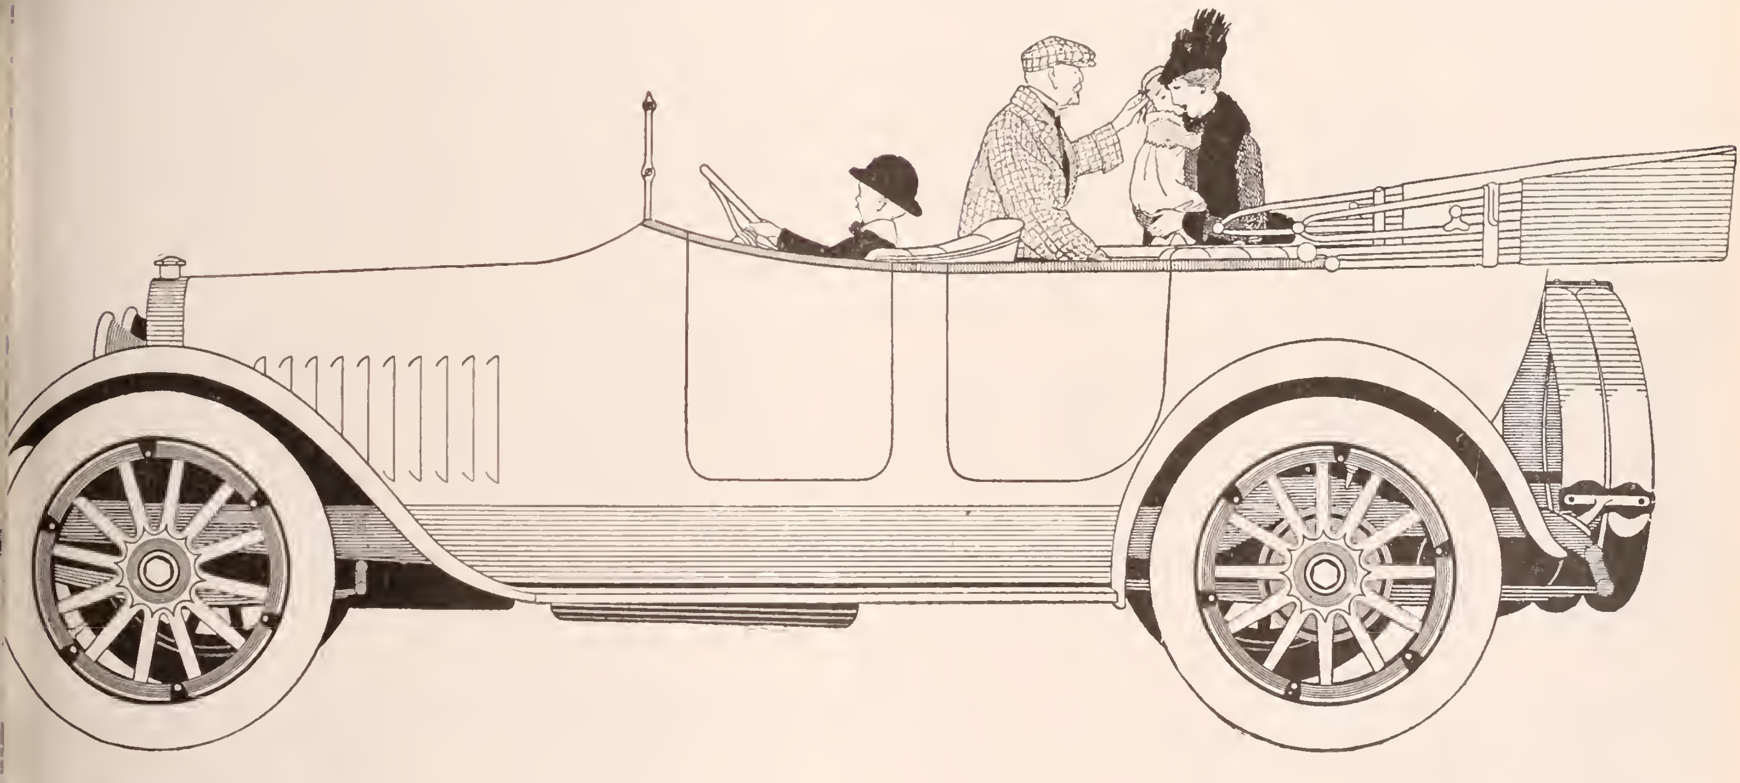
Which is another way of saying the last throb has been removed from the engine.

One look at the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers will stimulate your imagination, and one ride with your foot on the accelerator button will make you feel that here is the car you must own.

The Chalmers dealer is waiting in your town to let you try it.

$1050 Detroit
$1475 in Canada

Chalmers Motor Company Detroit, Michigan



CHALMERS · MOTOR · CO
CMC
Detroit, Mich., U.S.A.

Quality First

DAME NATURE HINTS

When the Food is Not Suited.

When Nature gives her signal that something is wrong it is apt to be with the food. The old Dame is always faithful and one should act at once.

To put off the change is to risk that which may be irreparable. An Arizona man says:

"For years I could not safely eat any breakfast. I tried various kinds of breakfast food, but they were all soft, starchy messes which gave me distressing headaches. I drank strong coffee, too, which appeared to benefit me at the time, but added to the headaches afterward.

"A friend persuaded me to quit coffee and the starchy breakfast foods, and use Postum and Grape-Nuts instead. I shall never regret taking his advice.

"The change it worked in me is wonderful. I now have no more of the distressing sensations in my stomach after eating, and I don't have headaches. I have gained 12 pounds in weight and feel better in every way.

"Grape-Nuts makes a delicious as well as a nutritious dish; and I find that Postum agrees perfectly—never produces dyspepsia symptoms."

"There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof and as durable as oil paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r., 109 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.

The Chinese Woolflower

introduced by us last year has proved a great success everywhere and a most wonderful floral novelty. It is a Celosia of new form and easy growth. Plants throw out scores of branches bearing balls of crimson wool nearly a foot thick. Also many laterals with smaller heads, and fresh green foliage. Flowers form in June but none fade before frost, continuing to expand and glow with its wonderful crimson-scarlet color, very showy and succeeds anywhere.

Seed per pkt. 10c., 3 for 25c., together with new TRAILING PETUNIA AND ANNUAL SWEET WILLIAM (fine novelties) free.

Our Big Catalog of Flower and Veg. Seeds, Bulbs, Plants and rare new Fruits free. Write for it.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Inc., Floral Park, N. Y.

AGENTS GET AUTO

This is no selling contest where only one person wins. Anybody can get this auto by introducing our line of guaranteed hosiery for men, women, and children. Must wear one year or replaced free. A brand new proposition that beats them all. Write for particulars.

THOMAS MFG. CO. 8924 Rome Street DAYTON, OHIO

TELL ME YOUR FOOT TROUBLES

It will ease your Mind;
I will ease your Feet.
Enlarged Joints Reduced
and Toes Straightened by

ACHFELDT'S
"Pefection" TOE SPRING

Worn at night without inconvenience, with auxiliary appliances for day use. Sent on approval. Money refunded if not as represented.

Use My Improved Arch Supporter for "Flat Foot" and broken down instep. Send outline of foot. Full particulars and advice in plain sealed envelope.

M. ACHFELDT, Foot Specialist, Marbridge Building,
DEPT. D-B 1328 Broadway (at 34th St.), NEW YORK

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE

of pure bred poultry; 70 breeds illustrated and described, many in color. Perfect poultry guide—all facts. Low prices on stock and hatching eggs. Incubators and brooders. 23 years in business. You need this book. Send 10c for it—today.

B. H. GREIDER, Box 14. Rheems, Pa.

What is the Matter With the Panama Canal?

Continued from page 215

"A system of retaining walls that would not yield to the earth pressure of such a mass would be a costly affair, especially as there is no solid rock to make a strong natural foundation for such a system." (The italics are ours.)

Naturally there have been many theories as to the cause of these enormous earth movements, some attributing them to seismological disturbances, others to geological instablity.

THE theory has been held by some that the land is rising on the isthmus just as continents have risen from the waters and that earth movements, whether from earthquake fractures, faults or other causes, have been known there for hundreds of years. The instability of the so-called "rocks" on Panama when subjected to water has been known as far back as the day of John F. Wallace, the first chief engineer of the canal.

That the slides at Panama are due to this geological condition is the written opinion of Mr. Robert Brewster Stanton, who handled the enormous "slides," or in reality subsidences, on the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia more than a decade ago.

Mr. Stanton was the railway engineer who surveyed the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, and his monograph on the Great Landslides on the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia is published in the Transactions of the British Institute of Civil Engineers in London under date of December, 1897.

Specifically, the geological condition is that certain strata in Culebra Cut (aud presumably at Gold Hill), where the big "slides" have taken place, when subjected to water dissolve into sand or a loblolly of mud.

Mr. Stanton not only attributes the Panama Canal slides to this conditiou, after experiments to support his views, but he points out that Gatun Dam and a part of the Gatun locks rest upon an equally precarious foundation. Mr. Stanton wrote:

"On account of my previous experience with just such material (borings from the Panama Caual), I became very much interested as early as 1908 in the nature of the so-called 'rocks' in certain strata of the Culebra Cut and those on which part of the locks at Gatun were to be built, and also those underlying the greater part, if not all, of the Gatun Dam. Early in 1909 I discussed these couditions in iuterviews and by correspondence with eminent engineers, some of them connected with the various Panama Canal Commissions. I stated to those gentlemen that the chemical composition of the underlying rocks was sure to cause more aud more the great slides, so-called, in the Culebra Cut; also that this same material underlying part of the Gatun Locks and the greater part of the Gatun Dam, was (and it is) of such a nature as to make it possible some time in the future when that material, described by the geologists of the Canal Commissions as 'indurated clay' and again as 'argillaceous and calcareous saudstone,' should become completely saturated aud changed into a loblolly of mud, for the locks and the dam itself, not to slide, but to subside, to slump into a lake of soft, slimy mud and be totally destroyed."

While Mr. Stanton did not state that such a calamity was sure to happen, he did say that the conditions existed to cause just such a calamitous outcome. His deductions, he states, were drawn from three sources: The official published reports of the Canal Commission of 1907; the testimony of engineers who had served on several of the Canal Commissions and Boards of Examination, and his own studies of the Canadiau Pacific landslides in British Columbia.

Mr. Stanton points out that the same material and the same conditions exist today under the locks and under the dam that existed under the great land "slides" in British Columbia, and that the same moving force is being applied; that is to say, the still water of Gatun Lake.

He said: "There already exist under the dam in the argillaceous sandstone the beginning of those 'loblolly lakes' of the same 'rock' already melted into slimy mud, just as are found under and caused the British Columbia slide.

"That the 'mud lakes,' as I call them in their first stages of formation, exist today under the dam is shown in the borings and they are separately platted on the section sheets in the Canal Commission's report of 1907. There is where I got my information of their existence.

"These 'mud lakes'—far down below the bottom of the dam itself—will increase in size as the water is forced into them (from the water lake above) and the 'rock' surrounding them becomes supersaturated. When they become large enough, and become semiliquid like pea soup, they will be incapable of sustaining the weight of the material above them."

IN the greatest slide in British Columbia it took six years, according to Mr. Stanton, from the time the water was first applied, to form the great submerged mud lake to a sufficient size and proper consistency. Then, as he says, in a moment, 155 acres of earth and boulders dropped 400 feet vertically into the slimy ooze below and pushed the lower end of the mass out three quarters of a mile from its head.

"Thus," writes Mr. Stanton, "after six years of getting ready, there was moved in almost the winking of an eye more than half as much material as the preseut total excavation of the whole Panama Canal and nearly five times as many cubic yards as are contained in the Gatun Dam."

That Mr. Stanton did not keep his knowledge of these conditions to himself is shown by his statement that his conclusions and facts were laid before the editor of the Engineering News early in 1909 aud he, the editor of the News, at once wrote them to Mr. Ernest Howe, the geologist of the Canal Commission, whose geological report on the canal appears in the Commission's report of 1907.

According to Mr. Stanton, Mr. Howe replied under date of March 11 that "it hardly seems fair to me to compare rocks from an arid region of the West with rocks of such an excessively humid region as Panama."

"The fact is, however," writes Mr. Stanton, "the rocks in question of the two regions are almost identically the same, chemically and conditionally, and the history of the past five years (from 1909 to 1914) shows that they act in exactly the same way in Panama under complete or supersaturation as they do in British Columbia, and from the same cause; that is, by the addition of sufficient water under proper conditions.

"Previous to 1909 Alfred Noble (another well-known engineer) had made experiments while in Panama on dry pieces of the argillaceous sandstone and from borings on the Culebra Cut, and he stated to me on March 2, 1909, that when they were put into a basin of water they in a short time completely dissolved and fell down in sandy slime on the bottom just as the rock did in British Columbia. And hence the present slides, the causes being identically the same."

Mr. Stanton states that John F. Wallace (the first chief engineer of the Panama Canal) if not others, made tests of the borings of this material from the dam's site, and they acted when soaked in water just as Mr. Noble's samples from Culebra did.

"We call the Panama Canal a great work," Mr. Stanton concludes, "and it is great; but when Gatun Dam is compared with the aggregate contents of the seven slides along Thompson River, near Ashcroft (the Canadian Pacific slides already referred to), it is but a shovelful of earth and rock, and when it becomes opposed to the forces of nature, such as acted in British Columbia, and are now so acting in the Culebra Cut, if such shall ever come to

MONARCH TOMATO

BUIS

Absolute the largest and nest main crop T ato. At maturity ich, glossy pink per fectlysmooth; ar velous flavor. A profuse and cont ous yielder, holding to size throughou the season. Pkt., 15c; 4 pkts., 50c.

BUIST'S EARLI-BELLE TOMA

It matures extremely early in the son and for that reason is known among ket gardeners as the "Early Money To o." Without doubt it is the best early. kt., 10c., oz., 35c; ¼ lb., $1.

Buist's Garden Guide mailed Free on ica cation. Write for a copy today.

ROBERT BUIST COMPA Y
Dept. M. PHILADELPH PA.

How can I Ea n Mone ?

ANY WOMAN will ive a satisfactory answe this question if she will just w to us. Whether you have only an hou two a week, or full time, our plan wil ty you well for what you do. Ours is onest, straightforward, time-tried way that has inc d the cash earnings of thousands of women. You ask favors of anybody. If you will only try, we will help yo make money taking orders for and underwear—at mill-to-wearer prices. Our li s complete and includes a variety of fabrics, weight tyles, colors, grades. Your customers buy from you pre ly the goods they desire and need at prices they are sed to pay. Satisfaction guaranteed. No experience ssary. Our "Money Back" outfit, FREE fabric samples a Guide to Success" will start you toward a pleasant, anent business of your own. We pay all express. Pro deliveries. Write for details.

Planto-Silk Ho e

Malloch Knitting Mills, Dept. 703, Grand Rapi Mich.

Money for East r

Over 800 Church organizations are ing extra funds selling

Brewster Chocolate and Cocoa

You can do it too.
No capital requi .

Write today for particulars.

Brewster Cocoa Mfg. Co., Jersey City, J.

30 DAYS FREE T IAL

and freight prepaid on the w 1916 "RANGER" bicycle. Write at ce for our big catalog and special offer Improved Models, prices re d. Extraordinary new offers. You not afford to buy without getting latest propositions. WRITE TODAY. Boys, be a "Rider Agent" make big money taking orders for bi es and supplies. Get our liberal terms o sample to introduce the new "RANGER TIRES, equipment, sundries every thing in the bicycle line half usual pric A few second-hand bicycles $3 to $8 to clear.

MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. G-71, C CAGO

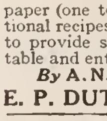
The Best Dish She Makes

"From House To Ho e"

Every recipe in this book is the special p of a notable housewife. The interleaved sheets o nting paper (one to each two printed sheets) are additional recipes. This book is not to teach coo g but to provide some specially good dishes for t home table and entertaining. $1.50 net at booksel s.

By A. N. Furgerson and Constance Joh n

E. P. DUTTON & CO. NEW ORK



Buy Nobema Colors an Get

FREE

Complete Correspondence Course in Show Card and Sign Writing in Chicago School of Lettering—including nice set of brushes—All FREE. Offer made solely to have you try the Famous ready-to-use NOBEMA COLORS. This free course gi practical training and, with NOBEMA COLORS and brushe u can earn big money or establish paying Show Card and Sign iness of your own. Most anyone can learn. Illustrated circ s and information FREE. NOBEMA SM. MFG. CO., CHICA

FREE

Our handsome 1916 Seed ata logue. Fully illustrated i lors. Reliable seeds at bargain p es. A full line of garden and flow eeds Cherry's Famous Dependable Seed fresh and reliable, are used by successful gardeners everywhere. Send your name and address on a postal for a copy of our bargain catalog.

SEE S

Chas. J. Cherry & Co., 212 Vine St., Rock d, Ill.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.

DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

YOU CAN AFFORD Familiar Song of the Gospel (No. or 2 . Round or shape n . $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 83 songs, words a music.

E. A. K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, IN ANA

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. anufacturers want Owen Paten Send for 3 free books; invention anted, etc. I help you market your invention withou harge.

RICHARD B. OWEN, 63 Owen Bldg., Washingt D. C.

hysical
ictory!

Wt Does It Mean to ou?

means that yccan be Strong Vorous — full ofLife and En-er—Realize The Bt Within Your-sc for yourself, your faily and friends.

ou can be free from Chronic Ailments.

ou can have a Clear Skin.

ou can have a Good Figure.

ou Can Weigh What You Should Weigh

no longer need to say what "I can d" but what "I HAVE DONE". I he helped 75,000 of the most cultured, inlligent women of America to arise to tr very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

y pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.

hink I do not exaggerate when I say I have b t up the vitality and strength of more wnen during the past eleven years than any ten p icians—the most progressive physicians are my fids—their wives and daughters are my pupils—the medical magazines advertise my work.

Expressing Poise—Balance—Ease

I am at my desk from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M. personally supervising my work. When in Chicago come to see me.

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent, and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense. Fully one-third of my pupils are sent to me by those who have finished my work.

I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly, and giving other information of vital interest to woman. You can judge what I can do for you by what I have done for others.

If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend—at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement for perfect health, greater culture, refinement and beauty in woman. Won't you join us?

it down and write to me NOW. Don't it—yon may forget it. I have had a wonful experience, and I should like to tell you about it.

SUSANNA COCROFT
pt. 18, 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

e fact that Miss Cocroft has advertised in this magazi for 14 years is evidence that she accomplishes what sh laims. Rand McNally & Co. have just published he ew book, "Beauty a Duty." For sale at all bookse s. Beautifully bound.

THIS IS THE WAY

O MAKE MONEY

any woman who has had no special training and wants to earn money, I ild recommend nothing better than selling World's Star goods. When I rted in this work I had never done soliciting of any kind. The money, ned on my first day's orders was twice as much as I ever made before e to $7.00. What other work is there that a woman can do to earn that ount? One cannot help but succeed with World's Star goods, and enisiasm. Both will lead to success.

So writes Mrs. G. H. Littlefield, of Orego .

From Mill to Home

World's Star
Hosiery and Klean-Knit Underwear

Lower Prices Higher Values

Ve Have Helped More Than 9000
bitious, deserving women. You can do the same as they have done. Sell orld's Star Hosiery and Klean-Knit Underwear in your home town. No evious experience is necessary—we show you how to make money in an y, congenial and profitable way. We are known everywhere. Our advertis makes sales easy the quality holds the trade. PROMPT DELIVERIES d PROTECTED TERRITORY. Our free catalog tells the whole story

WORLD'S STAR KNITTING CO.
DEPT. 110 BAY CITY, MICH.

ARGAINS IN SEEDS
Hundreds of special offers in seeds and plants at bargain prices. Don't buy until ou have seen our beautiful new catalog and special eral offer, mailed free if you mention this paper.
owa Seed Co., Dept. E., Des Moines, Iowa

DER'S PASTILLES For 50 yrs Standard Relief for (Inhalation) Asthma
All Druggists; or by mail, 35c.
OWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

pass, the stability of its broad base as noted by Mr. Vaughan Cornish would be as a sheet of tissue paper."

Mr. Cornish, to whom Mr. Stanton refers, is an eminent English engineer and expert, who said of the Gatun Dam: "It stood solidly in spite of the looseness of its material, and it was so broadly based that it had not sunk into the soft ground, although of great weight."

AT a meeting of the British Association about two years ago Mr. Cornish also expressed the opinion with respect to the slopes of the sides of the Culebra Cut, that all the engineers of the International Board appointed by President Roosevelt in 1905 had gone astray in their reckoning. The geologists, too, had likewise failed to foresee the collapse of the side after the slope had been reduced to one vertical on three horizontal, the engineers having stated that the slope would stand at three vertical on two horizontal.

According to Mr. Cornish both engineers and geologists had neglected to take account of the chemical composition and the minute mineral structure of the underlying rocks of which they had specimens by borings. Some of these, he stated, lay for the most part in thin seams and were completely disintegrated when even a little rain-water reached them, and when the pressure became considerable as depth was reached in the cut, they flowed like sand. When these disintegrated seams were below the bottom of the cut, the pressure frequently heaved up the bottom to a height of twenty feet. This trouble Mr. Cornish then thought would continue for a long time.

That he was correct in his belief so far is shown by the fact that the worst slides have been of very recent date.

In an article published two years ago, Carroll Livingston Riker, a well-known Brooklyn engineer, stated that he made borings in 1908 under the Gatun Dam site and produced similar results to those described by Mr. Stanton. He also wrote:

"Where the slides in the cuts of Culebra occurred, the blasted rocklike material when exposed to air or water quickly turned to mud. It will likely continue to ooze from the sides of the cut like cream from a layer cake—the dam at Gatun on a foundation in spots no stiffer than sausage, with its possibilities."

The Gatun Dam, of course, was made necessary to control the flood waters of the Chagres River. The original conception was that of Lindon W. Bates, then a Chicago engineer. The present writer recalls a discussion of this subject with an engineer who had made a critical examination of conditions on the Isthmus who at the very inception foresaw the possibilities described by Mr. Stanton, with the difference, as he expressed it, that there was no bottom or foundation upon which to build a dam. Millions of tons of excavations from the canal have entered into the construction of this dam, which must necessarily contain quantities of the material which dissolves so easily under the influence of air and water, as well as the underlying material of the dam.

That the government has at last been aroused by the frequency and magnitude of the slides, if not a realization of what may impend for Gatun Dam, is shown by the fact that President Wilson appointed a large commission of geologists and engineers to make an examination, from whom a report is soon expected.

FROM the nature and causes of the slides themselves, as pointed out by various authorities, and in view of the possibilities so graphically pictured by an eminent engineer, Robert Brewster Stanton, the country would seem to be confronted by these momentous questions:

Can the slides at Panama be ended or controlled? Will Gatun Dam subside into a loblolly of mud? Will the Panama Canal ever become a practical waterway between the Eastern and Western Oceans?

The Art of the Artisan

Continued from page 226

employed to increase radiating surface and decrease size, while the skill of architects has found ways of placing the radiators out of the way with no appreciable loss of efficiency in heating. The radiators have improved as well in design so that if they must be visible, they can be ornamental. The day has also passed in which radiators upstairs must be served by pipes traversing the rooms below. The pipes now go up inside the walls, and even the connections are unobtrusive.

MOST of us can remember the day of the zinc bath-tub enclosed in a wooden box of wainscoting, and of other bathroom equipment about as inartistic. The modern bath-tub is iron, enameled a pure white inside and out, and set into the walls and floors without a square inch of space left anywhere for lint and dirt to accumulate. The other items of necessary furniture are of the same white enameled ware, and floor and walls are tiled in white with perhaps a simple line of color in frieze or panels. Metal not enameled is nickeled, and towels hang on glass bars. Your bathroom can be a thing to delight the eye.

When it comes to the lighting of the house, art and comfort and efficiency go hand in hand. When some of us were young a chandelier was a monster of heavy iron and pendant glass which bore flickering gas flames that seemed almost discouraged by the magnificence of their setting. When the electric light first entered the home, the chandeliers seemed to be built on the principle that the light must be held not less than six and a half feet from the floor, and that magic level was connected with the ceiling by convolutions of polished brass tubing that were a paradise for the humble housefly. Today our gas and electric fixtures are lacking in useless ornament, but are rich in decorative qualities; and we are coming to appreciate the value and comfort of indirect lighting which permits us to hang our lights near the ceiling and walls, and relieves both our eyes and sensibilities.

In short, wherever metal appears in your home, it may add to or complete the impression of oneness and good taste. In the andirons and the firedog of your fireplace, in the candlesticks upon your mantel, and in the vase of beaten brass or copper that stands upon the hearth with its cluster of pussy willow or of dogwood, your guests may perceive the touch that marks the individuality of your home.

WHEN next you buy a nail or a washer or a brass-headed tack, look about you; you will see that, after all, hardware is more than a utility and that your hardware store is as full of works of art as the picture store next door.

Art is more than pigments on a canvas, and the artisan who works in metals is not a whit behind the artist who wields the brush and pencil. In fact, the artisan who molds beauty for the service of mankind may have the higher art. Louis E. Orcutt.

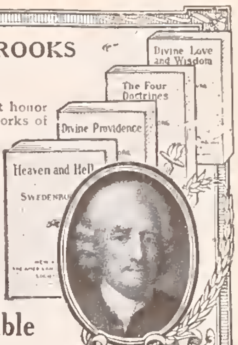
◆

IN furthering their Five Year Program the Baptists of the Northern Convention are taking account of stock in the field of education. They find that they now have in their denominational schools about 10,000 young men and women. They plan to increase this number to 15,000 during the five years. They find that 5,000 Baptist young people are students in various state universities and colleges, and that the spiritual guidance of these is being directed by nine student pastors giving their full time to the work and by nine other pastors giving part of their time. They mean to have 25 full-time student pastors as a result of the Five Year campaign. They find that there are now only 545 students in their theological seminaries and that they will need 4,500 new ministers and missionaries by 1920. Therefore, they are striving to increase the number of theological students to 1,000. They note that Northern Methodism raised $6,000,000 for education in one year and they feel certain that an endowment of a like sum can be raised by Northern Baptists in five years. The total immediate need is estimated at more than $13,000,000.

PHILLIPS BROOKS
Says:

"I have the profoundest honor for the character and works of Emanuel Swedenborg. I have from time to time gained much from his writings."

Swedenborg's religious and ethical teachings are based upon a wonderfully profound interpretation of



The Holy Bible

They will help you personally to a rational understanding of the word of God,—to a clearer conception of the spiritual significance of creation; of the joys of heaven and the miseries of hell; of the process of dying and the life of the real man; and of what the final judgment consists.

Swedenborg's Works
5 cents each volume, postpaid

Printed on excellent paper, in large readable type, substantially bound in stiff paper covers

"Heaven and Hell" .... 632 pages
"Divine Providence" .... 629 "
"Four Leading Doctrines" .... 635 "
"Divine Love and Wisdom" .... 618 "

Free distribution would involve unwarranted waste, so we make a nominal charge of 5 cents for each volume, postpaid.

Address all orders to

The American Swedenborg Printing and Publishing Society
Room 720 3 West 29th Street, New York

BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
Keep the Voice Clear

You may depend upon them to relieve hoarseness, ease the coughing, and to stop the irritation in the throat. The new carries conveniently in pocket or purse. Use the Troches as needed—contain no harmful drugs. Regular sizes 25c, 50c and $1. At all druggists.

10c TRIAL SIZE BOX

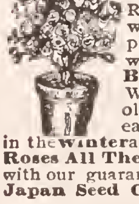
We will mail any size upon receipt of price, if your dealer cannot supply you.

JOHN I. BROWN & SON, Boston, Mass.
Dept. 84

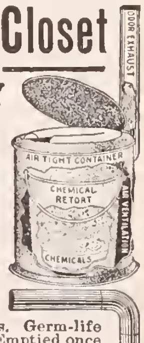
JAPANESE ROSE BUSHES
Five for 10cts.



The Wonder of the World
Rose Bushes with roses on them in 8 weeks from the time the seed was planted. It may not seem possible but we Guarantee it to be so. They will BLOOM EVERY TEN WEEKS Winter or Summer, and when 3 years old will have 5 or 6 hundred roses on each bush. Will grow in the house in the winter as well as in the ground in summer. Roses All The Year Around. Package of seed with our guarantee by mail, only Ten Cents.
Japan Seed Co. Box 202 South Norwalk, Conn.

Comfort Indoor Closet

ODORLESS SANITARY
GERM-PROOF



Every home without sewerage needs one. Most convenient, meritorious home necessity in a century. A boon to sick people. Can be placed anywhere in house.

Makes Outdoor Privy Unnecessary

Put a warm Comfort Toilet in your home; a guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions. Germ-life killed by chemicals in retort. Emptied once a month—no more trouble than throwing out coffee grounds. Needs no other attention. Boards of Health endorse it. Write now for literature, prices, etc. Agents wanted—exclusive territory.

Comfort Chemical Closet Co.
542 Factories Bldg. Toledo, Ohio

WOULD YOU
show this standard high grade 42 key fully visible typewriter to your friends and let them see wherein it excells any other $100 typewriter, if by doing this and rendering other small assistance, you could easily have one GIVEN YOU to keep as your own? Then by post card or letter to us simply say, "Mail Particulars."
WOODSTOCK TYPEWRITER CO., Dept. F 176, Chicago, Ill.

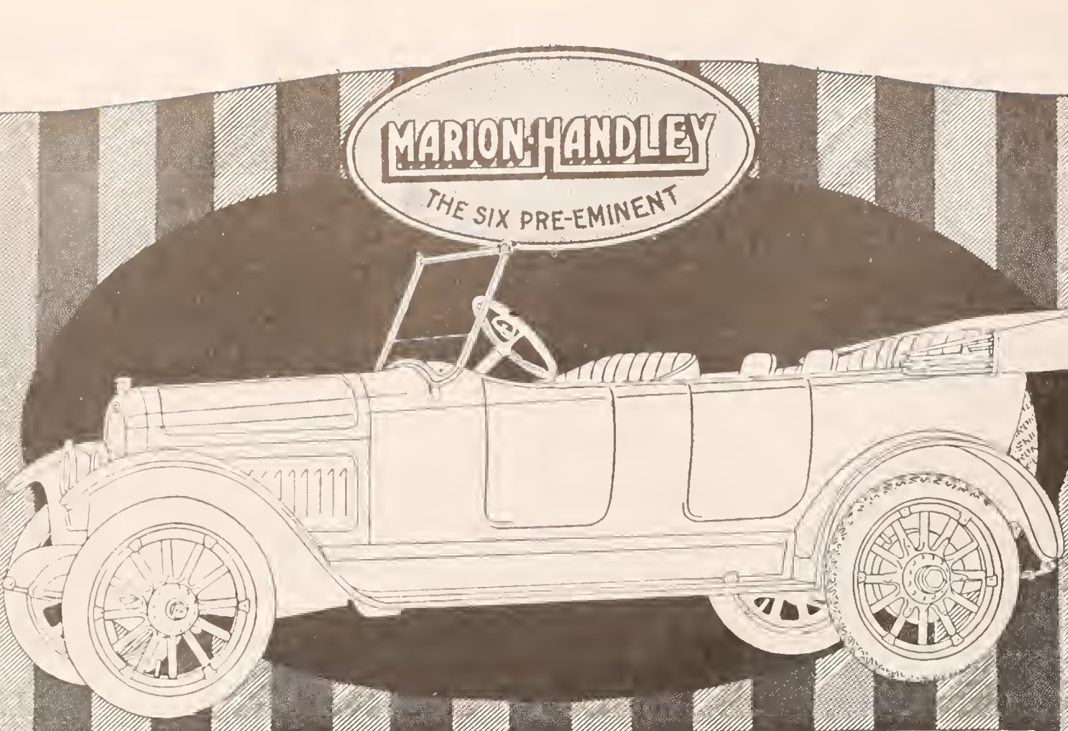
BE THE COUNTY REPRESENTATIVE of a large Nursery. You can make good money taking orders for trees and plants right now while thousands of people in all sections are placing their orders for spring planting. We offer 2,000 varieties and pay you weekly for your work. No delivering. Glen Bros., Est. 1866, 1792 Main St., Rochester, N. Y.



Seven Passenger—Six Cylinder—$1185

They said we couldn't do it—but we did

When just one year ago I expressed a determination to build a seven-passenger, six-cylinder automobile—light in weight, economical in gasoline and tires, with plenty of room and—

All those detail refinements associated with highest priced cars, yet—

Stocky, sturdy, finely upholstered in real leather, easy riding, and—

Sell this car at $1185, they said: "It can't be done."

They said: "It is foolish to think of building a roomy, thoroughly comfortable seven passenger car on a 120-inch Wheelbase."

They said: "You can't use 100% thrust genuine annular ball bearings in the front wheels."

They said: "You can't use genuine imported Sheffield steel springs."

They said: "You can't use an axle as sturdy and as expensively built as those being used on the other cars selling at from two to four hundred dollars more."

They said: "You can't build a thoroughly comfortable and roomy seven-passenger six and keep the weight down under 2700 lbs."

They said: "You can't hand paint the car, using twenty coats of paint and the finest finish varnish."

They said: "You can't use the genuine long grain bright finish leather."

They said: "You can't build into a car, at this price, all of the style and snappiness demanded by the purchasers of high grade seven-passenger cars."

And they kept on coining "can'ts" and shooting them at me until they had me wavering for a moment.

But I believed it could be done, and I finally found, one by one, a corps of men of wide experience and proven strength in the doing of things that are hard to do, who believed with me that it could be done.

And when we all agreed unanimously that it could be done we took off our coats, rolled up our sleeves and said: "We'll do it."

And now, after just one year, by infinite attention to even the smallest detail—

By the utilization of every inch and fractional inch of space—

By the most careful and scientific balancing of every part and unit—

By the most thorough search of the world's markets for the best materials of the lightest weight—

And above all, with the one fixed purpose in mind that it can be done—must be done—will be done—we have done it. The car is a revelation of what can be done when a group of capable workers set their hearts to a task with unswerving courage and determination.

J. I. HANDLEY, Pres.

Our Full 1916 Line of Sixes Exclusively

MARION SIX	MARION-HANDLEY
Five-Passenger Touring, $1090	Seven-Passenger Touring, $1185
Five-Passenger Sedan, $1190	Four-Passenger Roadster, $1185

Write for particulars and name of nearest dealer

THE MUTUAL MOTORS COMPANY Jackson, Michigan

A Talk About Geor e Washington

Continued from page 231

upon his head, as bare an' smoc as one of my china plates, and he in a sort of a apologizin' axent:

"Of course, I know I hain't got any hairs of any kind; but I'll defy y to look 'em all over and find a jealo one amongst 'em, but I tell you in', Samantha, George Washington w n't perfect."

"No, I dare say he had some h ian faults, or else he would have sprea his wings and flowed up above all the ou-ble an' turmoil an' envy and cal my of this spear, above the icy col an' starvation of Valley Forge, an' led over the Delaware, instead of r in' his life with his hungry, half-clad my among the crushin' ice blocks. t I can't help comparin' him in my ind to some of the statesmen of today ow instead of tryin' to enrich himself ith the spoils of office he refused the ifts of his grateful countrymen. I n't help comparin' his dignity with t rn, how, instead of electioneerin' roun the country hotfooted for office, usi all sort of oratory, homemade an' re ed, an' different kinds of wind to blov im ahead, gittin' money from them igh up, an' caterin' to lower elemen to secure election, how George's gr ful countrymen had to seek him out nd fairly pry him away from the iet private life he loved so well."

I FELT real eloquent as I said his, but mebby gittin' my metaf a little mixed up. It's dretful ha to always git your metafors halter-b ke, and travelin' ahead on you in a str ht line, specially when you're doin' h se-work; but my meanin' wuz all righ in' Josiah knowed it.

But his linement still looked gl ny and depressed, an' I well knowe he reason; jealousy wuz to the bottom 't, an' I did ag'in' what many a f ale pardner has done in the past, an ill do in the futer—shade down an' s en the sharp edges of truth to moll a companion.

"No doubt," sez I, "George w n't perfect, for even the sun has spots an' the new-fallen snow, they say, as microbes in it."

Josiah's face lit up, an' he sez, ' es, that's jest what I told you, Sama a; an' speakin' of microbes puts n in mind of vittles. You know the is so much said about 'em in pure od laws. An' what do you say to my l g-in' on the teakettle and havin' a tle lunch, a cup of your good coffe an' some fried cakes and cream ch se? I didn't eat much supper, an' it is ch a cold night, a bite of sunthin' v ld come good."

"Yes, Josiah," sez I. "I'll mak he coffee. But, as I was a sayin', G ge Washington——"

Josiah wuz puttin' on the teak le, an' I shall always believe he let it sh over a purpose, so the loud sizzle o he water on the hot stove would dr nd out my voice. He didn't want to ar another word about George Was ng-ton, an' wuzn't goin' to.

◆

THE death is reported from T yo on October 29 of the Rev. D id Thompson, D.D., and on Novemb 21 of the Rev. Theodore M. MacNair, wo noted Presbyterian missionaries. Dr. Thompson was born in Harrison Cou y, Ohio, September 21, 1835, and wa he first ordained missionary of his ch ch to be sent to Japan. He worke six years before he baptized any one. Ir. MacNair's activity lay in evange tic and itinerating work, but his lasting nd perhaps his greatest service to he Church in Japan was in connection th its hymnology.

REV. W. E. BROWNING, Sant o, Chile, writes: "The crisis a-sioned by the European war still r-sists in Chile, but I feel that the w st is over; business men are beginnin to regain confidence, the saltpeter indu ry in the north, where, as a school, we st heavily, is again opening up. od financial prophets are anticipating at 1916 will be a banner year for all Ch ."

Ms. Weary Changes Her Mind

The First Week

Mr Weary is hanging out part of her washing just as her neighbor, Mrs. Wise, is taking in the last of hers. "My" says she, "is it possible your wash is all done? I'm only half through and I'm nearly dead."

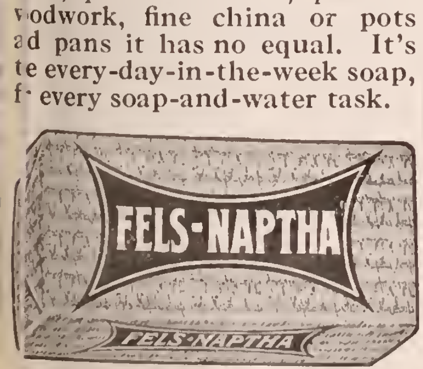
My dear", says Mrs. Wise, "In sure you don't do your washing my way—or I'd better say, the Fels-Naptha way. If you did, you could get through just as soon as I; cut out all hard rubbing—and see how white and clean my clothes are?"

"Now here's a cake of Fe-Naptha. If you'll follow my advise you'll use it for all housework. I couldn't get along and do all the work I have to do, and keep well and strong if I didn't have Fels-Naptha Soap to help me."

The Next Week

Mrs. Weary and Mrs. Wise have a ace. Mrs. Wise beats Mrs. Wary by only a few minutes in getting her clothes on the line. "Just think", says Mrs. Weary, "here I've saved hours of hard work and yet my clothes really look better than they did when I wore myself out to get tem clean. Indeed I'll never b without Fels-Naptha Soap. I does all you said and more."

Fels-Naptha Soap will do the hrd part of your work for you. I is a perfect combination of sap with naptha and other vnderful cleansers. For tiled fors, porcelain tubs, painted vodwork, fine china or pots ad pans it has no equal. It's te every-day-in-the-week soap, f every soap-and-water task.



Fels & Co., Philadelphia

The War in Europe

Continued from page 220

With precisely this field Lord Kitchener is in all respects more familiar from actual experience in the very field than is any other officer of high rank in Great Britain or among all the Allies.

The British government, as a result of a further advance in ocean freights, even above the extraordinary figures quoted herein last week, is about, it is creditably reported, to undertake a general control over all shipping. Not only will this control be exercised over freight rates, but the destination and use of the vessels will also be regulated. Very possibly this will mean additional trouble for the American exporter, particularly to South America, Australia and Africa, as the great majority of the vessels in which American exports are carried to these continents are British, in view of the tremendous shortage of hulls which Great Britain is experiencing.

IN Albania early in the week the Austrians occupied the town of Kroia, crossed the Ishin River, took Triana, and proceeding southward formed a junction with the Bulgarians coming from the east at a point about five miles northeast of the important town of Durazzo, which was formerly held by the Italians. Probably the Austro-Bulgarian forces will have little or no difficulty in taking possession thereof almost immediately. The Italians state, however, that they will not surrender Avalona without a fight. As Avalona is a trifle over 50 miles south of Durazzo, and communications between the two towns rather poor, it will be probably a couple of weeks before the Italians and the Austrians and Bulgarians clash there.

In Greece itself the political situation as affecting the relations of Greece with one or the other set of belligerents has been very quiet. The King has called all the Greeks subject to military duty who reside outside of Greece, Turkey, Bulgaria and Rumania to the colors, which will cause the departure of a rather considerable number of Greeks from the United States.

During the whole week the Austro-Italian front was very quiet, nothing more serious disturbing the calm than an occasional artillery duel. For nine months now the Italians have been pounding away on the Austrian defenses, the Austrians and the Italians are all there practically in the same positions they were when the campaign opened. At the present rate of progress the Italians will hardly enter Trieste, or Trent this year.

Premier Briand of France has made a trip to Italy, ostensibly to persuade the military authorities there to enter the war, it is said, on a more extensive scale, but with what result we know not, though for financial reasons it is very doubtful whether Italy could extend her campaign even if she were willing to. There are also rumors that this trip had the further object of attempting to induce Italy to declare war on Germany, which, as my readers know, she has not done yet.

◆

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

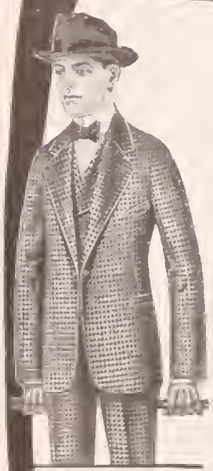
ONCE each month we insert in the paper a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose Christian Herald subscriptions expired at any time during the past month. If your copy has this subscription blank attached, please use it to renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR RENEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO OR THREE WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTENTION TO THE BLANK.

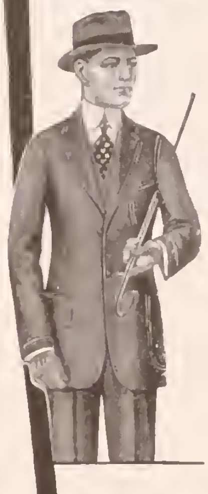
When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our premium books, Real People and Dreams, by Margaret E. Sangster, Jr., $1.85; Little Sir Galahad, $2.00; Luther in Light of Recent Research, $2.25; 555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered, $1.85; India Paper Red Letter Bible, $3.00; with your subscription, or a straight year's subscription at $1.50.

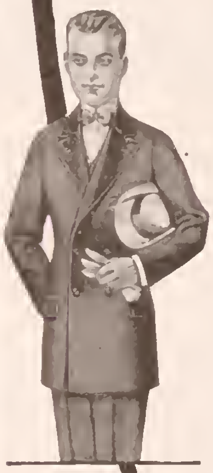
Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $2.25, or, YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND TWO NEW SUBSCRIPTIONS FOR $3.00. It is understood that the old subscriber must get the full subscription price of $1.50 from the new subscriber and must not in any way share the special price with the new subscriber.

Send money by postal or express money orders. Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Send for Style Book and 76 Samples FREE







DID you know that you could shop in New York by mail—get your clothes made to order in the latest New York fashions, tailored by the best tailors that money can employ, and obtain more satisfaction and better fit—at one third less cost and trouble than by visiting your local clothes shop?

This is the clothes service offered you by the Bell Tailors of New York. We send you our Style Book and 76 samples FREE, with our simple measuring outfit with which you can measure yourself as expertly as any tailor. We guarantee to fit you perfectly from the measurements you send us or you pay nothing.

By serving yourself in this way you save yourself at least $6.50 on better clothes than you could possibly obtain in any other way. This is not merely a claim—but a guarantee—a guarantee backed by more than 37 years' service to the men of America.

We can save you one third because we have no salesmen, no agents, no out-of-town representatives of any kind. We sell direct to you the wearer, by mail, and thus eliminate all these great in-between selling costs. We guarantee to make you a real smart

$20 Suit to your measure $13.50

Remember—you get the finest custom tailoring New York can produce; you get the smartest and newest New York styles, and 100% fit guaranteed. You get real clothing luxury for $13.50 that could not possibly be obtained elsewhere for less than $20.

You take no chances in buying Bell Clothes. You are protected by the most liberal guarantee which says the clothes must fit and please you in every respect, or you need not keep them. Dun's, Bradstreet's, and several big banks are your protection.

Style Book and 76 Samples FREE

Don't think of buying your new Spring suit until you have seen what styles and materials will be worn this season. You will find them in our beautiful illustrated style book, with 76 liberal samples of the season's smartest fabrics.

It will lay our proposition before you, and show you conclusively how we can save you at least a third of your clothes money. It costs you nothing and is as valuable as a check for $6.50. Send for it tonight without fail.

BELL TAILORS OF NEW YORK
Dept. C
115 Walker St., New York

SUIT or OVERCOAT $13.50
It Will Save You Many DOLLARS
The BELL Tailors OF NEW YORK

BELL TAILORS, Dept. C, 115 Walker St., New York City
Please send me FREE Style Book and Samples.
Name
Address
State

Why You Are Not Completely Successful

Pupils are men and women, ranging in age from 14 to 92.

I KNOW that I can easily, quickly and positively prove to you that you are only half as alive as you must be to realize the joys and benefits of living in full; and that you are only half as well as you should be, half as vigorous as you can be, half as ambitious as you may be, and only half as well developed as you ought to be.

The fact is that no matter who you are, whether you are young or old, weak or strong; rich or poor, I can prove to you readily by demonstration that you are leading an inferior life, and I want the opportunity to show you the way in which you may completely and easily, without inconvenience or loss of time, come in possession of new life, vigor, energy, development and a higher realization of life and success.

Become Superior to Other Men. The Swoboda System can make a better human being of you, physically, mentally and in every way. The Swoboda System can do more for you than you can imagine. It can so vitalize every organ, tissue and cell of your body as to make the mere act of living a joy. It can give you an intense, thrilling and pulsating nature. It can increase your very life. I not only promise it, I guarantee it. My guarantee is unusual, startling, specific, positive and absolutely fraud proof.

Why Take Less Than Your Full Share of Life and Pleasure? Are you living a full and successful life? Why not always be at your best—thoroughly well, virile, energetic? Why not invest in yourself and make the most of your every opportunity? It is easy when you know how. The Swoboda System points the way. It requires no drugs, no appliances, no dieting, no study, no loss of time, no special bathing; there is nothing to worry you. It gives ideal mental and physical conditions without inconvenience or trouble.

Originator of Conscious Evolution

Your Earning Power, your success, depend entirely upon your energy, health, vitality, memory and will power. Without these, all knowledge becomes of small value, for it cannot be put into active use. The Swoboda System can make you tireless, improve your memory, intensify your will power, and make you physically just as you ought to be. I promise it.

WHAT OTHERS HAVE TO SAY

"Can't describe the satisfaction I feel."

"Worth more than a thousand dollars to me in increased mental and physical capacity."

"I have been enabled by your system to do work of mental character previously impossible for me."

"I was very skeptical, now am pleased with results; have gained 17 pounds."

"The very first lessons began to work magic. In my gratitude, I am telling my croaking and complaining friends, 'Try Swoboda.'"

"Words cannot explain the new life it imparts to both body and brain."

"It reduced my weight 29 pounds, increased my chest expansion 5 inches, reduced my waist 6 inches."

"I cannot recommend your system too highly, and without flattery believe that its propagation has been of great benefit to the health of the country."

"My reserve force makes me feel that nothing is impossible, my capacity both physically and mentally is increasing daily."

"I have heard your system highly recommended for years, but I did not realize the effectiveness of it until I tried it. I am glad indeed that I am now taking it."

"Your system developed me most wonderfully."

"I think your system is wonderful. I thought I was in the best of physical health before I wrote for your course, but I can now note the greatest improvement even in this short time. I cannot recommend your system too highly. Do not hesitate to refer to me."

"I note from your System a marked strengthening of my will power and concentration. I feel the interest of life much more keenly."

"The cigarette habit has been completely mastered. Your System has removed the craving entirely."

"Conscious Evolution did more for me than all of the tobacco cures in the country."

MY NEW COPYRIGHTED BOOK IS FREE. It explains the SWOBODA SYSTEM OF CONSCIOUS EVOLUTION and the human body as it has never been explained before. It will startle, educate, and enlighten you.

My book explains my new theory of the mind and body. It tells, in a highly interesting and simple manner, just what, no doubt, you, as an intelligent being, have always wanted to know about yourself.

You will cherish this book for having given you the first real understanding of your body and mind. It shows how you may be able to obtain a superior life; it explains how you may make use of natural laws to your own advantage.

My book will give you a better understanding of yourself than you could obtain from a college course. The information which it imparts cannot be obtained elsewhere at any price. It shows the unlimited possibilities for you through conscious evolution of your cells; it explains my discoveries and what they are doing for men and women. Thousands have advanced themselves in every way through a better realization and conscious use of the principles which I have discovered and which I disclose in my book. It also explains the dangers and after-effects of exercise and of excessively deep breathing.

Write today for my Free Book and full particulars before it slips your mind.

You owe it to yourself at least to learn the full facts concerning the Swoboda System of conscious evolution for men and women.

ALOIS P. SWOBODA, 1914 Aeolian Building, New York City, N. Y.

Young People's Topics for March 5

The Consecration of Strength

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Ps. 29 : 1-11 (Consecration Meeting)

YOU will notice that the subject of the first meeting of every month throughout the year is something about consecration. The January meeting considered the question: "What is Consecration?" The February subject (postponed by Christian Endeavor until the second Sunday) was: "The Consecration of Influence." Today we consider "The Consecration of Strength." After this are to follow "The Consecration of Time," "The Consecration of Talent," "The Consecration of Money," "The Consecration of Purpose" (second week), "The Consecration of Friendship," "The Consecration of Home Life," "The Consecration of School Life," "The Consecration of Social Life," "The Consecration of Business Life."

It is good to get this long look ahead today, because we see how this subject, "The Consecration of Strength," can be made to apply to all the subjects that will follow. These manifold consecrations will need power to make them effective. And today we consider power.

Divide the lesson study into two parts. It means first that we consecrate to Christ the strength we now have, and it means that we consecrate ourselves to Christ in order to get his own power into our lives.

Every kind of strength we have must be brought to Jesus and yielded up to him for his blessing. Strength of mind, strength of body, strength of will, strength of spirit, strength of influence, strength of love. It is a splendid thing to be strong. John declares in his First Epistle, chapter 2, verse 14: "I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong." St. Paul exhorts, I Cor. 16 : 13: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong!"

The early conceptions of the meekness and gentleness of Jesus led many artists to represent him as a weakling. Very few of the early paintings of Jesus express the strength, the grandeur, the force, that we know now to have been in him. He welcomed little children and women to his service and fellowship, but his call was one that has appealed to the strongest men of the race. The earliest martyrs and missionaries; the great reformers, Wyckliffe, Luther, Zwingli, Hus; the more recent apostles, Wesley, Asbury, Finney, Moody, General Booth, Bishop Taylor; the splendid army of foreign missionaries—these have shown the world what it means for human life to be strong. The consecration of their native strength to Jesus gave them, even in mind and body, still greater strength.

But of even greater importance is the fact that when the strength of a human soul is consecrated to Jesus he puts into that soul his own infinite, divine power. That is the meaning of the last verse of our Scripture lesson: "The Lord will give strength unto his people." There are scores of promises in both the Old Testament and the that God will give his own powe any soul that will yield itself to And to get this divine power there be no native strength. "He gi power to the faint; and to them have no might he increaseth streng

This should be an exhilarating, ultant meeting. Remember P confident words, "I can do all th through Christ who strengtheneth Sing or read Dr. Babcock's hy "Be Strong."

"Others" as a Watchword for Christ

Epworth League. Phil. 2:3-5; Matt.

WE are constantly having tro with our grammar in the " other" and "one another" busi getting our singulars and plurals tan Evidently the King James transla had the same sort of difficulty. eighth-grade pupil of today w find fault with the translator rendered Paul's words: "Let each est others better than themselves." has been fixed up in the Revised sion, which reads: "Each counting o better than himself." But the gr mar of the translation makes l difference. The thing is not to parse matter but to do it—really to c other people better, and more wo of consideration, than ourselves. T is only one way to do that, and th to love other people better than love ourselves. And there is only way that can be done, namely, letting the matchless Jesus touch change our hearts.

It is all summed up in that tech word "altruism," which we hav use so often in talking about this ter. This means that the real int and concern and ambition and d of life is centered upon others ra than upon self. Even people wh not recognize the authority of J do recognize that this is the only s ble and scientific way for mankin live together. There are about a bi and a half people in the world. If one looks out for himself, he has one person looking out for him. If each one were looking out for all rest he would have one billion hundred and ninety-nine million hundred and ninety-nine thousand hundred and ninety-nine people loo out for him. A human body that as the human race now lives woul desperately sick. That is what sick is. One cell or a small group of out of the many millions in the b decides to live and work for itself ra than for all the rest. That means and trouble; it may mean death. world has had many thousands of trying to make the selfish plan of a success. What the outcome is best be seen and heard in the cries groans, the flowing tears and bloo Europe. Is it not time the world r gave Jesus a chance to show that plan is best? Paul summed it all u his earnest advice: "Bear ye one an er's burdens, and so fulfil the la Christ."

Saved By a Plow

GEORGE A. ROBERTS of the Methodist mission at Old Umtali, South Africa, tells the story of Abraham Kowadza and his conversion. This Kowadza was an important man in his village. He had three wives and much property and he first awakened to the value of the white man's civilization when he heard of the white man's plow. He had a conference with the missionary and arranged to purchase a plow and to be instructed in its use.

The plow reached Kowadza's station before the missionary and Mr. Roberts found it turning the soil although it had been improperly put together and the oxen had not been trained to the work. Kowadza was greatly pleased and his wives were more than pleased as they saw the plow turning over easily the hard soil which they had been accustomed to hoe with much effort and perspiration.

Through the medium of the Kowadza and his wives became i ested in the white man's knowle and as the plowing was all done b nine and in the afternoon, the w family attended school for three h in the morning. The school se was in the nature of a morning pr service with a short sermon, and instruction was given with the Testament as a text book. The h spent in the study of their New T ments brought to Kowadza and wives rapid advancement in moral spiritual things, and they finally pressed a desire to unite with the ch The church, however, would not ceive polygamists, and it was a g sorrow to Kowadza and his family they could not be admitted.

After two years in which admis to membership had been many t refused on the same grounds, Kow

WHEN J. Warren Kerrigan, the popula movie star, buys his PAR GARTERS, he asks for the by name very distin ly. He knows that whn he simply asks for gar rs he may not get thegenuine.

25 and 50 cents

Vhen you say "PARIS GARTERS" to our merchant he knows you w t the best. Look on the back ofhe shield for the name PARIS.

. Stein & Co.
Cheago New York

PARIS GARTERS
No metal can touch you

STRAWBERRIES give the Quickest, Biggest and Surest Profits of Anything You Can Grow

Th work is so easy and simple tha even beginners make big profits fro the start. Our free book tells how.

Kllogg's Everbearers

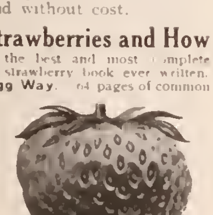
pr uce big crops of big, fancy berries fro June until November. Light freezing loes not affect their fruiting. Thberries are in great demand. Price ranges fro 30 to 45 cents per quart. Three months aft plants are set, your profits begin. Our fre ook tells the rest.

Kellogg Strawberry Garden

wi add beauty, pleasure and profit to your ho. Get our free book and learn how to su y your entire family with delicious strawbe es the year round without cost.

G at Crops of Strawberries and How tc Grow Them, the best and most omplete strawberry book ever written. Fu explains the Kellogg Way. 64 pages of common se actual experience, str erry facts, pictu gal re. Kellogg fr book, Kellogg fr ervice and Ke lo Pedigree Plants in your success. O book is worth its w t in gold — costs y nothing. Send for c today. A postal w lo.

R I. KELLOGG CO.
Box 670
T e Rivers, Michigan



HI WEST VIRGINIA & VIRGINIA FARMS offer opportunities for ou. 20.00 per acre up. Easy payments. Mild climate -n ng cold or hot spells. Social Life, Fertile Soil, oo Markets—High Prices—On Railroad—Convenient T ns. Write for free magazine and other information. LaBAUME, Agrl. Agt., Norfolk & Western Ry., 27 & W. Bldg., Roanoke, Va.

earl Grit Aids digestion, makes shells, makes eggs, makes feathers, makes gth. Send for prices and free valuable booklet. Write to-day.
e Ohio Marble Co., 318 S. Cleveland St., Piqua, Ohio

SAMPLE OUR SEED

Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce, 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.
C. N. Robins n & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

and his wives went to the British native commissioner and had the two more recent marriages annulled. Kowadza and his wife and the two women were then received on probation, remaining faithful for more than two years, when they were admitted to membership.

Kowadza took the name of Abraham when he was baptized, and he built a little chapel in his village and conducted morning prayers for his own family and the families of his brothers and the villagers. The men, women and children from the village, instead of carousing, are all attending school and church in a neighboring village.

Two evidences are given of the genuineness of Kowadza's conversion:

Kowadza had an old grandmother who was nearly blind. It is the African custom to cast out the old women and many of them die from exposure and lack of food. Kowadza took unusual care of his old grandmother and fearing that her life might cease before she had accepted his Christ, he himself brought her to church and she stood at the altar supported by Kowadza and his mother.

In Africa twin babies are held to be a visitation from the evil spirits and are killed at once. Twins were born to Kowadza and his wife. Instead of killing them he recorded their births in the family Bible he had secured from the missionaries and held a great feast to celebrate the christening.

◆

I'm Going Home

Continued from page 217

A fellow just told me that the Bowery's over on Third Avenue, so I'm going 'cross town. It's slower going 'gainst the wind. It's bitter cold. Can't feel anything in either foot. They're just two wooden feet that I'm stumbling along on. I can't keep from bumping into the buildings. I think I'll quit pretty soon. I'll lie down in the snow. It's deep enough to make a fine bed. My chin feels like a piece of wood when I try to move it. My face feels the same. I just keep on quietly sniffling and wondering how long those old feet of mine will go on walking. They've been walking one hundred years and fourteen days. That junk sign I nearly fell over reminds me that's what I am—I'm just junk.

There's something tangled around my old wooden legs, and I'm falling. I'm lying here in this good warm snow, resting. I'm thinking about that Father that's waiting for me, but he's too far away. I got to sleep. . . .

SOMEBODY'S trying to pull me up onto my feet. It's a cop, I guess, so I'm trying to tell him that I'm all right, just stunned a bit from falling, that's all. But he's dragging me into a warm place. Guess it's the jug all right.—It isn't a cop, after all. Just a poor old Chinaman. He's brought me into his laundry, and he's making me drink some hot water. It's burning all the way down, but I don't care; it feels so good. Say, he's a good fellow all right. Say, some day I'm going to have that Chinaman do all my washing. Say, I got to get square with him after I get home.

That's where I'm going, I'm going home. I'd forgotten that for a while. But my Chink friend wants me to stay. But now I feel so good. Say, that China fellow put paper linings in my coat sleeves and over my chest. So I'm on my way. I'm going home. Don't never say nothing against Chinamen again, for they're all right.

That paper lining cuts the wind off fine. I'm going down Third Avenue and I feel mighty sleepy. I feel so peaceful I guess I'm nearing home. I'm not afraid of the cops any more; because I know I got a Father not very far away. A fellow just told me it's only two more blocks to this Bowery place, and it's on this same side of the street. Say, isn't that fine?

But I guess I missed count, 'cause I can't find it. He said, "There are two lights in front of it, you can't miss it." Now I see the lights. Yes, there they are, two of them, and there's that sign, "Bowery Mission." It's that home I've come so far to find. I'm home at last. home! home with that Bowery Father!

End of First Instalment

KNOX
SPARKLING GELATINE
(Granulated)

Where can you find so attractive and tempting a dessert as this Snow-Pudding made with Knox Sparkling Gelatine?

Recipes for this and other dishes in every package, or send for our new for your grocer's name. Pint sample for 2c stamp and grocer's name.

1916 Recipe Book FREE

CHAS. B. KNOX CO., INC.
1409 Knox Avenue
Johnstown, N. Y.

WHEEL CHAIRS and TRICYCLES

A Wheel Chair is often an invalid's greatest comfort. We offer over 75 styles of invalid's rolling chairs and tricycles with latest improvements. Ship direct from factory to you and sell on

THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL

Liberal discounts to all sending for FREE Catalog now.

GORDON MFG. CO.
369 Madison Ave., Toledo, Ohio

Plan cheery, cozy rooms

Write today for your copy of our most helpful book for the finishing, decorating and beautifying of home—"The House Outside and Inside." There are eighteen color plates of fine houses and interiors. You see the actual effects and read just how they are secured, not only as to the finish but as to the rugs, draperies and curtains. The cozy bedroom in the picture is one of the interesting interiors described.

FREE!

Just send your name—the book is free

It is gladly sent you to show the wonderful transforming and beautifying effect of Lowe Brothers Paints, Varnishes, Stains and Enamels that insure best results. In writing, ask the name of your nearest "High Standard" dealer if you don't know him, and write today.

The Lowe Brothers Company
470 E. Third Street, Dayton, Ohio
Boston New York Jersey City Chicago Kansas City Minneapolis
Lowe Brothers, Ltd., Toronto, Canada

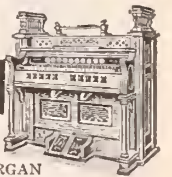
"First Aid to Poultry Keepers"

Free Book Just Out

Written by man who has devoted his life to poultry—book teems with pointers and real secrets on how to raise more and better chicks, get 100% hatches, produce prize winners. Tells how to save money on incubators and brooders--illustrates many with very latest improvements. Needed by beginners, farmers and others. Write today--edition limited. Model Incubator Co., 28 Henry St., Buffalo, N. Y. Also 39 Barclay Street, N. Y. C.

Going Fast-Write To-day

ADLER'S PLAN SAVES HALF



Before you decide on an organ for Church, Sunday School or Young Peoples' Society, you should get my big FREE ORGAN BOOK and details of my direct-from-factory selling plan. I will save you big money.

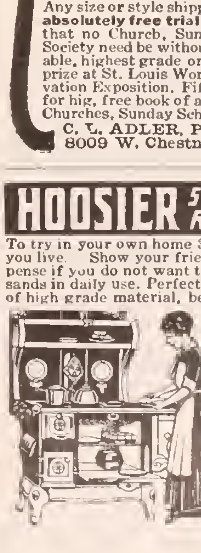
CHURCH ORGANS

Any size or style shipped freight prepaid for 30 days absolutely free trial. Price so low and terms so easy that no Church, Sunday School or Young Peoples' Society need be without a sweet-toned, resonant, durable, highest grade organ. My organs won highest prize at St. Louis World's Fair and National Conservation Exposition. Fifty year guarantee. Send postal for big, free book of all styles of organs for homes, Churches, Sunday Schools, etc.

C. L. ADLER, Pres., ADLER ORGAN CO.,
8009 W. Chestnut Street, Louisville, Ky.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your own home 30 days free, no matter where you live. Show your friends. Send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of thousands in daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, made of high grade material, beautifully finished, smooth design, guaranteed for years by our Two Million Dollar Bond.



Ask your dealers to show you Hoosier Stoves. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today. Write your name and address plainly. No obligations.

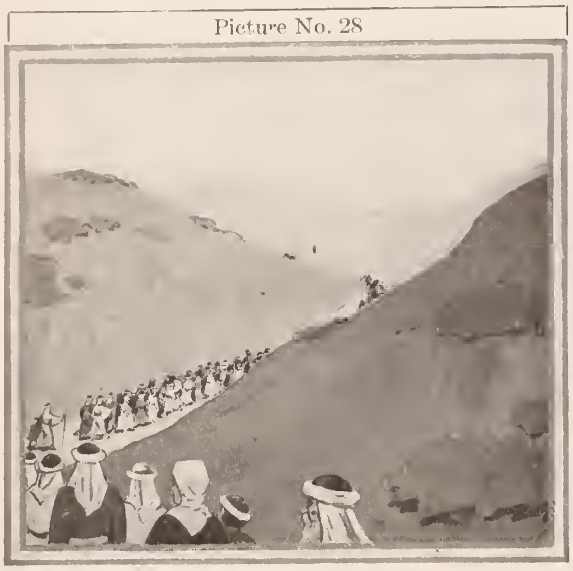
HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

How Well Do You Know Your Bible?

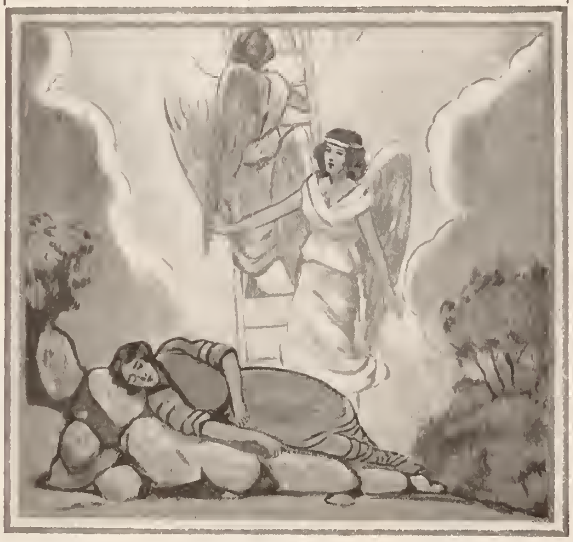
BEGIN FINDING OUT TO-DAY

Start Now to Enjoy This Fascinating and Educational Bible Picture Contest

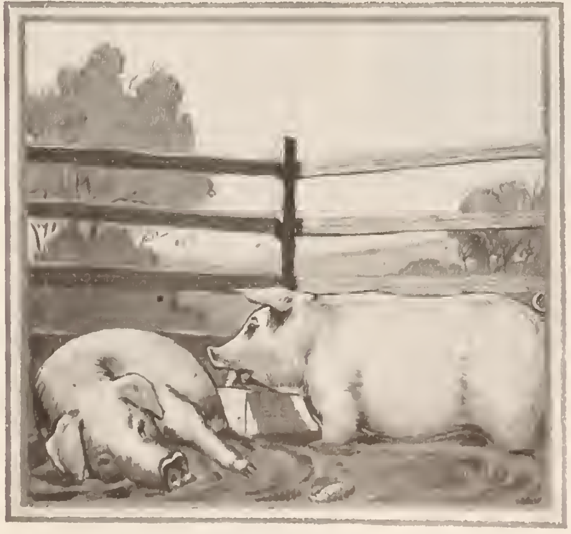
Picture No. 28



Picture No. 29



Picture No. 30



You can obtain the 27 preceding pictures, "Gems from the Bible," containing 2,000 Bible verses (all that are eligible as answers in the Contest), and the Reply Book, in which to write your answers. Then you will have everything right at hand with which to proceed.

Test Your Bible Knowledge

Glance at these Pictures. Can you think of Bible verses that might fit them? Ask members of your family and friends to look at them, too.

There will be 60 Pictures in all.

Rewards aggregating $3,500.00 will be given to solvers. The first is to be $1,250.00 in gold, the second $625.00—and there will be 417 other rewards.

Apart from the cash rewards, there will be the far greater one for you and for every other contestant—the educational value.

You will remarkably train yourself in practical efficiency by improving your perceptiveness, your ability to think, and your memory. But above all, you will add astonishingly and in a delightfully easy manner to your knowledge of the Bible.

Let us send you Full Information. It explains this Contest, showing how you may enter it and succeed in more ways than one.

Merely write a letter or use a post card. Ask for Full Information about the Bible Contest. It will be promptly mailed you.

Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Personality in Laughter

A CHEERFUL personality penetrates like the sun and all can obtain this valuable asset by cultivating scientifically the seeds of kindness in their nature, no matter how long they have lain dormant, prevented from a natural growth by the weeds of discontent and moroseness.

Begin your study of personality by laughing. While you are dressing in the morning, laugh; and if it sounds unnatural and harsh do not stop, for this is your elementary exercise. If I prescribed dumbbells and you were awkward in the use of them the first few times you certainly would not throw them away; therefore don't lay aside your laugh. Continue to laugh at frequent intervals during the day, especially during meals, for when you learn to laugh properly it not only produces a pleasing personality, but positively improves your health. Laughing correctly aids digestion, vibrates the diaphragm, relaxes and rests the body, promotes deep breathing, relieves nervous tension and expels worry. The body should be relaxed, the shoulders raised and the head allowed to sway when you laugh. Start a tremulous laughing hum with lips closed. Now gradually open the mouth and sound the vowel O, running the scale up or down.

The sound of O can be changed to Ah, or you can alternate the two. The open laugh of Ah with throat relaxed gives excellent quality of tone, suggests frankness, and is the best example of a pleasant laugh. Continue the exercises I have suggested by striking center G on the piano, running down an octave with the voice in harmony with the piano, repeat, starting a tone lower each time. This will train you to laugh naturally and musically.

Enlist other members of your family to join in these daily exercises. Your progress will be more rapid and there will be more pleasant personalities in the household.

Some people condemn laughing, maintaining that it mars beauty, having a tendency to cause lines in the face. I deny this and condemn their teaching, for the face often given over to laughter, when in repose assumes an expression of cheer and pleasure, just what we wish in our effort to gain a pleasing personality. If a laughing face is ugly and wrinkled, it is the spirit of the individual and not a wholesome laugh which brought about this condition. Cultivate a cheerful laugh and pleasing personality with a desire to give and not to receive. With your thoughts working thus you need not fear an unattractive line in the face.

A charming personality is an art, and art gives: great artists are great givers.

A laughing soul beams inwardly and outwardly through expression of body and sound of voice, creating that great charm, personality.

THEORA CARTER.
President, Society of Good Cheer.

Answers to Bible Contest Inquiries

WE will publish, from time to time, answers to the various questions asked in the Bible Picture Contest. As every point on which you are in doubt may have been previously answered, it is wise to consult the Rules and the answers given in former issues before writing us.

Question: "I note your announcement in the Advocate of a Bible Picture Contest. I am the local Superintendent of the Junior League of our Methodist Episcopal Church, and would like to know if this contest could be adapted to the Sunday afternoon work of the Leaguers. What do you think? I know something of the value of pictures in teaching."—M. S., St. Cloud, Fla.

Answer: Members of your Junior League can enter the Contest individually and submit separate sets of answers. It will be a good investment for each member to have the Christian Herald (containing the pictures), "Gems from the Bible" and the Reply Book—constituting the complete outfit. These will be sent for $2.00 for each member who wishes to enter the contest. A discount is given for three or more. The Christian Herald Bible Picture Contest is an excellent aid to Bible study and will be found especially helpful in Sunday school work.

The contest could be adapted to the Junior League of your city, as it is open to anyone. Subscribers to the Christian Herald have the practical convenience of receiving promptly each week a copy of the Christian Herald, containing the pictures and thus are able to work out the solutions without delay. Thus we would advise the members to subscribe individually, so they can go over the pictures [illegible]. Those unable to subscribe, however, may obtain an Outfit free by obtaining a new subscription for us.

Realizing that it would be a hard task for you to search through the entire Bible, containing over 30,000 verses, for the correct answer for each picture, we selected 2,000 verses which we have published under the title "Gems from the Bible." This contains available answers to the pictures. It was necessary to provide a uniform method of submitting the answers and for this we prepared the Reply Book. A person entering the contest can procure the Christian Herald for one year, "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book, for $2.00.

Question: Please enter me as a contestant in the Bible Picture Contest. I would be much obliged if you would tell me whether I have to be a subscriber to the Christian Herald. My mother has a subscription, but it will expire before the contest is over. Will I have to renew the subscription?—H. M., De Soto, Kan.

Answer: The Christian Herald Bible Picture Contest is open to all, whether subscribers or not. As the subscription to Christian Herald is in the name of your mother and will soon expire, we would suggest that she have it renewed, sending us $2.00. This amount will pay for a year's subscription to the Christian Herald, a copy of "Gems from the Bible" and the Reply Book. You can use the copies of Christian Herald which are being sent to your mother in order to have access to the pictures. Your answers to the pictures can be sent to us in the Reply Book, at the end of the contest, after the last picture has appeared.

Question: I should like to know if the person sending the replies may have help from friends.—Miss D. E. S., Amherst, Mass.

Answer: Casual, gratuitous assistance may be given and accepted in the Contest—which means that you must not go so far as to join in compiling completely identical sets of answers with others, or to the extent of controverting the rule that the answers submitted by a person must have been, generally speaking, worked out by that person. Within such limits, church congregations, Bible classes, Sunday School sessions, families, may unite the efforts of their members in solving the pictures, or contestants may form clubs and exchange selections of verses.

Question: I would like to know when the rewards in the Bible Picture Contest are to be paid. As yet I have seen no mention of this in the announcements of the contest. At the rate of three pictures a week, it will take seventeen weeks to print all the pictures. When all have been printed, will the prizes be awarded immediately the Judges have decided who wins?—Mrs. F. M. R., Wesleyville, Pa.

Answer: The Contest closes the early part of May. One month after that time will be allowed for submitting answers. Just how long it will take the Judges to pick the winners will depend upon the number of sets of answers sent to us, but the prizes will be awarded just as soon as the judges have selected the winners.

Question: Can more than one answer be given to each picture?—Y. K. W., Pittsburg, Pa.

Answer: You may submit more than one answer for each and every picture—in fact one, two, three, four or five verses. Your answer, or answers, for Picture No. 1 are to be written on the page of the Reply Book at the head of which "Picture No. 1" is mentioned; the answer(s) for Picture No. 2 on the page at the head of which "Picture No. 2" is mentioned; and so on.

Question: I am sending herewith answers to Picture Nos. 1, 2 and 3.—A. S. K., Chicago, Ill.

Answer: Answers are not to be sent us at this time, but at the end of the Contest. One month after the last picture has appeared will be allowed for submission of answers.

Question: Can the verses be used a second time if applicable to the sense of the picture?—J. V. C., St. Paul, Minn.

Answer: There is no objection to submitting a particular Bible verse as an answer for a certain picture even though you have also submitted that same answer for a different picture. There is nothing to prevent the Judges from affirming your choice in both cases if the verse is supremely applicable in both cases.

NEW DIXIE-ROOK EDITION
ROOK
WITH THE NEW GAMES DIXIE AND NEWPORT
PARKER BROTHERS
10
14
5 YELLOW
14 RED
10 RED

ROOK, the Greatest Home Game in the World

Played by Father and Mother by Boys and Girls
by Man and Wife
by Preacher and Teacher
by all who like a clean, wholesome game, full of fun, and skill, and unexpected situations.

50 Cents

AT ALL DEALERS or by mail from us

PARKER BROTHERS, Inc.
PARKER SQUARE, SALEM, MASSACHUSETTS

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

INVENTORS Do Not Sacrifice Your Inventions
Get full money value. RELIABLE Book Free. Write
R. S. & A. B. Lacey, 610 Barrister Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Lincoln and Lee agreed on one thing

Abraham Lincoln and Robert E. Lee differed radically on the one great question of their day. But on a single point they proved to be in complete agreement—the value of a policy in the Hartford Fire Insurance Company.

Both of these great leaders turned to the "Hartford" for insurance on their homes before the breaking of the storm of the Civil War. In 1859 General Lee took out a policy on "Arlington," his beautiful estate in Virginia, while President Lincoln insured his home in Springfield, Ill., just before he left for Washington to be inaugurated in 1861.

The documents relating to the policies of Lincoln and Lee are preserved in the vaults of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, for there is a true historic significance in the records of the

INSURANCE SERVICE
OF THE
TWO HARTFORDS

The Hartford Fire Insurance Company has helped make American history. Through every war, disaster and conflagration, the Old Hartford has met every honest claim promptly and to the satisfaction of its policy holders.

The Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company carries into the field of casualty and bonding insurance the same high principles and integrity that have always marked the history of the parent organization.

The two companies, between them, write practically every form of insurance but life insurance.

Check on the coupon below the kind of insurance that interests you most. Mail it to us and we will send you full information.

Hartford Fire Insurance Co.
Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co.
Hartford, Conn.

COUPON—CHECK—TEAR OFF MAIL

Hartford Fire Insurance Company, (Service Department C-2) 125 Trumbull Street, Hartford, Conn.

Gentlemen:

Please send information on the kind of insurance checked to the name and address written on margin of coupon.

☐ Fire
☐ Accident
☐ Health
☐ Auto Liability
☐ Auto Collision
☐ Auto Theft
☐ Auto Fire
☐ Baggage
☐ Motor Cycle
☐ Burglary
☐ Employer's Liability
☐ Workmen's Compensation
☐ Bonding
☐ Elevator
☐ Plate Glass
☐ Race Horse
☐ Tornado
☐ Hail
☐ Golfer's Policy
☐ Parcel Post
☐ Rent
☐ Merchandise in Transit
☐ Live Stock Transit
☐ Live Stock
☐ Sprinkler Leakage
☐ Marine
☐ Breeders and Exhibitors
☐ Teaming
☐ Salesmen's Samples
☐ Registered Mail
☐ Use and Occupancy
☐ Explosion

"I used those new style curtain rods

—that's why my new curtains hang so perfectly—and look at the French headings! No buckram or stiffening in them, either. The shape of the Kirsch Flat Rod keeps them erect. Best of all, my windows will stay beautiful. Kirsch Rods are GUARANTEED NOT TO SAG, tarnish or turn black—and they last for years."

Kirsch FLAT RODS
No sag (Patented) No tarnish

were the original flat rods. They have fairly swept into popularity. They overcome all the drawbacks of old-style curtain rods—simpler, more durable—not flashy or flimsy—and guaranteed not to sag or tarnish.

They fit any window—make any draping effect possible. Equally adaptable for simple windows or elaborate overdrapes and valances. Easier to put up or take down. The curves permit graceful draping clear to casing.

Kirsch Flat Rods are made in satin brass, Vernis Martin, oxidized copper, white or colors. They are sold only in sealed packages—everything complete for attaching. See latest style curtain rods at your dealer's. The name Kirsch is on the box, and the Kirsch guarantee label is placed inside every rod for your identification and protection.

Plan your curtains with this book

Write for free copy of "The Rod and Drapery Style Book." It's just what you've always wanted. Illustrates a dozen beautiful windows. Tells how to select draperies to blend with your walls, furniture, rugs, etc. Tells the rods used in each case. Tells also the excellent qualities of

KirschKraft Novelty Curtains
Guaranteed to hang straight because cut by the thread. Superior in materials, making, packing—and sold always one pair to the package, at prices no higher than for ordinary good grade curtains. In writing for book be sure to mention dealer's name.

The ROD and DRAPERY Style Book

Kirsch Mfg. Co.
31 Prospect Avenue,
STURGIS, MICH., U. S. A.

It's Free

The attractive window, pictured, with curtains and short valance draped on this single rod, No. 1A.

"The Sanitary" Individual Communion Cups

Convenient, Noiseless and Sanitary

The individual communion service permits an impressive ceremony. We introduced individual cups (many state laws now demand them). We make the finest quality of beautiful polished trays and supply thousands of satisfied congregations. Send for list of these churches and FREE CATALOG with quotations.

SENT FOR TRIAL

SANITARY COMMUNION OUTFIT CO., 67th St., Rochester, N. Y.

BECOME A NURSE

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.

Fifteenth Year.

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St., Jamestown, N.Y.

Army and Navy Liquid Glue

Odorless, Clean, Mighty to Mend

The ONLY liquid hide and sinew glue. Send 10 Cents and we will send you at once anywhere, postpaid, a large self-sealing container of this REAL glue.

Name of your dealer appreciated
STANDARD GLUE CO., Dept. C, Baltimore, Md.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.

Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio

Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

FOUR thousand six hundred and fifteen requests for prayer were received during the month of January. Some letters contained more than one request. The various requests as they were tabulated reach this large total. That is a good beginning for the new year. Rev. W. Fletcher Daum, pastor of Woodlawn Heights Presbyterian Church, New York, has organized a Billy Sunday Prayer Circle for the city. The evangelist has engaged to open his campaign in New York on January 1, 1917, and Dr. Daum is circulating a prayer pledge, requesting that all who sign unite daily at one o'clock in this petition: "Heavenly Father, send the Holy Spirit upon 'Billy' Sunday, thy servant, and help save New York. In Christ's name and for thy glory, Amen."

A telegram was received at the Christian Herald office on February 3, from W. E. Hales, Pikeville, N. C., asking special prayer that his brother-in-law might be healed of lockjaw.

A prayer circle has been organized at Biltmore, N. C., whose members ask the prayer of other praying Christians.

Rev. S. G. Haas, pastor of the United Brethren Church at Lititz, Pa., who has asked prayers on a number of occasions for success in his soul-winning work, writes that since his last letter 120 have sought Christ at the altar of his church and about 109 have professed conversion and been received into church membership. Pastor Haas is holding special revival services this month and asks the continued prayers of the League.

A friend writes from Pennsylvania: "After being in a hospital for the insane for five weeks I asked the prayers of the League. I acknowledge God's grace in restoring me to mental health. May he grant the same to others who suffer in this way. I also requested prayer for a young lady whose acquaintance I made in the hospital. I was surprised and pleased to see her soon after in an unexpected manner, much improved in health, so much so I had not known her for the same person."

A reader from Watertown, S. D., writes: "Some months ago I requested prayer for my brother-in-law for healing of an unsound mind. He began to recover soon, and is now fully recovered."

M. B. A. writes from Grand Rapids, Mich.: "Some time ago I asked prayers that my only son might return home. Thanks to our heavenly Father, he is at home." Miss B. M. B. writes from Carterville, Ill.: "I prayed for restoration of my health. I am now enjoying the very best of health."

Mrs. A. E. F., of Ashburn, Ont., acknowledges answered prayer for the conversion of her husband. She writes that he was wonderfully changed before his death, which occurred last year. She asks prayer for the restoration of her daughter to health, and for the conversion of her son.

Mrs. R. M. writes: "I want to acknowledge an answer to your prayers. My nephew and his family are united." Mrs. A. E. K. writes from Glasgow, Ky.: "Four weeks ago I asked prayer for the recovery of my sister, who was desperately ill. I wish to thank God that he heard and answered that prayer. My sister is now sitting up, and improving each day." Q. A. M. writes from Brooklyn, N. Y.: "The man for whom I asked special prayer last week for loss of speech regained it last Monday sufficiently to be understood. But he is still in a very nervous state; please continue to pray for him."

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have also been received from:

Mrs. E. P. W., Marshall, Texas; Mrs. E. S. T., Elroy, Wis.; M. M., Evansville, Ind.; Mrs. C. M., Sacramento, Calif.; Mrs. O. T., Kanute, Okla.; A Mother and Daughter, Franklin, N. H.; Mrs. C. H., Toledo, Ohio; F. M. B., Erie, Pa.; G. S. W., Junction City, Kan.; Mrs. M. D., Tecumseh, Kan.; A Reader, Ohio; Mrs. C. H. T., Overall, Tenn.; Miss V. B., Tigerville, S. C.; Mrs. S. L. S., Marysville, Pa.; Anxious, Glens Falls, N. Y.; Mrs. M. F., Andes, N. Y.; An Old Subscriber, Tunica, Miss.; Mrs. H. P., Marine City, Mich.; Mrs. S. A. S., Emporia, Kan.; Mrs. F. L. F., Evansville, Wis.; W. E. S., Carthage, Mo.; S. A. W., Albuquerque, N. M.; Mrs. J. C. A., Concord, N. H.; Mrs. M. W. P., Albion, Me.; J. H. O'N., Los Altos, Calif.; A Friend in Virginia, Mrs. N. E. M., Millers Falls, Mass.; T. I. M., Lowville, N. Y.; Mrs. L. M., Indiana.

Mrs. J. S. G. writes from White Plains, N. Y., telling of a group of friends who agreed to pray daily at noon for the coming of peace in Europe. They ask all Christians to unite with them in this prayer. Many have been discouraged in their prayers for peace because it has been so long delayed. But we should renew our faith and zeal in prayer that the love of God may soon conquer and put an end to the present strife.

Mrs. E. V. Bjorklund, of St. Cloud, Minn., asks prayer that her husband, who is a Swedish Mission minister and who was compelled to leave his church on account of illness, may now receive another call to a church. She writes: "We are a family of eleven, and things seem dark."

F. M. B. writes from Erie, Pa., acknowledging answered prayer, and asking prayer that his mother, who is almost seventy years old, and a great sufferer, may be healed without an operation, which the doctors believe to be necessary.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Alamogordo, N. M.; Haworth, N. J.; Lititz, Pa. (in the United Brethren Church); Bayfield, N. B., Canada; Concord, N. H.; Oleander, Calif.; Fairy, Texas; Escatawpa, Miss.; Baker, Ore. (in the Christian Endeavor Society of our church); Eupora, Miss.; Delta, Ohio; Marlboro, Mass.; Milton, Del.; South Charleston, Ohio; Willamina, Ore.; Brush, Colo.; Marysville, Pa.; Athens, Mo.; Rising Sun, Ind. (that a class of Sunday school girls may be saved and a revival in church), Dimondale, Mich.; South Westerlo, N. Y.; Utica, N. Y. (in the Methodist churches of our city); Springfield, Ill.; Columbiaville, Mich., Lyons Falls, N. Y.; Toledo, Ohio, Pittsfield, Mass.; Hudson, Iowa; Cooperstown, N. Y.; Randolph, Kan.; Makoti, N. D.; Gridley, Ill., Middleboro, Mass., Churches at Mulberry Gap, and Sedalia, Tenn.; Abilene, Kan.; Rush City, Minn.; Myrtle Creek, Ore.; Richmond, Ind. (in the two Methodist churches); Lowville, N. Y.; Wichita, Kan.

Mrs. H. C. T., A. B. W., Mrs. E. E., ask prayer that their sons' minds may be restored; Mrs. A. C. M., Mrs. J. D. W., Mrs. E. L., B. C. R., Mrs. M. E. B., their daughters'; Mrs. H. P. M., that mind may be strengthened; Grandparents ask prayer for the mental restoration of a young wife; A Reader, that sister and self may receive mental healing. Seventeen other friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for other relatives, friends, or for themselves.

Twenty-nine friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for relatives, friends or for themselves.

Seventy-one friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Thirteen parents ask prayer that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit. B. B., W. A. S., C. H., Mrs. C. E. B., their husbands; F. B. and B. H. that fathers may be delivered from the liquor habit. Sixteen other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be delivered from this habit.

Fifty-three parents asks prayer for the conversion of sons; twenty-seven wives, their husbands. Seventy other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be converted.

Seventeen readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends.

One hundred and twenty-two friends ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives. Eighty-six ask prayer for self, including Mrs. E. A. M. and Rev. W. Y. L., to regain use of limbs.

Nineteen friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing for friends, relatives or themselves.

Fifty-two friends ask prayer for help and guidance in financial affairs.

Seventy-one friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs.

◆

A Cry from China

LITTLE HAI IEH TSI (the "Abused Leaf"): a Story of Childhood and its Perils in Heathen China. All who are interested in sweet and innocent childhood will find this a fascinating story. A postal card addressed to "China Orphans, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York," will bring you free copies of this illustrated booklet.

How 250,000 Peo le Bought Pianos & Org ns

LINCOLN said, "You can trust the ec- tive judgment of the people; hen many people agree upon a thin is pretty certain to be right." A most imp ive example of this is found in the fact that ore than 250,000 people have chosen "The rn-ish Plan" of uy- ing pianos ar or- gans. This the plan which w in- augurated yea ago by a famous ker of pianos an or- gans, the late eph B. Cornish, an car- ried out tod by Senator Johr on Cornish and eph B. Cornish, nd. Under the op ion of this plan th pur- chaser is enab t. save $100 to 150 on a piano as much as $50 on an organ. These res mean a stupendous aggregate saving nd, therefore, a great service rendered the music-loving public by this noted far of piano and organ builders. Further, wh you investigate "The Cornish Plan" you w find that it affords you easy terms; in fac any arrangement for payment satisfactory ou; and the plan gives you a year's trial our piano—with your satisfaction guarantee all your money refunded. All of which sho how important it is for you to get "The nish Plan" and see just what it offers you our individual case before you decide o any instrument. If you will write to J ston Cornish, President of the Cornish Co any, Washington, New Jersey, and ask fo The Cornish Book" (mentioning Christian H ald), he will send you the famous Cornish pl and piano information that will prove inval le to you no matter what make of instrum you may decide on later. Just address—J ston Cornish, Dept. C. H., Washington, N.

If Your Childre

are delicate or frail, if they catc old easily or are backward in studie give them the pure medicinal n ish- ment in Scott's Emulsion. It is rich, strength-making growing ood.

FREE FROM ALCOHOL

14-89

SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N

VIOLIN MANDOLIN GUITAR or CORNET GIVEN FINE TONE

To introduce our wonderful new system of teaching note music by mail, Violin, Guitar, Mandolin, Piano, Organ or Cornet, will give you a dandy instrument withou guarantee to make you a player or no charge; com given. Write at once. Special offer to first pupils. No SLINGERLAND'S CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Dept. 142, ago, Ill.

INVENT SOMETH NG
It may bring ealth

Our Free Book tells what to invent and how t btain patent through Our New Credit System.

WATERS & CO., 5100 Warder Building, Washin , D.C.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK SIMPLE TO PAT tect your may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed I and "How to Get Your Patent."

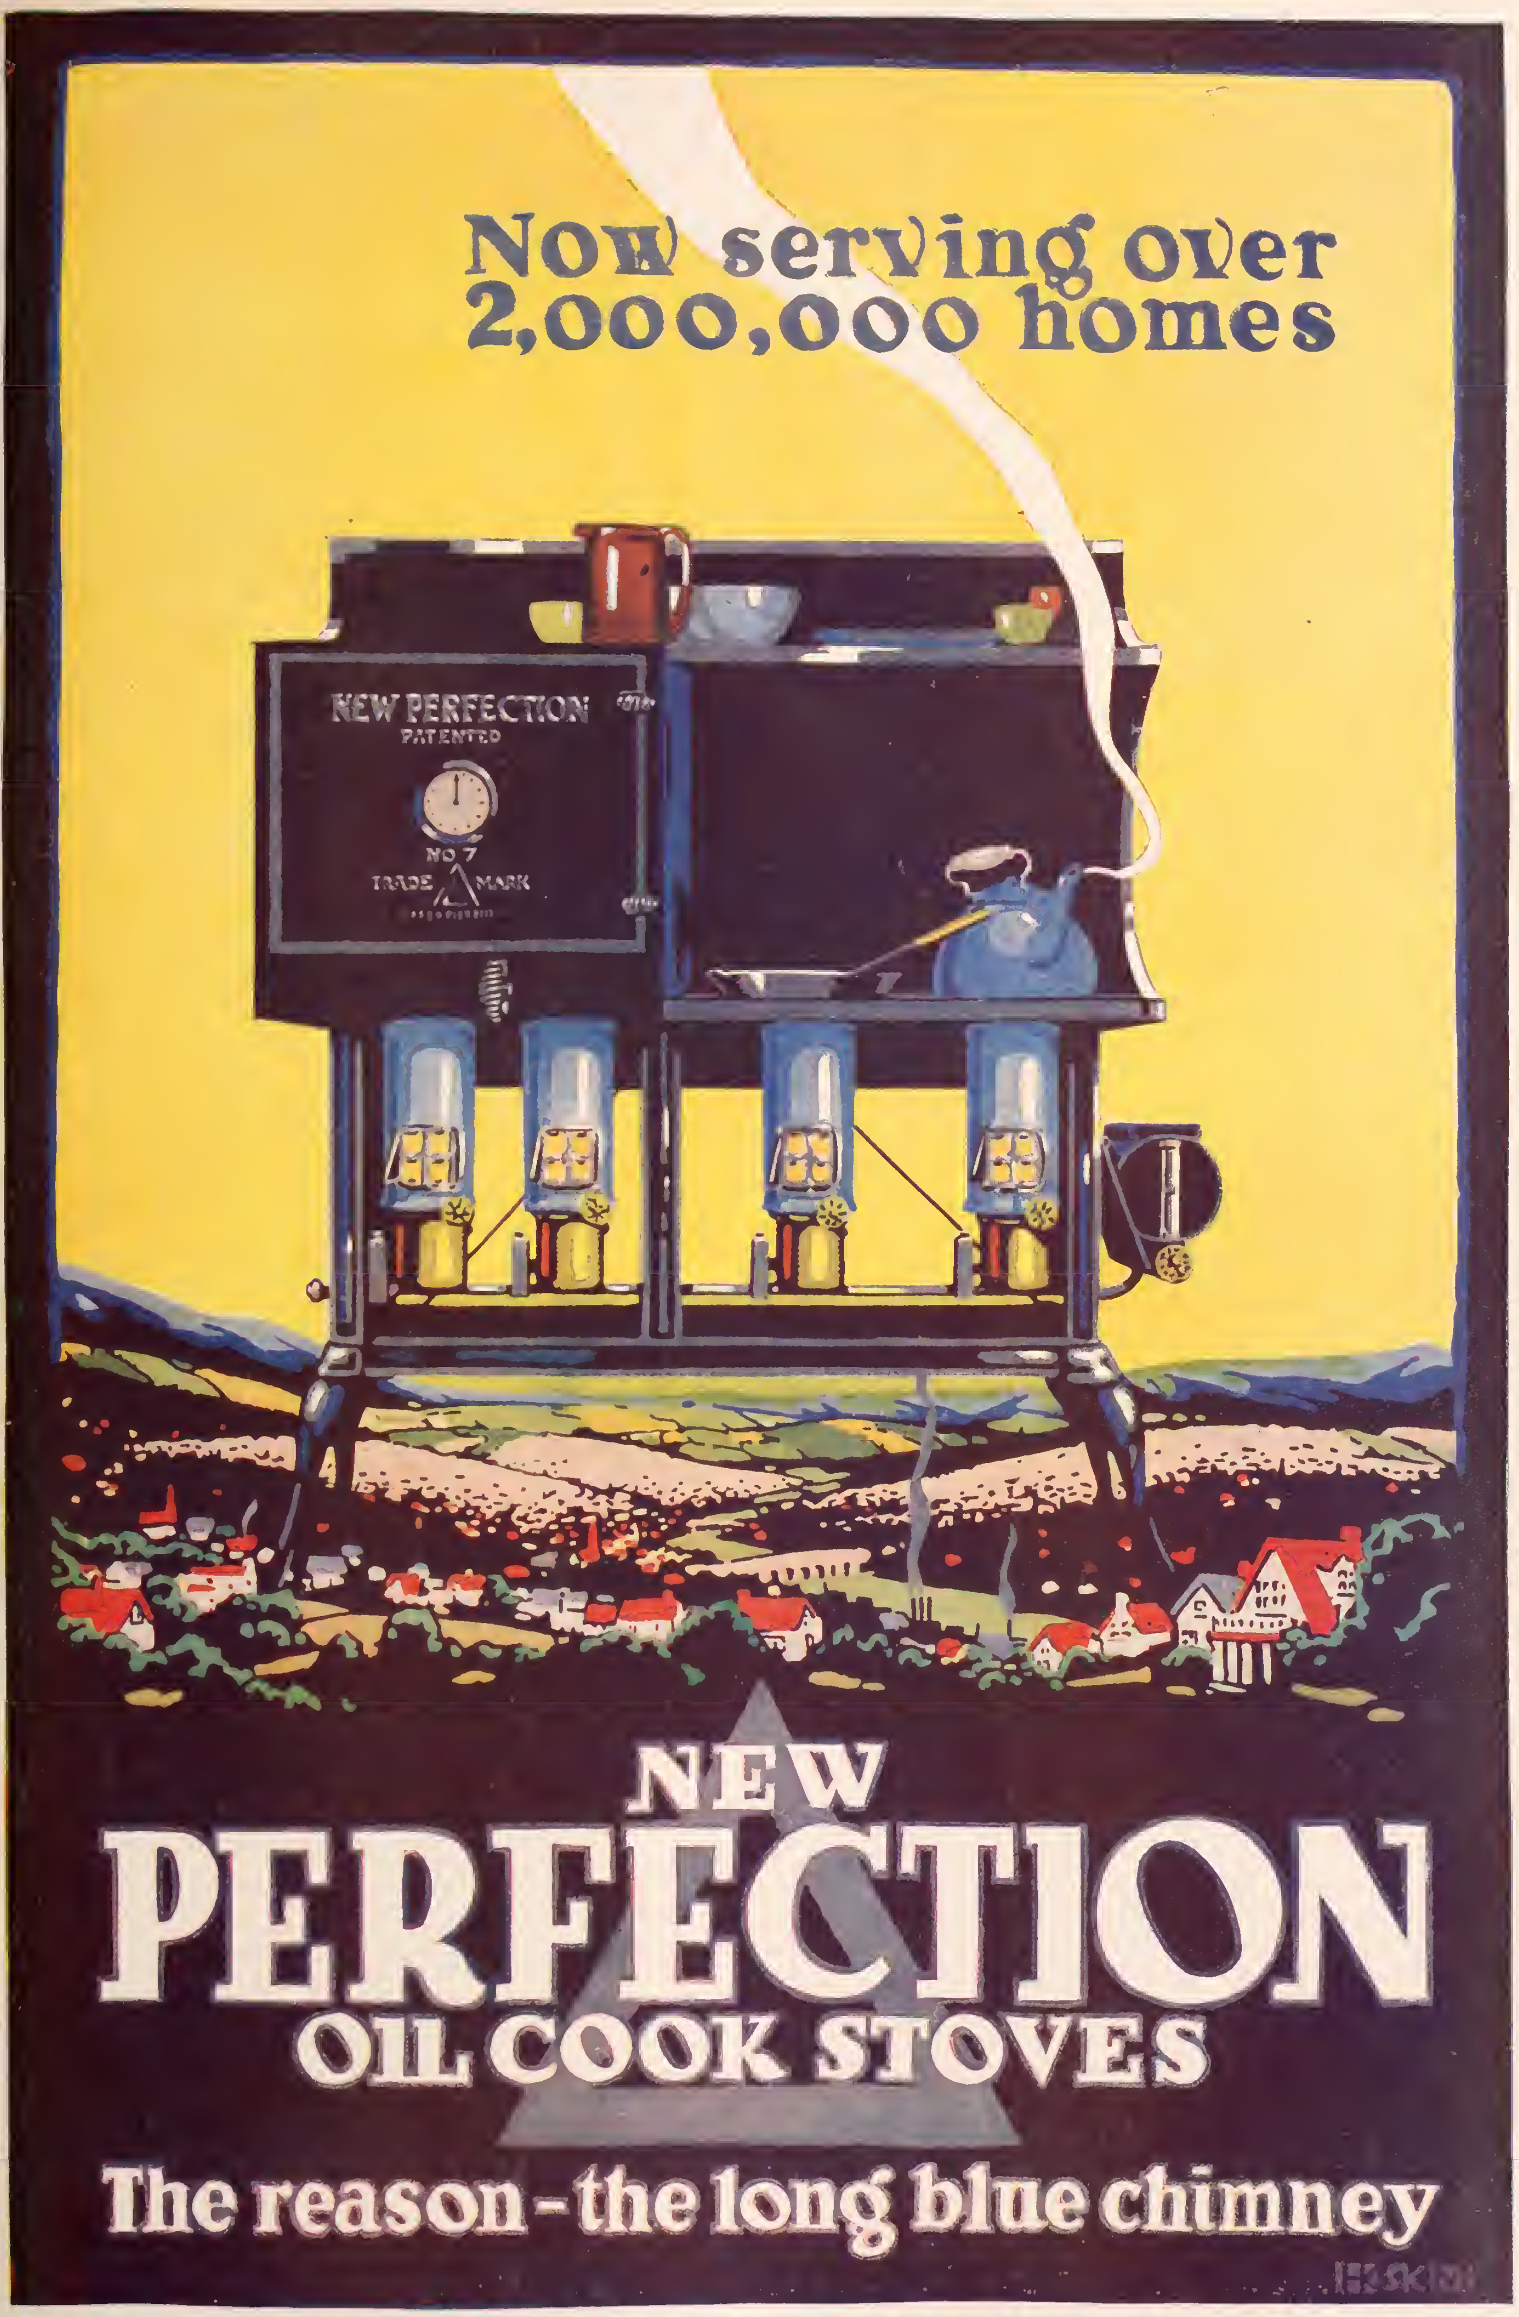
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington C.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTH SWEETER, ABLE, LOW OUR FREE CA TELLS

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry B-51 Cinc

TABLE GRACES For DAI SPECIAI and OCC

All Will Welcome This New Book of Graces. Postpaid. Cloth, 50c. M. E. MUNSON, 77 Bible Hous , New

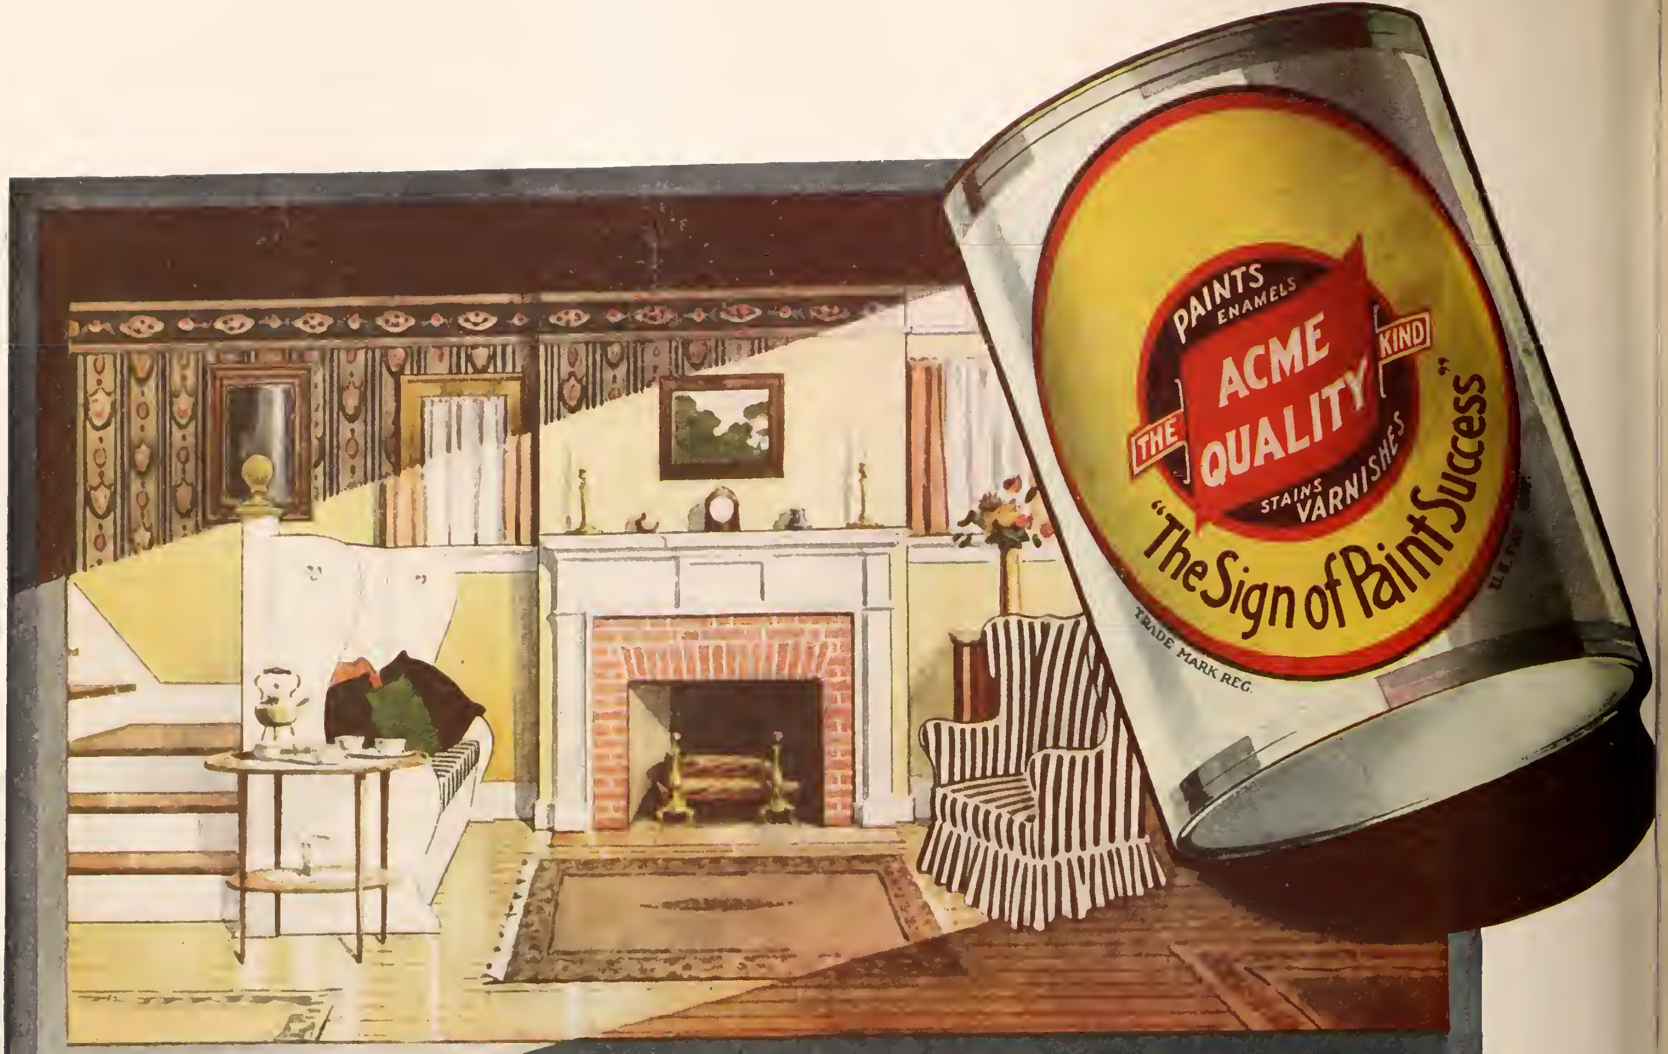


Now serving over 2,000,000 homes
NEW PERFECTION
PATENTED
NO 7
TRADE MARK
NEW PERFECTION
OIL COOK STOVES
The reason - the long blue chimney

THE CLEVELAND FOUNDRY COMPANY

7500 PLATT AVENUE, CLEVELAND, OHIO

Write Dept. "E" for catalogue and free booklet, "What every woman should know"



Acme Finishes Transform Rooms Like Magic

THIS wonderful transformation is real, not fanciful. Imagine just how you want your home decorated—no matter how radical the changes, they are entirely practical with Acme Quality Finishes and the two books described below.

You can secure just the results you want, because there is an Acme Quality Finish for every need. Comfort and cheer, pride and prosperity radiate wherever Acme Quality Paints and Finishes are judiciously used.

Acme Quality Enamel gives a sparkling whiteness and cleanliness to run-down woodwork. Acme Quality No-Lustre is the oil paint that gives a flat, smooth, washable surface to walls. Acme Quality Varno-Lac is the finish that varnishes as it stains and reproduces the appearance of expensive woods. Fine for touching-up odd bits of woodwork.

There's a specific Acme Quality Paint and Finish for every requirement. You'll know which to ask for and you'll know exactly how the job should be done when you read "Home Decorating" and "Acme Quality Painting Guide," the two books we send upon request. Write for them today. They're interesting and instructive and—free.

ACME WHITE LEAD AND COLOR WORKS
Dept. O.
DETROIT, MICHIGAN

Boston
Chicago
Minneapolis
St. Louis
Pittsburgh
Cincinnati
Nashville
Birmingham
Fort Worth
Dallas
Topeka
Lincoln
Salt Lake City
Spokane
Portland
San Francisco
Los Angeles
Toledo

ACME QUALITY

Paints and Finishes

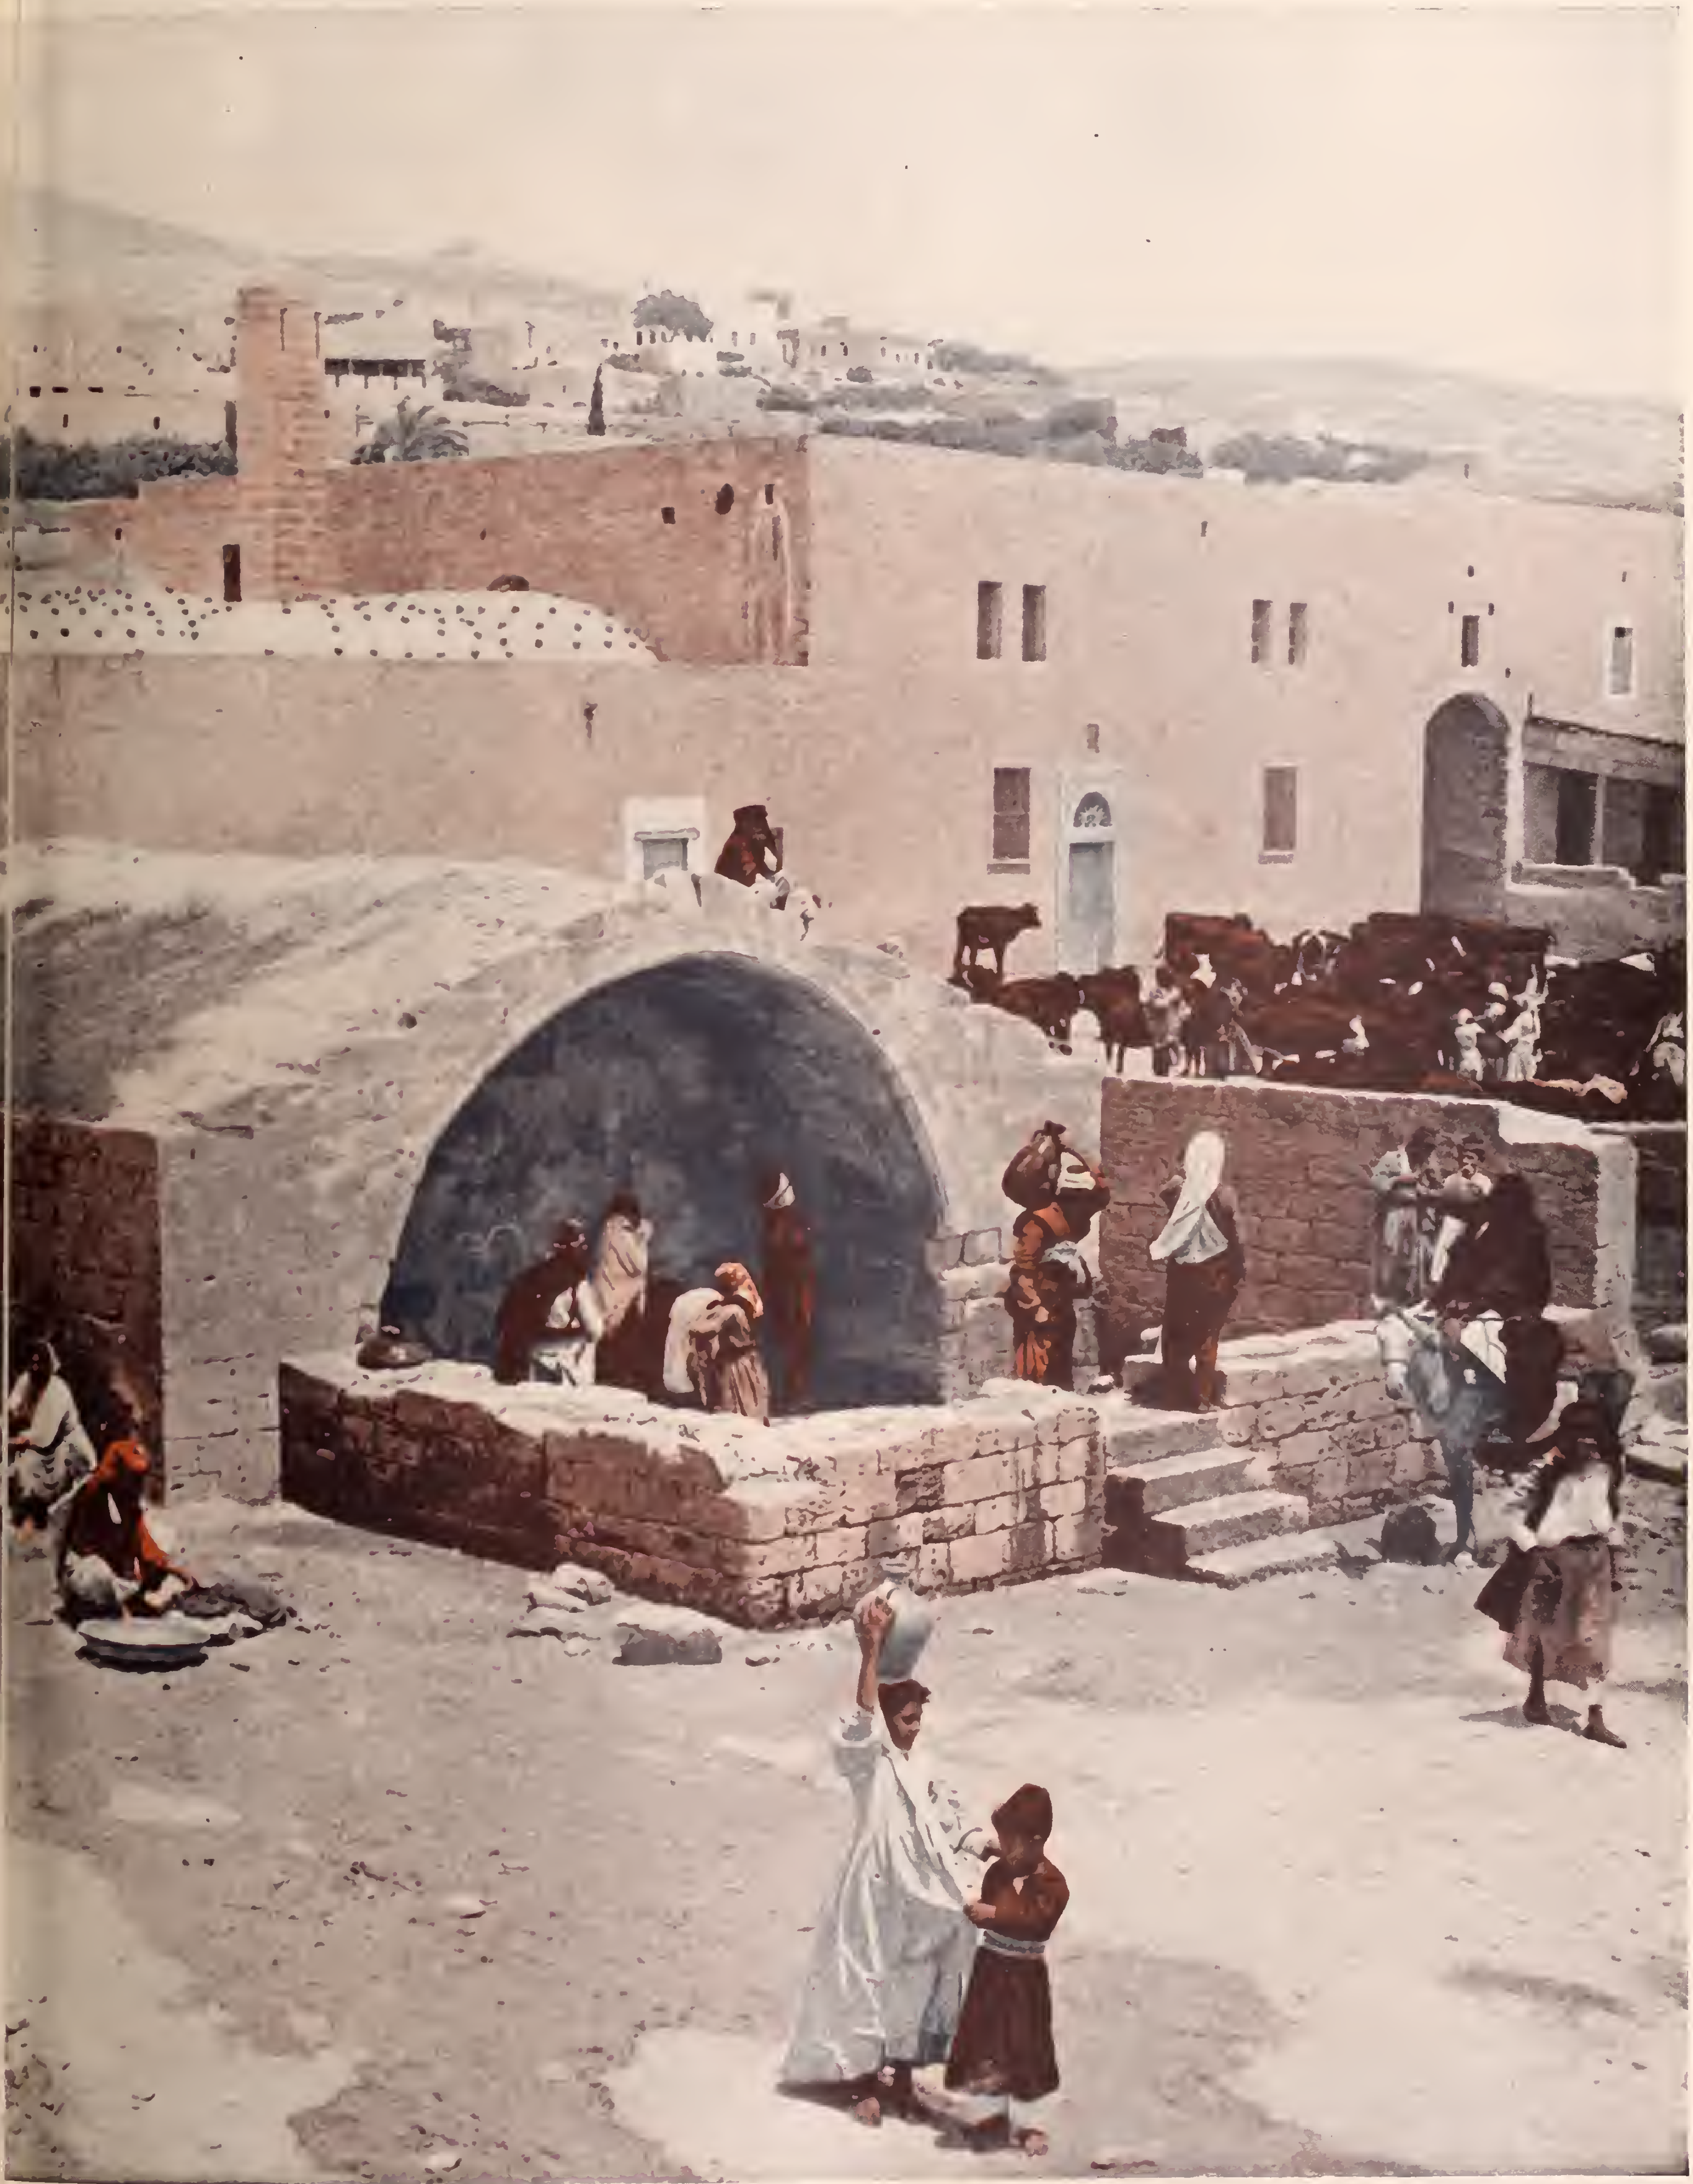
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

S SCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
P LISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, MARCH 1, 1916

VOL. 39—NO. 9. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



© by Underwood & Underwood

THIS SAME WELL MUST OFTEN HAVE BEEN VISITED BY MARY WITH THE BOY JESUS, AS IT IS THE ONLY ONE AT NAZARETH

Unusual Uses of Ivory Soap

COPYRIGHT 1916 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

Have you ever made Ivory Soap Paste for house-cleaning?

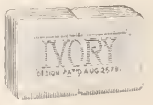
THERE are many purposes for which it is unequaled and it is the most economical and convenient way to use Ivory Soap for general cleaning and laundry work. With Ivory Soap paste you can clean leather and other materials which should not be touched by soap suds. And it is much more effective than bar soap for such things as furniture, marble and porcelain bathroom fixtures, metal ware, woodwork, gilt frames and rugs.

The advantages of using the paste where the cake might answer the purpose are: The paste makes rich thick suds that cleanse thoroughly. It makes suds quickly, saving time. The suds can be made with lukewarm as well as hot water where heat would injure the article to be cleaned. And the paste goes farther than bar soap.

Unusual Uses of Ivory Soap

You will find the recipe for making Ivory Soap paste on the inside of the wrapper and also in the booklet "Unusual Uses of Ivory Soap". This booklet is very helpful, especially at this season. It contains over one hundred tested recipes for the safe cleaning of just the things that will require your attention during the next few weeks. You may have a copy postpaid by return mail if you will send your name and address to The Procter & Gamble Company, Dept. 2-C, Cincinnati, O.

IVORY SOAP. . . . . .



. . . . . . 99$\frac{44}{100}$% PURE

IT FLOATS

The Issue Defined

The President's Letter to Senator Stone Made Public February 24

The White House, Washington, Feb. 24, 1916.

My Dear Senator—I very warmly appreciate your kind and frank letter of today and feel that it calls for an equally frank reply.

You are right in assuming that I shall do everything in my power to keep the United States out of war. I think the country will feel no uneasiness about my course in that respect. Through many anxious months I have striven for that object, amidst difficulties more manifold than can have been apparent upon the surface, and so far I have succeeded. I do not doubt that I shall continue to succeed. The course which the Central European Powers have announced their intention of following in the future with regard to undersea warfare seems for the moment to threaten insuperable obstacles, but its apparent meaning is so manifestly inconsistent with explicit assurances recently given us by those Powers with regard to their treatment of merchant vessels on the high seas that I must believe that explanations will presently ensue which will put a different aspect upon it. We have had no reason to question their good faith or their fidelity to their promises in the past, and I for one feel confident that we shall have none in the future.

But in any event our duty is clear. No nation, no group of nations, has the right while war is in progress to alter or disregard the principles which all nations have agreed upon in mitigation of the horrors and sufferings of war; and if the clear rights of American citizens should ever unhappily be abridged or denied by any such action we should, it seems to me, have in honor no choice as to what our own course should be.

For my own part, I cannot consent to any abridgment of the rights of American citizens in any respect. The honor and self-respect of the nation are involved. We covet peace, and shall preserve it at any cost but the loss of honor. To forbid our people to exercise their rights for fear we might be called upon to vindicate them would be a deep humiliation indeed. It would be an implicit, all but an explicit, acquiescence in the violation of the rights of mankind everywhere, and of whatever nation or allegiance. It would be a deliberate abdication of our hitherto proud position as spokesmen, even amidst the turmoil of war, for the law and the right. It would make everything this Government has attempted, and everything that it has achieved during this terrible struggle of nations meaningless and futile.

It is important to reflect that if in this instance we allowed expediency to take the place of principle the door would inevitably be opened to still further concessions. Once accept a single abatement of right, and many other humiliations would certainly follow, and the whole fine fabric of international law might crumble under our hands piece by piece. What we are contending for in this matter is of the very essence of the things that have made America a sovereign nation. She cannot yield them without conceding her own impotency as a nation, and making virtual surrender of her independent position among the nations of the world.

I am speaking, my dear Senator, in deep solemnity, without heat, with a clear consciousness of the high responsibilities of my office and as your sincere and devoted friend. If we should unhappily differ, we shall differ as friends; but where issues so momentous as these are involved we must, just because we are friends, speak our minds without reservation.

Faithfully yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

The Letter from Senator Stone to Which the President's Is a Reply

U. S. Senate, Washington, Feb. 24.

Dear Mr. President:

Since Senator Kern, Mr. Flood, and I talked with you on Monday evening, I am more troubled than I have been for many a day. I have not felt authorized to repeat our conversation, but I have attempted, in response to numerous inquiries from my colleagues, to state to them, within the confidence that they should observe, my general understanding of your attitude. I have stated my understanding of your attitude to be substantially as follows:

That while you would deeply regret the rejection by Great Britain of Mr. Lansing's proposal for the disarmament of merchant vessels of the Allies, with the understanding that Germany and her allies would not fire upon a merchant ship if she hauled to when summoned, not attempting to escape, and that the German warships would only exercise the admitted right of visitation and capture, and would not destroy the captured ship except in circumstances that reasonably assured the safety of passengers and crew, you were of the opinion that if Great Britain and her allies rejected the proposal and insisted upon arming her merchant ships she would be within her right under international law.

Also that you would feel disposed to allow armed vessels to be cleared from our ports. Also that you are not favorably disposed to the idea of this Government taking any definite steps toward preventing American citizens from embarking upon armed merchant vessels. Furthermore, that you would consider it your duty if a German warship should fire upon an armed merchant vessel of the enemy upon which American citizens were passengers to hold Germany to strict account.

Numerous members of the Senate and the House have called to discuss this subject with me. I have felt that the members of the two houses who are to deal with this grave question were entitled to know the situation we are confronting as I understand it to be.

I think I should say to you that the members of both houses feel deeply concerned and disturbed by what they read and hear. I have heard of some talk to the effect that some are saying that after all it may be possible that the program of preparedness, so called, has some relation to just such a situation as we are now called upon to meet.

I have counseled all who have talked with me to keep cool; that this whole business is still the subject of diplomacy, and that you are striving to the utmost to bring about some peaceable adjustment, and that in the meantime Congress should be careful not to "ball up" a diplomatic situation by any kind of hasty and ill-considered action. However, the situation in Congress is such as to excite a sense of deep concern in the minds of careful and thoughtful men.

I have felt that it is due to you to say this much. I think you understand my personal attitude with respect to this subject. As much and deeply as I would hate to radically disagree with you, I find it difficult from my sense of duty and responsibility to consent to plunge this nation into the vortex of this world war because of the unreasonable obstinacy of any of the powers upon the one hand, or, on the other hand, of foolhardiness, amounting to a sort of moral treason against the Republic, of our people recklessly risking their lives on armed belligerent ships. I cannot escape the conviction that such would be so monstrous as to be indefensible.

I want to be with you and to stand by you, and I mean to do so up to the last limit; and I want to talk with you and Secretary Lansing with the utmost frankness—to confer with you and to have your judgment and counsel—and I want to be kept advised as to the course of events, as it seems to me I am entitled to be.

In the meantime I am striving to prevent anything being done by any Senator or Member calculated to embarrass your diplomatic negotiations. Up to the last you should be left free to act diplomatically as you think for the best to settle the questions involved. I need hardly say that my wish is to help, not to hinder, you.

With the highest regard and most sympathetic consideration, I have the honor, Mr. President, to be,

W. J. STONE.

A Timely Word from Washington's Farewell Address

AGAINST the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to constantly wake; since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of he most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy to be seful, must be impartial; else it beomes the instrument of the very inuence to be avoided, instead of a efense against it. Excessive partiality r one foreign nation, and excessive islike for another, cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one ide, and serve to veil, and even second, he arts of influence on the other. Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues f the favorite, are liable to become susected and odious, while its tools and upes usurp the applause and confience of the people, to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us, in egard to foreign nations, is, in extendng our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection s possible. So far as we have already ormed engagements, let them be fullled with perfect good faith. Here let s stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests, which to us have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves, by artificial ties, in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics, or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon, to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

© International Film Service

Stern of the Italian Liner, Verona, Showing Guns Mounted for Defense

WOULD you have a voice in these great matters? It is your right. It is your duty. Telegraph or write at once to your congressman about as follows: "I am for honorable peace at home and abroad, and I am against the sailing of Americans on armed merchantmen."

War or Peace—a Challenge to the People

"THE President has insisted the Congress should not interfere with the efforts of the Executive in dealing with Germany and Austria over the situation produced by their orders to submarine commanders to sink without warning armed belligerent merchant ships."

"His (the President's) attitude had not changed. That attitude, it was explained, was that while the President recognized the right of Congress to take any measures it saw fit, its action would not influence the Administration in its exclusive right to conduct the foreign affairs of the United States."

"The discussion at the conference was to the effect that in assuming such a position the Administration ran the risk of war with Germany over a comparatively technical issue. Members expressed themselves as believing that neither Congress nor the country would approve of war over such an issue."

"They (the members of Congress in conference) also were told that the Administration was prepared to go to any ends—even to war—for this principle; that the Administration admitted that if American lives were lost under the renewed submarine warfare of Germany [even on armed merchantmen], it meant the severance of diplomatic relations with that nation and with Austria."

HOW long is the American nation going to endure such thoroughly undemocratic methods of determining its foreign policy? Is this a democracy or a monarchy? Is the President the people's servant and mouthpiece, or is he the people's king?

The paragraphs quoted above are from recent Washington news dispatches to the daily press. The most astounding item was that the President might venture to forbid even the discussion in Congress of the delicate international situation that had arisen. This is the sort of secret diplomacy that has produced most of the wars of past and present times. Secret diplomacy has made possible Europe's present holocaust. It is our country's present menace, as militarism threatens to become its future curse.

The particular question at issue during this storm at Washington wa whether or not Congress should issue a warning to Americans to keep o armed belligerent ships. And this is the discussion the President evi dently tried to forbid. Worst of all, some senators and representative confessed that they believed in the resolution issuing the warning, bu felt that they must be loyal to the President.

Is this democracy?

The Christian Herald has already stated its conviction that since th constitution denies the President the power actually to declare war, necessarily denies him the power to assume independent positions o international matters and send to foreign nations messages that are boun to lead to war.

The people and their representatives must decide these issues, not th President and his personally selected cabinet. The same dispatch which bore the news of the President's desire to stifle debate in Congre on the resolution forbidding clearance papers to any armed belligere merchantman carrying American passengers said the "government" (was considering the preparation of a sharp note to Germany and Au tria, indicating that if any Americans lost their lives through the sinki without warning of an armed merchant ship in accordance with the n order of the Berlin and Vienna governments, a break in the relations of th government and the Central Powers will be inevitable.

Who is the government—Congress or the President?

Who will be torn to pieces, who will be maimed and slain, if the nati goes to war? The people—the boys and men. It is the common hon of the common people that will be filled with despair and agony. T people, through their direct representatives, must assert and claim a hold their right to decide these issues of life and death.

This is what every American citizen should do:—

Wire your congressman at once.

If you want the country to be plunged into war, say so.

If you want the country to be kept in peace, say so.

This is the people's prerogative alone, and now is the time to assert

This is the people's duty, and now is the time to perform it.

Trying to Keep Us Out of the War

WITH the questions between Germany and the United States approaching an apparently successful solution, events suddenly showed a retrograde tendency. The nation appeared again to be drifting through a fog of minor disagreements onto the reef of conflict and Congress threatens to revolt.

The whole matter seemed to hinge upon the arming of merchant vessels for defense and the German declaration that vessels so armed would henceforth be considered as belligerent ships to be attacked without warning wherever found. President Wilson expressed a determination to insist that the provisions of international law now in existence, including the provision which permitted guns upon merchant vessels for defense against privates and corsairs, must be recognized by both sides in the conflict until a revision could be agreed upon by both sides. Germany claimed that Great Britain had issued instructions to merchantmen for the offensive use of armament, and thus justified attacks without notice. Great Britain insisted that no British merchantmen would use her guns unless first attacked, but the Clan MacTavish incident as well as several others showed that merchantmen would not hesitate to resist capture by war vessels, a use of their armament which is not contemplated by the law under which they are granted this right to be armed.

The American government was inclined to agree with the German contentions, and Secretary Lansing said in the concluding paragraph of a memorandum during the negotiations with Germany over this question: "I should add that my Government is impressed with the reasonableness of the argument that a merchant vessel carrying armament of any sort, in view of the character of the submarine warfare and the defensive weakness of underseas craft, should be held to be an auxiliary cruiser and so treated by a neutral as well as by a belligerent Government, and is seriously considering instructing its officials accordingly.

AT the same time, the administration resisted every suggestion that America should take any action to recognize changed conditions until an agreement having the force of international law could be entered into with both sides in the conflict. In the meantime, American citizens were taking passage on armed merchantmen, and as the date approached upon which Germany had declared she would begin to consider armed merchantmen as auxiliary cruisers, members of Congress began to question seriously the wisdom of the administration's course.

On February 21 Senator Kern, democratic leader in the Senate, Senator Stone, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and Representative Flood, Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, held a secret conference with the President at which, it was admitted, pending international questions were discussed. When asked if the President had sought to check discussion on the floor of Congress regarding the international situation, one of the conferees said that the conference was without special significance, and that no legislation bearing on the international situation was contemplated. Senator Gore of Oklahoma, some days ago offered a resolution in the Senate, directing that clearance be withheld for all belligerent merchant ships carrying American passengers. Senator Stone in whose committee the Gore resolution was resting, learned during the past week that conference between leading senators showed that sympathy with the Gore resolution was gaining headway. Mr. Stone began to be concerned over the prospect that the resolution might be called back from the committee, lest discussion of it should lead to an agitation embarrassing to the administration at this point in the negotiations with Germany.

REPRESENTATIVE McLemore of Texas, also introduced a resolution in the House of Representatives, directing that a warning be issued to American citizens not to take passage on armed belligerent merchant ships. The House Committee on Foreign Affairs was reported to be strongly in favor of the McLemore resolution or a measure of similar purpose. It developed on February 23 that Senators Kern and Stone and Representative Flood had gone to the White House for a conference with the President on the 21st to tell the President of the storm that was gathering at the capitol over the question of armed merchantmen, and it was said that there was a dramatic scene in the President's study, and that "the President stopped talking English and talked United States." The President was reported to have informed his callers that he was willing to go to any extreme to support the principle that Americans have the right to travel on armed merchant vessels. He is represented to have declared that this government would promptly sever diplomatic relations with the Teutonic empires if this principle was violated again. The President was said to have spoken vigorously and without mincing words. Senator Stone is reported to have become aroused and to have exclaimed: "Mr. President, would you draw a shutter over my eyes and my intellect? You have no right to ask me to follow such a course. It may mean war for my country; I must follow my conscience in this matter."

Senator Stone expressed himself as in sympathy with those who would warn American citizens to keep away from belligerent vessels. Chairman Flood of the House Committee is also very much in sympathy with the movement in Congress in favor of warning American citizens off armed belligerent ships under present conditions. Democratic members of e Foreign Relations Committee of the House met s n after the conference between the President and t r chairman. The committee is reported to have - cussed with the utmost concern the possibilities of n arbitrary attitude by the Administration on s question. The committee was given to underst d that the President had informed the chairman n Monday night that the Administration would t yield one whit in its insistence upon the right of A - icans to use such ships. They were also told that e administration was prepared to go to any ends, n to war, for this principle.

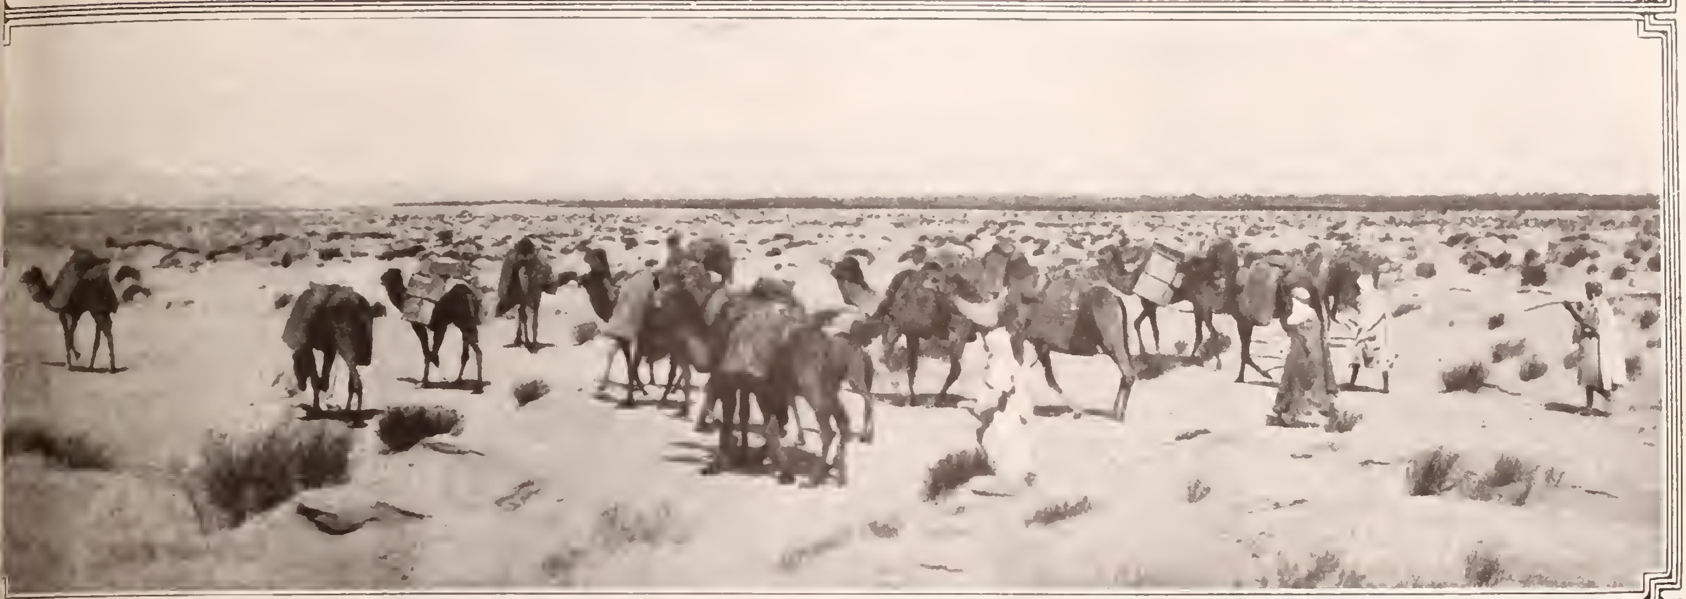
MEMBERS of the House see in such severan of diplomatic relations the almost certain resu of war. A prominent democratic leader said that e fear was sweeping over the House that we are on e road to war, that the severance of diplomatic relat s means in all human probability that this nation ill be drawn into the war and that as a consequenc e smaller neutral nations eventually would follow. le asked the question, "Is the United States willin to go to war for a principle that is technical when n- pared with bigger things," and he expressed the n- ion that the House stood three or four to one ag ist such a thing and that the country stands like se. Senator Stone is reported to have told a memb of the House that he was exceedingly afraid that he course mapped out by the President was dang us and fraught with possibilities of war.

While some members of the Senate and the H se admitted that the warning of Americans as pla ed and the giving up by the United States of tech al rights might be somewhat inimical to American le, more than one leader declared himself unwilli to plunge a hundred million people into a foreign ar to carry a technical point.

The situation as it stood on February 23 was at a large majority of Democrats in the House of R re- sentatives were ready to pass the McLemore r lu- tion regardless of its possible invasion of exec ive prerogative. The Republicans in Congress der Representative Mann of Illinois were almost a u in support of the President. The Senate showed m differences of opinion on both sides of the po cal fence and it was unlikely that the Gore resol ion would be passed upon the initiative of the S te. but there was some probability that if the I use passed the McLemore resolution, the Senate uld promptly concur therein. The present disqui ude has not been matched since the days precedin the Spanish War, and there is a chance that the Co ess and the President may even approach an open eak if the President insists upon abusing his constitu nal prerogative to the extent of inviting war.

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home



A Camel Train of Bibles

By CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

It is not usual to associate the Bible with the Sahara Desert. We were somewhat amazed, therefore, on returning one late afternoon from a camel journey into the edge of the desert, near Old Biskra, to meet a camel train of somewhat unusual appearance, and upon inquiry by our camel driver to find that these "ships of the desert" were starting Saharaward with several thousand Bibles and Testaments. The strangeness and incongruity of this spectacle were increased when, shortly after the meeting the time for evening prayer having arrived, we looked back and in the distance saw the camelmen climbing down from their long-necked beasts, facing Mecca, and beginning their Mohammedan prayers in answer to a faint cry of the muezzin in a distant Bedouin village.

> Come to prayer!
> Come to salvation!
> There is no God but God,
> And Mohammed is his Prophet!

It was the closer association of the Bible with the Koran than one usually sees in any Moslem land. One would seem to see, in this picturesque land of Arabs praying to Allah in the midst of their Bible-laden camels, a slow but steady march of the religion of the Cross into the land of the Crescent; it was certainly a vivid example of the meeting of Christianity and Islam which is now proceeding in virtually all Moslem lands.

We learned later that these Bibles, which were being shipped into the heart of the Great Desert, were all printed in Arabic, many of them in separate Gospels, and were to be sold to Arab Moslems at two cents apiece. They were forwarded by one of the large English Bible societies, which is now working with excellent fruitage in North Africa, and the Bible secretary informed the writer that the followers of Mohammed, while they were not changing their faith, were becoming interested in reading the Christian text-book, which many of them were opening now for the first time. These sons of the Prophet were already familiar with many of the Old Testament characters whose names appear in the Koran, but the Biblical setting and history of these characters were for the most part new to them. Their attitude toward Christ was found frequently to be surprising, and among the better educated of the Moslem Arabs this attitude was not one of hostility or indifference. To be sure, these Mohammedan followers do not accept Christ as the divine Son of God; they rather look upon him as a prophet, as Mohammed was a prophet. Mohammedanism is a strict monotheism, and regards the trinity of the Godhead as impossible. Yet, like the Hindus who have placed Christ in the Hindu pantheon among the many other great incarnations of religious leaders and prophets, the Moslems will tell you that Christ is considered by them as a great prophet. They will also inform you that they, as Easterners, understand Jesus' nature and teachings even more perfectly than do we in the West.

Bible Christianity, moreover, is not without its converts among the Arabs, Berbers and Kabyles in North Africa. In the mountain village of Khabylia we came across a converted Kabyle, Ali, who was known widely throughout this entire picturesque country. He had changed his faith through the influence of an English mission situated in the Djura mountains, and he was now working as a Bible colporteur, carrying Bibles among the thatched cottages of these isolated hill regions, selling them when he could, and giving them away when the people were too suspicious or unfriendly to buy. He had met with many reverses and persecutions; his life was endangered often by adherents of Islam whose Koran teaches that apostasy from the Moslem faith is to be punished by death. For years, however, he had persisted in the propagation of the new faith, and we visited his home and met his wife and children and relatives, who also had been influenced by him to become followers of the Christian's God.

In several of the missionary schools in North Africa and in Egypt, one finds today converted Moslems assisting in the instruction of Coptic Christians. In one of these institutions we met a Moslem sheik who as a converted Christian was teaching Arabic to thirty boys. In another case a Mohammedan convert who had spent eight years at El Azhar University in Cairo was instructing twenty prospective native ministers of the Christian faith concerning the essential difference between Christianity and Islam.

It cannot be stated, therefore, that Mohammedanism is altogether the "Christian missionary's despair," as some have spoken of it. The actual converts may be comparatively few. According to the American Mission Society's report in Egypt, where for fifty

A Mission Bible Class on the Edge of the Desert

Modern Egyptian Schoolboys in Assiout College years devoted American missionaries—some of the best Arabic scholars to be found anywhere in the world—have been working, there have been less than two hundred accessions to the Christian faith from the Moslem ranks. Yet no one who understands the results accomplished in Bible teaching and practical service would call their work a failure by reason of the seemingly small percentage of converted Moslems.

The Christian influence is spreading. It is like a grain of mustard seed. Christian education especially is becoming a notable force. In southern Egypt we visited at Luxor and at Assiout schools for girls under the direction of missionary societies where hundreds of young women, many of them Moslems, were studying practical branches, such as domestic economy and sewing, and being trained in the laws of hygiene and the care of children; the latter training being especially significant when it is realized that 65 per cent. of the children of Egypt are said to die before they are two years old, while 96 per cent. of all the children of Egypt are reported to be afflicted with some form of eye trouble, due to the ignorance of mothers relative to sanitary laws.

WE were especially impressed with this introduction of the Christian Bible and the Christian atmosphere in Assiout College, where, under the leadership of Dr. R. S. McClenahan, there were 825 students, including converted Moslems and Copts. These youth are being equipped through the spirit and method of Christian education similar to that which they would receive in a college in the United States. Not many years ago you would search in vain in missionary schools in North Africa or Egypt for Moslem boys and girls. Moslem fathers and mothers are slowly realizing that the type of education afforded is not only more profitable as an equipment for life-work in these lands which are becoming rapidly Westernized by English and French occupation and influence, but these young Mohammedans, graduates of government schools, are requiring, as never before, educated wives, and the Moslem institutions patterned after El Azhar and its affiliated schools are being found incapable of affording the training needed by women who would be home-makers.

The small village school of the Moslem, the "kuttab," is also feeling this Christian influence, and reforms are setting in. Formerly nothing was taught in these schools but the Koran, and this was presented very often by an ignorant Arab or Egyptian school-teacher who knew virtually nothing of modern life. Now one can visit, on the confines of El Kantara and on the edges of the Libyan desert, government-inspected schools containing French and English school-teachers with several native teachers as assistants. We visited one such school almost within sight of the sands of the Sahara, in a beautiful oasis between El Kantara and Biskra, and the whole environment, from the well-built stucco schoolhouse to its modern equipment of benches, maps, blackboards, and the methods of teaching the rudiments, compared favorably with the country schools of Europe or America.

Another great disintegrating influence to Mohammedanism in Algeria, Tunis and Egypt comes from the government schools and the introduction of modern business and the employment of Mohammedan young men in government positions and in new processes of agriculture, irrigation, and mechanical improvements. A recent report shows 30,742 students studying in the higher schools fostered by the government of Egypt, while more than 20,000 Moslem young women have been gathered into similar schools, supervised by government agencies. They are learning Western ways and becoming accustomed to see life from the Christian point of view.

Behind all this teaching and educational service the predominant principles of the Bible may be felt. It is not uncommon to find among the Moslems of North Africa in Algeria and Tunisia, and in the desert towns, discussions concerning certain portions of the Scriptures which these inhabitants have read in the colporteurs' Bibles. You will see the Bible man sitting on his mat in the center of the market place, surrounded by his Bibles. Around him you will see a varied and picturesque assemblage. Here is a man who has come in from a far distant place in the desert with his caravan of dates. On another side of the Bible man you may see the town Arab, with his voluminous trousers—his gaudily embroidered jacket, his fez of red, and his impertinent, supercilious face, ready always to discuss religion and to arouse argument in the circle. A figure, swathed in white from head to foot, only a pair of jet-black eyes showing above her enshrouding veil, stops on the edge of the crowd to listen to the discussion. Arab boys from the desert, full of playfulness, sit and scramble ab t the feet of the colporteur.

" In answer to a faint cry in a distant Bedouin village, 'Come to prayer' "

THE influence of Bible Christianity, colp eurs, schools, hospitals, and the introduct n of modern instruction, is producing a marke effect upon Mohammedan civilization. The lea rs of Islam are becoming anxious to ask wheth their faith is capable of holding the new life reveali itself in the younger generation. Reforms are bei considered by the progressive Mohammedan aders. They find the young men beginning to comp e the results of Islam with the results of Chris nity. They find that youth are beginning to disrega their five prayers a day, that the old laws of the K n, in relation to the taking of interest on money for e nple, are being overlooked or adapted to new e omic needs, and that the old static nature of Moham edanism requires certain changes to fit itself to the panding life of the twentieth century. The que on of questions for the Moslems in these lands t y is, "Can Islam evince a spirit and religious energy capable of reexpression in a new period?" These modern Moslems find that l m is handicapped in the life of tod with rules and a system of jurisp lence unchangeably fastened to every inute detail of human life. This fai may have fitted the seventh cent , but how can it be adjusted to the tw ieth? As one modern sympathizer w the Moslem faith remarked: "Mo amed contributed to the world a g t religion, but as a social system is a dead failure."

As a matter of fact the M hammedan is severely handicap d in having no New Testament to i rpret these detailed instructions ac rding to the spirit rather than the l er of his religion. He finds himse in a condition similar to that in wl h the Christian would be placed if had nothing but the old Jewish law relating to ablution, sacrifices, a long prayers on street corners, tithi s and alms-giving, to guide him in his ation with his fellows in a new cent y. In other words, the follower of the l phet is handicapped by his theolog and the great question is whethe can change the theology of Islam a still retain the holding power of the faith itself. rtain it is that the new industrial advances built u the preparatory work of Bible Christianity i these Moslem lands necessitate change and advance Missionaries see in these critical changes a new h e for Christianity. They are taking again as proph the words of the poet,

> The moon of Mohammed
> Arose, and it shall set,
> While, blazoned as on heaven's immortal noo
> The Cross leads generations on.

The camel train of Bibles which we saw ssing into the far desert of Sahara, carrying the Go el to the Moslem Arab, is indeed a significant sign.

Dr. Abbott on the Atonement

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S editorial on "Warden Osborne's Fight" and the request of a brother clergyman have prompted this communication. You are aware that Dr. Abbott, in the Outlook for January 26, has drawn a parallel between Jesus Christ and Mr. Osborne, for the purpose of explaining the redemptive work of the former. In my opinion the coordination which Dr. Abbott has attempted is repulsive to both Mr. Osborne and Jesus Christ. When I read of the honest endeavors of the warden of Sing Sing Prison to teach his wards lessons of manliness and a freedom that can exist even in chains, I fain would regard Mr. Osborne as a Christian gentleman whom divine grace, which ennobles any life into which it enters, is using amid surroundings which certainly call for a large and liberal application of divine grace in varied forms. I do not know, of course, whether my view of Mr. Osborne is correct. Nor have I much to say about Mr. Osborne's work, which I think will commend itself. But if my estimate of this remarkable man is correct, what a shock must Dr. Abbott have given to this honest jailer by his comparison!

The redemptive work of Jesus Christ is in a class by itself, unparalleled and incomparable. The world has known many men who have lent a helping hand to a brother in distress and who have even taught slaves to rise superior to the conditions of slavery by rousing their minds to higher and nobler things. Even paganism is not altogether void of examples illustrating this kind of redemptive work. But there is only one Saviour, because he alone could "give to God a ransom for his brother" (Ps. 49 : 7). Everybody else, even the greatest millionaires with their untold wealth (see verse 6), must leave this business of "redeeming a soul" severely alone; it is too costly, even for them (verse 8). Why? Because Jesus, in his redemptive work, dealt with a justly offended God, whose anger from heaven is revealed in all ages against the workers of iniquity. Jesus became "our peace" (Eph. 2 : 14), because he was "made a curse for us" (Gal. 3 : 13). "For us"; that means, of course, in our place; for what else can it mean? Even if we understand "for us" in the sense of "for our benefit," "in our behalf," it will be difficult to show that our benefit or interest could have been achieved, in the nature of the case, without a legal substitution of the sinless Christ for sinful man. As in the Old Testament panorama of the Man of Sorrows, which Isaiah has given us in his fifty-third chapter, Jesus is from beginning to end the Vicarious Sufferer, on whom "God has laid the iniquity of us all," and who consciously assumed that foreign guilt as his own for the purpose of expiating it, so throughout the New Testament the suffering Jesus is consistently represented as the world's Proxy. "God made him who knew no sin to be sin for us" (II Cor. 5 : 21). "Christ was delivered for our offenses" (Rom. 4 : 25). "We thus judge that if one died for all, then were all dead" (II Cor. 5 : 14).

But why multiply texts? How any unbiased reader of the Bible account of the work of Jesus can escape the conviction that the redemption which Jesus wrought out for a world of sinners was effected by way of a vicarious substitution passes comprehension. The doctrine of the Atonement, by the substitution of the God-man as the sacrificial Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, and prefigured by the sacrifices of the old dispensation in Israel, is the only view that does justice to the teaching of the Bible on this all-important question: how the guilt of Adam and his descendants has been removed in God's mind.

OH, yes, our reason balks at receiving this teaching. Is God really angry? Does he plot revenge? Must his wrath be appeased? Do not such ideas militate against the very concept of the most perfect and passionless Being? Is it right that an innocent man should be put to death for the guilty? Does it comport with our views of justice, and even of morality, that a wicked person should be declared righteous, in view of the heroic self-sacrifice of One whom the majority of the wicked never have known? Is it an ethical procedure to allow the mere acceptation of C ist's work as rendered in one's own p e to make one righteous in the sight o od? Are we not making sinning ea by preaching such a Gospel? Are not breaking down the moral safe ards which have been thrown aroun our race? Yes, these, and a hundred ther questions will ever arise when the iblical teaching of the vicarious su itution is presented. Of course it not right according to our mundane r soning and our secular views of j tice. The whole doctrine of the Atonem t is illogical. Christ is illogical; th ible is illogical. In particular, the c s of Christ will never be anything el han a stumbling-block to the worldl wise Greek and an offense to the self ghteous Jew. If any prefer to foll the light of their own reason and to upborne in their struggle for righteo ness with God with what they are plea l to call their moral strength, let the try. They will only become addition witnesses to the age-long "offense the cross," of which the apostles ave spoken. As it is, the believer in ripture can well see the wisdom unde ing the divine plan of salvation, wh on the one hand satisfies His holine and justice and verifies His truth, a on the other hand, manifests His ur terably great mercy. Believers in a ges have applauded and magnified thi ery redemption by way of a vicariou substitution. W. H. T. L

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

I HAVE spoken of seeing mountains and valleys and hills. Sacred writers call heaven a city, the City of God, the New Jerusalem. From time to time in this account of my journey I have used the same figure. And heaven is indeed a city, but it is a city of cities, and the great spaces to which I have alluded which I have but feeble power to describe are to this City and to its innumerable inhabitants what the parks are to an earthly metropolis. I have seen the plan of a model city designed by a landscape engineer and architect of brilliant imagination. In it the houses and even the factories were so set in parks that the whole city was a park. The Jewish tabernacle in the wilderness was built according to a divine plan, if the records be true, and we believe they are. If so, then God is an architect. Heaven therefore is a divinely planned city. What perfection should we not look for in a city whose builder and maker is God?

ONE of the surprises of my vision was the substantiality of the City. It is builded on foundations as real as granite. It is "rock-ribbed, and ancient as the sun." The elements out of which the celestial temples and palaces are built are as real as those with which we deal on earth, only more numerous. Superhuman intelligences possess knowledge of elements which as yet are unknown to us. And moreover they command forces which we have not yet discovered.

The Pavilion of the Past was impressive both for its size and its stately and majestic beauty. From it I was conducted to an edifice which taxes the power of human speech to describe. It was a temple rather than a pavilion, constructed of a material resembling burnished gold, but redder than gold, and apparently possessing the quality of radio-activity. The walls were as solid as though of gold, yet the emanations therefrom were of cloudlike softness and flamelike lambency. The temple was a perfect square, and much higher than any other edifice I had seen except the Hall of the Presence of the Infinite. Around the top a frieze of sculptures in glistening white stood out against a background of deep, dull blue. Through the clear atmosphere I could see the statues in detail as through a powerful glass. The hands that wrought them had the ideals of the elder days of art—or shall I say of the coming days of art? The figures were allegorical. I needed not to ask the name of this temple. The sculptures proclaimed it. Each of them was the all but breathing personification of the qualities which characterize perfect love—courtesy, loyalty, urbanity, veneration, respect, reverence, purity, unselfishness, truth. This was the Temple of Love.

THE entrance to the temple was through a massive doorway on which I read the words, "Love is of God, and every one that loveth is born of God and knoweth God." Entering, we were not alone. A throng passed in with us and others preceded and followed. The hall here was itself a temple of superb proportions. I marked that not all the pilgrims here were clad in white. Those who entered through the door through which we passed were indeed white-robed. But it seemed there was a door on each of the four sides of the temple, and those who entered through the other doors were some in gray, some in gold and some in crimson. The illumination of the hall was as through a dome of myriad-colored stained glass. It was a symphony of color, resembling, most of all earthly sights, the wonderful atmospheric effects at the Grand Cañyon of the Colorado.

At my right and left were doorways. "What are these?" I inquired. "Read what thou seest," my guide replied, "and if thou then requirest further help, I will instruct thee." Both doors were covered with mosaic work in precious stones. On one I read in illumined letters the words, "They who have been purified by love here find their treasures." Dull of understanding, I looked toward my guide for enlightenment. He said, "The strong and brave are saved and chastened by love; the weak-willed, who resist not the tyranny of the flesh, fall into condemnation through it. The life which looks not beyond the satisfactions of the senses is not worthy the name of love. Passion is not love. Love exalts its object; passion exalts itself. Love sacrifices itself; passion sacrifices its object, and so its object becomes its victim. The rewards which lie beyond that jeweled door are reserved for those who for pure love's sake have put away all thought of self." Listening, I heard the sound of happy voices, of laughter and of singing. The door opened to admit a gray-clad pilgrim. Looking in, I saw innumerable groups of three or four, or five or six, as though in families. Here and there were larger circles, as of friends. In the center of the room there was a fountain, and the silver tinkle of its falling waters mingled with the soft music of unseen strings. A grateful odor greeted my senses; it was the breath of spring. Every face was joyful, and every face was young. I have mentioned the fact that I heard voices from this room, but as I looked at them more closely I perceived that they were also communicating with each other without the use of words. Eye spoke to eye and heart to heart. Something caused me to look intently at the figure of one within the room, in which there was something that seemed familiar to me. Was it the poise of the head? the finely chiseled brow? It may have been the voice, for she was speaking aloud to her companion. I spoke her name mentally, and as I did so she turned and looked at me, and there was a glad smile of swift recognition. (I had a favorite aunt, once a teacher, in her latter years a writer. Her name is not unknown to readers of short stories in a certain popular magazine of a generation ago. She never married, though she had suitors. She had her sufficient reasons for choosing the solitary life. Her later years were lonely. She was not alone now, and in her white she looked not unlike a bride in June.) As the door closed, she evidently spoke my name to her companion, for they both looked at me and waved their hands in salutation. She knew me, but she knew that I had not yet come to the City to abide. I shall ever think of that room as the Place of Compensation.

THE opposite door opened to admit a company, all in white, and I saw that this room was even more magnificent than the one into which I had just been permitted to look. It was filled and flooded with a glory which I took to be some special manifestation of the divine presence. I was in error, however, for my guide said, "Here is to be the marriage feast of the Lamb, but the time is not yet fulfilled. The Bridegroom tarries. Preparations are not yet complete. The bride has not yet put on her wedding garments." Answering an unspoken question of mine he continued, "These you have seen enter here are servants of the King. It is their office to prepare this place for that event to which all the ages have looked forward. Here the long, long watch of the faithful church is to be ended. The Bridegroom will claim his bride."

The door remained ajar long enough for me to see at the farther end of the chamber a window aflame with the gorgeousness of a thousand sunsets. Around the room extended a circular gallery on the front of which I read two inscriptions: "He brought me to the banqueting house, and his banner over me was love." "He that hath the bride is the bridegroom; but the friend of the bridegroom, who standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice; my joy therefore is fulfilled." A company of trumpeters entered the gallery beneath the flaming window. They put the trumpets to their lips and sounded forth notes of joy so perfect that they seemed articulate: in antiphony there came from singers at the other end of the chamber beyond my angle of vision a song I had never before heard, and yet I had a haunting sense that it was not entirely strange. I thought, "This is the song of Moses and the Lamb." Long after it ceased it echoed and re-echoed in my ears. I had heard the song which none but the redeemed can learn, and, as I left the Temple of Love, my guide told me that in the latter chamber, the place of the marriage supper, the ransomed of the Lord are to receive the new name which only they who receive it can read.

CHAPTER IX

IN a former chapter I have spoken of seeing a woman enter the City through the Martyr Gate who on earth had been a martyr of love. As I turned away from the door through which I had heard angelic choirs, I saw her, the long crucified, the silent sufferer, the soul whose daily companion had been pain. She was entering the Temple of Love with a group of spirits upon whose faces was evident the peace that passes explanation. It had certainly not been long since I saw her enter the City, but now her bearing was that of a native of the place. Even while she trod the rugged, thorny paths of earth, her heart was evidently here. Because of the nature of her earthly anguish, which faith had helped her bear with passionate patience, it was inevitable that she should find her way to the Temple of Love and the Place of Compensation.

Within the Gate of Great Desire, not far from the House of Fulfilment, I had seen the towers of the Sanctuary of Explanation. I was about to ask my guide whether it were possible for us to visit the Sanctuary of Explanation when he said, "You shall see the place of the solution of all problems, the explanation of all mysteries." Then, with the rapidity of light—yea, with the speed of thought—we traversed valleys and highlands, plains and mountains, until we must have covered half the circumference of the sphere which, I am sure, is the center of all universes.

To be continued

A Week in the World's News

RELIGIOUS CONGRESS AT PANAMA. The Congress on Religious Work in Latin-America began its session in Panama on February 10 and heard on February 11 a comprehensive missionary survey of all Latin-America, which showed that a complete collapse of Christian faith in Latin-America was impending. Present plans and forces of the Protestant Church in Latin-America are "pathetically inadequate." Eighty per cent. of the population in some instances, and in no case less than 40 per cent., are illiterate. It was stated that a vast amount of capital would be required to open up the commercial resources of the countries of Latin-America, the investment of $2,500,000,000 by Great Britain in Argentina alone being given in evidence. A great industrial revolution throughout South America is foreseen, unless some influence prevents the development of those industrial ills which have accompanied industrial development in older countries. The Commission on Cooperation and Promotion of Unity reported on February 17 that under present conditions in Latin-America cooperation between the Roman Catholic and Protestant missionaries is impossible, and that in the opinion of the commission efforts to bring about such cooperation would be likely to be misunderstood. Full reports of the conference will be given in a later number of the Christian Herald.

SENATE GETS SOME MEXICAN FACTS. Secretary Lansing sent to the Senate on February 17 a statement showing that 76 Americans had been slain in Mexico since 1912, and that 47 lost their lives there before 1912. In addition, 20 civilian Americans and 16 American soldiers were slain in border fighting on American territory. During the same time 92 Mexicans were killed in the United States, five of them by shots across the border. Secretary Lansing refused to send to the Senate copies of diplomatic and consular correspondence with agents in Mexico, claiming that it was contrary to the public interest to submit this information, as it would impair the usefulness of the American agents and would embarrass foreign governments who had permitted their representatives to gather facts for the United States. The Administration explained that Carranza was recognized because at the time of recognition the Carranza government controlled more than 75 per cent. of Mexican territory and was affording "reasonably adequate protection to lives and property of American citizens."

NICARAGUA TREATY RATIFIED. The Senate on February 18 by a vote of 55 to 18 ratified the treaty with Nicaragua by which the United States secures exclusive rights to the canal route through the San Juan River and the Lake of Nicaragua. The United States is to pay to Nicaragua $3,000,000, which is to be applied to the debt of Nicaragua or to internal improvements subject to the approval of the American State Department. The United States also secures a renewable 99 year lease to Great Corn and Little Corn Islands and a naval base on Fonseca Bay, site yet to be selected. In ratifying the treaty the Senate, to meet the protests of Honduras, Costa Rica and Salvador, passed a resolution declaring that the rights of these three countries were expressly preserved and in nowise impaired.

SWEDEN URGES AMERICAN ACTION. On February 17 Mr. Ekengren, Swedish minister to the United States, appealed to the United States for cooperation with his government and other neutral nations to maintain preservation of international law concerning neutral commerce and navigation. The Swedish minister declared: "The violation of existing rules of international law has, regardless of protests, increased until at present only a few rules serving as protection to neutral commercial intercourse are observed by Great Britain, and it is feared that also these remaining few will be violated. . . . Of late the British authorities have violated the mail traffic. Parcel post from one neutral country to a her is being unloaded in British ports and e contents are being seized. . . . However, E land's present practices of censoring also t-class mail, sent by neutral vessels from on eutral country to another, is an even greater lation of the rights accorded neutral power by the rules of international law. . . . The Ro Government now, therefore, appeals to th overnment of the United States for cooper on for the purpose of seeking to bring about iscontinuance of the violations of internati l law, at least so far as the same concerns f t-class mail, and it solicits as early an a er as possible." Secretary Lansing told the vedish minister that he could not answer il the controversy with Germany over the l itania case was settled. In the meantime, t Swedish government has refused to permit mmunication between Great Britain an Russia across its territory.

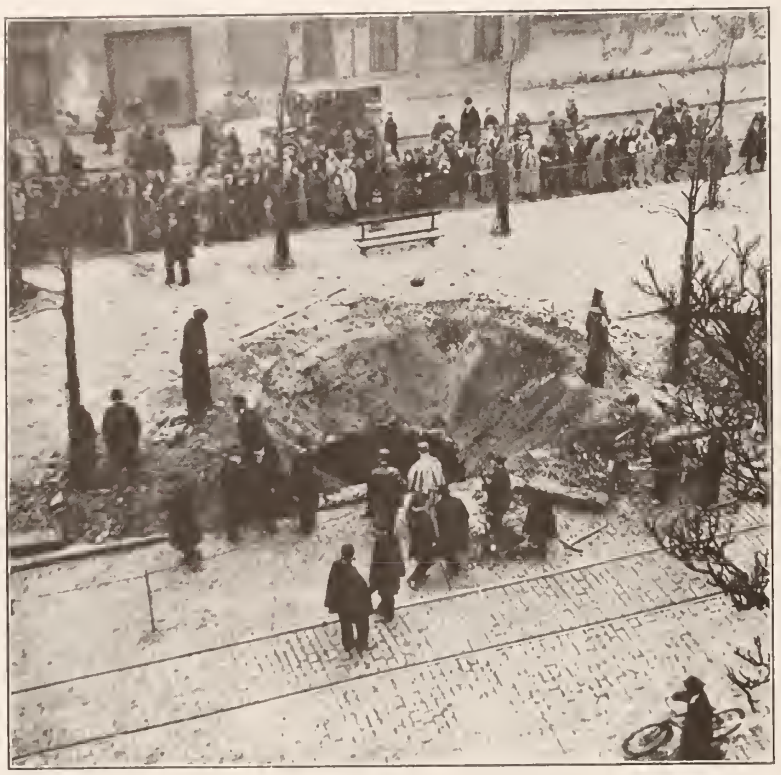

Photo. by Paul Thompson

Hole Made in Arch of the Underground Railway, Paris, by Zeppelin Bomb

© International Film Service

And Another One Did This

SPAIN BUYS SH S. It was officially announce Madrid on February 17 t the Spanish government purchased the Austro-Ger n vessels interned in Spanish ts.

A PLEA FOR SAC ICE —The week of March 1 9 has been set apart by the E utive Commission of the Pres erian General Assembly as a ek of Self-Sacrifice. The co ission hopes thus to begin suc sfully a campaign to raise m than $5,000,000 within the n year for the needs of the ele missionary boards of the ch h.

FIRE DEMON SITS FALL RIVER. A fir Fa River, Mass., which b n on the evening of Februar and was checked the followi morning, destroyed property rincipally in the business di t. to the value of about $1,50 00.

COMMERCIAL URTESY.—In response to vitations from a number o atin-American countries, S tary McAdoo of the Treas has made arrangements for veral groups of business men visit these countries in the i rests of better commercial r ions. One of the parties sail from New Orleans on Febr y 2. The countries visited l include Argentina, Brazi Uruguay, Paraguay, Centra merica, Chile and Peru. The ern-

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

PARLIAMENT opened February 5 without the usual ceremonies because of the king's illness, due to the injury which he received recently in France. The speech from the throne was read in the House of Lords by the Lord Chancellor, and in it the king declared that the only measures which will be submitted to Parliament are such as would tend to the attainment of victory in the war. Prime Minister Asquith dwelt upon the economic strain of the war, and forecasted a fresh vote of credit, which, it is estimated, will be about two billion five hundred million dollars. He also stated that the government is listing its national assets in munitions, men and money. A comprehensive and drastic reduction in imports of various raw materials has also been put into effect, in order to reduce the consumption of commodities not of the first order of necessity, and thus conserve the national resources in money. The specific articles include tobacco in all its forms, paper, wood pulp, foreign magazines excepting single copies by mail, and other publications.

Lord Kitchener expressed himself in general terms as satisfied with the military situation, present and prospective, but also expressed considerable anxiety as to the number of men the so-called compulsory service bill lately passed would ultimately bring to the colors, the reason for this anxiety being the exemption clauses of the bill, which provide so many and such diverse avenues of escape from actual military service.

On the western front France suffers great disadvantages in regard to her supply of men, owing to a very low birth rate for many years past. She certainly has passed the maximum of her strength and cannot, in spite of the desperate valor her troops are showing, be expected to hold the present line on the western front without far more aid than she has hitherto received from Great Britain. Therefore the vital question on this front is whether or not Great Britain can render this aid. It is variously stated that England has three million, four million, and even as high as five million men now under arms.

The fighting in the west is not only continuing severe on the Artois front, but is beginning to be furious on the Champagne front, and all signs point to a general revival of activity from the sea to the Vosges Mountains. In the Vosges and to the eastward the great depth of snow will probably for the present prevent military operations on a large scale for some time to come, though, as will be seen below, some skirmishing has already taken place.

The Germans continue to make small gains, but there seem no indications that these movements are part of any carefully planned offensive having any more definite object than a rectification of their battle line. Southeast of Ypres during the week the Germans captured by storm several hundred yards of trenches from the British, taking a few hundred prisoners besides. These storming operations by the infantry were preceded by a two days' artillery bombardment of the positions to be attacked. In this sector fighting is continuing.

Farther south toward Arras there was very hard fighting northwest of Vimy, where the French with desperate gallantry attacked time after time the positions captured from them by the Germans some ten days ago. This fighting has continued almost without intermission day and night, all through the week. Up to the present, however, the French efforts have not been successful.

South of Arras on the Somme River the fighting has been most desperate all the week, but though the lines have swayed to and fro with momentary advantage to one side or the other, no real result seems to have been as yet reached.

In Champagne, near Tahure, which has so often figured in the dispatches before, the most furious fighting of the week took place. This opened with an attack by the Germans on the French positions to the west of Tahure, which they successfully rushed, capturing a considerable number of prisoners as well. The French immediately counter-attacked and the fighting spread. Northeast of the Butte de Mesnil the French were successful in taking a couple of hundred yards of German trenches, but the Germans more than evened this gain by capturing some 700 yards of French trenches at St. Marie-à-Py, with a few prisoners. Since these captures the fighting has continued desperately, but neither side has reported any further gains.

There was also some infantry tivity in the Vosges. The Germa captured a few yards of French tr ches near St. Dié, and near Abersep ook and held some 500 yards of their opponents' trenches in spite of strong c terattacks. All the week there ha een general artillery activity on the hole front.

Late in the week Mr. Balfou considerably astonished England by mitting in the House of Commons th the government possessed no effic ous means of defense against Zeppelin and that it could not at the present ime hold out any hopes of rectifyir the fundamental error of the governm t in having omitted to keep pace wit Germany in the creating of an aeri war fleet.

Germany is in process of repatr ing about 20,000 women, children an nen unfit for military service from th districts in northern France occupi by her troops. This will bring the tal number of persons sent from ese districts into France via Switzerla to 116,000, in return for whom Fran has sent into Germany about 120,000 ermans and Austrians of a like char ter.

The French admiralty announce the loss of the Admiral Chanier, torp ed by a German submarine off the co of Asia Minor on February 9. The sel was a protected cruiser of about 00 tons, and was not a particularl important unit of the French line. her crew of 375 only one man was s ed, which is the record percentage of c alties in a naval loss so far.

The British lost two vessels i he North Sea—the Arabia, an aux ry cruiser, being used as a mine swe er, and the Arethusa, a protected cr er, me s of these countries are arranging specia industrial commercial expositions and mo g picture representations of various line of industry in anticipation of the visit of se committees. Some interesting comme on possible commerce with South Amerca e given in the New York Evening Post of bruary 12 in a letter from Percival Far har, president of the Brazil Railway. Accding to this letter, the trade of South Am ca with all parts of the world has been seri sly embarrassed by the withdrawal of fore n-owned ships for war purposes. In this outh America and North America are equ y concerned. He points to the general acc ance of the Monroe Doctrine as an insur e of "identical conditions of peace and tra illity to this hemisphere as far as outside gression is concerned." South America offe North America a large market for manufa red articles in return for various necessary w materials. Brazil has son of the largest iron depos in the world. Chile con us the largest deposits of rates. Copper and silver ore re found in large quantiti in Chile, Bolivia and Per the plateau of Bolivia bei one of the most highly min dized countries of the wor Brazil may easil become the greatest source of the orld's supply of rubber, and n also supply tan barks. Arg tina is already an import t wheat and beef impor g country, while Brazil is f acquiring the world's ma t in coffee and cocoa. But outh America is singularl acking in coal deposits and ust import large quantities coal. In 1913 Great Brit 's exports amounted to 97,0 ,000 tons of coal, which, wit arge quantities of mercha ise, provided outwardbou cargoes for vessels in the outh American carrying trac It has been estimated by e budget committee of the rgentine Congress that the tal of the annual Argentine payments abroad for serv of public debt, dividen etc., was $251,000,000. A n loan of $6,000,000 has rece ly been arranged by Argen a with the National City Bar of New York, the first North American ban o establish South American connections.

Continued on page 279

T. TROWBRIDGE DEAD John Tow end Trowbridge, author of stories for boy died at Arlington, Mass., February 12, in h ninetieth year. In 1870 he wrote that fam s humorous poem, "Darius Greene and His ying Machine." Mr. Trowbridge wrote a n ber of novels, the best known of which was Neighbor Jackwood." He also wrote a gre many very popular short stories for boys and number of boys' books.

SCUED FROM CANNIBALS. Miss Ma Sackow of Newton, Kan., and three oth missionaries to Liberia, were rescued in Dec ber from death at the hands of cannibal the United States scout cruiser Chester. On ccount of economic conditions, natives am whom the missionaries had been working turned to their former cannibal practice The missionaries were in great danger, sin the cannibals prefer the meat of white per s rather than black. The missionaries had en stationed at Jacktown, Liberia, and ma ged to make their way to Greenville, but ould not get a boat to carry them to Mo via. News of the disturbances was carr to Monrovia by native runners. Sho y after the missionaries reached Greenvill the American scout cruiser steamed into the y, landed 200 native soldiers, and took the issionaries on board ARCHIST ATTEMPTS ASSASSINATI . On Thursday, February 10, Most Re end George W. Mundelein, D.D., was con rated Archbishop of the Catholic arc iocese of Chicago. In the evening the con ration of the new archbishop was celebra by a banquet at the University Club. Fol ving the soup course, more than one hur ed of the guests at the banquet were tak mysteriously ill, and investigation led to the lief that arsenic had been placed in the sou The soup had been made by one Jean Cr s. This man failed to report for work aft naking the soup and had not been found up the date of this writing. Detectives fou in his room a quite fully appointed che cal laboratory, also many volume of an histic literature. Several anarchist fri s of Crones were arrested as accessories.

LL COOPERATE WITH FORD. It wa nnounced from Berne on February 11 tha he first definite move to end the world wa ad been made there that day in a meeting the Permanent C nmittee to establish las g peace. The committee met to formulat roposals for an armistice. Peace advoc es from several countries were in atten nce. On the same day that this other co erence met at Berne, Louis Lochner and Ha C. Evans, as delegates of the Ford peace expedition, presented the objects of the expedition to a meeting of about thirty members of the Swiss parliament, who decided unanimously in favor of the participation of Switzerland in the peace conference at Stockholm. With this committee sitting in Berne and the Ford Permanent Peace Committee at Stockholm, and with President Wilson ready at any time to act as intermediary should any belligerent request it, there seems to be nothing to prevent peace but the war itself.

© American Press Association

Scene of the $2,000,000 to $5,000,000 Pier and Steamship Fire, Brooklyn, February 16

EXPLOSION WRECKS MINE. An explosion in the Jefferson-Clearfield Coal and Iron Company's mine in Ernest, Pa., on February 11 claimed the lives of at least twenty-five men. At last reports, search was still being made for more bodies.

CHILD LABOR CONFERENCE. The twelfth annual conference on child labor closed its session at Asheville, N. C., February 9. The conference was of special interest in view of the fact that the Keating Bill to prohibit interstate shipments of products manufactured wholly or in part by child labor had just passed the House of Representatives at Washington by a vote of 337 to 46 on February 2, and that the principal attacks upon the bill had been made by representatives from North Carolina. Congressman Britt of North Carolina appeared before the conference to defend his action in voting against the bill. Congressman Keating of Colorado, whose name the bill bears, answered Mr Britt's arguments. It developed during the session of the conference that the opposition to child labor legislation in the South came largely from special interests. Rev. R. B. Campbell of Asheville said at the last session of the conference: "The fact that our representative voted against the Keating Bill when you and I wanted him to vote for it is not entirely his fault. We did not tell him what we wanted, but let us tell our senators before it is too late." The Keating Bill makes it unlawful for any producer or dealer to ship, in interstate commerce, mine or quarry products made by children under sixteen years of age, manufactured products made by children under fourteen, or by children under sixteen employed more than eight hours a day, or by children under sixteen employed at night. Canning clubs formed by boys and girls are exempt under the act.

BAPTIST PENSION FUND. As a part of a Five Year Program of the Northern Baptist Convention, a fund of $2,000,000 is being raised as a pension fund for Baptist ministers. In the last eight months $500,000 has been raised. There are 13,000 ministers and missionaries in the churches connected with the convention, and among them about 600 cases needing relief and support. It is stated that outside of the large cities the average salary of the Baptist minister in the North is $1.87 per day, and that the salaries of the ministers in the Southern Baptist Convention are smaller still. The new pension fund will be applicable to missionaries working abroad as well as to ministers at home.

DR. CLARK IN CHINA AND JAPAN. Rev. Francis E. Clark, president of the World's Christian Endeavor Union, sailed on February 10 to attend national Christian Endeavor conventions in China and Japan. The conventions will be held in Osaka, Japan, and Hanchow, China, and Dr. Clark will visit a number of other important cities in the two countries. There are upward of 40,000 Christian Endeavorers in China, Japan, Korea and adjoining countries.

VETERAN JUDGE RETIRES. Judge Emil Henry Lacombe, for twenty-five years a member of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals and for twenty-nine years a federal judge, retired on February 15, having reached the age of 70 years on January 29. Judge Lacombe has presided over many very important cases, and his last act as judge was to sign the papers in the final settlement of the Metropolitan Railway receivership of New York City.

A MONSTER PETITION FOR PEACE. A petition circulated by the Women's Neutrality League, bearing the signatures of 1,035,697 persons, was recently presented to the United States Congress, asking that it forbid the export of "things that kill." The petition was in a number of rolls and was 82,000 feet long.

CHINESE REVOLUTION STILL SPREADING. It was announced from Tokyo on February 13 that the Chinese rebels who captured Luchow and Chungking have been joined by government troops. Correspondence of the Associated Press under date of January 13 shows that the government of China was taking the revolution very seriously, and big guns had been mounted at Hangyang and at Wuchang and at various other points on the Yangtse, and that many executions of rebels and their agents were taking place in Hupeh province. The government was apparently planning to overawe the revolutionists elsewhere and to surround Yunnan.

WILL RECOGNIZE AMERICAN PASSPORTS. On February 14 British authorities released Henry J. Backer of New Orleans, who had been arrested at Gibraltar in spite of the fact that he had an American passport and that all of his papers were regular. It was announced in connection with his release that the British naval authorities had been instructed that in future a naturalized American bearing a valid passport need not produce his naturalization papers.

WORKING COPPER WASTE. A new process for recovering copper from the ore was reported on February 14 to the stockholders of the Anaconda Copper Mining Company by the president, John D. Ryan. The new process is described as "oil flotation" in place of "water concentration" at a certain stage in the reduction work. Mr. Ryan reported that 96 per cent. of the copper in concentrates was now being recovered as against 82 per cent. by the old process, at a very small increase in the cost of treatment per ton. The new process has been utilized to work over 212,385 tons of tailings with an average recovery of 9.2 pounds of copper to the ton.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE FAVORS EMBARGO At a recent meeting of the "Chamber of Commerce of the United States" at Washington, the delegates of the Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade of the United States went on record as favoring the taking of the initiative by this country in the establishment of an international court to settle the disputes of nations, punishment of violators of international agreements to be an embargo upon all commerce in merchandise either for peace or war.

EIGHT THOUSAND TESTAMENTS FOR SOLDIERS. The Empress of Russia has recently expressed thanks on behalf of the Grand Duke Alexis, heir to the Russian throne, for the gift of Testaments by American Sunday school children to the Russian soldiers. The letter was prompted by a recent shipment of 8,000 Testaments, making a total of 33,000 already distributed among the soldiers.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION. The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

© International Film Service

Looking South Toward the City Hall, Fall River, Mass., During the Great Fire There February 13-14

THE MINISTRY OF SOLITUDE

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXT—John 16:32. 'I am not alone, because the Father is with me."

WHAT special circumstances were they which made our Lord seek the ministry of solitude? If I can only find out when the Master sought the restoring influence of solitude, it may indicate to me the times when I should find the strengthening and the calming influence of solitude in my own life.

Jesus of Nazareth was always hearing bad news. The story of the world's sin and woes was forever being poured into his sympathetic ears. But I think that if I wished to point out one day darker than another, I should select that day when the disciples of John, stunned, bewildered, broken-hearted, came and told the Christ that they had just been burying their murdered and headless leader. Jesus of Nazareth loved John the Baptist. He loved him for his fidelity, for his humility, for his magnificent subordination of himself to the purpose of his mission. And now this faithful friend has been foully butchered! And the story of the great tragedy is told so simply. "And John's disciples came, and took up the body and buried it, and went and told Jesus." How will he receive the terrible news? I am reverently curious to know how this Jesus will encounter sad news in the shape of a great affliction. "When Jesus heard of it . . . he departed thence into a desert place apart." The first thing he did was to seek to be alone. When this cold burden of sorrow touched his heart, immediately he sought to be alone with God.

In all sorrow, much company is burdensome. Silence is never so golden as when we are in the presence of a soul whose trouble is new. Let us never forget that there is a silent sympathy whose healing influence may be only broken and disturbed by speech. The newly wounded spirit longs for silence, and so longs to be alone.

But all solitude is not full of angel ministries. All loneliness has not healing in its wings. There is a loneliness which is only a haunt of fears, the parent of a morbid moodiness and melancholy, drying up the very springs of endeavor and hope. If in sorrow you seek to be alone with yourself, then solitude will prove to be a place of terrible drought. Jesus of Nazareth sought to be alone with the Father, and the thirsty land became springs of water. "I am alone, yet not alone; the Father is with me." Seek to be alone with God, and sorrow will change its color; across the storm-cloud you shall see the rainbow covenant of hope.

NOW, what does a man gain by seeking solitude with God when he encounters a great sorrow? Well, you know how it is when some great affliction visits a home in the shape of a business calamity or the stroke of death. Does it not feel as if the whole family structure is shaken, and that all things are mingled in blind confusion? I know nothing more terribly painful than that sense of bewilderment which follows the first shock of some great affliction, when the mind staggers, and all things appear confused and without a plan. It seems as if all things had been shaken to their very center. That is the moment to follow the Master's example, and seek to be alone with God. Why? To look at the foundations. "The things that are seen" may appear to be reeling, but "the foundations of God stand sure." Go into the secret place, and see them. Get alone with God, that you may see the unseen and the eternal. That is the gracious ministry of consecrated solitude: it gives the bewildered soul assurance. It nourishes the pregnant faith that God is in heaven, all's well with the world. Out of that assurance there comes the resignation which itself is spiritual power.

We have not been told anything of those lonely communions which our Saviour had with the Father; but I think we may infer the character of them from what we learn elsewhere. Our Saviour was more than once overheard in prayer, and snatches of his communion have been preserved for us. And this was the burden of them all: "Thy will be done!" When the cross of life was very heavy, he went apart, communed with the Father, saw the sure foundations, gained assurance himself, resigned himself anew, and came forth again clothed with superlative radiance and power. I would ask you, then—you upon whom trouble may fall tomorrow—to remember the example of your Master, who encountered a great sorrow by first of all going into a place apart, that there he might be assured of his Father's presence and sovereignty, and by the assurance resign himself to the Father's will.

LET us now take another occasion in his life when our Saviour sought the ministry of solitude. "And it came to pass in those days that he went out into a mountain to pray, and continued all night in prayer to God." And why? "And when it was day he called unto him his disciples, and of them he chose twelve." Here is the connection—a whole night spent in mountain solitude, alone with the Father, before making a great choice in the selection of twelve men. Jesus of Nazareth went into solitude before making great decisions. He went apart, into a solitary place, that he might mingle his spirit in communion with his Father, and so perfect was the communion that he was able to say, "I and my Father are one." "The Son can do nothing of himself but what he seeth the Father do"; and with that glorious assurance of knowing the Father's will he returned from solitude, and with infinite confidence made his practical decisions.

Now, you and I are often under the necessity of making great decisions, of choosing one road from many roads. We have often to take momentous steps in the way of life. We are often led up to crises where we know that decision is pregnant with tremendous issues. How do we approach such decisions? Jesus of Nazareth spent a night with God before making a great choice, and similar preparation is still needed by all who profess to be his own. But what is the good of getting apart with God? Why not trust one's own judgment and common sense? The Master prayed, that is enough; he would not select twelve men out of a hundred until he had spent a lonely night with God. We want not merely judgment, but purified judgment; not merely common sense, but sanctified common sense.

Now, God has promised to give what he calls "the spirit of wisdom" to all who seek it. And you remember those words of the apostle James: "If any man lack wisdom"—not merely bread or shelter—"if any man lack wisdom" ideas, judgment, direction, insight, foresight—"let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally." Wisdom is the gift of God, as well as daily bread. He giveth "the spirit of wisdom" to man. You are face to face with an emergency which calls for practical judgment. You get alone, and seek the presence of the Eternal. He pron es to bestow upon you the spirit of wisdom; that is say, as you commune with him the whole tone your spirit will be raised and purified, and your c acity of moral discernment and judgment will be qu ened and enlarged.

BUT for you and me there is a further consid tion, which did not apply to our Lord. You kn it is often the case that defective eyesight aris from enfeebled health. In sickness the power of s ng is often impaired, but when health returns the ht is restored. It is not otherwise in moral sphere The moral vision, the power of moral discernm and practical judgment, is often rendered defec e by reason of general spiritual sickness and we ness We should have better judgment if we were etter men. A sick soul involves an untrue and u rtain judgment. Here is the great promise of the ther: "I will restore health unto thee." He resto our health, and so our sight; our souls, and so ou udgment. He gives us the spirit of wisdom by iving us the health of his countenance. He tal the dimness out of our eyes by removing the sick s out of our souls. He gives us power to judge d to discern by giving us power to be pure. "Th neek will he guide in judgment." That is what is ation with God accomplishes. It raises the spirit i the partaking of the Divine Spirit, and so into the owledge of the divine purposes and will. The y to healthy judgment is by the road of spiritual alth, and spiritual health is gained by communion w h the great Father of spirits, our Maker and our Go

Now, I think it requires no argument to pro that a man will approach a great crisis and trial of ju ment in altogether greater fitness and readiness, if l come to it from the immediate presence of his G In that lonely communion he will have received w t the prophet so beautifully describes as "the stre th of stillness," that strange quieting of the spirit w ch is the very secret of confidence and power. The m who approaches a decision in "the strength of st ess" —a stillness occasioned by his communion in th ecret place—may implicitly trust his judgment, a step out without fear. But how often we make our c ision independently of God and of heaven! How o n we make our choice—a choice full of consequence without any resorting to the secret place! Ta the determination as to our calling and vocation life. How rarely is that great decision preceded by a ason of isolation with God? We know that Jesus hrist spent a night with God before deciding as to w were to be the twelve; may we not believe that he nt a night with the Father before deciding to be carpenter? I dare say we should all agree that man ought to get apart with his God, and linge there long, before he finally decides as to whether h ught to be a minister. But are we all agreed that he ould do so before he decides to be a grocer or a me ant? Is it a matter of indifference what some men ecide to be? May some men fall into their calling by ance and haphazard, while others must go to the ecret place to seek the guidance of their God?

Let us settle it that no man's lot is so ind erent that it can be left to the arbitrament of chance. very man's vocation in life must be sought and a pted as the will of God; it is a post of honor, where e are to represent our King. I urge you, then, efore making any great decision, to get apart wit God. In all crises calling for critical judgment, let y ery be, "Keep Thou my feet."

---

*Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

Why Should I Fear?

By ANNIE JOHNSON FLINT

I WILL trust Him, yea I will trust,
For He never hath failed me yet.
And never a day nor an hour,
But mine uttermost need is met.
Though I dwell in the midst of foes,
Yet there is my table spread,
And His presence wraps me round
And His wings are over my head.
Father and Infinite God,
My Refuge and Fortress Rock,
Where I hide from the tempest's wrath,
And feel not the earthquake shock.
So I bide with a soul serene
And a heart that is undismayed.
He is my Strength and my Shield;
Of whom shall I be afraid?

I WILL not be afraid, for I know
That He keepeth me safe from harm,
And He shall defend His own
With a strong and a stretched-out arm.
Though I grope in perilous paths,
In darkness and danger and doubt,
I know, as He brought me in,
So He surely will bring me out.
For the God I serve today
Is one with the God of old;
Still doth He guide my steps
And still doth His hand uphold.
He giveth me rest from fear,
For on Him my mind is stayed,
He is the Strength of my life;
Of what shall I be afraid?

I WILL trust and not be afraid.
I have seen, I have heard, I have known.
This mighty and terrible God
Hath called me and made me His own.
"Dread not! Faint not!" He hath said,
"For the battle belongs to me.
Go forth with a song of praise,
And My victory thou shalt see."
And where I go He will go,
And He knoweth the way I take;
He is with me unto the end,
And He will not fail nor forsake.
They that trust in the Lord
Shall never be moved nor swayed.
"Fear not!" He hath said unto me,
And why should I be afraid?

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

Endless Possibilities

SUNDAY, March 5. Mark 9: 23. "All things are possible to him that believeth." Our possibilities are as big as our tasks. Nay, they are bigger than our tasks for it is purposed that when the tas is finished we shall have strength to spare. It is the will of our God that there should be a glorious "ps" in all our warfare, so that when the victory is wo we are "more than conquerors." The size of a tas is therefore never a justification for retreat. "If, as ldiers of the cross, we stick at anything, we are disgraced forever!" Hesitancy casts dishonor upon the Lo It throws suspicion upon the adequacy of his resources. He has imposed a task for which he has not rovided the strength! The mission is appointed but the needful equipment is withheld! We are ready but God is lacking! Thus do we sit in judgment upon the Lord, while all the time our apparent prudence is disloyalty, and our seeming wisdom is unbelief.

I our Christian warfare, we are to stick at nothing. To lievers in Christ, the impossible is to shine in the att ctive light of a glorious assurance. We are to appro h boggy and trackless wastes in the confidence tha horoughfares have been provided. "And a highwa hall be there and a way!" We are to march against ter e and hoary fortresses in the joyful certainty that we n overturn them to their deepest and most secret foundations. "Mighty to the pulling down of strongho !" This is to be the shining distinction of the arm of the Lord. It is to move against the impossible, an y the very character of its stride it is to compel the wor to believe that the impossible is already being accon lished. The church is not here to do what anybo else can do. She is not one of a hundred institutio standing with them in common rank and file. The chu h does not share her errand. She stands alone, an er mission is to do the impossible, to achieve wo ers of which no other fellowship even dreams.

It the impossible can become our achievement onl through a vital faith in a living Christ. A credal con ection is not a vital communion. There is connec on by marriage which knows no kinship in blood. A ing faith drinks Christ's blood—yes, drinks Ch t's very life into the soul, and so equips the soul to et the world and the flesh and the devil with the oly vitality of the eternal Son of God. When we ink Christ's blood, and then step out to face our tas , "every valley shall be exalted, and every mo tain and hill shall be made low." J. H. J.

Messianic Prophecy and Fulfilment

MONDAY, March 6. Gen. 1: 26. "And God said, Let us make man, . . . and let them have dominion In the divine enumeration we find the fish of the ea and the fowls of the air, the cattle and the cre ing things, and indeed all the earth. The psalmist rec s to this original charta, as he closes his survey of creation in Psalm 8. But where is that sovereignty tod ? True, the wild things of the forest are said to dre the voice, the scent, and the eye of man; but on e whole the aboriginal tribes seem unequal to hol their own with the wilder and stronger carnivora. Sin as snatched the scepter from our hand and rolled the rown from our brow. In Heb. 2 the Spirit of ins ation announces the self-evident truth: we see not et all things put under him, but we see Jesus.

"ll power is given to Me in heaven and on earth"; Ma . 28: 18. In these majestic words the Son of Man affi s that God's creative purpose has not failed. Re ember that the power to which he referred was not hat which belonged to him, in his original and div e nature, but which he had won by his obedience unt death, as the second Adam who came to make go the failure of the first. At the beginning of his min try, the devil made offer of all power if Jesus wo l do him homage; that, however, was no price for m to give, but tears and anguish, blood-shedding an he cross of shame. Through these he came to the thr e, and in proportion as we abide in him and follow i his steps, we also, in our measure, regain what our ace has lost. He makes us kings, and we shall rei on the earth. F. B. M.

Forgetting Past Sins

TESDAY, March 7. Isa. 55: 7. "Let the wicked orsake his way, and the unrighteous man his tho hts: and let him return to Jehovah, and he will hav mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." The Scripture commands us not to dwell on our sins after we have turned our back upon them. It is spiritual unhealth to be continually thinking of our past failures, or rehearsing our ill deeds. We need to forget them as soon as possible and turn our attention to some new absorbing ambition. It is a doubtful good to be constantly "telling our experiences" of the sins we once committed. At times we may speak of our sins, if by so doing we may help others to overcome; but here Dante's advice is capital: "One glance, and then pass on."

We should forget our past sins, for we are told that when we confess and leave our wrongdoing, God pardons and forgets.

But thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption:
For thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.

There is a wonderful passage in Micah which sin-sick souls should learn by heart: "Who is a God like unto thee, that pardoneth iniquity, and passeth over the transgression of the remnant of his heritage? He retaineth not his anger forever, because he delighteth in loving-kindness. He will tread our iniquities under foot; and thou wilt cast all their sins into the depth of the sea."

If I believe in God, I have no right to live in past failure. It is a sign of morbidness to narrate evil doings and gloat over our own sins or the failures of others. God wants us to lead the positive, happy life of forgiven children who go singing along their way, because they have crossed the hilltop of old mistakes, and now face the sunrise of fresh purposes and hopes. C. S. C.

The Gentle Forethought of Jesus

WEDNESDAY, March 8. John 21: 1-14. "A fire of coals, and fish laid thereon, and bread." What delicate attentions to these men! Christ knew that they were drenched with spray and chilled with the keen morning air, so he prepared a fire. He is ever thoughtful of the tiniest matters that will alleviate the discomfort and increase the well-being of those who live to serve him. To these he seems to say: "Do the best you can for me, but rest at night; the longest night spent in unremitting labor will not profit; but I, in a single moment, can, as the morning breaks, make all right and fit for you." Our Lord never allows us to be in his debt. If we lend him a boat for a pulpit, he returns it laden with fish. If we seek his kingdom and glory, he sees that all other things are added. It is vain for you to rise up early, and sit up late, and eat the bread of care he giveth his beloved whilst they sleep.

At the same time, he is frugal of the miraculous. He will deal lavishly in miracles so long as they are necessary, but not an inch beyond. He might have created fish enough on that fire to supply them all, but that was needless so long as a hundred and fifty and three great fishes lay within easy reach. When Peter leaped into the water to swim to the Lord, he had left his brethren to drag the heavy net to land, and now, when the Master asks for some of their new-caught spoil, he hastens to fetch it. Thus on the shores of heaven, when we emerge from the toils of service, we shall find Jesus awaiting us, and we shall rejoice with him over the souls that we caught, but that he sent into our net. Thus we shall know that it is the Lord! F. B. M.

Fear and Faith

THURSDAY, March 9. Luke 12: 32. "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." These words were spoken as a command by the Master to those of his early followers who were beset by foes. Jesus knew the ill effects of fear—that distemper of the soul. He knew that it could be overcome only by belief, strong and clear, in the God who rules above our petty cares and vicissitudes, by the One who has joy in giving his believing children a part of the eternal kingdom of love.

How can we banish fear from our lives?—fear of failure, fear of poverty, fear of loneliness, and many an unspoken dread that keeps our spirits in bondage?

First, let us drag our fears out into the open and face them boldly. Many a trouble vanishes in the sunlight: fears thrive in darkness or half darkness. Our fears lie often in our subconsciousness and dog us like shadows. To tell our fears, to analyze them, to find out their source, is to half destroy them.

Second, let us believe in God—his promises and his love and his desire to give us good and not bad things. Fear is unbelief. Cultivate belief in God's men and women and in God's world; get the habit of believing in people, in seeing the good and in overlooking the evil. Remember that if you really want to believe in men and in God, you will slowly but surely get the habit of faith. Browning says: "If you desire faith, then you've faith enough."

But faith is a moving, active thing. It is more than desire; it needs the act of the will. Let me try today believing in a friendly universe. I will be positive and not negative; I will be a believer and not a cynic. Faith grows, and, growing, crowds out fear. C. S. C.

God's Plan of Infinite Variety

FRIDAY, March 10. Isa. 60: 12-22. "The fir-tree, the pine, and the box-tree together." These three were the glory of Lebanon, the box-tree in the lower slopes, the pines and firs on the higher; but each species was needed to beautify the place of God's sanctuary. Each had a beauty of its own; each would supply something which the others lacked; each completed the other two. So in the church God loves variety. There is no monotony in the colors of the forest or the field. The gorse and heather, the rose and lily, the russet and gold of autumn, the various shades of green foliage, the ever-shifting waves, the perpetual change in the cloud—all bespeak the infinite variety of his workmanship. In the Bible, the poet, the prophet, the evangelist; Mark with his terse style, Isaiah with his tropical eloquence, Amos the herdsman, Paul the student. In the Gospels, Martha and Mary, Peter and John, Zaccheus and Nicodemus, the woman that washed his feet with tears and those who brought spices on Easter Day.

Be yourself! If you are a fir-tree, be the best of your kind, and do not try to be a box-tree or a pine. If you are a harp with its solemn sound, do not endeavor to imitate a horn or cornet with their clarion note. You may be a glorious original, but would make a poor copy. Why should we envy each other? God made us to differ. He had a purpose in our creation and redemption. We were chosen to add a beauty to his sanctuary, which none but we can give. Only be it remembered that people do not come there to admire us, but to meet him. Let him be glorified; what does anything else matter! F. B. M.

True Worshipers in Every Church

SATURDAY, March 11. John 4: 24. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." The Jews were mistaken in wanting the whole world compressed into little Palestine, and everybody to be worshipers in their synagogue. Some people are still thinking that they are the church, while all other Christian bodies are only meeting-houses. They consider that it is necessary to have a priest swing a censer, and to have a bishop in the original succession to dedicate a temple before they can truly worship. When Jerusalem and the temple fell into ruins and the great baptism of Pentecost came upon the Apostolic Church, true worship of the Lord God spread everywhere, and liberty to worship according to the dictates of one's conscience became universal.

Just as human love is expressed between child and parent, so our hearts go out in prayer and praise to our heavenly Father. Jacob found the house of God and the very gate of heaven on the hillside. Anywhere in nature is a sacred place to a true worshiper. In making a journey, it is not the conveyance that is most important, but reaching the destination. In securing an education, there are many methods, but only one great result. So churches and denominations are valuable as aids to worship, but are only instruments, aiding the individual soul in communicating with the invisible God. Christ is the one Tree of Life, with twelve manner of fruits representing different branches of worshipers, but all one in Christ Jesus. There are true worshipers in every church who are members of the great church triumphant whose walls are salvation and whose gates are praise, and who are members of the innumerable company in the general assembly of the church of the Firstborn in heaven. E. W. C.

To grow in grace one must of sin let go,
Then seek and find some grace in which to grow.

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

Christ for the World!

THE opportunities and responsibilities of missionary work after the war have been widely discussed. It has been pointed out that the war has not seriously depreciated the gifts for foreign missions and that on many fields missionary work has gone forward without abatement. There will be a new international lineup after the war. There will be new national and international ideals. The church will have a greater opportunity than ever before to present Christ to mankind as the great World Leader.

All other questions as to the readjustments of civilization after the war pale into insignificance before this. Yet all these questions are compared with the supreme question which the nations must settle one by one: "What, then, will ye do with Jesus who is called the Christ?"

Missionary work after the war ought to be a deeper, broader, more divine, more human thing than it has ever been before. The paltry effort to make a financial showing for a denomination; the narrow insistence upon forcing some minor point of doctrine upon a heathen people; the insistence that certain forms and symbols and restrictions shall apply on these distant fields—all these things must give way for a new passion for world-wide regeneration. Such motives as these others seem trifling and unworthy before the figure of the bleeding Christ whose wounds have been opened afresh by the human agonies of these months of war.

Long ago he said: "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." Because the Christians of various lands have tried to draw men to a church or to a doctrine rather than to Christ; because they have tried to build up and defend their own nation rather than giving their lives to the tasks of serving and healing and saving the people of other lands; because they have entered into shameful and unholy alliances with national and international money power, defying the plain word of Jesus, "Ye can not serve God and Mammon"—because of these things the pagan world is confronted today with the spectacle of a Christendom drenched in blood.

Can we blame the Mohammedan for wondering what after all is the difference between Allah and Jehovah; what after all the difference between the crusade of Jesus and the crusade of Mohammed? To the black races of Africa, to the sad hearts of India, to the bewildered people of China, to the restless souls of Japan, the churches of Christendom must, after the war, bring a new message. A message of divine, all-conquering, all-forgiving love, as it is revealed in the bleeding hands and feet of the Man of Calvary; a message of an altogether new kind and degree of human sympathy and brotherhood, a message long ago taught by the Carpenter at Nazareth but which has been almost lost sight of in the shameful doctrinal and ecclesiastical and international feuds of Christendom.

Then we shall find, strangely enough, that by placing Christ first in the thought and reverence of the world, we have solved all other problems. Let him teach the nations sound principles of industrialism, of finance, of trade. Let him show mankind how to live justly, sanely, in joy and health. He told his followers long ago how to live and how to teach others to live. And today his sad and stern reproach sounds above the cries of battle and the snarls of commerce: "Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?"

The voice of the risen Christ sounds again: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel unto every creature." And his promise still holds fast for those who will go, for those who will send, for those who will pray, for those who will give, for those who will plan: "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Smoking Out the Armor Barons

A LITTLE episode in Congress a few days ago has let in the light on the character of some of the interests that are behind the "preparedness" agitation. During the discussion in the Senate Naval Committee, it was urged that the government should establish its own armor-plate plant. The armor barons through their spokesman, Senator Penrose, at once gave notice that, in such an eventuality, they would advance the price of metal two hundred dollars a ton. Controlling practically the entire output, they could name their own price, and make the cost of material so high as to be prohibitive for any other manufacturers than themselves. Their threat was promptly squelched by Senator Tillman, who declared that in such a contingency the government would exercise its prerogative of taking over the plants by right of eminent domain. Unfortunately the threat of the barons came too late for the President to make it a feature in his speeches. Had they been "smoked out" a few weeks earlier, instead of defending them and the munition-makers against the charge that they were instigating "preparedness" for personal ends, he would have had an opportunity of telling the people what he thought of the kind of patriotism which, after bleeding the nations of Europe to the tune of 200 to 300 per cent., is not averse to adopting the same generous policy in dealing with our own government. Truly such patriotism is the kind of which one might proudly say: "When found, make a note of." The "pork barrel" patriots were infants in comparison.

Future-Building

IN these rather troubled times when war and labor strikes and crime and the high cost of living fight loudly for supremacy on the front pages of the daily newspaper, "Baby Week" causes a pleasant, and timely, diversion—a diversion that is more than a diversion. For "Baby Week" is not a foolish little fad to be looked at in a light way. The babies of today are the men and women of the coming generation, and the coming generation is the hope of our land. "Baby Week" is to be celebrated in March, and 1,727 communities, some of which are far from cities and even railroads, are considering some preparation for that time. Clubwomen and farmers' wives and mountaineers are entering into the thing with the same spirit. Albany, Baltimore, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Philadelphia, Richmond, San Francisco, Washington and other cities are going to celebrate, for they realize that "Baby Week" is not only a time of parades, and prize-giving, and fun. They realize that it affords an opportunity for extending permanent work for small children—needed work, such as infant welfare stations, visiting nurses, instruction for mothers, city inspection of milk, etc. It is a time to set apart for serious and important thought; for the neglected babies, and the unwanted babies, and the blind and defective babies of the present may be the criminals and public charges of the future. If health and science can in any way help these babies to be good men and women, sound in morals and physique, health and science should be given a chance to do their work. "Baby Week" affords this chance.

Who Was This Speaker?

IN these times, when the honor of the nation is a topic so much discussed, one may be permitted a glance into the past to discover if possible in what respect, if at all, the views of an earlier generation differed from our own.

Twenty years ago, in a period of great public tension, a famous orator, speaking at an important gathering in New York City, made use of these words, which are well worth recalling now: "If our boasted civilization and Christianity mean anything, they should mean this: no war is justifiable unless the cause or object stand in just proportion to its cost in blood, in destruction, in human misery, in political corruption, in social demoralization, in relapse of civilization; and even then it is justifiable only when every expedient of statesmanship to avert it has been thoroughly exhausted.

"What is the rule of honor to be observed by a power so strong and so advantageously situated as this republic is? Of course, it should not tamely submit to real encroachments upon its rights. But surely it should not, whenever its own notions of right or interest collide with the notions of others, fall into hysterics and act as if it really feared for its own security and its very independence. With all its latent resources for war, it should be the great peace power of the world. It should never forget what a proud privilege and what an inestimable blessing it is not to need, and not to have, big armies and navies to support. It should seek to influence mankind, not by heavy artillery, but by good example and wise counsel. It should see its highest glory, not in battles won, but in wars prevented. It should be so invariably just and fair that other nations would instinctively turn to it as their mutual friend and the natural adjuster of their differences, thus making it the greatest preserver of the world's peace. It will be a glorious day for the United States when the good sense and the self-respect of the American people see in this their manifest destiny. It all rests upon peace. Is not this peace with honor? Is not this good Americanism? It is surely today the Americanism of those who love their country most."

These words, spoken twenty years ago by on who was distinguished as statesman, soldier and bli- cist and whose name commanded national r ect, are as timely as though they had been uttere yes- terday. They are especially so in view of the ent speaking tour in which the President laid stress pon the question of the nation's honor. In the week hat have elapsed since then, the country has had sure for calm reflection; it can now better estima the influence exerted upon the national mind. Wi the passing of the momentary hysteria, many wi ask whether the nation's honor is at the present m ent more in jeopardy than it has been at different mes in the last twelve months, when there was n sug- gestion of the sort. Will not the public mind nat ally revert to the broader view—as set forth in the a ress quoted?

Whose was the voice that speaks to us fro the past, in the language we have quoted above? here are doubtless not a few who will be able to rec nize it. The Christian Herald will divide one h lred dollars among those who send us, within the mo of March, the name of this orator, who gave so luc and statesmanlike a definition of national honor a na- tional opportunity twenty years ago, which is ally applicable to the situation we are facing today.

Dr. Gladden Eighty Years Old

FEW men have won so high a place in the eem and affection of the American people as ash- ington Gladden. On February 11 h was eighty years old. Tributes and gr ngs were showered upon him at his home in Colu bus, Ohio, of whose First Congregational Church e is pastor emeritus. Up to two years ago he w the active pastor of this large congregation, which had served for more than thirty years.

A busy preacher and pastor, Dr. Gladden has ven much of strength to social problems, and is own throughout the world as a pleader for social tice and reform, the champion of every forward use. The Christian Herald has not always been a to follow Dr. Gladden's doctrinal teachings, but are too glad to join in this nation-wide tribute of fec- tion and appreciation as he reaches the far mil one of four score years. Every Christian must lov and honor the author of the wonderful hymn which ven if he had written nothing else, would assu Dr. Gladden a high and permanent place among Am can poets and American saints:

O Master, let me walk with thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me thy secret, help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care.

Help me the slow of heart to move
By some clear winning word of love;
Teach me the wayward feet to stay,
And guide them in the heavenward way.

Teach me thy patience; still with thee,
In closer, dearer company,
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong,
In trust that triumphs over wrong.

In hope that sends a shining ray
Far down the future's broadening way;
In peace which only thou canst give,
With thee, O Master, let me live.

When Opportunity's Door Is Sh

FULL of significance are the results of a ent investigation in four states, Ohio, Wes Vir- ginia, Pennsylvania and Illinois, inst ted with the view of ascertaining from rect sources the attitude of the large labor-employin cor- porations toward the liquor traffic. Of one hu lred and thirteen business concerns which respond to the inquiry, all but six went on record as prohi ing the use of alcoholic stimulants by their workers. One hundred and seven excluded liquor absol ely. Their replies make an unanswerable tempe nce document. They declare that the drinker is lto- gether out of the line of promotion, and th his habit slams the door of opportunity in his face hat the use of alcohol is ruinous to efficiency. Som ven reckon that a man's efficiency is lessened fr 30 to 50 per cent. if he uses alcohol, and that full effi ncy can only be reached and maintained by sol ety. Even the most moderate of drinkers is an "ur sir- able." It is rapidly getting to be a rule, in th best business establishments in all our cities, to dra the line sharply against the drinker. Soon he w be unwelcome anywhere. What a tremendous argu ent there is in all of this against alcoholic indul nce!

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

America Receives Tomb

AN Egyptian tomb, the first ever brought to a museum, the tomb of Perneb, who lived nearly 3,000 years before Christ, pre- s ed to the Metropolitan Museum of A by Edward S. Harkness, was opened to ublic view at the museum in New Y k on February 3. The visitors saw a nassive façade of limestone blocks i lifferent sizes, a line of large blocks, fo wed by another of smaller ones. (either side of the outer wall much of t color is gone, but in the design are s to be seen two portraits of Perneb. I the vestibule of the t ib are decorations in c r on the walls, and u ompleted sketches. T ning to the left is the m n chapel or offering c mber of the tomb, the c red decorations in r ef covering the walls i excellent condition. T statue chamber is p allel to this main c pel. Through a nar- r perpendicular win- d between the smaller c ring chamber and the s tue chamber one may s the statue of Perneb. I vas the belief in those d s that if the body w s removed the soul was l t, but a chance of r abilitation was given i this statue: the body b ng removed, the soul c ld enter this figure. T e wall decorations on t e inside of the tomb a now covered with g ss to protect them. O tside the real tomb is m iniature reproduction o the vault which held t sarcophagus deep d wn in the rock under- ath the monumental ilding. On either side the hall in front of the nb are cases, in two which are vessels of ferent kinds taken om the tomb of Perneb, d a few bones. The rcophagus had been bbed in early days to t the remains of the eat man. There is a x of ocher in the case, aterial used 5,000 years o by the masons work- g on Perneb's tomb, und as they had left . and shells of nuts they had eaten, ith marks of the teeth used in cracking em. The tomb was opened with ppropriate exercises. This is a great quisition to the museum and will eak eloquently of the pyramids, and mbs of the kings, and of their civiliza- on and religion. There is one stone mb which will through all the cen- ries stand out most prominently, the ne in which the body of the Saviour as laid: "And when Joseph had taken e body, he wrapped it in a clean linen oth, and laid it in his own new tomb, hich he had hewn out of the rock." Matt. 27 : 59, 60.)

Beauty, Champion Producer of Milk

JEAN DULUTH BEAUTY (A. R.) is the world's champion Red Polled cow, having just finished (January 11) her record. In 365 days she produced 20,280.6 pounds of milk and 891.5 pounds of butter fat. Her work has been inspected by nineteen different experts from Minnesota, Wisconsin and North Dakota experiment stations. She has produced more milk and more butter fat on official test in one year than any milking Shorthorn, more than any Brown Swiss ever made, more milk than any Jersey ever produced, and only one Guernsey has beaten her for milk production. During the time she was making her record she added 250 pounds in weight. At the close of the test she weighed 1,750 pounds. The actual returns in butter alone from Beauty were over $400 in the year. The milk she gave is equivalent to about 10,000 quarts at an average price of ten cents a quart. The cow is owned by John G. Williams and George P. Grout of Duluth. What a prodigality in Beauty's benevolent service in furnishing milk for the children and milk, butter and cheese for the older people. If people in their sphere were only as industrious! Man has a more complex nature, and the higher faculty of reason, the nobler sense of conscience, with grave moral dangers, but with consequently nobler employments and enjoyments, and a more exalted destiny. We have a soul and immortality which so lovely a creature as Beauty does not have, the perilous power of destroying ourselves and darkening our future life by refusal to know God in Christ and love him and live in him forever. In the beginning of the race there is this mention of the produce of the cow: "And he took butter, and milk, and the calf which he had dressed, and set it before them; and he stood by them under the tree, and they did eat." (Gen. 18 : 8.)

Adopts Babies as a Memorial

ONE woman of Chicago can find no time for poodle dogs, club life or society." She is too busy personally nothering the children of poor families f the tenement districts. She cares for hese poor children as a memorial to er son, who died last July. She had ve children of her own, three of whom re now living. She takes as many of these children to her own beautiful home as she can accommodate, clothes, feeds, nurses and cares for them, giving her own time to them. When they have gotten well and grown up, she gives them back to the parents if they desire them; otherwise she takes out legal papers and adopts them as her own. If the dead boy could send back any word to his mother, he would tell her how happy he is at her conduct, and how the angels in heaven rejoice. Would that husbands and wives to whom God has given no children, or from whom he has taken them, might realize the sweet and divine joy of fatherhood and motherhood by imitating the example of this devout Christian woman who hears her Master say to her: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." (Matt. 25 : 40.)

Cash Boy's Promotion

RICHARD JACKSON, who entered the Altman store in New York as cash boy at $2 a week, has been made a director in the firm. Like him, the other eleven directors of the great store on Fifth Avenue started at the bottom. The Altman system developed their talents for big business and they got to the top and stayed there. Michael Friedsam, president, began with the firm as a messenger boy. When the twelfth man was needed for the directorate, he told the eleven not to go outside Altman's to fill the vacancy. So they selected Jackson, who is forty-two years of age. It is a good system that gives the worthy employees a permanent position and an opportunity for promotion. Mr. Jackson's diligence and promotion call to mind these words: "Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings." (Prov. 22: 29.)

Makes World Skating Record

JOHN KARISEN, forty-one years old, of Minneapolis, established a world's skating record for twenty-five miles at the Northwestern amateur ice-carnival the other day, covering the distance in 1 hour 30 minutes 15 seconds. The previous record of 1 hour 31 minutes 29 seconds was made by J. F. Donohue, of Stamford, Conn., January 26, 1893. What a graceful and inspiring picture this champion must have been gliding over the smooth ice almost with the swiftness of the wind! It is a commendable thing to excel in the manly sports. It is splendid to have the ambition and ability to make a record, a world's record. In the practical athletics of everyday life there is need of physical strength, agility, persistency and determination to win. In the spiritual world there are battles to be fought and races to be won. A swift spiritual racer thus refers to himself: "I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." (Phil. 3 : 14.)

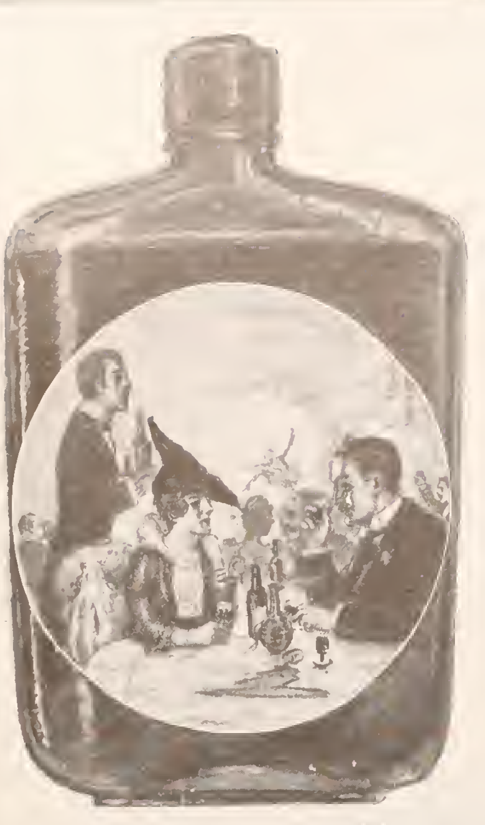
Burglars Stupefy Family

A MAN, his wife, two children and eight boarders were found unconscious at Ormrod, Pa., recently, having been stupefied with ether by burglars, who carried off clothing and other valuables and money. The cat on the pilgrimage in Froud's Short Studies on Great Subjects dined with the fox, who said: "The secret of happiness is to secure the property of another by superior ability. I am never so happy as when I am carrying off some farmer's goose," and complimented the cub seated next to him at the table on having stolen the fat goose on which they were dining. In nearly every department of human life foxes steal geese. Avarice employs the mesmerism of deceit, and puts into mental and moral unconsciousness those it would rob. Christ's standard of thought and motive will reveal the fact that all the thieves are not to be found among those who chloroform a whole family and loot a house, but are also to be found among princes of finance and persons of social and religious respectability. Honesty is the basis of our American business life, without which society can be neither prosperous nor happy. The principle of earning money by work instead of stealing it is thus enjoined: "Let him that stole steal no more; but rather let him labor, working with his hands the thing which is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth." (Eph 4 : 28.)

Saves Drunkard

SEVEN years ago an intoxicated man, after tottering along Teaneck Road, finally fell on the lawn of Justice Henry T. Griggs of Ridgefield Park, N. J., and would have slept if a stream of water had not been turned on his face to refresh him. Judge Griggs went to him, helped to sober him, gave him something to eat, and listened to the story of how rum had ruined him. While the man was telling the graphic story of his downfall a young woman in the Justice's home began playing the hymn "The Beautiful Isle of Somewhere." The music melted the heart of the wanderer, and he cried like a baby and left the home feeling that an angel had stopped him and serenaded him on his journey. A few days ago an automobile stopped in front of the Justice's home and a well-dressed, fine-looking man alighted and asked for the Judge. He told him that he was the miserable drunkard who seven years ago had been treated so kindly. He said he had made the call to thank the Justice for his brotherly treatment, and to say that it was the girl's hymn, "The Beautiful Isle of Somewhere," that broke his heart and saved him to a life of sobriety and piety. He said that the music had echoed and reechoed in his heart; that he went to a mission and found Christ's pardon at the foot of the cross; that he had regained his business prosperity, his social happiness, and his religious activity and enjoyment. The Holy Spirit has often used music as an instrument in saving souls. It is so today. Most successful evangelists and pastors have to rely much on the power of music to help them in bringing men to God. At the close of the Last Supper it is said: "And when they had sung an hymn, they went out into the Mount of Olives." (Matt. 26 : 30.)

"THE BOTTLE"—II.



ON SHIFTING SANDS

Dear John:

Can't I lend you a hand? If you and the little Bride need any money, just call on old Bill.

I can lend you two or three hundred easily. I'll never miss it. I've just received my extra commissions.

Flory and I are going to get married soon. We plan to live at a hotel. No housekeeping for us. We'd never be home anyway, for we're seeing every show in town.

As for drinking, I'm surer than ever before of my ability to control it. I can handle wine, champagne, and whisky with ease. I could quit it to a drop, tomorrow.

Rest easy, it will never get me.

Yours as ever.

BILL.

Dear Bill:

It was very thoughtful of you to offer us that loan. We both thank you. We called up three different evenings to thank you, but you were out.

Also I had some good news. The day before your letter came, I landed a good sized order. It was that big concern I have been after for nearly a year.

Their Advertising Manager said, "We've watched your methods a long time. You've studied our needs. Already we've saved money by following some of your suggestions. Continue to give us this same high grade of 'Service,' and we'll come across regularly with the orders."

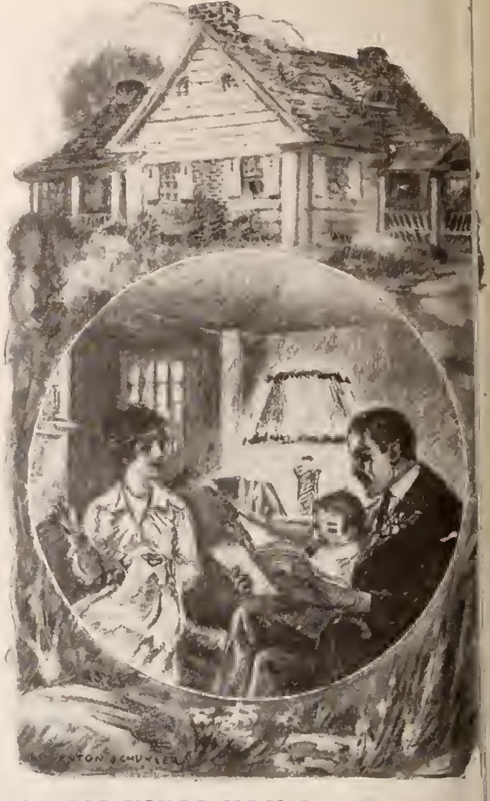
So, Bill, why not put that money you offered me into the bank? Cut out the drink and try my system. You're a hustler and thoroughly capable. I know you can win out on it.

Remember, a man may do irreparable damage to himself by drink, and yet never have been drunk.

Jane joins me in best wishes to you and Flory.

Your old preaching friend,

JOHN.



ON FIRM FOUNDATIONS

No. 1

War's Sorry Lesson in Economy

No. 1

THERE is little doubt but that the most comfortably placed family in America can glean some useful hints in economy from the domestic practices which War is forcing upon once comfortably placed families throughout Europe. We do not know so much about these little economies of England and Germany and France as yet. We do know, of course, that by governmental edict, wastefulness of food stuffs is prohibited. In Germany limitations have been placed upon the quantities of certain food-stuffs which individual families may purchase. Luxuries are at least frowned upon if not entirely forbidden in all these countries.

The fact of the matter is, we will waste our time in considering the enforced domestic economies in these still prosperous countries, for many families in rich America have always practiced similar economies of their own accord. So let us not waste time, but get right down to the real lesson which War is teaching well-brought-up people in the art of living on little. Let us step over into Poland and look around.

That forlorn fellow you see going about from home to home, stopping just a few moments in each place, and carrying with him with much care a large bone, is one of the new functionaries in civilization. That dismal figure is really a very welcome visitor wherever he stops, for each family (by the way, these families have long since discarded houses and living-rooms, and are now quite content with the open sky and any semblance whatsoever of shelter against the weather, with perhaps some kind of a pot hung over a fire in which to "cook"), he is most welcome in these groups because they are allowed to boil that bone for five or ten minutes in this pot in order to impart to the water some semblance of meaty flavor so that they may retain at least a faint recollection of what food, real food, tastes like. Then, on he goes to the next group, probably a grandmother and her daughter and the children, and then to the next and to the next.

This other individual carrying a bulky-looking sack upon his shoulder, is equally welcome wherever he goes. He is the bread man. Hunks of the cheapest kind of bread are in his sack. "One piece to a family." Those are his orders. And so well-disciplined now in economy are these erstwhile happy families of Poland, that though they reach out eager hands at his approach and look upon him with burning eyes, they accept their one piece, the dole for the day, with gratitude and let him pass on unmolested. Unmolested? Blessed for the little of life he has brought. So the next family and the next and the next wait, in cold and in the storm, huddled beneath what shelter they can contrive to erect, wait for their piece of bread and their chance at the daily soup bone.

And then, in the matter of clothing. Here indeed has much been learned in economy! Families who once luxuriously reveled in a whole pair of shoes for every member, are now thankful if the mother's feet can be to some extent at least protected from the stones of the road over which she must lead her little children as they wander from place to place seeking rest and finding none. All the foolish fretting about how one looks has been done away, for there is little chance for expression of individual taste in the matter of rags. A thin shawl drawn tightly over a woman's shoulders, a whole dress—such garments are now the great exception among the women of Poland. They are learning how to make even worn-out shawls and patched and worn-out garments do a little longer still in Poland. And this in the midst of winter, too.

As for baby clothes, now how do you suppose they manage? Why, they merely throw their new applicants for soft blankets and tiny garments into the bushes, and rush blindly as far as shaking limbs can carry them from the scene. That does away nicely with the need of baby garments. But who would have thought that War could teach how to get along without coddling little new-born infants and fairly smothering them in dainty softnesses? And these mothers of Poland once knew what it meant to coddle their little ones in daintiness and comfort.

With All They Possess

This remarkable university built by War for the education of a race in the art of economy, has been visited by interested committees from different lands. They report—(and their reports are beyond dispute)—they report that hundreds of thousands of families are learning in this university how to ub-sist from day to day homeless, hous ss, nearly foodless, almost hopeless. nd yet, they say, not altogether hop ss. Why? Well, these hundreds of ou-sands of human beings have once t ed the joys of quiet domestic life. ey have once known the happiness in-dustry; the delight of seeing their il-dren grow up about them, go to s ol, go to church, love, marry and gin new homes of their own. They ve known what it was to think thems es in the protection of God. membe of the great common family of God, a o-ple among peoples in the world, s ure in the pursuit of life, liberty and h pi-ness. And they are not altogether h-out hope that they will survive th n-speakable sufferings inflicted upon em by the schoolmaster War, and that ey shall yet see their homes reestabli ed and their joys in a measure return. In a measure, for they will never f get those little babies who were never d-dled, who were never kissed, who re never sung to sleep.

And why dare they hope this? Be se they have been led to believe in the at pitying heart of Christian America.

SPECIAL investigators sent into v-astated Poland by the Rockel er Foundation have rendered a r rt which leaves no doubt as to the d d-fulness of conditions there. They te that they inspected refugee ca s, destroyed villages, and the poorer e-tions of the cities. Everywhere he civilian population faces the pros ct of famine unless prompt relief is b-tained. The poorer classes are ev y-where subsisting on the most me er rations that can possibly sustain e, in many thousands of cases a single l ie of meatless soup and a small piec of bread daily. Thousands have no b d with the soup. In some districts ie poorer classes have neither coal or wood for heating purposes, and only ie mildness of the winter thus far has sa d them from freezing. Epidemics of s-ease threaten. The wheels of indu y in Poland are generally at a stand l. To bring relief to this region inhab d by 7,500,000 persons, of whom 40 r ce. are absolutely dependent upon chity, will necessitate a minimum expeliture of $2,000,000 monthly. (Thus th report.)

e append reports from our own commees in various parts of Europe. Tse show with what thoroughness the gi of our readers are being administed. It is evident that the utmost pas are being taken to make every pey contribute where it is most needed to the relief of suffering. And whe there should be no let-up and will beo let-up in the work at any point, were particularly moved by the conditis in Poland to make the most urgent pcible appeal for a great expression of sypathy just now by our readers. Tre are thousands of members of the Cstian Herald Family who are quite al to give regularly to causes of this chacter. Large numbers have given agn and again to this fund. We call up you now, those of you who are able, torrange to give systematically, week af week, a stated amount for the caryg on of this hugest and most needed of orld charities. Take this matter up in our families, and talk it over and dermine what sacrifices you are willing to ake in order that these who are alutely without even the barest of coforts and almost entirely destitute of ven the barest necessities of living, m receive help in their extremity. A spial committee formed in Great Bain for the relief of Russian Jews in oland and Galicia, makes this startli statement: "Out of a total of 1400,000 Jews, no less than 10,000,000 ar affected by the war. Fully 600,000 ar fighting. The majority of the Jews fo whom relief is needed had their hoes in Russia, Poland and Galicia. A area seven times the size of Belgium ha been ravaged with a completeness uparalleled in the other great battlefis of the war. The ebb and flow of th different invasions in Poland and ceiguous provinces have left the countr in a state of frightful devastation. Mions of Jews are homeless, starving a shelterless. Jewish homes were loed and emptied of everything of vae. Scores of cities as large as Brusse and Antwerp have been ruined and ov 11,000 villages have been razed to th ground."

thers who have been in the midst of te scenes and know at first hand wreof they speak, find themselves too ovwhelmed by the facts to be able to te the story with anything like the fce with which it should be told. Aept, then, the simple statement that yr gifts are needed in Poland at this mnent beyond words to tell, and respnd with all the liberality of which y are capable. Address all gifts to Wlow's and Orphans Relief Fund, Cistian Herald, Bible House, New Yk City.

our Relief Work in France

ASTOR WAGNER sends this message of gratitude to you:—

ear Friends: The Relief Committee wch I formed for the distribution of t funds of the Christian Herald conties to meet. We have gone about t distribution of relief with great care, rerving our gifts for the cases which aeared to us urgent above all others. W have established it as a principle in he beginning that the relief should b granted for three months, and distouted monthly, instead of being hded out at one time only. This has gen us more work, but we wished to aid the temptation that would ensue t these poor people, if we gave them t much assistance at a time. The gnts for the widows were calculated aording to the number of children — 40, 50, 60 francs per month for one, to, three, four children, etc. We proded in this manner until half of the Cristian Herald fund was distributed. en we decided no longer to grant aid cept to families of at least three chilen, in order that we might give to the st necessitous the advantage of the ney that remained. At the same te we became more and more strict igranting the gifts.

p to the present time we have sued in all, since the commencement, widows with 460 children. The jority of the soldiers who have been lled were still young men, not having as yet many children. Hence, large families are rather rare.

Besides the widows, we have helped orphans gathered afterwards in refuges and having neither father nor mother. The number of these latter will amount to about thirty. Old men and women deprived of means of support by the war have been the beneficiaries of our gifts to the number of about fifty. We have also helped persons who ordinarily live by giving lessons, and who, having families and being unable to find pupils any longer on account of the war, are in extreme distress, their suffering being made keener by the fact that they are persons of education.

Finally, we have supported the families of several pastors reduced by the war to lamentable conditions, and living, in general, in the Cévennes. I am honorary president of a group of 200 churches, among which there are some so poor that I feel that the gifts of the Christian Herald have been well placed. The help rendered to this class from the Fund was rendered the more necessary from the fact that the families of pastors called to mobilization do not receive allowances, as do the other soldiers.

We have also aided some worthy establishments, like that for the blind soldiers (1,000 francs), the refugees from invaded departments (1,000 francs) and 2,000 francs to the establishment of Mr. Paul Passy, son of Mr. Frederic Passy, which receives orphans of the war and abandoned children. At the beginning of 1916 there remains in the treasury of the committee the sum of 19,000 francs. We have expended 46,276 francs 85 centimes. The total, received from the Christian Herald in two instalments, was 65,066 francs.

In every case the beneficiaries of your benevolence in Paris, as well as in the neighboring departments and also at Rheims, Chalons and Nancy, have always been informed by the committee that these gifts came from the readers of the Christian Herald of New York. Sincere gratitude was expressed by these unfortunates toward those American friends. We have benefited with these gifts, as was inevitable, Catholics as well as Protestants, having regard only to the distress that needed help.

I express to you again, in my own name and the names of my compatriots, my profound gratitude.

Charles Wagner.

Paris, January 16.

A New Committee for Poland

AFTER much difficulty a most energetic and sympathetic gentleman of Berlin, F. Siegmund-Schultze, pastor, has been able to form a special relief committee to distribute Christian Herald gifts in Poland, and he writes you as follows:

"In connection with the visit to Poland which I have just made by commission of the German administration for civil affairs, I beg to report to the gentlemen of the Christian Herald Relief Committee on the distress in the land and the measures taken by Germany to alleviate it. In the first place, however, I wish to report on the use of the funds which the Christian Herald Relief Committee has placed at our disposal, since altered conditions have compelled us to make some changes in their distribution.

"You will remember that on January 20 and 21, you wrote to me asking me in your name to form a committee for Russian Poland like our German committée, for the purpose of distributing financial relief. At the time we did not succeed in getting into communication with Pastor Schmidt of Pabianice, who was one of those Protestant clergymen who had been temporarily or for a longer time removed from their parishes. The German administration for civil affairs, however, expressed its readiness to undertake the formation of a committee of German Protestant clergymen. On February 25, therefore, I begged your committee to remit the promised sum, if possible, through Director Gutmann of the Dresden Bank here, who was at the same time treasurer for the Central Relief Committee for the Destitute in Poland. This way had already been decided on by your committee for the remittance of the sum, on the advice of Mr. Meier-Gerhard of New York. A committee was then formed in Poland, the president of which was Mr. von Oppen, the head of the police in Lodz.

"Since that time the situation has entirely changed. The district round Lodz is now but a small part of Poland in German hands. Further the destitution is much greater than was ever dreamed of at the beginning of the war. Since the capture of Lodz by the Germans, the Russians have changed their methods with regard to the treatment of Protestant parishes so much for the worse, that they have actually transported nearly all the members of Protestant bodies in East Poland, about 150,000 persons, and have interned them in the interior of Russia, as far as they have survived the journey. I have been able to collect conclusive evidence on this subject. I have seen reports of pastors and parishioners who have been left behind, and have even spoken with a number of these clergymen.

"These conditions make it necessary for a new committee to be formed in Warsaw. As I was called to Poland by the German administration for civil affairs, it was easy for me to get into communication with the gentlemen of the administration whom we needed for the matter. The newly appointed Protestant president of the Consistory expressed his readiness to help, as well as the most important leaders of the Protestant Church in Poland; for instance: Consistorial Councilor Gundlach, who replaces General Superintendent Busch, who was carried away into Russia; Superintendent Angerstein, the head of the church in Lodz; and Consistorial Councilor Holtz, the head of the institution of Protestant Sisters of Charity in Poland. Clergy of parishes which have suffered severely under the war have also gladly accepted the invitation to join the committee, so that a committee consisting of ten members of the Protestant Church in Poland has in agreement with your conditions now been formed, the most important members of which are: Consistorial Councilor von Thaer, Warsaw, a member of the German administration for civil affairs; Consistorial Councilor Gundlach, temporary general superintendent of Poland; Consistorial Councilor Holtz, head of the Institution of Protestant Sisters of Charity in Poland; Superintendent Angerstein of Lodz; Government Councilor Polandt of the German administration for civil affairs in Poland; Government Assessor Firnhaber of the Protestant Consistory in Poland; Pastor Wosch, formerly of Zyrardow, now in Warsaw; and Sister Frida Hademann, matron of the Orphan Home in Lodz.

"I now beg the Christian Herald Relief Committee, as I did by telegram at the end of November, to grant a further sum to be distributed by the above-named new committee.

"I should like to beg you to allow us to apply the money to the following purposes. The distributing committee is mentioned above. The Protestant clergymen in Poland would themselves undertake the distribution. Members of other confessions would not be excluded as recipients. It would be advisable to accept as eligible for relief not only the widows and orphans of soldiers, but any persons suffering through the war. The destitution of those affected by the war is so great and the needs of widows and orphans so difficult to single out from the general distress, that more general provision on these lines seems to me very desirable.

"Begging you once more most earnestly to grant us as soon as possible the promised relief for the unhappy Protestant parishes in Poland, I am, yours sincerely, F. Siegmund-Schultze."

"Berlin, December 13, 1915."

© International Film Service

Where the Cyclone of War Has Swept Through Poland

Serbian Committee Scattered

AFTER a very trying experience in the heart of the war area in Serbia, a number of members of the Christian Herald Relief Committee for Widows and Orphans have returned to the United States. The committee was organized at Nish in September last, under the auspices of United States Consul James Young. Its members included Sir Ralph and Lady Paget, Mr. and Mrs. Markovitch, Miss Anne Van S. Kitchell, Dr. Clark, Dr. Richard P. Strong, Professor Marko Lako, Colonel Joubert, Voya Subotich, Miss Yelka Gruitch and Miss Sybil Eden. It was the tenth committee organized by this journal in the countries involved in the great war.

For a time the work of the Nish committee went on without interruption. Then came the news of the great invasion, followed by a series of reverses to the Serbian forces and their final disintegration and flight. Miss Eden, who reached New York a few days ago, tells what befell the Relief Committee. "After the mobilization of the Serbian army, which began on September 22, 1915, we were requested by the commandant of the Serbian troops in one district to evacuate the camp and burn up our remaining stores two hours after the Serbian troops had left. I decided to stay on and distribute the remaining food stores and some clothing that was so needed by these poor people. It took from ten to fourteen days.

"The details of the retreat I would like to tell you when I have recovered more fully from the fatigue and illness incurred during the long march. We had every form of risk and danger to encounter: flood, snow, starvation, massacre from bandit tribes on the Albanian frontier, illness, and finally the danger of crossing the Adriatic. A number of women and children began the great retreat, but less than half the original number finished it.

Miss Eden is still suffering from the hardships of the three-hundred-mile retreat over snowy mountains and icy roads. She will tell the story of her Serbian experiences to American audiences, and churches and religious organizations may communicate with her through the Christian Herald.

Three Square Meals at Home

TRANSCRIBED BY CYRUS KINGSBURY

Sequel to "I'm Going Home," in last week's Christian Herald

THE meeting's over. Beginning at the front, we're going out single file. The door I came in by has a locked iron gate pulled across it. We're told to go down into the cellar. I don't know what they're going to do with us there.

Now I see. We're filing past a long wicker cage. The fellows on the other side are eating their bread so hungrily, they look like feeding time at the zoo. Our line's working slowly down this fenced alley.

I'd near forgot I was hungry. While that meeting was going on, so much was happening. But seeing those other fellows eating on the other side of the wire nets made it all come back. I feel sort of faint and weak. I wish the line would hurry up. Wonder if there'll be enough to give us all some. Wish I'd sat further up front, then I'd had mine by now.

I can't help shoving up a bit, to hurry our line. My stomach feels so slack and wobbly. I'm kind of glad I can hold onto this wire net, 'cause I'm not steady on my feet any more. I wish they'd hurry along. I feel a bit dizzy.

It's my turn now. I just grabbed that chunk of bread so hard that my fingers went clean through it. And I gulped that hot drink down. It burnt all the way, but it felt fine. My new pal and me are standing here in the basement swallowing our chunks of bread.

Say! The way everything's gone this evening, and now this hand-out, sure has made me think.

YOU know, when I first got into that place, it seemed so peaceful after the storm, I kept dozing off. It was so warm and clean and quiet. After a while all the kinks thawed out of my legs. Even my old wooden foot got feeling right again. I kept pinching myself to keep awake. I knew I had to, 'cause I felt something big was going to happen. Something mighty fine. So I rested, but I kept dozing.

There was a fellow back of me that kept mumbling along in a dead kind of voice. As I'd doze off I'd catch bits of his talk.

He said, "I'm a hard nut. I had nineteen dollars once. I'm a tough bum. That nineteen dollars meant just nineteen days' drunk. A dollar a day," said he, "can keep any man drunk, and then he don't mind the eats nor nothing." But no one seemed to take any notice of him, so he just rambled on and on.

Another time I heard him say, "All I need is just three hundred and sixty-four, or is it three hundred and sixty-five dollars, to keep me drunk all year. Pretty ec'nomical, hey?"

"I'm a tough guy," he said again. He seemed to be afraid we'd think him soft for coming to the meeting. So every now and then he'd go all over again. "I'm a hard, hard nut, I'm a real tough bum all right." But he didn't sound like a hard nut to me. He was just trying to throw a front. That poor kid really wanted to do what was right. Only he was afraid somebody'd laugh at him.

I kind of wished I could of seen his face. I wanted to help that kid. Wasn't that funny, me wanting to help some one else up? I was too tired or I would of turned around and talked to him. I felt so sure that something good was coming to all of us who were on the level, that I knew he'd get his. I was trying to figure out why I felt so sure, but I couldn't. But there was something hopeful about that place.

All the other fellows seemed glad to be there. Some were reading, some whispering. Most of them were just resting. We were a bunch of tired men. Not exactly men, only just tired kids, glad to be home.

Me and the young fellow next to me had been trying to figure out a sign up on the wall. They were fancy letters, but I'd finally made it out. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And when my neighbor got it read, he let go a great big sigh. Then he caught himself and looked round quick. He caught me smiling, and he grinned back, kind of shamefaced.

Then he said, "Don't them words make you feel you had a friend? I wonder who thought them up? Only this afternoon I figured it all out that all the good, kind people were dead."

I said, "Same here. The fellow who built this place must have had a great big heart. He knew how good this clean, warm place would seem to us poor bums, coming in out of the storms."

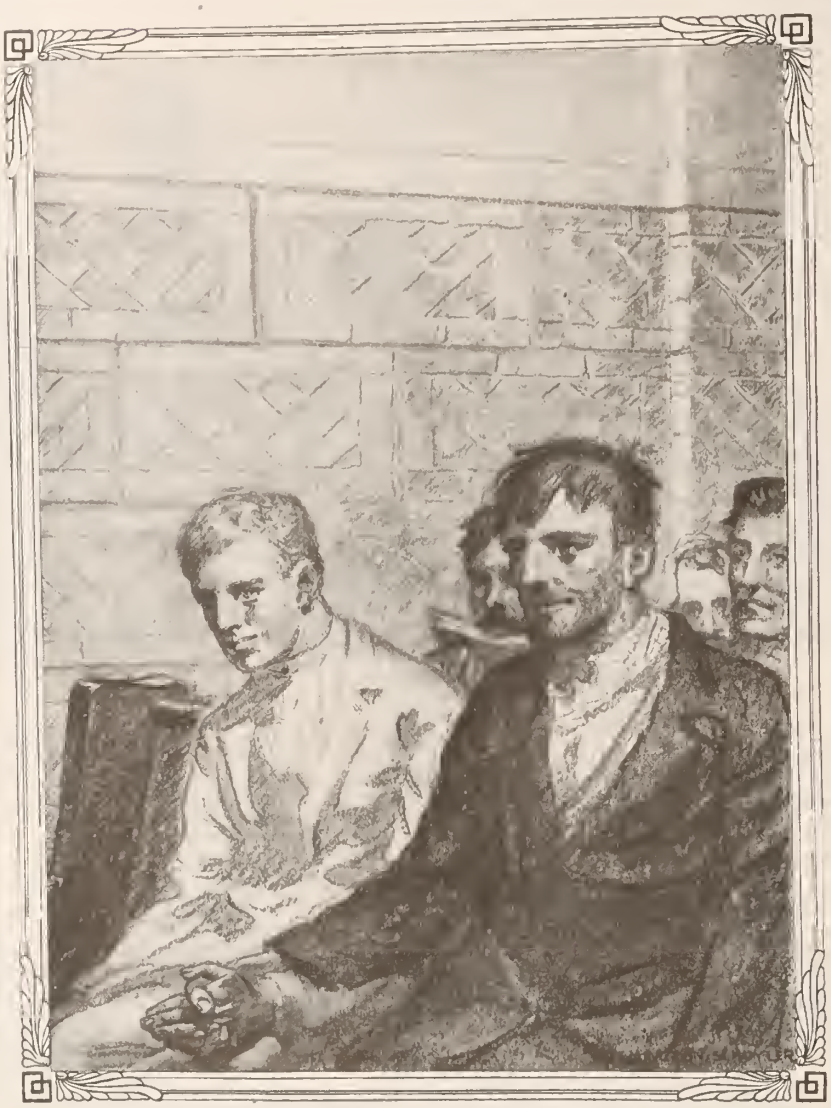
So me and him sat there, not saying much. Just resting and dozing.

AFTER a while a bunch of nice-dressed fellows came out on the platform. They asked us to sing a song. We weren't much good on the verse part, all us bums in the benches there. But we were a willing, husky chorus.

> "With the touch of His hand on mine,
> I'm going home, no more to roam.
> With the touch of His hand on mine."

Say, and my neighbor and me were singing too. I'd thought I'd forgot how to sing. Come to think of it, I hadn't sung for 'most a year. I hadn't had the heart, 'cause it brought back home.

The "touch of His hand!" That's what we'd come for—to find a friend. Some one to care. So the two of us sang that cheering refrain. That was the best song we'd ever heard.



"Me and my pal had got home to our Father"

After a bit they read something out of a big book. It sounded as though I'd heard it somewhere before. Then I remembered. It was the same story that fellow told me last summer, 'bout that young fellow rising and going to his father. Me and that new friend of mine just looked at each other. We knew that was what we'd done. We'd gone home to our Father. And the heat and comfort there was better than any robe. We were alive again.

That tune kept running through my head, "the touch of a hand." And say, that new pal of mine and me were just sitting there holding hands like two kids. The fellow who wrote those words must of known how good it feels; the touch of some one who cares.

But the thing that made me think the most was those testimonies of letting drink alone.

One fellow got up and said, "Six months and three days."

"Thank God for that," said the leader fellow.

One thanked God for keeping him away from it "one year, twenty-seven days."

Another, "Four days" he had been "free from drink."

One old fellow said he had not touched liqu for "thirty-two years," and he "thanked God."

"You're a veteran," said the leader fellow. "Ai h!"

Then it flashed on me. I hadn't had a dri for near thirty-two hours. So before I thought, I ju ped up and said, "Thirty-two hours free from nk. Help me!"

"You bet we'll help you. You're a baby ye out God will help you up, if you just keep on the le l." Then he said, "Pray for him, brothers."

THEN all those fine-looking fellows upon the atform told how they'd been down and ou ust the same as us. But God had helped them up. ey said, too, that they were Brotherhood men, an ow much the Brotherhood had helped them. So m nd my pal grabbed onto those Brotherhood cards, en they asked who wanted them. And we were gl to stand when they said, "All those who took ds, stand up, and show your gratitude to God."

So thirty-four of us stood. And they praye for us "lost sheep." And while they prayed, it se ed as though all my troubles were swept away As though I'd lost a heavy load. I w ed to get up and tell every one abo it I felt so good. I wanted to share at wonderful sense of peace and rest t 'd come to me. I just wanted to ab that new pal of mine and hug him

AFTER that bread and hot drin ne and my pal felt we could buck at storm all right.

We're up on the street now. It's it snowing. The wind's quit too. A a fellow just gave us a swell bun of newspapers. Between us we've got ne real warm linings fixed up. I wa to dance down the street. I want to g. I'm warm. I'm a real fellow a in. My head's never seemed clearer. m free and I'm planning all kinds of th gs. My pal and me're going along hum g, "With the touch of His hand on m ."

My pal knew about this place wher he hot air comes up from this bakery, th gh this grating. So we're sticking r nd here. After midnight we're going ck to that Bowery Home, to get an er hand-out. Pretty soft, huh? At is rate I'll get fat. And when we get at next feed we'll be fixed fine for the n t. My pal knows a park where the co et the bums sleep on the benches till e. That's all fine, huh?

A COP came up a while ago, and wa ed to know what we were doing e. It's funny, but he didn't scare me a it. like before. I wasn't afraid. F I knew I'd got lots of friends up at he Mission. I'd got God, too. A I knew those Brotherhood fellows'd s d by me. So I just showed him my Bro erhood card, and told him we were kee g warm, waiting for that second hand it, at one o'clock. He seemed to kno ve didn't mean no harm, so he let us a e. All he said was, "Be good, boys."

WE'RE in the Bread Line, up ar the front. It's a little after e. It's sure funny, but I'm hungry a n. But I don't feel so weak. Guess I w 't get as fat as I thought. I can wait b er this time. I know there'll be enoug or all. When we get this feed, we'll d over to those park benches, 'fore th re all taken for the night.

This fellow who's handing us the grub is askin s if we've got a bed. "Sure," I says, "we've g a bench reserved, over in the park, if we aren't o late."

"Well, boys," he says, kind of quick, "you e e inside. We got a bench reserved for you up sta " Honest, I'm not kidding. They're going to le s sleep in that fine warm room. Tonight, we're slee g Home.

THIS morning, me and my pal are new n. We've come back. We're going to stick. e know God is that Father we've hunted so long. W e on the level, and he will help us over all the d places ahead. We've had a fine sleep. Me and y pal took turns stretching out on the bench. And w they've just given us some more grub. My pal d me're going to borrow shovels and go after the s w. There's a job for us. We're men. We were croo l, but God has made us straight.

And the old world sure looks mighty fine.

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

CHAPTER XIV

THE minister had decided to preach in Ashland, and on the following Sabbath. It became apparent that if he wished to have any consideration at all from the haughty new teacher he must do something at once to establish his superiority in her eyes. He had carefully gone over his store of sermons that he always carried with him, and decided to preach on "The Dynamics of Altruism."

Notices had been posted up in saloons and store and post office. He had made them himself after completely tabooing Mr. Tanner's kindly and blundering attempt, and they gave full information concerning "the Rev. Frederick West, Ph.D., of the vicinity of New York City, who had kindly consented to preach in the schoolhouse on 'The Dynamics of Altruism.'"

Several of these elaborately printed announcements had been posted up on big trees along the trails, and in other conspicuous places, and there was no doubt that the coming Sabbath services were more talked of than anything else in that neighborhood for miles around, except the new teacher and her extraordinary way of making all the scholars fall in love with her. It is quite possible that the Rev. Frederick might not have been so flattered at the size of his audience when the day came if he could have known how many of them came principally because they thought it would be good opportunity to see the new teacher.

However, the announcements were read and the preacher became an object of deep interest to the community when he went abroad. Under this attention he swelled, grew pleased, bland and condescending, wearing an oily smile and bowing most conceitedly whenever anybody noticed him. He even began to drop his severity and silence at the table, toward the end of the week, and expanded into dignified conversation, mainly addressed to Mr. Tanner, about the political situation in the state of Arizona. He was trying to impress the teacher with the fact that he looked upon her as a most insignificant mortal who had forfeited her right to his smiles by her headstrong and unseemly conduct when he had warned her about "that young ruffian."

OUT on the trail Long Bill and Jasper Kemp paused before a tree that bore the Rev. Frederick's church notice, and read in silence while the wide wonder of the desert spread about them.

"What d'you make out o' them cuss words, Jap?" asked Long Bill at length. "Ye figger the parson's goin' to preach on swearin' ur gunpowder?"

"Blowed ef I know," answered Jasper, eyeing the sign ungraciously, "but by the looks of him he can't say much to suit me on neither one. He resembles a yaller cactus bloom out in a rain-storm as to head, an' his smile is like some of the prickles on the plant. He can't be no sky-pilot to me, not just yet."

"You don't allow he b'longs in any way to her?" asked Long Bill anxiously.

"B'longs to her? Meanin' the schoolma'am?"

"Yes; he ain't sweet on her nor nothin'?"

"Wal, I guess not," said Jasper contentedly. "She's got eyes sharp's a needle. You don't size her up so small she's goin' to take to a sickly parson with yaller hair an' sleek ways when she's seen the Kid, do you?"

"Wal, no, it don't seem no ways reasonable, but you never can tell. Wimmen gets notions."

"She ain't that kind! You mark my words, she ain't that kind. I'd lay she'd push the breeze like a coyote ef he'd make up to her. Just you wait till you see him. He's the most no-count, measliest little thing that ever called himself a man. My word! I'd like to see him try to ride that colt o' mine. I really would. It would be some sight."

"Mebbe he's got a intellec'," suggested Long Bill after another mile. "That goes a long ways with wimmen folks with a education."

"No chance!" said Jasper confidently. "Ain't got room fer one under his yaller thatch. You wait till you set your lamps on him once 'fore you go to gittin' excited. Why, he ain't one-two-three with our missionary. I wish he'd come back and see to such goin's on, I certainly do."

"Was you figgerin' to go to that gatherin' Sunday?"

"I sure was," said Jasper. "I want to see the show, an' besides, we might be needed ef things got too high-soundin'. It ain't good to have a creature at large that thinks he knows all there is to know. I heard him talk down to the post office the day after that little party when the Kid shot out the lights to save Bunchy from killin' Crapster, an' it's my opinion he needs a good spankin'; but I'm a goin' to give him a fair show. I ain't much on religion myself, but I do like to see a square deal, especially in a parson. And I've sized it up he needs a lesson."

"I'm with ye, Jap," said Long Bill, and the two rode on their way in silence.

MARGARET was so busy and so happy with her school all the week that she quite forgot her annoyance at the minister. She really saw very little of him, for he was always late to breakfast, and she took hers early. She went to her room immediately after supper and he had little opportunity for pursuing her acquaintance. Perhaps he judged that it would be wise to let her alone until after he had made his grand impression on Sunday.

It was not until Sunday morning that she suddenly recalled that he was to preach that day. She had indeed seen the notices, for a very large and elaborate one was posted in front of the schoolhouse and some anonymous artist had produced a fine caricature of the preacher in red clay underneath his name. Margaret had been obliged to remain after school Friday and remove as much of this portrait as she was able, not having been willing to make it a matter of discipline to discover the artist. In fact, it was so true to the model that the young teacher felt a growing sympathy for the one who had perpetrated it.

Margaret started to the schoolhouse early, attended by the faithful Bud. Not that he had any more intention of going to Sunday school than he had the week before, but it was pleasant to be the chosen escort of so popular a teacher. Even Jed and Timothy had walked home with her twice during the week. He did not intend to lose his place as nearest to her. There was only one to whom he would surrender that, and he was too far away to claim it often.

Margaret had promised to help in the Sunday school that morning, for the woman who taught the little ones was still away with her sick neighbor, and on the way she persuaded Bud to help her.

"You'll be secretary for me, won't you, William?" she asked brightly. "I'm going to take the left front corner of the room for the children, and seat them on the recitation benches, and that will leave all the back part of the room for the older people. Then I can use the blackboard and not disturb the rest."

"Secretary?" asked the astonished Bud. He was, so to speak, growing accustomed to surprises. "Secretary" did not sound like being "a nice little Sunday school boy."

"Why, yes; take up the collection, and see who is absent, and so on. I don't know all the names, perhaps, and anyhow I don't like to do that when I have to teach."

Artful Margaret! She had no mind to leave Bud floating around outside the schoolhouse, and though she had ostensibly prepared her lesson and her blackboard illustration for the little children, she had hidden in it a truth for Bud. Poor neglected, devoted Bud!

The inefficient old man who taught the older people that day gathered his forces together and, seated with his back to the platform, his spectacles extended upon his long nose, proceeded with the questions on the lesson leaf as usual, being more than ordinarily unfamiliar with them; but before he was half through he perceived by the long pauses between the questions and answers that he did not have the attention of his class. He turned slowly around to see what they were all looking at and became so engaged in listening to the lesson the new teacher was drawing on the blackboard that he completely forgot to go on, until Bud, very important in his new position, rang the tiny desk bell for the close of school, and Margaret, looking up, saw in dismay that she had been teaching the whole school.

WHILE they were singing a closing hymn the room began to fill up, and presently came the minister walking importantly beside Mr. Tanner, his chin flattened upward as usual, but bent in till it made a double roll over his collar. His eyes rolled importantly, showing much of their whites, his sermon in an elaborate leather cover, carried conspicuously under his arm, the severest of clerical coats and collars setting out his expressionless face.

Walking behind him in single file, measured step, just so far apart, came the eight men from the bunk house, Long Bill, Big Jim, Fiddling Boss, Jasper Kemp, Fadeaway Forbes, Stocky, Croaker and Fudge; and behind them, looking like a seared rabbit, Mom Wallis scuttled into the back seat and sank out of sight. The eight men, however, ranged themselves across the front of the room on the recitation bench, directly in front of the platform, removing one or two small children for that purpose.

They had been lined up in a scowling row along the path as the minister entered, looking at them askance under his aristocratic yellow eyebrows, and as he neared the door the last man followed in his wake, then the next, and so on.

Margaret in her seat half-way back, at the side of the schoolhouse near a window, saw through the trees a wide sombrero over a pair of broad shoulders; but though she kept close watch she did not see her friend of the wilderness enter the schoolhouse. If he had really come to meeting he was staying outside.

The minister was rather nonplussed at first that there were no hymn books. It almost seemed that he did not know how to go on with divine service without hymn books, but at last he compromised on the Long Meter Doxology, pronounced with deliberate unction. Then, looking wildly about for a possible pipe organ and choir, he finally started it himself; but it is doubtful whether any one would have recognized the tune enough to help it on if Margaret had not for very shame's sake taken it up and carried it along, and so they came to the prayer and Bible reading.

Margaret could not just remember afterward how it was she missed the text. She had turned her eyes away from the minister because it somehow made her feel homesick to compare him with her dear dignified father. Her mind had wandered perhaps to the sombrero she had glimpsed outside, and she was wondering how its owner was coming on with his resolves, and just what change they would mean in his life anyway. Then suddenly she awoke to the fact that the sermon had begun.

CHAPTER XV

"CONSIDERED in the world of physics," began the lordly tones of the Rev. Frederick, "dynamics is that branch of mechanics that treats of the effects of forces in producing motion, and of the laws of motion thus produced; sometimes called kinetics; opposed to statics. It is the science that treats of the laws of force, whether producing equilibrium or motion; in this sense including both statics and kinetics. It is also applied to the forces producing or governing activity or movement of any kind."

The big words rolled out magnificently over the awed gathering, and the minister flattened his chin and rolled his eyes up at the people in his most impressive way.

Margaret's gaze hastily sought the row of rough men on the front seat, sitting with folded arms in an attitude of attention, each man with a pair of intelligent eyes under his shaggy brows regarding the preacher as they might have regarded an animal in a zoo. Did they understand what had been said? It was impossible to tell from their serious faces.

"Philanthropy has been called the dynamic of Christianity; that is to say it is Christianity in action," went on the preacher. "It is my purpose this morning to speak upon the dynamics of altruism. Now altruism is the theory that inculcates benevolence to others in subordination to self-interest; interested benevolence, as opposed to disinterested; also, the practice of this theory."

He lifted his eyes to the audience once more and nodded his head slightly as if to emphasize the deep truth he had just given them, and the battery of keen eyes before him never flinched from his face. They were searching him through and through. Margaret wondered if he had no sense of the ridiculous, that he could, to such an audience, pour forth such a string of technical definitions. They sounded strangely like dictionary language. Surely he would drop to simpler language now that he had laid out his plan.

It never occurred to her that the man was trying to impress her with his wonderful fluency of language and his marvelous store of wisdom. On and on he went in much the same trend he had begun, with now and then a flowery sentence or whole paragraph of meaningless eloquence about the "brotherhood of man"—with a roll to the r's in brotherhood.

Fifteen minutes of this profitless oratory those men of the wilderness endured, stolidly and with fixed attention; then suddenly a sentence of unusual simplicity struck them, and an almost visible thrill went along the front seat.

"For years the church has preached a dead faith, without works, my friends, and the time has come to stop preaching faith! I repeat it—fellow-men, I repeat it. The time has come to stop preaching faith and begin to do good works!"—He thumped the desk vehemently—"Men don't need a superstitious belief in a Saviour to save them from their sins; they need to go to work and save themselves! As if a man dying two thousand years ago on a cross could do any good to you and me today!"

It was then that the thrill passed down that front line, and Long Bill sitting at their head leaned slightly forward and looked full and frowning into the face of Jasper Kemp; and the latter, frowning back, solemnly winked one eye. Margaret sat where she could see the whole thing.

Immediately, still with studied gravity, Long Bill cleared his throat impressively, arose, and giving the minister a full look in the eye, turned and walked slowly, noisily down the aisle and out of the front door.

To be continued

An Empire for Two Cents an Acre

CONTINUING FRANK G. CARPENTER'S NARRATIV

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

COME with me for a walk through the old town of Sitka. It was founded in 1799, at about the time that George Washington was dying at Mount Vernon, and it was a thriving manufacturing center, building ships and making bells, plows, picks and spades, when the Indians were still hunting deer on the site of Chicago. For more than 100 years it was the capital of Alaska, and the center of its commerce, exploration and modern development. Situated here in the Panhandle about as far north of Seattle as Minneapolis is north of New Orleans, it was selected by the Russians as the seat of their government and as the chief home of the officials and traders sent out by the Czar to what was then Russian America. Sitka was the capital of Alaska when we bought the territory, and it was here that the country was formally transferred to the United States. After that it remained the capital for almost forty years, and it was not until about ten years ago that the seat of government was transferred to Juneau, where it is now.

Looking at Sitka as it is today, one does not wonder that the Russians chose it as their chief place of residence. The town has a climate as mild as that of Baltimore or Richmond, and its surroundings are so beautiful that it will some time be a place of permanent residence and a summer resort. It is situated on Baranof Island, within a short distance of the open Pacific. It lies on a little bay at the mouth of a fast-flowing river, in the arena of an amphitheater of snow-clad mountains. The waters in front of it have scores of small wooded islands, and all about it the hills rise to the clouds. One of the mountains is known as the Holy Cross, from a figure of the cross in perpetual snow which shows out near its summit. This is Mount Verstovia. It has a mantle of white throughout the winter, but in the summer the snow disappears, with the exception of this gigantic cross painted by the finger of God upon a background of green. Another mountain is Edgecombe, on the Island of Kruzof, over the way. Mount Edgecombe is an extinct volcano as regular and as beautiful in its outlines as Fujiyama, Japan. It was one of the first of the landmarks discovered by Captain Cook when he sailed through these waters in 1776.

Sitka lies on a cove in the hills. The crescent shore is rocky and the cove is rolling, but everything is covered with green. At one side of the town are grass-clad hills which rise almost straight up from the water. That was the site of the Baranof Castle, where the Russian governor lived, and there today is the headquarters of the agricultural experiment station, of which Professor Georgeson is the chief. To the left of the cliffs as you enter the harbor are the wharves, with the main business street, named after President Lincoln, running back from them, and farther down the cove is a long row of two and three story houses, with many flagstaffs rising above them. That is the Indian settlement. The town has altogether something like 1,000 Indians, and we shall see Indians everywhere as we move through the streets. It has also about 500 whites. Their houses are along the main street and back from it on both sides, covering the greater part of the cove.

The houses of Sitka are old and new. There are residences that would not be out of place in any American city of three times its size, and there are log buildings 100 years old, which were built in the days of the Russians. There is one great warehouse of logs so carefully fitted together that you could not put a knife blade between them. The logs are each two or three feet in diameter. They are almost dovetailed, as it were. That building was a warehouse at the time we took over the territory, and in the days of Russian prosperity it frequently had a million dollars' worth of furs stored away in it. At the time of the sale to the United States it contained 30,000 sealskins, each of which then sold for less than $3 apiece.

THE Sitka of today has a number of fine churches and a large missionary school. There is an Episcopal church, built of stone, with the residence of the Bishop of Alaska behind it, and there are the large buildings of the Sheldon Jackson School, belonging to the Presbyterians. The latter are a half dozen in number, and they include industrial departments and dormitories for both Indian boys and Indian girls. The schools have between one hundred and two hundred pupils, representing the chief tribes of Southeastern Alaska. The children are clean and well dressed and the school has done a great work with its practical educational methods.

The Russian Cathedral, Most Prominent Church in Sitka

The most prominent church building in Sitka is the Russian cathedral. It stands at the end of the main street coming up from the wharves, on the site of a church that was built here more than 100 years ago, when Baranof was governor of Russian America. The present building dates far back in the Russian occupation, but it is in use today, and has quite a large congregation presided over by the Russian dean of Alaska. His name is the Very Rev. Amphilohy.

The Russians did a great deal of mission work in Alaska. They had mission stations on many of the Aleutian Islands and others scattered over the territory even to the mouth of the Yukon. Some of these missions are in existence today, and they a all presided over by Father Amphilohy. The Ru ian cathedral at Sitka is a museum of interesting pic res and jewels. Many of its paintings were brought a nd Cape Horn or across Siberia, and some of the are by famous artists. One is an icon bearing the f of the Lady of Kazan. It represents a madonna nd child, and is of great beauty. I am told tha the church has refused $25,000 for this single painti .

Of late years Sitka has lost its importance the opening up and development of Alaska. The re val of the capital to Juneau took away about a the United States offices, and there is now no more iet town in the territory. The place is away fro the main lines of travel, and it is only reached by a all steamer, or by the tourist boats in the su er.

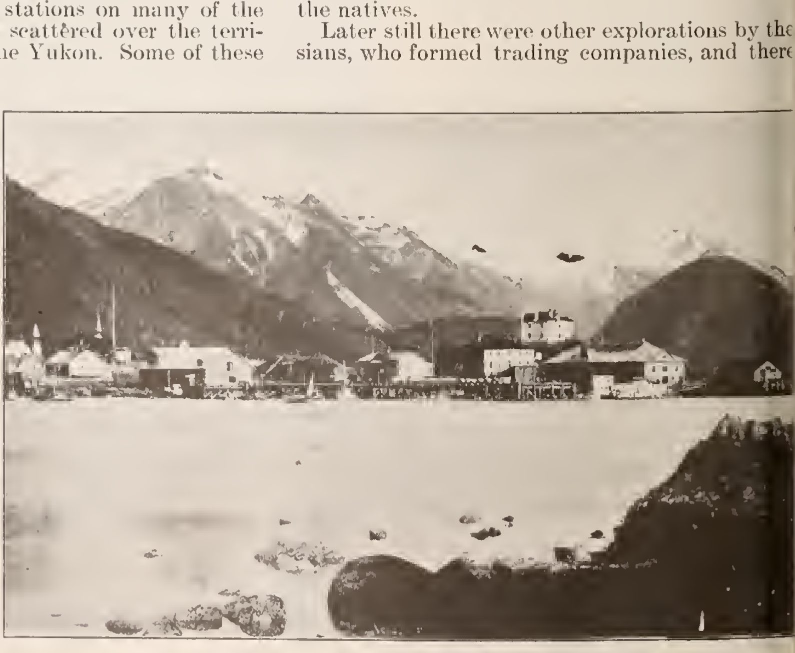
The history of Alaska covers just about one hu red and fifty years, and, roughly speaking, it ma be divided into three periods of fifty years each. The first fifty was the period of exploration and disc ry, the next fifty was that of the Russian occupatio nd the last forty-nine years covers the time sinc we purchased the territory.

ALASKA was discovered by the Russians d ing the eighteenth century, but very little vas known about it until almost the beginning c the nineteenth. It was in 1711 that Peter Popoff led from Siberia around through Bering Strait nd brought back rumors that a continent existed c the other side of Asia. Seventeen years later, Pet the Great of Russia, who had heard of these stories ent Vitus Bering, a Danish navigator who had b me Russian, out from Kamchatka to find out if they ere true. Bering went through Bering Strait, but it ust have been foggy, for he did not see the American ore or even the Diomede Islands, which lie half-w in the strait. The strait is only sixty miles wide a on clear days it is possible to look from America to sia. So he came back and reported that he had nd nothing. He tried it again nine years later w a similar result, and it was not until 1741 that he sa the American continent and discovered the Shu gin Islands. At that time he anchored near the mo of the Copper River and went on back throug the Aleutians to the Island of Bering, belonging to Si ia. He was wrecked on that island and died the of scurvy. Some of his sailors made their way ba to the mainland and they carried the story of the stence of Alaska and the wonderful furs of the eutians.

From that time the Russians made many e ditions to the Aleutians. They brought back furs nd the reports went out over the world of the great w lth of furs in the northern Pacific. This attracte the attention of other countries and other navi ors and there were a number of exploring tours ma by Spaniards and Englishmen which did much t ard the opening of our great land at the north. It v in 1774 and 1775 that Juan Perez was sent by the ing of Spain from Mexico to the north. He reached on Entrance, our international boundary, in 1774 nd the year following came to Sitka Sound. Ca ain Cook sailed from Plymouth, England, for this p of the world at just about the time that Jefferso vas writing the Declaration of Independence. It w he who established the fact that there was no lan onnection between America and Asia and he sur ed a part of the coast, outlining the chief fea res through more than twelve degrees of latitude. He then went south to Hawaii, where he was kill by the natives.

Later still there were other explorations by the ussians, who formed trading companies, and there ere

Indian Peddlers in Front of an Old Russian Warehouse



Sitka Lies in a Cove of Hills Facing a Little Bay

Experience

Is taught good nurses, cooks and usekeepers everywhere the great ue of

Baker's Cocoa

e of the best known writers on dietcs says of cocoa:

EG U S. PAT OFF.

"It is a perfect food, as wholesome as delicious, a beneficent restorer of exhausted power; but its quality must be good and it must be carefully prepared. It is highly nourishing and easily digested, and is fitted to repair wasted strength, preserve health and prolong life."

IOICE RECIPE BOOK FREE

alter Baker & Co. Ltd.
Established 1780
DORCHESTER, MASS.

nd Prize, Panama-Pacific Exposition, 1915
nd Prize, Panama-California Exposition, 1915

DUST WITH 3-IN-ONE OIL

Try this on your buffet, dining table, parlor table, chair, piano—any varnished surface:

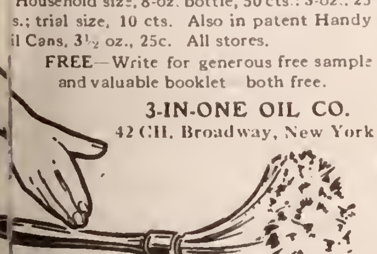
Moisten a soft woolen cloth or cheese cloth with a few drops of 3-in-One. Then wipe furniture just as if you were dusting.

You'll be astonished and delighted at the sult! Every bit of dust and soil, greasy nger marks, etc., will vanish. A little more l and a little rubbing, and mars, scars and ains will disappear. All the original beauty d lustre of the finish will be restored.

3-in-One contains no grease or acid to soil injure. Has no disagreeable varnish odor. Household size, 8-oz. bottle, 50 cts.: 3-oz., 25 s.; trial size, 10 cts. Also in patent Handy il Cans, 3½ oz., 25c. All stores.

FREE—Write for generous free sample and valuable booklet both free.

3-IN-ONE OIL CO.
42 CH. Broadway, New York



Easter Post Cards and Novelties

0 E Cards for 10 cts. ....100 for 80 cts.
Novelties 5 cts. each ...... 45 cts per dozen
Novelties 10 cts each ...... $1.00 per dozen old Cards (not Post Cards) 5 cts each .6 for 25 cts ADISON ART COMPANY, Madison, Conn.

independent fur traders from England and from our Atlantic coast. There were five ships from New England that came to Alaska in the latter part of the eighteenth century to buy furs, and one of these, commanded by Captain Gray, took his cargo of furs to Canton, in China, and there got a cargo of tea, which he carried on around the Cape of Good Hope to Boston, making the first voyage of an American vessel around the world. He landed in Boston August 10, 1790.

In the meanwhile the Russians had been gradually making their claims to Alaska, and along about the beginning of the last century they made treaties with England which conceded to them the Alaskan coast down to fifty-four degrees forty minutes of north latitude, including the whole of the Alaska that we bought from them. At that time it is said that Russia had a great ambition to control the Pacific, and that it was her aim to grab the whole of California and the Hawaiian Islands as well. Baranof, the man who founded Sitka, had fur-trading stations as far south as where San Francisco now is, and he actually owned the farm which later came into the hands of John Sutter, where gold was first discovered in California. He went to the Hawaiian Islands and tried to make treaties for the czar with some of the kings there, and carried presents with that in view.

IT was Baranof who established the first Russian colony at Kodiak. That was eight years before our national capital was moved from Philadelphia to Washington. Among the settlers were a number of convicts, of whom he made fur-traders and farmers, controlling them with an iron hand. He was small in stature, but he had the qualities of a Napoleon, and it was due to his management and organization that Russia got such a foothold on the continent. He had many fights not only with the Indians, but also with his own people, and at one time, when a conspiracy occurred and one of the colonists attempted to assassinate him, he grabbed hold of the man's hand, holding the weapon, and then strangled him to death with his own hands.

It was in 1799 that he moved his headquarters to Sitka, and three years later, while he was absent, the Indians massacred the Russians, killing all of the officers and thirty men. Only five Russians escaped. The Indians then built a fort of logs here and defied the Russians, but Baranof came back with a gunboat and starved the Indians into submission. Before they left the fort they killed their children and dogs, and when Baranof landed he found the only live occupant was a single old woman.

Baranof then moved the site of Sitka eight miles, to where the town now is, and he erected the great log buildings, many of which were here when we took possession. It was about the time he came to Sitka that the Russian Fur Company was formed. This was a monopoly backed by the government, the Czar and the empress and many of the nobility being among the stockholders. Baranof continued to manage the territory until 1817, when, through misrepresentation and underhand political work, he was deposed. He left Sitka and died on his way home at Batavia, Java, in 1819.

Alaska continued to belong to Russia from the death of Baranof until 1867. Complications, however, were arising as to the territory with the British, who, under the Hudson's Bay Company, were pushing their trading stations from the Mackenzie River on to the Yukon, and Russia became anxious lest the territory should fall into the hands of Great Britain. At the time of the Crimean War it offered to sell us Alaska, but President Pierce refused to become a party to the transfer. The matter was again taken up when Buchanan came in, at which time an offer of $5,000,000 was made by us, but was declined by the Russians. The negotiations were continued, but we were then in the thick of the troubles between the North and the South which ended in the Civil War. The pro-slavery element would not agree to the purchase of any more territory that was likely to be non-slaveholding, and the subject was dropped until after the close of the war.

It was in 1863 that the Western Union Telegraph Company planned to build a land line across North America to Asia. They were about ready to push their line through when the Atlantic cable was found to be a success and the work dropped. In the meantime an increased interest had sprung up regarding Alaska. The negotiations for its purchase were resumed and, to cut short a most interesting story, Russia offered to sell the territory to us for about 2 cents an acre. The actual figures were $7,000,000, with an extra $200,000 which was to go to settle the claims of the Russians already residing there and pay the cost of the transfer.

THIS proposition was discussed by the two governments, and it was late one night that Baron Stoeckl, the Russian ambassador, came to the house of William H. Seward, our Secretary of State, and told him that he had just received dispatches from the Czar authorizing him to make treaties to that effect. Secretary Seward was playing whist at the time and the ambassador said that he would come to the State Department on the morrow to make the treaty. Secretary Seward replied: "Why should we wait until tomorrow, Mr. Ambassador? Let us make the treaty tonight."

To this the ambassador consented. They met at 12 o'clock at the Department of State and by 4 A.M. the treaty was engrossed, signed and sealed and ready for transmission to the Senate. It was near the close of the session, but the friends of Alaska were brought to the front and within a month from that time the treaty had been approved and Alaska was ours.

Up to that time the territory had been known as Russian America. It needed a new name, and all kinds of ridiculous titles were suggested. One was "The Zero Islands," another "Andy Johnson's Polar Bear Garden," and a third "Walrus-sia." The treaty was called the polar bear treaty and the senators who favored it were dubbed the Eskimo senators. The name "Alaska" was finally chosen at the instance of Charles Sumner, who said that it was the title which the natives used, and which, translated, means "The Great Mainland."

The ceremony of taking possession of Alaska was performed here at Sitka on Friday, the 18th of October, 1867. Two hundred American soldiers under General Jefferson C. Davis took their position on the east side of the flagstaff, which stood near the castle, and an equal number of Russian soldiers were lined up opposite them. It was 3:30 o'clock in the afternoon when the Russian captain ordered the Russian flag to be pulled down. The men tried to do so, but the flag had caught in the ropes and would not move. A Russian soldier was ordered to climb the flagstaff and bring down the flag. He tried to do so and failed. Another man tried and did not succeed. A third attempt was made, and the man got the flag, but it slipped from his hands, was caught by the wind and carried out so that it fell on the bayonets of the Russian soldiers. The incident was so affecting that the Princess Maksutoff, who was present with the Russians, wept, and the soldiers were visibly moved.

Following this, "Old Glory" was hoisted, and the American gunboats in the harbor and the Russian battery on shore fired a salute. Prince Maksutoff, the Russian commissioner, then stepped forth and said to General Rousseau, who was the American commissioner: "By the authority of his imperial majesty the Emperor of Russia I transfer to the United States the territory of Alaska." Prince Maksutoff then handed over the insignia of his office as governor, and General Rousseau made a speech accepting the transfer. And that was all. With words that would hardly fill more than a paragraph of this letter, Alaska changed its allegiance, and Uncle Sam added to his possessions a country one-fifth as large as that of the United States proper and resources that have already brought in more than $600,000,000, and that will bring in billions more in years yet to come.

A New Chocolate Cake

One of Marion Harris Neil's delicacies made with Crisco at half butter expense

- ⅓ cupful Crisco
- ½ teaspoonful salt
- 1 cupful sugar
- ¼ cupful grated chocolate
- 3 eggs
- ½ cupful milk
- 1¼ cupfuls flour
- 3 teaspoonfuls baking powder
- 1 teaspoonful vanilla extract
- ½ cupful chopped nut meats
- ½ cupful sultana raisins
- 1½ tablespoonfuls fruit juice
- boiled frosting
- melted chocolate and cake ornaments
- ½ cupful ground almonds

[Use level measurements]

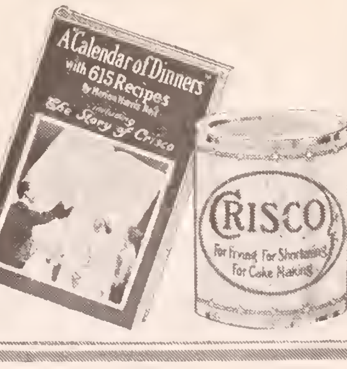
Add salt to Crisco and cream it with sugar, add chocolate, yolks of eggs well beaten, vanilla, milk, flour sifted with baking powder, nuts, raisins, fruit juice, and whites of eggs beaten to stiff froth. Mix carefully and turn into a Criscoed and floured cake tin and bake in moderate oven fifty minutes. Cool and cover with boiled frosting; dust sides with ground almonds, and as soon as frosting is set, spread melted chocolate over top. Decorate with cake ornaments.

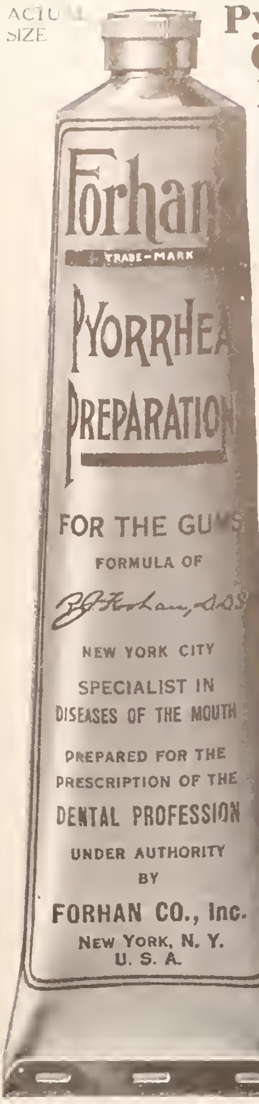
CRISCO
For Frying - For Shortening
For Cake Making

Crisco costs but half as much as butter and gives equally good results in cakes, pastry, breads and biscuits.

It is real economy to use Crisco in baking because it lessens the cost of all dishes in which butter once was considered a necessity.

You will get 614 other recipes tested by Miss Neil and 365 dinner menus in "A Calendar of Dinners". This handsome, cloth-bound, gold-stamped book contains "The Story of Crisco". It is interesting; read it. We will be glad to send it. Write Dept. S-3, The Procter & Gamble Co., Cincinnati, O., enclosing five two-cent stamps. A paper-bound edition without "The Calendar of Dinners" but with 250 recipes is free.





Pyorrhea Can Be Relieved

Four out of five persons have Pyorrhea or Riggs' Disease (loosening of the teeth, receding and inflamed gums), after passing 40. Many younger persons also have (or are about to have) this distressing condition. An efficient preventive is Forhan's Pyorrhea Preparation, and it gives prompt relief in most cases. If your condition has passed the preventive stage, CONSULT YOUR DENTIST at once. He will probably prescribe Forhan's Pyorrhea Preparation as an aid to his own treatment. Use it daily like any dentifrice—pleasant to the taste.

Large tube (as illustrated), 50c. If your druggist hasn't it, send us his name with 10c. stamps and we will send 5 trial tubes (enough for your family and friends). Forhan Company, 21-27 Elm Street, New York.

Four Weeks' Trial

Choice of 38 Styles

Yes, we will ship you on four weeks' absolutely free trial, all freight prepaid, direct from our own factory your choice of 38 new styles of the highest-grade Wing Piano or Player Piano.

No Money Down No C. O. D.—no freight either way—no security.

One of 38 Styles

Use it and enjoy it four full weeks; then, if you wish, ship it back at our expense. You alone are the judge. You will be amazed at our rock-bottom direct price on the superb Wing, guaranteed 40 years. Easy monthly payments or cash. Write today—now.

Valuable Book—FREE "The Book of Complete Information About Pianos" sent free and postpaid. Valuable 136-page book. Tells how to judge pianos. Beautiful art catalog also sent and particulars of our great Free Shipment Offer. Write today—now.

Wing & Son (Est. 1868), 9th Ave. & 13th St., Dept. 2493, New York

BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO.
EAGLE BRAND
GAIL BORDEN
EAGLE BRAND
Gail Borden
BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK
NEW YORK U.S.A.

Smooth, Rich Ice Cream

Gail Borden
EAGLE
BRAND
CONDENSED
MILK
THE ORIGINAL

can be made easily and quickly with Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. Made from pure, rich full-cream milk "Eagle Brand" makes ice cream that is as nourishing as it is delicious. Make your next ice cream with "Eagle Brand" and see how rich and velvety smooth it is.

POMPEIAN OLIVE OIL

ALWAYS FRESH
THE STANDARD IMPORTED OLIVE OIL

Heroes and Martyrs of Faith

International Sunday School Lesson for March 12. Heb. 11:1—12:2

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

"Let us run with patience the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus." Heb. 12:1, 2.

We are encouraged by the great cloud of witnesses who tell us from the other side that our hopes are not vain, that there is a city with foundations and a country better than any on which the sun shines. They did not endure in vain, and their inheritance is fairer than they had ever dreamed. They have crossed over into the land of gold, and send back to urge us to follow on through peril, tears, and blood, because the compensations of the life beyond will more than repay for every tear, and groan, and labor. Our Saviour also encourages us, because he has sat down at the right hand of the Father's throne, even as he said. We are not following a will-o'-the-wisp, or a deceptive mirage. Let us then keep the track set before us, and keep the pace at a run. There is a predestined path for each of us, marked by infinite wisdom and love. It will bring us out at last, though the brake is tangled and the forest trees shut out the light, as for Stanley in his march through the African forest for 156 days. Be patient! Bear all things, believe all things, endure all things! He who gave you life will not make the cross too bitter or the burden too heavy. Don't look at the road, but unto Jesus. Looking forward strains the eyes, looking up opens heaven.

Faith and Courage

By Arthur H. Howland

THE March lessons contain three great lists of brave people. On March 5 we studied the speech of Stephen, in which he named some of the great heroes of Israel. Today we have the wonderful eleventh chapter of Hebrews—the Hall of Fame for the men and women of faith. The subject of the Review for March 26 is "The Great Multitude," referring to the vision of John of that multitude which no man could number, of those who had come up out of great tribulation and washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb.

Pious Jews loved to go over the names of their nation's heroes just as patriotic boys like to talk about the nation's heroes, and just as the workers for some great cause love to talk and write about pioneers of the movement. Psalms 105, 106, 135, 136 contain lists like those of Stephen and of this chapter. Let the pupils see if they can find some others.

This eleventh chapter holds a very important place in the argument of the letter to the Hebrews. It is too bad that no one knows who wrote this letter. The title of the book in the King James Version declares that Paul wrote it, and a few scholars still think so. But nothing in the letter itself states that Paul wrote it, nor is there any positive indication that he did. Some guess that Apollos wrote it, some Barnabas; but these are only guesses. After all, it makes no difference who the writer was, except that we should all like to express our gratitude to the man whose mind and soul and hand, under the direction of the Holy Spirit, produced this wonderful summary of Gospel truth.

The first two chapters make the introduction to the letter, showing the supreme, unique greatness of Jesus. The first division, 3:1-4:13, declares that Jesus is our Joshua to lead us into rest. By the way, don't fail to correct in your Bible, if you use the King James Version, the bad blunder in the eighth verse of chapter 4. "Jesus" there should of course be "Joshua." You will notice that the change has been made in the Revised Versions. In this division, note specially 4:9-11. The second division, 4:14—8:6, shows Jesus to be our High Priest to lead us to perfection. In this division note specially 7:25. The third division, 8:7—10:23, shows him to be our Sacrificial Lamb who sanctifies us by his own blood. In this division note specially 9:11-14 and 10:14, 15. The climax of the epistle is 10:19-23, the exhortation to gain and to keep these blessings through faith. Then comes, after an interlude urging steadfastness, the wonderful eleventh chapter, which defines, describes and illustrates the faith required. The last two chapters of the letter contain further amplifications of the author's doctrine, and practical exhortations and advice. Notice especially in this part of the letter, 12:14; 13:8; 13:12, 13 and the wonderful verses, 13:20, 21.

NOW to go back to our eleventh chapter. That first verse has been very largely quoted and very little understood. No one can tell what the English words mean as they stand in the King James Version: "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." The American Revision translates: "Faith is assurance of things hoped for, a conviction of things not seen." It all means that faith is the thing which makes real what we hope for and can not see. Then comes the great list: Abel, who offered a more excellent sacrifice; Enoch, who walked with God and pleased him; Noah, who faced ridicule and built a boat on dry land; Abraham, who went out into the unknown when God called and who was willing to give God back his only son, upon whom all the future fulfilment of God's promises seemed to rest; Sarah, who believed God even when he promised what seemed impossible; Isaac and Jacob, whose faith carried forward the blessing to their descendants; Joseph, who was true to God in the face of temptation and trial and believed that his people would go back to get their inheritance; Moses' mother, who believed that God would use her baby to free his people; Moses himself, who would rather suffer and be poor with God's people than be happy and rich in Egypt; the whole people of Israel in the days of their new faith, when they kept the Passover, crossed the Red Sea and conquered Jericho. Then Rahab, Gideon, Barak, Samson, Jephthah, David, Samuel and the prophets. Plenty of material here to keep classes of any age interested for any length of time. Make a list of later heroes of faith before the class study, and get your pupils to add names to the list. In fighting error and standing for and spreading the truth of God—Wyckliff, Savonarola, Hus, Luther, Zwingli, John Knox. In reforms—Wilberforce, Wendell Phillips, Garrison, Abraham Lincoln, John Howard, John B. Gough. In missions—William Carey, Hudson Taylor, Adoniram Judson, John G. Paton, David Livingstone, Bishop Taylor, Dan Crawford. In evangelism—John Wesley, George Whitefield, Bishop Asbury, Charles Finney, Dwight L. Moody, Henry Drummond, William Booth. In works of devotion and mercy and inspiration—Madame Guyon, Susannah Wesley, Barbara Heck, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Florence Nightingale. Tell about some heroes and heroines who are still alive—Thomas Mott Osborne, Judge Lindsey, Frank P. Walsh, Jane Addams, Maud Ballington Booth, Evangeline Booth, Father Damien.

Notice especially verse 6: "Without faith it is impossible to please him. For he that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him." This is one of the best Bible verses about faith. It connects up all the Old Testament and New Testament teachings about it. Faith was back there in the Old Testament in the form of three great Hebrew verbs, meaning to "believe," to "trust," to "take refuge." The Psalms and Isaiah are especially rich in the teachings about faith. But the Jews of New Testament times had failed to notice how large a place faith held in t r own Scripture. Their minds were itered on the law, not on its spirit but i letter. And, as if the law itself were diffi-cult enough, they had added m y impossible and ridiculous requi nents. Jesus rebuked them for this and ied t lead their hearts back to the art o God. Jesus demanded faith in imsel on the part of those who follo d him and of those whom he healed. le rebuked the disciples for their lack faith and wondered: "When the Son f Man cometh shall he find faith on the rth?" John's Gospel contains the w "believe" ninety-five times. But i s Paul more than any other who was t grea expounder of faith. His Epist to the Romans shows how Gentiles a Jews alike may receive the great gift of forgiveness and the new birth faith. The letter to the Galatians is e tha every church member ought to ad a least once every week. Havir found the way of salvation by faith. e are constantly getting tangled up a n trying to make ourselves perfect y the works of the law. Paul scolds t Galatians roundly for this. "O fooli Galatians," he exclaims, "who h bewitched you?" He commands em to stand fast in the liberty wherei Christ had made them free, and remi them again how it is that the real grac of the soul are born, not by effort, ut by trustful yielding of the will to t Holy Spirit, who will bring forth dai in our lives by faith, love, joy, peace nd all his other fragrant fruits.

Notice throughout this eleven chapter of Hebrews the combina on o faith and courage. These peo who believed kept on believing, ev when it was difficult and costly. T y had seen a heavenly vision and were ot dis obedient to it. They made th faith produce real results that glorif l God and helped mankind. Edison ha nights dreams; he has believed them, l now the world is reaping the harves of his courageous faith. Roebling drea d the Brooklyn Bridge, and mill ns o feet now cross it every year Field dreamed the Atlantic cable, a every day we read messages from t other world which come to us beca e men have created and continued to se the thing he dreamed. Marconi drea ed the wireless, and we are no longer a under when ships at sea send message to one another or to the lands across t waves.

MAKE this note of courage d persistency dominant in th esson. It is not enough to begin to elieve. We must believe every day, n matter what forces or voices would nd to draw us from the vision we ha seen.

We are compassed about wit great cloud of witnesses. That is int preted in two different ways: either t the faithful ones of other days e now watching us from the unseen ty, or that their presence in memory n history, and in the unseen world s witnesses to the truth, is a challen for us to be faithful too. Needless eights must be laid aside; sin must be ast out and kept out. Nothing will so m our vision and steal our strength as sin. The Christian race-course is li l with the prone bodies of those who ve let sin come back into their lives a l have been thrown down. Paint thi picture of the race-course vividly be e the class. Make the boys especially ell you all they know about races, and a out the races they have seen. Get em to name the weights that will hi er the running of the spiritual race an he sins that will destroy spiritual mus.

The lesson has a beautiful nding: "Looking unto Jesus!" He is he author of our faith, the one tha helps us to believe at the beginning. He is also the finisher of our faith. e will help us to be faithful day by d , until the end. He saw joy far ah l, and because of that endured the c ss and despised the shame. Now he is Go's right hand. So long as our es are upon him, we shall run strai t and strong and well.

Christian Herald Prayer League

AL Christians are urged to unite with he members of the Prayer League in dai prayer at the noon hour. Also any one's at liberty to send a request for pra r or an acknowledgment of answered pra r, thereby becoming enrolled as a me er of the Prayer League. All corr pondents are specially requested to ma their letters as brief as possible. Wr requests and acknowledgments on sep ate sheets.

HERE is a happy letter from a happy mother, Mrs. J. B. H., who writes from Carlisle, Pa.: "So e time ago I sent a request for pra r for our revival meetings then in ogress. They are still continuing, anc e have had a glorious revival, the gre est the church has known for years. I a requested prayer for the only unc verted member of my family. He as converted last evening. Praise Go " A wife writes: "With great joy anc gratitude I write to say that some wee ago I asked prayers that my hus nd might be saved from drink. Sin then he has not drank at all. His hac seemed a hopeless case. What a wo erful Saviour!"

s. J. C. P., Fort Wayne, Ind., wri s: "Several months ago I asked yo o pray for my son-in-law until I shc d write to tell you that he was sav . This is to tell you that he has bee saved and has united with the ch h." Sister A. K. writes from Te s: "I must acknowledge the answer to ayers for my companion's return. I k w the light that was following him wo d not let him go far away." A lady wr s from Syracuse, N. Y.: "I asked yo to pray for my own physical and me al restoration. I thank God for an ering prayer, for I am rapidly gai ng in both. I also asked you to pr for a friend, for his restoration to hea h and that his illness might be the me s of winning his soul for Christ. La week he wrote: 'The doctors say I w be well soon, but best of all I have giv my life to Christ.'"

J. H. writes from Wilkesbarre, Pa., to knowledge answered prayer and to as prayer that her children might be sav , and that "one we have not he l from in a long time may write ho ." Mrs. H. C. T. writes from Te essee to say that prayers for the ph ical restoration of her son have been he l, but that his mind is not yet he d. She writes: "I feel so thankful to od for his physical health; now I pl d earnestly for the deep, sincere pr ers of the League for the complete he ng of his mind and that he may be res red to his loved ones. God is able to this. I read of other loved ones be g restored mentally; why not my pr ious son?"

knowledgments of answered prayer ha also been received from:

s. R. J. H., Harriman, Tenn.; Mrs. K. C., South Manchester, Conn.; C. E. J., Lo Angeles, Calif.; E. L. S., Michigan; J. S., Pittsburg, Pa.; Mrs. H. C. C., East Fa eld, Vt.; Mrs. A. S. C., Selma, Ind.; M G. C., Delevan, N. Y.; Mrs. A. C., Je ingston, W. Va.; Mrs. E. J. E., Moscow, Id o; A Subscriber, Bangor, Pa.; M. K., Ri mond, Ind.; Constant Reader, Sebastian, Fl S. R., New Mexico; R. B., Gunnison, Co.; Mrs. M. W. H., Malta, Mont.; "Anxio " Missouri (for letter from an estranged fri d); G. E. P., Atchison, Kan.; Mrs. J. ., Marshalltown, Iowa; Mrs. E. J. T., La sboro, Mass.; R. E. J., Puyallup, W a.; Mrs. R., Chamblee, Ga.; Mrs. E. W., Jo stown, Pa.; M. S. B., Fulton, N. Y.; A.M. P., Grand Rapids, Mich.; M. D., Be ar, Miss.; Mrs. H. W. H., Waynesboro, V ; Mrs. N. H., Big Hollow, N. Y.; E. A. L., Ph nix, Ariz.

very sad letter comes from a father at T , Tenn. He writes that his little girl is ill ith typhoid fever. He has three other ch lren; the wife and mother left the home tv years ago. He writes: "I sit up day and ni t with my little girl. The other children ha been sick too, but are better now. The o comfort I get is reading the Christian H ald. It is one o'clock in the morning now. I ve just bathed my little girl. Her fever is high. But thank God I can pick up the C stian Herald, and read God's word in it. P se pray God to help me stand these trials." H sks prayer for his little girl's recovery and tl he may be prospered so that he may be al to provide for his family. He says: " ase pray that God will give us a blessing. It s not his will that any should perish."

M. E. W., Steubenville, Ohio, requests special prayer for help and guidance in a financial and legal matter. She wishes to do good with the property involved, and feels need of special help at this time.

The wife of a minister who has given forty years of his life to the pastorate writes that they are in special financial need just now, brought about by the opposition of one who seems determined to trouble them. She asks prayer that the Holy Spirit may touch this man's heart and lead him to treat them justly and considerately. Rev. James T. Gaskill, pastor of a church at North Harlowe, N. C., writes that the church building is in danger of being sold by foreclosure proceedings to raise a debt of $600. The church is new, erected at a cost of $3,000, taking the place of the former building, which was destroyed by fire three or four years ago. Rev. John Watson writes from Muskoka, Ont., to ask prayer for an opening in evangelistic or pastoral work. Aside from his theological training, he has some knowledge of medicine.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

E. Sullivan, N. H.; Sumner, Ohio; Fulton, N. Y. (in the Baptist Church); Leonard, Texas; Ionia, Mich.; Lomoc, Calif.; Navarre, Ohio; Marinette, Wis. (that Sunday school class of girls may be saved); Laclede and Plummer, Idaho; Trinidad, Calif.; Norris City, Ill.; Seneca, Mo. (in the Baptist Church) Wevertown and Johnsburg, N. Y.; Pateros, Wash.; Lanesboro, Mass.; Isadora, Mo.; Elmira, Mo.; Superior, Mont. (in the Isabelle Reeves Memorial M. E. Church); Senecaville, Ohio; Parsons, Kan. (in the First Baptist Church); State College, New Mexico; in the Spanish colony at New York; Lincoln, Ark.; Reynolds, Ill.; New London, Wis.; Leesburg, Ohio (in the M. E. Church); Springfield, Mo.; Alexandria, Minn. (in the M. E. Church); Springfield, Ill.; Cleveland, Ohio; Hanoverton, Ohio; Vardaman, Miss.; Bainbridge, Ga.; Baltimore, Md.; Wayne, Me.; Covington, Tenn.; Newark, Ohio (in the Methodist Church); McCombs, Ohio (in the Pleasant Hill Church); Isle of Pines, Cuba, W. I.; Newburgh, N. Y.; Grinnell, Iowa; Raymond and Jesup, Iowa; Castile, N. Y.; Arcadia, Fla.; Portland, Me.; Williamstown, Ky.; Amsden, Ohio, Richmond, Ind.; Clarksburg, W. Va. (in the Methodist Church); New Pine Creek, Ore. (that the pool rooms in this town may be closed). A Subscriber asks prayer for a revival throughout the state of Maine; A Minnesota Subscriber, for state-wide prohibition there. Another subscriber asks prayer for the conversion of seven friends.

Mrs. M. E. C., Mrs. S. P. H., Mrs. E. C. M. ask prayer that their sons' minds may be restored; Mrs. S. C. H. that a child's mind may be restored, R. G., A Mother, Mrs. C., and Mrs. E. C. ask prayer that daughters' minds may be restored. Twenty-one friends ask prayer for mental restoration and strengthening for relatives and friends.

A Believer asks prayer that mother's sight may be restored. Twenty-one other friends ask prayer for restoration and strengthening of sight for themselves or friends.

Seventy-nine friends ask prayers for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Sixteen mothers ask prayer that sons may be saved from the liquor habit; three wives, their husbands; H. A. H., Mrs. J. S. E., a sister, Mrs. M. F. T., Mrs. N. N. P., their brothers. Nine other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be cured of the liquor habit.

Mrs. N. S. F. and Mrs. J. A. R., that sons may be cured of the drug habit. J. K., "that I may be cured"; W. J. C., that wife may be cured of the drug habit; Mrs. M. E. M., that a friend may be cured of the habit.

Seventy-seven friends ask prayer that their sons may be converted; thirty-three wives, their husbands; one hundred and twenty-four other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be converted.

"Gershom," that daughter and son-in-law may have a deeper Christian experience; twenty-nine friends ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives and friends.

One hundred and seventy-two friends ask prayer that friends and relatives may be healed; including R. M. B., that the superintendent of the Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home may be restored to health; Mrs. J. O., that minister may be restored to health; Mrs. E. B. C., that daughter may recover from an operation; Mrs. T. R., that son may be healed without an operation; C. M., that husband may be fully healed of cancer and that it may never return. Ninety-two friends ask prayer for healing for themselves.

"Maryland" asks prayer that an old woman's hearing may be restored; E. L. S., that husband's hearing may be restored; fifteen other friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing for friends or for themselves; seventy-two friends ask prayer for help and guidance in financial affairs.

Eighty-one friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including a wife that husband's love may be restored to her and home made happy.

A Great Deal More
For a Very Little More

A LOWER price will not compensate a man for poor results in a tire.

Having invested hundreds, or thousands, in a motor car, he will not let a trifling additional cost stand in the way of getting the highest measure of safety and service, and the greatest possible mileage.

The tire buyers of America gladly pay a very little more for Goodyear Tires because they feel they cannot afford to dispense with Goodyear qualities; and because, for a little more, Goodyear gives a great deal more.

They have learned that true economy in tires, as in everything else, is a matter of service, not of price; and that Goodyear Tires do cost less in the end.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company
AKRON, OHIO

GOODYEAR
AKRON
TIRES

This Year We Are Making
Twice as Many 1916
Fourteen Million
Champion
TOLEDO MADE FOR THE WHOLE WORLD'S TRADE
Dependable Spark Plugs
Seven Million
1915

What Our Big Production
Means to You

Year after year for many years, we have made more spark plugs than all the others combined.

Year after year we have greatly enlarged our output.

This year we will double last year's production.

Year after year we have made Champions more and more dependable.

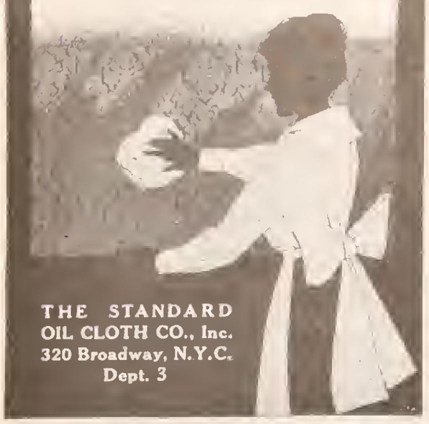
As our production has grown we have been able to adopt extreme and still more extreme measures to insure dependability—

Because—as our production increases we can distribute the expense of these extremes of engineering, of testing and of processing, over a vastly larger number of spark plugs.

That's why Champions are so much more dependable.

Your dealer will supply you with the Champion designed to serve your car more dependably than any other. Look on the porcelain (not merely on the box) for the name Champion.

Champion Spark Plug Company
305 Auburndale Ave. Toledo, Ohio



SANITAS
MODERN
WALL COVERING

CANNOT collect dust or germs and you can wipe it clean with a damp cloth.

Made in every style and design to harmonize with the furnishings of every room. Your decorator will show you latest patterns.

We have helpful booklet and assortment of samples ready for you.

Write for it today.

THE STANDARD
OIL CLOTH CO., Inc.
320 Broadway, N.Y.C.
Dept. 3

Learn Music
At Home!

Lessons Free

New Method—Learn To Play By Note—Piano, Organ, Violin, Banjo, Mandolin, Guitar, Cornet, Harp, 'Cello or to sing. Special Limited Offer of free weekly lessons. You pay only for music and postage, which is small. No extras. Beginners or advanced pupils. Everything illustrated, plain, simple, systematic. Free lectures each course. 16 years' success. Start at once. Write for Free Booklet Today—New
U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7M
225 Fifth Avenue, New York City

UNDERWOODS
At Less Than 1/2 Price

10 Days' Free Trial 5-Year Guarantee

RENTED
APPLYING RENTAL on PRICE, or SOLD
for CASH or on EASY PAYMENTS

A typewriter is almost as much a necessity in the home as in an office. Let us send you one on 10 days' free trial. Get a world famed Underwood. Ask for circular No. 71. Write for agency proposition.

TYPEWRITER EMPORIUM, Chicago (Est. 1892)

Cut the Cost of Furniture in Two

Shipped in sections, knock-down—saves factory space—packing costs and freight charges. Direct from factory to you saves dealer's expenses and profits. Ten minutes assemble any piece. Over 100 designs—everything for the home, office or club.

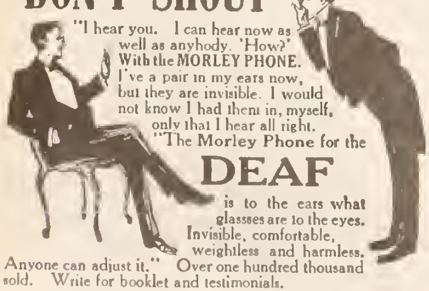
Home Exhibitors Wanted

Exchange spare time for furniture or cash commissions. A new business for men or women. Free Catalog with full particulars.

BROOKS MFG. CO.
1303 Rust Ave., Saginaw, Mich.
Largest Plant of Its Kind in the World

$40 Value at $19⁷⁵

Extension 48x64 in.



"DON'T SHOUT"

"I hear you. I can hear now as well as anybody. 'How?' With the MORLEY PHONE. I've a pair in my ears now, but they are invisible. I would not know I had them in, myself, only that I hear all right.

"The Morley Phone for the DEAF
is to the ears what glasses are to the eyes. Invisible, comfortable, weightless and harmless. Anyone can adjust it." Over one hundred thousand sold. Write for booklet and testimonials.

THE MORLEY CO., Dept. 754, Perry Bldg., Phila.

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

The editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

E. K. S., Ipswich, Mass. Could there be a revival meeting for all professing Christians, from minister down; no unconverted persons admitted to the meetings, which should last a week? There should be a forceful, spiritual leader, who would lead us to humbling ourselves in the dust. After this, would not every one become an evangelist to his own home and neighborhood? Later, meetings to be held for the unconverted.

This plan is thoroughly spiritual, thoroughly scientific. A real revival is almost sure to begin in some such way, the true believers meeting together for heart-searching, confession and earnest prayer. It would not be necessary to forbid the unconverted to come, but in announcing the meetings it should be plainly stated that they are for Christians. Any church that would follow this program could have a revival. There is a "law of the Spirit." Any group of earnest believers meeting for confession and prayer in this way are sure to receive fresh spiritual power that is bound to work out in blessing upon others. If possible get your minister to cooperate and lead. If he will not, then act on your own initiative, calling together a little group for prayer, letting God guide you step by step. He will honor your faith with abundant and far-reaching blessing.

D. McD., Wellsville, Ohio. Pythagoras was born in the sixth century B. C., and many stories are told about him which are, of course, impossible of substantiation. It is known that he was a great mathematician; but when we find multiplication tables in the ruins of Babylon (see Christian Herald. January 26) we know that they existed long before the time of Pythagoras.

W. F., Basco, Ill. 1. There were two sowings, and the first crop of the barley-harvest was reaped in March or April. 2. The Jewish months were lunar, their length depending upon the day when the appearance of the new moon was announced by the Sanhedrin. 3. The American Colony is still in Jerusalem and doing excellent work. They have relieved many cases of distress with funds supplied by readers of the Christian Herald. 4. Write to Mr. Cohn for the information.

H. D. H., Bennettsville, S. C. Our attitude on the question of national defense has already been set forth in the pages of the Christian Herald. We hold that the U. S. has a higher mission, a greater duty before it, than to follow the example of Europe, in creating an army and navy to challenge the rivalry of the warlike nations. That our present defenses are by no means inadequate—as the preparedness advocates have asserted—is pretty well shown by the recent testimony of Rear Admiral Blue and General Miles before a congressional committee. We cannot enter into a detailed discussion of a subject which has been so thoroughly canvassed.

A Southern friend sends us the story of nine brothers in a Mississippi family, who are living examples "of the influence of a Christian father and mother." Six of them are now engaged in public religious work. All of the nine were educated in the State university. George H. Leavell is a medical missionary to China, James B. and Leonard Leavell are Baptist pastors in active service, C. S. Leavell is an associate pastor, A. B. is a dentist, F. H. is the state secretary of the Y. P. B. U. for Georgia, and R. O. and N. W. Leavell are seminary students.

E. W. G., Pittsburg, Pa. The Bible contains this symbolic reference to the eating of horseflesh. Rev. 19: 18.

W. E. P., Nassau, Bahamas. We are not to judge others. There are doubtless many good Christians in the army, but whether they themselves can fully reconcile such a calling with the teachings of Christ is a matter for conjecture. The writer of the article in question expressed his individual view. We may with equal reason take the other attitude.

J. F. M., Amarillo, Texas. Will Europe repudiate any of its colossal debt when peace is reestablished?

Repudiation is a word of sinister import. It stands for the last ditch of national dishonor. Rudyard Kipling has recently declared that Europe will wholly repudiate its loans, and the entire world will sink under a weight of financial prostration. We disagree with Mr. Kipling. That there may be default of some of the internal war loans is not improbable, but that universal repudiation of national debts and a world's bankruptcy is likely to follow in the footsteps of declared peace is inconceivable. It is even more inconceivable that a foreign government will default on its external loans, for the repudiation of the just claims of one nation upon another nation would forever impair and probably destroy the credit of such a nation; from thenceforth it would be an outcast from the brotherhood of nations. The general impression among financial leaders is that there will be no repudiation, by the larger countries in Europe at least, of their internal debts, and the possibility of any government defaulting the payment of an external loan is beyond the realm of legitimate conjecture.

H. C., Moylan, Pa. The peace movement is now almost universal in the United States. There are several organizations that have been very active in influencing public opinion in opposition to the "preparedness" program of those who are endeavoring to force the country into military and naval competitions with Europe.

W. P., Indiana. The words "Holy Catholic Church" in the Creed have no reference to the Church of Rome. "Catholic" means "universal," and the phrase was designed to include the whole Christian Church throughout the world. At the time the Creed was framed, the Roman Catholic Church was not in existence.

P. J. M., Greensboro, N. C. Astronomy is one of the most ancient of sciences. The Arabs and Egyptians excelled in it. The Israelites from the earliest times gave attention to the study of the starry heavens, as many Bible passages indicate. See Ps. 19: Job 9: 9, 38: 31, 32, etc. They doubtless had the names of the planets from still earlier sources. There is no evidence that any of the nations of Old Testament times speculated on the stars being inhabited. What is probably the first Scriptural intimation of the kind is the passage in John 14: 2. See also what some commentators have regarded as a suggestion of the same kind in Heb. 1: 2 and 11: 3. It was not until the invention of the telescope, marking a new era in astronomy, that the amazing discoveries were made by scientists which afforded ground for the belief that the physical characteristics of certain stars were such as might be capable of supporting life. Flammarion, Proctor, Lowell and other astronomers have contended that Mars has an atmosphere, water, vegetation, changing seasons, etc. What little we do know of them brings the whole theory of "other worlds," peopled with sentient beings, within the range of probability at least.

N. W. M., San Diego, Calif. It is impossible to reconcile the attitude of two men, one of whom prays earnestly for one thing, while the other just as fervently prays for the opposite. It is a fair presumption that both are wrong, somehow. We have the strange spectacle, frequently repeated in these days, of the churches in the warring lands each imploring God to send victory to its armies. Doubtless they are all sincere, and we are willing to believe that each regards its own cause as the righteous one. The confusion arises from the fact that both are fundamentally wrong in their approval of the resort to war at all. War is not only a sin against God and humanity, but is the worst possible way out of a difficulty.

E. B., Batavia, Ohio. The passages in Mark 12: 28 and Matt. 22: 36-40, in which the Saviour refers to the two commandments as summarizing "all the law and the prophets," are interpreted to mean that the two commandments in question really comprehended all the others, as they set forth our duty to God and to our fellow man. The briefer statement was an epitome of, not a substitute for, the entire Decalogue.

Subscriber, Badger, Calif., writes: "Among all the articles I have noticed published on 'Preparedness,' I have not seen any reference to Isa. 54: 17. It seems to me that all the law and the prophecies given to God's people voice the promise given in that verse." The passage reads: "No weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper; and every tongue that shall rise against thee in judgment thou shalt condemn. This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of me, saith the Lord." This is part of a chapter which commentators regard as describing conditions after Israel's restoration.

Reader, Albany, Ore. We know nothing whatsoever about the games you mention. They may be innocent enough; but if they are card games, we think it would be well in this and similar cases to remember the injunction to "avoid even the appearance of evil," and let them alone, if for no other reason than the influence our example may have on others.

Mrs. R. A. K., Perdue, Ore. The poem is not in our collections.

Born A Cripple

Helen Martin came to the McLain Orthope Sanitarium after being operated upon a wearing a plaster cast without satisfacto results. Her mother says:
Helen's foot is now straight and strong. S doesn't limp, and you see by her picture h happy she now is—and so am I. I will alwa recommend your Institution and answ any letters about what you did for Hele
MRS. B. MARTIN, Westboro, Wi
Write Mrs. Martin and ask questions.
FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN
This private Institution is exclusively dev ed to treating children and young adu afflicted with Club Feet, Spinal Diseases a Curvature, Infantile Paralysis, Hip Diseas
Bow Legs, Wry Neck, etc.
Write for our book, "Deformities and Par ysis—also Book of References. Both fr
The McLain Orthopedic Sanitarium
923 Aubert Ave. St. Louis, Mo.

Easy Washdays Writ
For this free b k

Tells how 200,000 en save work, time and ey on wash days. Show w the Queen washes a ful in six minutes—doe big washing in less th an hour.

The Queen
WASHER Hand o
Water P

Absolutely the easies ning machine made—s sy a child can run it. Di nt from all other washers atented center-piece give two rubbing surfaces. Posi ly does wash clothes thor ly and with wonderful ease
Quickly pays for itself es your washing for a few a week. Saves wear on c s.
The price of the Queen i ry
low. Sold on 30 days' al.
Pay on small monthly i ll-ments if you wish.
Write now for Free E
KNOLL MFG. C
145 Maple St Readin a.
AGENTS: Write for mo making proposition.

"I have washed with lots of washing machines but never with one that washed as easy and clean. I have a family of nine, some of whom are small children, and their clothes are the dirtiest and hardest to get clean. But I must say this is the first time I did not use a hand wash-board with a machine." Mrs. J. S. (Full name on request) Hatfield, Pa.

"I have used my Queen for 15 years and have sold it and now see I can't get along without it." Mrs. J. M. H. (Full name on request) Newark, N. J.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FRE

To try in your own home 30 days free, no matter re you live. Show your friends. Send it back at o x-pense if you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of sands in daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, le of high grade material, beautifully finished, smoot e-sign, guaranteed for ye y our Two Million Dollar d.
Ask your dealers to w
you Hoosier Stoves. te for our big free book ing photographs, desc g large assortment of s and designs to select n, explaining our free l.
Send postal today. e your name and ad s plainly. No obligation
HOOSIER STOVE
164 State St., Marion,

MONITOR SELF HEATING IRON

MAKES IRON G
A PLEASU Proved the "W d's Best" by over 7 00
satisfied users. ot
stove — no dru ry.
Heat regulated in nt-
ly. Better, easie on-ing in half the time a all the cost. Nickel plate
AGENTS MEN AND W EN
$30 to $50 W kly
No experience needed. All or part time. Pos ely the easiest, fastest selling, Lowest Priced anc est known iron made. New Low Terms. Exc ve territory. Sample Free to workers. Write ay.
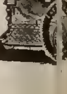
The Monitor Sad Iron Co. 713 Wayne St., Big Pra O.



TYPEWRITERS ALL MA S ALL PRI S

Look at these bargains! Typewriters Rebuilt in our own Factories. Guaranteed for one year.

Remingtons $15 to $65 Smiths $18 to $50
Underwoods $25 to $65 Royals $30 to $65
L. C. Smiths $28 to $60 Olivers $23 to $45

Brand new No. 2 Smith Premiers $45

We have others. Send for catalog describing them. Branch offices in principal cities.

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE Co., Inc., 345 Broadwa

Buy Your Books of THE CHRIS HERA
No matter what book you want, if it is a good k, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it, ite
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, Y.

My Girls

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

I'V often expressed a wish that I ight let you, friends of mine, go rht through my mail basket, read'g all of the perfectly wonderful lette that come to me day after day. I've ished that wish in my inmost hear almost 365 times a year, and I wish it to you every three months, but is winter season I'm wishing it hard than ever. For the letters from my rls have been truly remarkable lette full of inspiration, and friendship, and love. My girls have been mak beautiful realities out of rainbow-olored dreams. My girls have been seeing golden opportunities and gras ng them. My girls have been—but en, I'm prejudiced.

Soe of the girls have questions that you ay be able to answer for them; som ave ideas and problems that you may e glad to know about. Some of the lters are just—sweet. I am going to p them out, almost at random, for you see.

TIS letter is from a Middle Western rl. She says: "I believe that lone ess is the cause of so many young peo leaving their country homes and goin to the city. It is too quiet in som of the small towns and farm district Why, I haven't been to a party or sial for two years! No normal your girl, in my opinion, wants to spen her evenings sitting on the porch behi the vines watching pleasure-seek pass by. My parents retire earl so I usually spend my evenings in that way. The young people who live nea me don't call or meet each other. It sms impossible to get together.—B. L."

I now personally of other towns whe it is mighty hard to get together. Isn't there some remedy? And is my pen-and-ink friend in the right? What do you think?

A DEAR teacher lady in the Southland writes this dear little note. "Just before Thanksgiving, I asked the children in my school to write on a slip of paper the one thing that they were most thankful for. I send you a copy of some of these things.

" 'I am glad that I have eyes to see the pretty flowers, birds and trees.'

" 'I am glad the war is not over here.'

" 'I am most thankful that I have good health.'

" 'I am glad we have plenty to eat an' Kismas is close.'

" 'I am glad I have a dear heavenly Father to care for me.'—A. W."

What are you thankful for, I wonder?

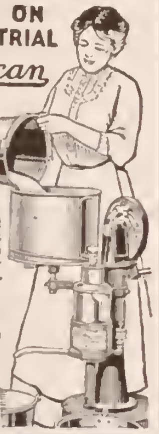
A CLEVER pen-and-ink friend has thought of a new way to help. Perhaps her thought will inspire you, too, in helping:

"I wondered why, when I was so willing and anxious to help, I was placed as I am in a small town where no such opportunity exists; for our small community contains very few needy, and no helpless, people. One day my attention was called to a friend who was following the example of a noted man whose name I forget. I believe he was called 'the knight of the golden pen,' and he never allowed an opportunity to pass that called for a letter. This friend not only wrote letters of condolence, as we all do more or less, but made a specialty of telling each friend and acquaintance how glad he was over their success in this, that and everything. For instance: his washerwoman's son had been given a more responsible position because of his integrity, and a letter went to him, so genuinely glad for him, that he said he couldn't stray from the right if he had wanted to. A former 'down-and-out' who was fighting the liquor demon was made to feel that some one was intensely interested in that fight, and consequently became interested enough in himself to reform. Then a wayward girl came back home and to the narrow way because he had written the home news and made her feel she was wanted when she had every reason to think otherwise. A school teacher in a remote region has often wondered if she ever could have lived through the term, so far from home and among people so different from her own, without his optimistic letters and encouragement. His letters of condolence were doubly valued; for the heart that rejoiced with them in prosperity could be trusted in adversity to understand. I saw an opportunity in this phase of letter-writing, but was reluctant to attempt it. Of course my friends would appreciate my thoughtfulness, but I argued that if it was to be for the Master, I must give help where I was sure of no returns. Finally I tried it with fear and trembling, for it was new business and needed delicate handling. Did you ever try it? If so, you will know how happy I was to find every one so grateful and appreciative. It's amazing how human we are, anyway. We do care a lot about having folks notice when we are trying our best, and it's much easier to 'keep pegging' when we know some one else is anxious for us to win. Don't you think right now of an old schoolmate or acquaintance that's having a rather hard pull of it? Or perhaps there are boys or girls somewhere whose persistence in making their ways in life ones to be proud of has excited your admiration; why not tell them so? You may feel unqualified because you are not a clergyman or relative. Right there is your opportunity. The clergyman's letter might be accepted for its true worth; and it might not, because he is a clergyman. The relative is expected to be interested. A. P. B."

A letter-writing club might be started by any of you. And it might help some one along on a hard stretch of life's road.

ONE of my older girls from Texas tells me an interesting story written in a straight little old-fashioned hand:

Continued on next page



$15.95 Upward ON TRIAL American FULLY GUARANTEED CREAM SPARATOR

A SLID PROPOSITION to send new ell made, easy running, perfect skimng separator for $15.95. Skims war or cold milk; making heavy or ligh eam. Bowl is a sanitary marvel sily cleaned.

AIOLUTELY ON APPROVAL

Diff t from picture, which illustrates ur e capacity machines. Western ord filled from western points. Whe r dairy is large or small write for han me free catalog. Address:

AMICAN SEPARATOR CO.
Bo 184 Bainbridge, N. Y.

Indoor Closet

More Comfortable Healthful and Convenient than the Out-Door Privy

Eliminates the open vault and cesspool, breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to inlids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

BSOLUTELY ODORLESS

Put It Anywhere In The House

T germs are killed by a chemical process in wr in the container, which you empty once a n th. Absolutely no odor. No more trouble t empty than dishwater. Closet absolutely granteed. Write for full description and price.

R E SANITARY MFG. CO. 330 ROWE BLDG., DETROIT, MICH.

A about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

6%

For 36 years we have been paying our customers the highest returns consistent with conservative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 and up which we can recommend after the most thorough personal investigation. Please ask for Loan List No. 709.

$25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving Investors

PERKINS & CO. Lawrence, Kans

PIAYERS For Public Worship, Private Devotion and Personal Ministry. A Con ete Guide to Devotion. This book is helpful to all, for he and public use Cloth postpaid $1.00.

M. MUNSON, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

HE YOU A CAMERA? Send a quarter, just half pric for latest issues of my three helpful magazines, AMICAN PHOTOGRAPHY, POPULAR PHOTOAPHY, PRACTICAL PHOTOGRAPHY. F. R. Fra e, 866 Pope Building, Boston, Mass.

Fi: Bright, Capable Ladies to travel, demonstra and sell dealers Good pay Railroad fare paid

GO RICH DRUG CO., Dept. 71, Omaha, Nebr.

MONEY FOR YOUR CHURCH

Your Church Organizations can make money through our very liberal proposition on the well known SKAT soap products. Write SKAT CO., Hartford, Conn.

300 Home Plans FREE

Standard Home No. 106—All lumber, millwork, hardware and paint for this attractive bungalow; five rooms and bath; balcony; big hall; Craftsman slash grain fir finish; Craftsman hardware; complete $1062

Standard Home No. 301
All material with complete plans at wholesale, direct-to-you price of . $744

Standard Home No. 121.
All material with complete plans at wholesale, direct-to-you price of . $1026

Standard Home No. 193
All material with complete plans at wholesale, direct-to-you price of . $957

Save $200 to $500 On Your Home! Shipped Anywhere —Safe, Prompt Delivery and Satisfaction or Money Back!

We have letters from hundreds of home owners telling how Gordon-Van Tine methods have saved them from $200 to $500 and even $800. Cosy houses $300 up! Send coupon, learn what we can save you. Get our 2 big plan books. (300 plans, photos, color schemes, exact costs.) FREE! We sell Ready-Cut Homes All Material Cut to fit

Standard Homes—Material Furnished in the Standard Way

Our two big new plan books fully describe both ways. No bothering with architects. Local lumber yard delays eliminated. Highest grade materials. Convenience ideas, well-planned kitchens, pantry cases built-in; no $35 kitchen cabinets needed. Linen closets; beautifully grained 2-panel Fir doors; bungalow trim; for mahogany or other finish. Many labor-savers appealing to women. All at Wholesale Prices! Save enough to pay your carpenter labor. We sell through catalog only. Lowest selling expense makes prices rock-bottom. Over 100,000 home owners and 10,000 contractors buy regularly from us. Do the same.

Quantity House Buyers

We are in a position to deliver big quantities of houses, varied in plan and appearance, on short notice. Standard Homes or Ready Cut Houses. Those interested are invited to visit our plant at Davenport.

Get These Three Books FREE

Two big plan books. This is cheap building year. Build now. Also get free our 5,000 Bargain Catalog of Building Material—156 illustrated pages of money-savers. Send coupon NOW!

Gordon-Van Tine's Ready-Cut Homes

Book of Building Plans

GORDON-VAN TINE CO.,
5999 Case Street, Davenport, Iowa
Established Half a Century

GORDON-VAN TINE CO., 5999 Case St., Davenport, Ia. Please send me Free the books checked

[ ] Standard Home Plan Book [ ] Ready-Cut Plan Book [ ] 5000 Building Material Bargain Catalog

[ ] Garages—Ready-Cut or Portable [ ] Hotbeds and Greenhouses for the Home Grower [ ] Summer Cottages

Please send me specific information about . . . .
Mention here articles in which you are most interested.

Name . . . . Street No. . . . .

City . . . . State . . . . Occupation . . . .

EAT YOUR WAY TO HEALTH

Use Tyler's Macerated Wheat and other raw foods like I did and get well.

Illness causes misery, makes you cross and irritable, makes you unfit for work, mental or physical. Makes responsibilities of life and life itself a burden. Constipation is the primary cause of nearly all diseases Get rid of it. Make yourself physically fit and

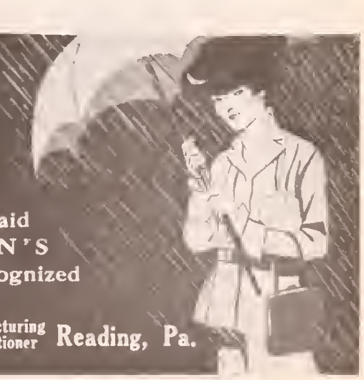
You can make good and be happy—but you must have Health and a Clear Brain. You can have both by using Tyler's Macerated Wheat and certain other raw foods, which contain the mineral elements, salts, etc., necessary to completely nourish the human body—to restore health and keep you in health—to sustain at highest efficiency all the mental and physical powers All this requires no extra expense. Usually it means real economy. You may not realize that one pound of Tyler's Macerated Wheat has as much nutritive value, and gives more human energy than three pounds of porter house steak and costs very much less. Let us convince you by sending you a sample. Tyler's Macerated Wheat is composed of macerated wheat, nuts, raisins and other wholesome corrective foods. Possesses all the organic vitality your blood and nerves demand. Aids digestion. Gives you a natural, normal appetite. Increases or decreases weight until it becomes normal. Prolongs life. Prevents disease. Makes life worth living.

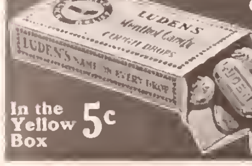
Invaluable for Nursing and Prospective Mothers

There is nothing so good as Tyler's Macerated Wheat for relieving constipation and consequent ills so common during the maternity period. Remarkably beneficial for the child. Of greatest value for producing and keeping up a good supply of rich, nutritious mother's milk. Write for literature giving valuable suggestions concerning womans periodic troubles, mother's diet, etc.

Send 2c stamp for Raw Food Book and Health Guide or send 10c for Trial can of the Food and Book, postpaid to any address.

BYRON TYLER, 52 Syndicate Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., U.S.A.
ESTAB. 1899





Be Healthwise—Guard Yourself Against Coughs and Colds With

LUDEN'S MENTHOL CANDY COUGH DROPS

Give quick relief and aid the voice. LUDEN'S have many uses. Recognized for purity.

In the Yellow Box 5c

Wm. H. Luden, Manufacturing Confectioner Reading, Pa.

Burpee's Seeds Grow

Five of the Finest Fordhook Vegetables

For 25c we will mail one packet each of the following famous Fordhook Vegetables: Burpee's Golden Bantam Sweet Corn, the earliest and best first early; Burpee's Black-Red Ball Beet, deeply colored flesh and fine sweet flavor; Burpee's Earliest Wayahead Lettuce, the earliest butterhead variety; Chalk's Early Jewel Tomato, earliest first-class tomato in the family garden; Burpee Improved Bush Lima Bean, pods are enormous and well filled with delicious beans. 25c buys all the above. Five collections for $1.00, mailed to different addresses if ordered. As a Compliment to the Ladies we include with each collection a regular packet of the Fordhook Favorite Asters.

Burpee's Annual for 1916

The Fortieth Anniversary Edition, is brighter and better than ever before. It is mailed free. Write for it today and kindly mention this publication.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO.
Burpee Buildings Philadelphia

Grow GLADIOLI

The Best Summer Flowers for pleasure or for profit

These bulbs once planted require little care—a few planted every two weeks from April to June give a succession of bloom up to late fall. Their graceful spikes cut and placed in water continue to open for a week, to the last bud.

To interest boys and girls in growing flowers from bulbs, we make the following exceptionally low prepaid offer. "How to grow" in each order. "Special Gladiolus List" mailed free.

"Homewood" Mixed, 75 fine bulbs prepaid, $1. Smaller Bulbs—"Kenwood Mixed," 25 for 20c; 20 for 10c; all prepaid. 160-page catalog free with each order.

VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE
31 West Randolph Street, CHICAGO
43 Barclay Street, NEW YORK

In Grandmother's Time

glorious, old-fashioned flower gardens were from Gregory's popular seed collections Since 1856

Gregory's Honest Seeds have set the standard for choicest seeds of the best varieties.

Our 60th Year in Business

To celebrate our 60th Anniversary we make the following exceptional offer:

5 Large Packets For 10c Aster, finest mixed; Phlox Drummondi: Bachelor Button; Poppy, mixed; Petunia, finest mixed; also garden blueprint with directions, postpaid. 60th Anniversary Catalog FREE. A book full of real information about honest seeds and honest prices. Send for collection and catalog.

GREGORYS HONEST SEEDS

J. J. H. Gregory & Son
119 Elm St., Marblehead, Mass.

"Fairies in Roseland"

a beautiful view in colors for framing and coupon good for 25c on first $1 order from our free 1916 Rose and Floral Guide, for only 6c, the cost of packing and mailing. This 93-page Guide offers nearly 400 of the world's best roses and other flowers, 14 in natural colors. All Roses guaranteed to bloom. Send 6c today.

The CONARD & Jones Co. WEST GROVE Box 140 Pa.
Rose specialists. 50 years' experience

Grow your own Vegetables

Cut down living expenses. Easy to save time, labor and money by using

Planet Jr Garden Tools

This No. 4 Planet Jr combined Hill and Drill Seeder, Wheel Hoe, Cultivator, and Plow includes practically every tool needed to plant and cultivate a large or small garden. Can be used by man, woman or boy. Costs little. Lasts a lifetime. New 72-page Catalog (184 illustrations) free! Write postal for it.

S L ALLEN & CO Box 1202D Philad'a

Every Fowl a Money Maker

Did you read about the man that gave some chickens away and tied 25 cents on their legs and came out ahead?—Put 'em all to work—There should not be a chicken on the place that isn't earning money—Get my new Big Free Book. Tells of Chickens, Turkeys, Geese and Ducks, Incubators, Brooders and poultry fixings of all kinds.

Henry Steinmesch, Pres. 21 N. 4th St. St. Louis, Mo.

POULTRY PAPER 44-124 PAGE periodical, up-to-date; tells all you want to know about care and management of poultry for pleasure or profit. Four months for 10 cents

POULTRY ADVOCATE, Dept. 29, Syracuse, N. Y.

The Late Mrs. Jennie C. Hartzell

MRS. JENNIE CULVER HARTZELL, wife of Bishop Joseph C. Hartzell, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died suddenly of apoplexy in Oklahoma City, Okla., on January 27, in her seventy-second year. Mrs. Hartzell was converted when ten years of age. While yet quite young, she developed the primary department of her Sunday school into one of the largest in Chicago. She graduated from high school with honor at sixteen. She conducted night schools among Swedish men, and more than one hundred of them were led to Christ. In 1869 she was married to Joseph C. Hartzell. In her husband's successive pastorates at Pekin, Ill., New Orleans, La., Chicago, Ill., and elsewhere, Mrs. Hartzell demonstrated her fine abilities as a pastor's wife. As speaker and worker and in many other ways, she was a right hand of the church, and her activities were manifold. She knew no prejudice as to peoples, but was always ready to advise and help. In 1896 Bishop Hartzell was elected bishop for Africa. Four times she visited the Dark Continent with her husband. In 1879 she was with him in his first visit to the East Coast. During the trip she had an attack of African fever. In the beginning of the North Africa Mission among the Mohammedans, in 1907, she shared a very important part. She visited Algeria and was instrumental in opening the way for the first missionaries there.

She had many very remarkable experiences in times of serious illness as to how near heaven is to all God's children, and how delightful it will be to pass beyond the veil and enter into the joys of heaven. At her husband's request, after his election to Africa, some of her experiences were related to Bishop Foster at Martha's Vineyard, and he was profoundly impressed.

On Thursday, January 27, she was to have been the guest of honor at a great reception to be given by the officers of the Woman's Federation of Churches at Oklahoma City. Fifteen hundred invitations had been given out. On the previous night she became suddenly ill. Her son Robert was called to her bedside. She had been stricken by paralysis and passed away at 1 A.M. Bishop Hartzell reached Oklahoma City the next day. The services were held in the First M. E. Church, and the interment took place in the family lot at Rosehill Cemetery near Chicago, January 31. A very large attendance of prominent Methodists was present, including Bishop Vincent, and many other well-known pastors.

Mrs. Hartzell was indeed a remarkable woman. Her heart and faith took in all. No matter what the continent or race or condition, her faith in God knew no limit as to what might be done for humanity. As a wife and mother she was loyal and self-sacrificing. Not only had she been a welcome guest in multitudes of homes and at many social functions in America, but with her husband she had been the guest of distinguished people in Europe and in the large cities of Africa. Everywhere she typified the best ideals of Christian American womanhood.

My Girls

Continued from preceding page

"I have passed through two pioneer experiences: the first as a child in what was first known as the Black Swamp region of northwestern Ohio. Forty-one years ago I came to Texas with my husband and son, and my present home is the same that we established at that time. Forty-one years is a long time to live in one home, and many changes have come to pass since we first landed in Texas. Indians raided this portion of the frontier at that period. Prairie schooners drawn by oxen were used almost exclusively for freighting purposes. . . . As Kipling says, this country was at that time 'raw, very raw,' but the railroad and luxurious motor cars have replaced the prairie schooners, comfortable homes are in evidence on the sites formerly occupied by the rough plank dwellings, churches and school houses have sprung up as if by magic, and the song of praise is heard where once the howl of the coyote and the whoop of the savage disturbed the silence of the hills and valleys of beautiful southwest Texas. C. F. B."

PERHAPS in the coming years the whir of the flying machine may replace our railroad trains and motor cars. Who knows?

I wish I had more room to tell you more of my girls' plans and dreams and to show you more of their letters. But I know, though I've only been able to quote from four of them, that they have interested you. Perhaps next time it will be your plans and dreams that will be read by the others. If you have any ideas that may help, or any inspiration that might inspire folk, or if you have had some interesting experience that the girls might like to hear about, why not sit down and put it in a letter, and address the letter to me? Because I might some time be able to tuck it away in the corner of an article where it might help, or inspire, or interest a great many people.

◆

Young People's Topics for March 12

The Causes of Failure in Life

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Prov. 10:1-32

The Urgency of a Great Task

Epworth League. Neh. 6:3; Luke 2:49, 9:5 12:35-37; Matt. 16:22-23

◆

Called Higher

Mrs Ollie Bane, White Gate, Va., 81 yrs.; Samuel Lawrence, San Jose, Calif., 84 yrs.; William Sandison, Huntsville, Mo.; Mrs. Annie W. Scott, Brazil, Ind., 47 yrs.; John McKiver, Groton, S. D., 90 yrs.; Mrs. Henry F. Reynolds, Reynolds Bridge, Conn. 94 yrs.; Mrs. Harriet E. Hibbard, Girard, Kans., 72 yrs.; George Hinman, Los Angeles, Calif.; Mrs. Emily J. Howard, Warrensburg, Mo., 74 yrs.; Miss Adelaide Herrick, Fort Covington, N. Y.; Mrs. Mary A. Carter, Red Creek, N. Y., 83 yrs.; Mrs. Rose R. Payson, Wyoming, Pa.; Mrs. Susie B. Thompson, Friendship, Me.; Jerome Thayer, Dedham, Mass., 89 yrs.; Mrs. Margaret Chapman Mosher, Red Creek, N. Y., 70 yrs.; Miss Addie V. Darden; Mrs. C. J. Davison, Northville, N. Y., 87 yrs.; Sarah M. Ridgway, Newbusyport, Mass.

◆

I wish to express appreciation for the beautiful robe in which the CHRISTIAN HERALD is clothed. It is good without and within.
A COUNTRY WOMAN.

THIS IDEAL BUNGAL
$786

Build a BETTER Home for L SS

money than possible by old-style m ods. All lumber for LEWIS-BUILT HOM S is Cut-to-Fit, saving one-half the labor an ime in erecting. Lowest wholesale factory price all material necessary for complete house, shipped rect to you. You pocket every possible saving in st of material and labor. You save time, save wo save worry, save money; avoid waste of lumber, lays and mistakes in building.

100 HOMES—From $278 to $ 00

BUNGALOWS COTTAGES HOUSES IN THIS BOOK

Newest designs with every modern con ence. Not portable or "knock-down," bu per manent construction. One pri overs everything necessary to build home complete. Accurate pla d in structions show where eac rked piece goes. Can't make a ake

Send for Catal

100 selected homes. Wr day. Enclose postage—4 mps.

LEWIS MFG.).
LEWIS BUILT HOMES Dept
Bay Cit ich.

FREE

Just write me a postcard with your name and address and I'll send you my big new 1916 Buggy Book with my special price-splitting, money-saving offer. Think of it!—a genuine Split Hickory this year as low as only $39.25 and Remember, I give—

30 DAYS FREE ROAD TEST and guarantee every rig for two years. Split Hickory Vehicles are known everywhere as the world's best. Don't buy until you have seen this season's new, snappy styles and bargain prices. Write for free book today. See the money you can save. Address

H. C. PHELPS, Pres.
THE OHIO CARRIAGE MFG. CO. Station 222
Columbus, Ohio

Catalog S 150 Other St

SPLIT HICKORY $39

"LAWN PARK" COO

Saves Your Chicks

The Wire Park, which pulls out like a drawer, g hen and chicks fresh grass, air and sunshine du the day; closes at night and in storms. This c meets every demand; portable, with removable for easy cleaning; roomy, light, durable, sani

LAWN PARK BROOD COOP

IT TELESCOPES! PROO Again Hawks, R Weasels,

Made of galvanized metal; repels vermin. Size, o 18 in. x 24 in. x 48 in. Pays for itself in chicks and l saved. Write today for free circulars, special pre offer and how to turn work into pleasure and pr

CYCLONE MFG. CO., DEPT. C; URBANA, I

FACTORY to RID R

1916 Model

Saves you big money. Buy direct an ve $10 to $20 on a bicycle.

RANGER BICYCLES in 94 styles, and sizes. Greatly improved; pri reduced. Other reliable models, $11.95

WE DELIVER FREE to you ap*proval* and 30 days trial and ridin st.

Our big FREE catalog shows ry-thing new in bicycles and sundri A cyclopedia of information which ry person should have. Write for it.

TIRES, lamps, wheels, parts an p-plies at half usual prices. A few good second bicycles taken in trade $3 to $8 to clear.

Do not buy a bicycle, tires or sundries unt ou write and learn our wonderful new offers, low and liberal terms. A postal brings everything. Write

MEAD CYCLE CO. DEPT. H-71 CHIC O

ACORN UNI-LI FRE

Turns night into day. 300 candle power. Carry as a lantern; use anywhere as a lamp. Weat proof. For house, barn, garage, ca and around the farm. Write for big offer. Special opportunity to farm stockmen and motorists. Agents m big money. Write tonight.

Acorn Brass Mfg. Co., 116 Acorn Bldg., Chi

WHITE Campines, GOLDEN Campines, SILVER Campines SPECKLED Sus SICILIAN Butter BLACK Orpingtons bob-Empress Strain). Eggs, Dayold Chicks, Pound Ch BUFF Orpington Pound Chicks from prize winners ready fo livery NOW. Standard Brooder Stove $13. Catalogue Stamps appreciated. THE NABOB CO., Gambier, Ohio.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF S SIMPLE THI TO PATENT. tect your ideas. may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventio and "How to Get Your Patent."

RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C

FEEDING POULTRY FOR PROFIT
RED COMB POULTRY FEED

Red Comb
Fi e Chick Feed
De elops Early Layers

"E RLY gains are quick gains. Quick gains are cheap gains." Lead g poultry experts have shown con usively that first layers are the heav layers—and the biggest payers.

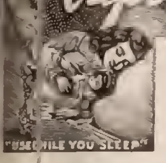
Now your chicks begin comi on, develop them forea laying. RedComb Fine ick Feed is specially repared not only to giv chicks a healthy start, t to aid in bringing th toearlymaturity.

"Fe ing Poultry for Prof" FREE

Write or this valuable b k. written by six of nerica's leading p try experts. A pos brings it.

Edwa & Loomis Co.
Mfrs f Famous Line of Red rn Dairy Feeds
13-P Elizabeth Street
C go, Illinois

"R l Comb Means Health"



Vapo Cresolene

for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Catarrh.

blished 1879.

Do fail to use Cresolene for the distressing, and often fatal, ctions for which it is recommended.

It simple, safe, effective and drugless treatment.

Va ized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough d relieves Spasmodic Croup at once.

It boon to sufferers from asthma.

Th r carrying the antiseptic vapor, inspired with every breath akes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat, and stops cough, assuring restful nights.

Cr ene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Dip a.

Cr ene's best recommendation is its 36 years of successfu e. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by Druggists

Try solene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, compo f slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't you. Of your druggist or from us 10c. in stamps.

THE PO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
o eeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

G den Yellow Yams
Sug -oozing-luscious Southern Yams
HEY RE BEST BAKED OUR DONATIONS

Th var has curtailed many gifts from friends of Industri ducation for the colored people in the Black Belt. Ou oys and girls while working to pay for their edcatio ave raised an immense quantity of sweet potaoes, I e can send, postpaid, cartons of them, weighing ght nds for One Dollar, our work will not be handappe LAURENCE C. JONES, Principal.
iney oods Country Life School Braxton, Miss.

The Best Dish She Makes
'F om House To House"

very ecipe in this book is the special pride of a otab housewife. The interleaved sheets of writing aper ne to each two printed sheets) are for additional cipes. This book is not to teach cooking but pr de some specially good dishes for the home able entertaining. $1.50 net at booksellers.

B A. N. Furgerson and Constance Johnson
. P UTTON & CO. NEW YORK

u Nobema Colors and Get FREE

Complete Correspondence Course in Show Card and Sign Writing in Chicago School of Lettering—including nice set of brushes—All FREE. Offer made solely to have you try the Famous resd -use NOBEMA COLORS. This free course gives practical ning and, with NOBEMA COLORS and brushes, you can earn money or establish paying Show Card and Sign business of yo own. Most anyone can learn. Illustrated circulars and infor ion FREE. NOBEMA SM. MFG. CO., CHICAGO.

TTERING AND DESIGN

Invest your spare time Learn card and sign writing, and lettering. Big growth of advertising makes constant demand for my graduates. I prove there is a big field. Earn a good salary or start in business. Earn while you learn. CARTOONISTS learn to letter. It will help you. Course self paying. Work easy, pleasant. I PERSONALLY correct all lessons. Write for free booklet, testimonials, etc.

ROSING SCHOOL of LETTERING and DESIGN
2043 Union Building Cleveland, Ohio

HURCH FURNITURE
ews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Ra , Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. Th nest furniture made. Direct from our fac y to your church. Catalog free.
De in Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

AG TS—Steady Income Large manufacturer of Handkerchiefs and Dress oods, wishes representative in each locality Factory to onsu r. Big profits, honest goods. Credit given Send for artic ars. FREEPORT MFG. CO., 82 Main St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

The War in Europe

Continued from page 262

with some loss of life. The latter, which figured prominently in the early naval fighting of the war, fell a victim to a mine, while the former was sunk by a German destroyer.

MUCH news of a sort is coming to us from Italy consequent on the visit to that country of the French premier, Briand. The ban on trade with Germany, promulgated during the week, is said to be the preliminary to a declaration of war by Italy against Germany, which may be true, but in such a case this war will necessarily be even more platonic than Italy's present conflict with Austria.

The Russians have compiled a general résumé of their operations on the Black Sea since the beginning of the war, and find that their famous Black Sea fleet has sunk or otherwise destroyed or captured 1,500 Turkish vessels, inflicting a total estimated money damage of $80,000,000 on the enemy. As, however, there were on the Turkish Marine Register, according to Lloyds' lists, only 1,081 Turkish vessels of all kinds, steam and sail, in both the Black Sea and the Mediterranean at the outbreak of the war, this statement is probably somewhat exaggerated.

The news from Albania apprises us that the Austrians and Bulgarians met at Elbassan, to the southeast of Durazzo, the end of last week. By this move these allies have, with their former positions, formed a semi-circle around Durazzo, so that the future of the Serbians, of Essad Pasha's Albanians, and such Italians as there are in that town, promises to be a troubled one, as they have Austrians to the northeast of them, Austrians and Bulgarians to the east and southeast of them, Bulgarians to the south of them, and a sea swarming with submarines to the west of them. Since the end of the week the arc of this semicircle has been drawn in towards the town, whose capture seems certain.

Avlona, where the bulk of the Italian force is now located, is about 45 miles to the south, and will probably not be reached in some time. When it is, the indications seem to be that the Italians will start a colony on the Salonica plan in Northern Greece which, as the Greeks devotedly love (not) the Italians, will no doubt be greatly relished by them.

During the early part of the week the situation in Mesopotamia remained unchanged. The Turks report a series of small victories in very minor skirmishes, while the British commander-in-chief reports the situation unchanged, both as regards the relieving force attempting to advance up the Tigris and the force shut up in Kut-el-Amara.

One item of interest mentioned was that Kut-el-Amara had been attacked by an aeroplane; this is the first mention of aeroplanes in this Mesopotamian fighting. The weather is also said to have cleared, but this will hardly have any great effect on the floods in the Tigris, as undoubtedly the spring freshets have begun, and these usually continue for several weeks, during which time the situation perforce will have to remain much as it is along the river.

In the Caucasus towards the middle of the week the Russians won the most important victory they have so far won in this field by the storming and capture of the fortress of Erzerum, the key to Armenia. This victory will have an important influence on the campaign between the Russians and Turks in the Caucasus, and to some extent a reflex influence on the campaigns in Mesopotamia and Egypt.

The fortress of Erzerum has been taken twice before in former wars by the Russians, but has been given up on peace being made. We are informed that the fortress was taken only after five days' hard fighting and then at the point of the bayonet. The Siberian troops particularly distinguished themselves. Many Turks were captured and also about 1000 guns. Most of the defending force escaped. The next Russian move in this campaign will probably be on the town of Trebizond on the Black Sea, a port of some considerable importance.

PAIGE
The Standard of Value and Quality

STOP for a minute and look at the Paige "Six-38" which is illustrated in this advertisement.

Think what it would mean for you to own such a comfortable, smart looking six-cylinder motor car.

Think of the Health and Happiness that it would bring to the whole family.

Think of the glorious "fresh air trips" over Sunday—the long tours during vacation time—the practical service of such a car every day in the year.

Think of these things, and then remember that the price is only $1050.

Is there any investment in the world that would pay such tremendous dividends to yourself and your loved ones?

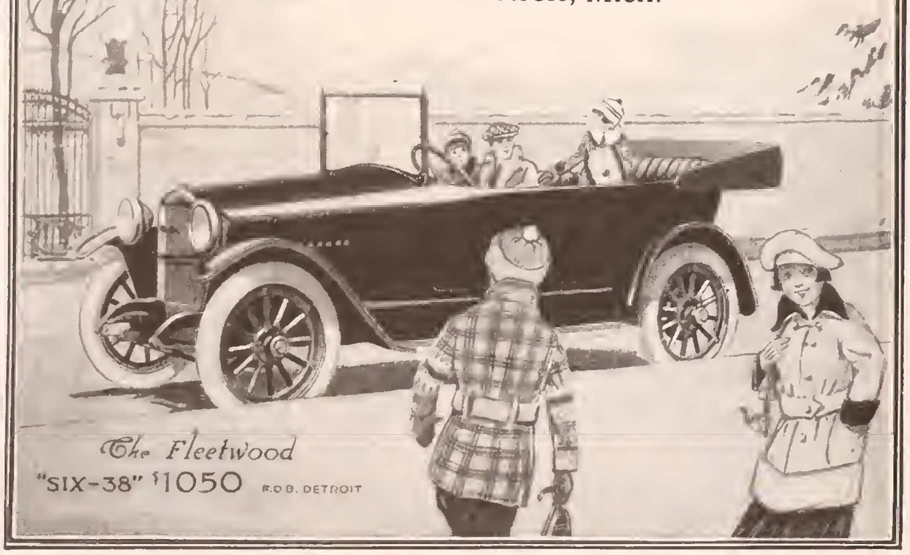
But, don't hesitate too long.

Paige cars, you know, were "sold out" very early last season, and many people were disappointed because they could not get deliveries.

See the nearest Paige Dealer at once. Let him show you the "38"—and take you for a ride in it. Then, you will understand why Paige cars are so popular.

Fairfield "Six-46"—$1295 f. o. b. Detroit

Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company
Detroit, Mich.



Factory Prices
Save $5 to $23

Freight Paid—A Year's Trial

Save from $5 to $23 by buying direct from factory. 55 years' reputation back of every stove. Our long experience and big output gives you a better stove or range at less cost.

Gold Coin Stoves and Ranges

Use one for a year—money refunded if it doesn't prove absolutely satisfactory. We pay freight, guarantee safe delivery and send every stove ready to set up. BIG FREE CATALOG—Send for It now. See why improved features of Gold Coin Stoves help you save fuel and bake better. Write today.

GOLD COIN STOVE CO., 11 Oak St., Troy, N. Y.

Deaf?

The day of imperfect hearing is past. Science rivals nature in the marvelous new 1916 Mears Ear Phone, "Intensitone" model—the world's greatest hearing device. It transmits sound without blur. Write today for our 15 days' free trial offer.

Perfect Aid to Hearing

The Mears is the only scientific instrument for the deaf. It marvelously covers 96 degrees of sound, every range of tone of the human ear.

Write for Free Book Our free book is a highly valuable treatise on deafness. Write for it today—learn all about our 15 days' free trial offer and low direct laboratory price. If convenient to New York call for demonstration.

FREE Book

MEARS EAR PHONE CO., Inc.
Desk 2493 45 W. 34th St., N.Y.

LADIES! Ease your feet. Send for free catalog telling all about our Neat, Noiseless, Flexible, Comfortable, unlined Vici Kid O'Sullivanized PILLOW SHOE. New shoes easy as old ones. No breaking in required. Fit and feel like a kid glove. O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on all styles.

$3.25 Postpaid

PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept 3
184 Summer Street Boston, Mass.

PIANO TUNING AT HOME

A LUCRATIVE PROFESSION easily acquired. Anyone can learn. Our PATENTED TUNE-A-PHONE METHOD makes success more certain than best oral instruction. Guaranteed. Write for FREE BOOKLET, telling how our STUDENTS MAKE BIG MONEY.

Niles Bryant School of Tuning, 22 Inst. Bld., Battle Creek, Mich.

Kelly's TREES

ROSES, FLOWERING SHRUBS, AND FRUIT TREES

for your garden that are ABSOLUTELY GUARANTEED to bud, bloom and fruit true to name—DIRECT FROM OUR NURSERIES at wholesale prices. Our free catalog describes our hardy Hybrid Perpetual, Tea, American Beauty and Killarney Roses, Hydrangeas, Magnolias, Azaleas, etc. Also all the choice varieties of Fruit Trees, Berries, and Vines—SEND FOR THE CATALOG, IT'S FREE. Kelly Bros. have been in the Nursery business for 36 years. The quality and purity of their varieties have stood the test. Positive satisfaction is guaranteed on every order received from our catalog—The fact that WE SELL AT GROWERS' PRICES will enable you to buy better stock and more of it. Our catalog tells how to plant and care for the stock. Send for the catalog today.

KELLY BROS. Wholesale Nurseries. 157 Main St., DANSVILLE, N. Y.
You'll Never Regret Planting Kelly Bros. Stock

UNUSUAL REWARDS

to you for learning

YOUR BIBLE

Here you will find pleasure combined with profit. You will be able to learn more about your Bible, in an exceedingly interesting way; and you may also reap benefit of untold value in addition to a cash reward for the result of your effort.

The Christian Herald Bible Picture Contest is meeting with widespread approbation. We are publishing 60 pictures to which Bible verses are to be fitted. On this page are Nos. 31, 32 and 33. All the preceding pictures can be obtained.

You can begin right now in the Bible Picture Contest, on equal terms with all, even though publication of the pictures has begun. Answers will not be accepted until all the pictures have appeared in the Christian Herald. At least a month will be given participants to finish solving, after the last picture has been published.

This Contest is fascinating. It is full of surprises. The zest of solvers is kept keen by the constant making of new discoveries—how one Bible verse is found better fitted a picture than another, and so on.

There are to be 419 rewards in cash, aggregating $3,500.0 of which the chief prize is to be $1,250.00 in gold— amount large enough to buy something of substantial valu

The mental rewards are even far greater, in their aggr gate, we believe; for there is the spiritual satisfaction, pl the benefit to memory, to perceptiveness, to concentrati ability and other fine attainments.

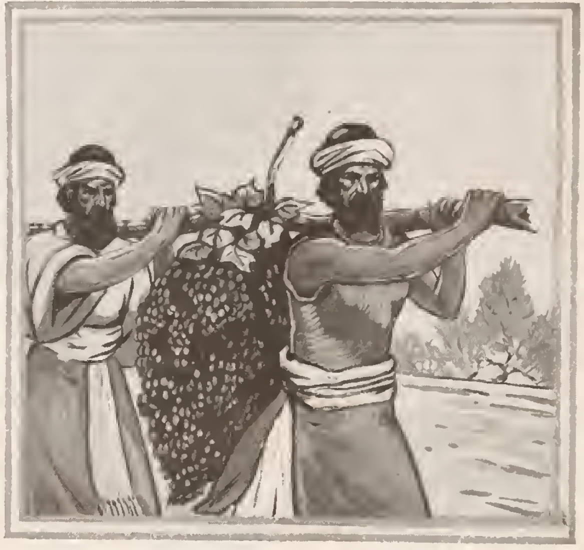
We are confident that many participants of the Bib Picture Contest will easily—almost unconsciously—lea hundreds of Bible verses that they could not rememb before. Moreover, they will acquire the happy facility applying them in conversation.

Now glance at the three pictures on this page. C you think of the most acceptable Bible verses that will them? If you had a short list of Bible verses, couldn you find verses to fit the pictures?

Enter the Contest now. Let us send you an illustrated circular that tells you all about it. We will show you how you may enter, and be on equal terms with others now competing.

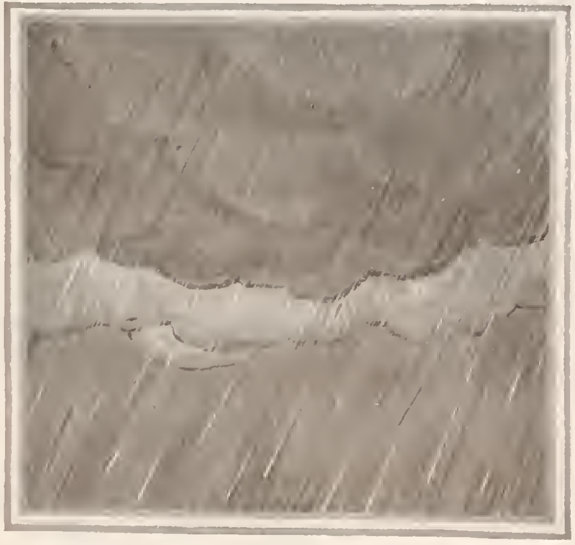
A post card will bring the particulars. Merely ask for Full Information about the Bible Contest.

Picture No. 31



All members of the family m participate, from grandparents grandchildren. There will be objection to casual aid given others. But when the sets of vers are sent in, after the close of t contest, they must be in the nar of the individual contestan Everything will be made clear, due course, to all entrants.

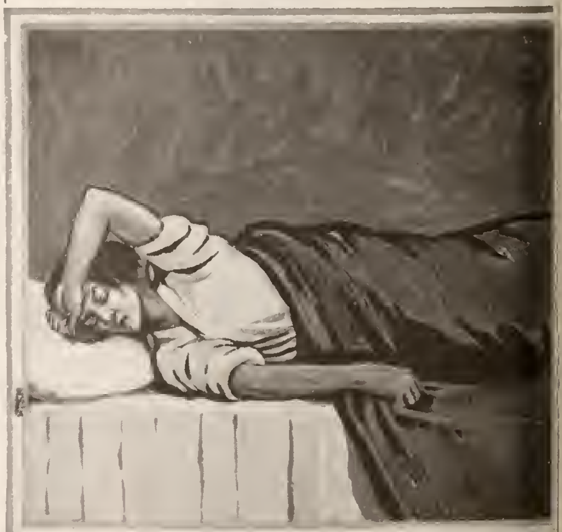
Picture No. 32



What could you do with $1,250.00, or with $625.00, or some other good-sized amount of money? No doubt you could use it satisfactorily in numerous ways. The sums above mentioned and 417 other cash rewards are to be given to those who send the best sets of verses—WHY NOT TO YOU? Remember the old axiom: "Strive and succeed."

Send for full information NOW!

Picture No. 33



Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, NEW YORK CIT

Answers to Bible Contest Inquiries

Question: I have read your rules of Bible Picture Contest. I am unable to comprehend your meaning for (c) and (d) under rule 6. Will you kindly explain them?—A. S., Kensington, Ga.

Answer: Rule 6 refers almost entirely to the ways that possible equalities will be settled, and this is the meaning:

(c) If two or more sets of answers are still tied for a particular reward, after being subjected to tests (a) and (b), then the sets will be examined to see which contains fewer words than the other or others. For example, let us suppose that Mr. S. and Mr. Jones are tied for first reward up to the (c) test; then we will see if Mr. S's set contains fewer words used in all the verses submitted as answers for the 60 pictures than Mr. Jones's set. If Mr. S. has a total of, let us suppose, 3,444 words and Mr. Jones's set contains a total of, let us say, 3,445 words, then Mr. S's set will take a higher place than Mr. Jones's set. This test (c) amounts to instructing contestants that, all other circumstances being equal, the shorter rather than the longer of two possibly applicable Bible verses is to be submitted as an answer.

(d) But, if the two sets have an equal number of words, then we will count the letters in all the verses submitted, and the set containing the least number of letters will take a higher place than the other. This test (d) is therefore only a kind of check on (c) and carries out the same principle.

However, these tests mentioned in Rule 6 will apply only in the case of an equality among contestants on the important primary question of who submits the greatest number of correct (approved as most appropriate) answers. And the application of tests (c) and (d) is particularly remote.

Question: I shall be very glad to secure a new subscriber to the Christian Herald and remit $2.00, providing the Reply Book, in which answers in the Bible Picture Contest are to be written, contains the pictures. I notice that without the Reply Book contestants must draw the pictures. Will you kindly advise me as to whether the Reply Book contains the pictures so that contestants do not have to draw them.—F. J., Oliverea, N. Y.

Answer: Those using the Reply Book are not required to draw the pictures. They write their selected verses in the Reply Book, and submit that as their complete set, for the Reply Book represents our authorized, uniform method of submitting answers. So you will not find pictures in the Reply Book, nor will you have to put any there.

Question: Are we to send the one best answer suited to the picture or several that correspond? Are they to be written in the Reply Book or can verses be cut out and pasted in, taken from the "Gems from the Bible"—Mrs. J. G. B., Baldwin, Kan.

Answer: You must submit ONE verse for each picture, but you may submit as many as FIVE verses for each picture. In other words, if you are not completely satisfied that a particular verse fits a picture far better than any other verse—if you think that some other verse you know of might be designated by the Judges as better than the verse you first chose, then you may submit two, three, four or five verses for that picture. Or if you think that the Judges may name two or more titles as equally best for a picture, then you can control the result as far as humanly possible by submitting the verses you believe may be named as best, up to five verses for each picture.

You should WRITE the verses in the Reply Book. If you pasted them in, from "Gems from the Bible," they might drop off, and you would need two copies of the "Gems," for in cutting out a verse you would cut out also another verse or two on the other side of the page.

Question: In my reply or answer to Picture No. [illegible] I find it convenient to give six answers (verses) instead of five. Is this allowable? There is plenty of room for the six verses. If I omit the sixth verse it spoils the sense because the fourth, fifth and sixth go together in the Bible.

Answer: A contestant can give five answers to each picture, but not more than five, in any one set of answers. But each contestant is permitted to submit as many as three different sets of answers. Each set may contain as many as five verses for each picture.

You incidentally reveal an important misunderstanding of the contest in your query. For you speak of several verses "going together." One of the aims of the Contest is to press you to study each picture and weigh the applicability of different verses until you decide on ONE which fits more closely than (or as closely as) any other ONE verse. An answer to a picture is one verse, neither more nor less. The correspondence of text to scene need not be complete; for the best answer is the verse which comes nearest to describing the picture. Then you may submit additional verses, IF you think them each equally applicable, but separate answers—in their own right, as it were.

Question: If Mrs. I— desires to enter the contest, besides myself, by sending in another set of answers, suppose her answers are the same as mine, would her manuscript be rejected on that account? You see I am allowed by your terms to help her and she might happen to prefer the very same verses right along. And I would not like to have either my answers or hers rejected because they were both alike.—J. B. I., Geneseo, N. Y.

Answer. All the members in one household can enter the contest, and submit separate sets of answers, but only one reward will be awarded in one household, at one address. So you and your wife should not submit identical sets. Submit sets that are at least somewhat different so that if one set misses a reward, perhaps the other will merit it.

It certainly would be an excellent thing for both to enter the contest, each submitting a separate set of answers. You can obtain a second Bible Outfit, of "Gems from the Bible," and the Reply Book, by renewing your subscription to the Christian Herald for another year, or by interesting a new subscriber to take the Christian Herald at $1.50 (or to do so, and conveniently enter the contest, at $2.00), and we will send you, in appreciation of your efforts in behalf of the Christian Herald, "Gems from the Bible" and the Reply Book free.

Question: Will you kindly send me the first six pictures in the Bible Picture Contest, and oblige.—J. V. W., New Paltz, N. Y.

Answer. Reprints of pictures in the Bible Picture Contest will be furnished for one cent each (and two cents for postage on the package) or we will supply duplicate copies of the Christian Herald, containing the pictures, at five cents per copy. Those securing Gems from the Bible and the Reply Book, will be sent all the back pictures FREE upon request.

Question. There is a Jamaican girl here who reads my paper. Does she need to be a subscriber in order to enter the Contest?—E. O. M., Guaimaro, Cuba.

Answer. The Bible Picture Contest is open to everyone. But why not induce your friend to subscribe to the Christian Herald for one year, thus helping us to extend our influence, and at the same time aiding the most worthy of all causes, and one in which you, as you yourself are a subscriber, must be earnestly interested. She can procure "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book, constituting the Bible Picture outfit, with the Christian Herald for a year, and all pictures which have appeared to date, for $2.00.

Question: How are answers to the Bible Pictures to be written? Will answers written in pencil be given the same consideration as those written in ink?—A. B., New Orleans, La.

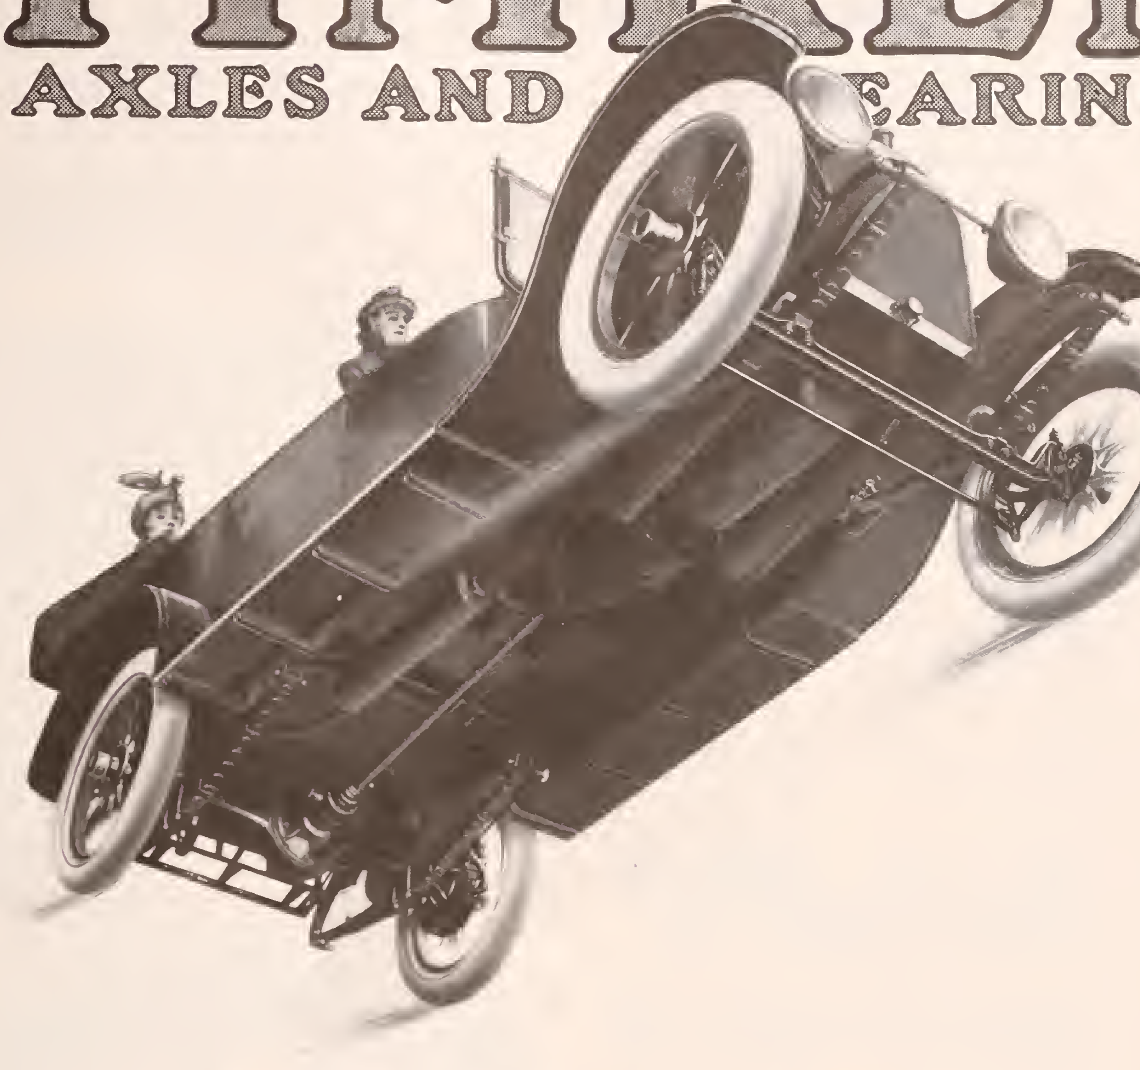
Answer: Answers written in ink, or by pencil, or typewritten, will be given equal consideration. By an "answer" we mean one Bible verse, complete, neither more nor less.

Question: When there is not sufficient space on a page in the Reply Book to write all the verses I have selected as answers, what shall I do?—K. L. M., Boston, Mass.

Answer: If you need more space for your answers to a picture than the page affords, paste a sheet of white paper at the bottom of the page, and continue your verses upon it. Then fold the overlapping paper back neatly so it won't extend beyond the book page.

TIMKEN

AXLES AND BEARINGS



As the Road Sees It

FORGET your familiar point of view in the driver's seat and think of your car as it would look from the road. The road knows nothing of the superstructure and its human freight.

It sees a motor car only as a machine—of whirling shafts, throbbing engine, vibrating springs and revolving wheels.

Nearest to it are the axles—dusty and mud-spattered, jarred up and down incessantly as first one wheel and then another strikes a bump or a hole.

If you are to ride in comfort and safety above, the axles must be built for the road below.

Think of that ton or more of dead weight pounding down and from side to side on the bearings and axle spindles.

Think of the strain on hubs and knuckles as your car struggles out of a deep rut or heavy sand.

Think of the sudden demand you make on the gears in your rear axle as you press the accelerator.

Get the road's point of view and you'll realize the importance of forging Timken steering knuckles of one solid piece of steel without a sharp curve or shoulder to invite a break.

You'll understand why Timken patiently grinds the little steering ball to a perfect sphere so there can be no looseness at any point to start the wear that leads to weakness.

You'll get the motive back of years spent by Timken engineers in perfecting a pressed-steel rear axle housing that is light yet tremendously strong.

You'll understand the bigness of the engineering and manufacturing problems solved by Timken in order to give you brakes that will never fail to stop your car—not only when it's new, but after years of hard service.

And you'll appreciate the advantage to you of gears that are designed, ground, and installed to mathematical accuracy by axle specialists.

Timken gears work noiselessly in perfect mesh while the rear axle is being constantly pounded and buffeted by car above, and road beneath.

These are but a few of hundreds of points in good axle building. To really see your motor car as the road sees it, ask for the Timken Primer "On Axles," No. D-5. Sent free, post paid, with a copy of a book telling what cars have Timken Axles and Bearings.

THE TIMKEN-DETRCIT AXLE COMPANY
Detroit, Mich.

THE TIMKEN ROLLER BEARING COMPANY
Canton, Ohio

Is There a Royal Road to Health?

By WALTER WALGROVE

I MET a friend the other day, who two months ago had been discharged from the hospital after an operation, and during our conversation he happened to say:

"For the first month after I left the hospital I never felt better in my life. My mind was as clear as a bell, I grasped things better than usual, and in all my life I never got up in the morning feeling as eager for the day's problems nor as competent to cope with them.

"Now, although I feel well enough to say perhaps that I am in my usual health, I don't experience that clearness of mind and sureness of judgment, and haven't that virile enthusiasm that was mine a month ago."

"Did they give you any treatment at the hospital," I asked, "that would account for your condition immediately following your discharge?"

"They gave me no treatment whatever in the shape of medicine," he replied—"the operation itself was about the only 'treatment' that I remember particularly."

"Didn't they do anything before the operation was performed?"

"Not very much—they gave me a series of Internal Baths which they told me was to thoroughly cleanse the Large Intestine."

"I see. And did they give you any of these Internal Baths while you were convalescing?"

"Yes; but only about once a week."

"Well, do you realize, my friend," I asked, "that nearly one million Americans are now taking Internal Baths once a week, and are eager to testify that it keeps them always in the same happy condition that you were in during the first month after you left the hospital?"

No, he hadn't "realized that, or even dreamed it." But I could wager if that were responsible he'd quickly get himself back to where he was and keep himself in that condition—

If there is "A Royal Road to Health," this is it!

Auto-Intoxication is very properly defined as "Self Intoxication, or poisoning by compounds produced internally by oneself."

The Medical Profession thoroughly realize and agree that there is no more fruitful nor vicious source of Auto-Intoxication than accumulated waste in the Lower Intestine.

Under our present mode of living we all have more or less of this accumulated waste, and the reasons that every particle of this be removed before an operation, are—first: because of its highly poisonous nature—second, with it removed the system works perfectly and gives the patient infinitely greater chances of recuperation and recovery.

Under normal conditions, the bowels act naturally, at least once a day. In this day of rush and hurry of perverted living of sedentary pursuits, we do not live normal lives. Hence, we must resort to outside agents. The one that is without harmful results is a full warm flushing, applied in the right way. Nature is gently aided by it, not forced to violent action. By the proper system, warm water can be introduced so that the colon, or large intestine, can be perfectly cleansed and always kept pure. There should be no violence in the process—flooding the intestines should be as harmless and beneficial as external bathing and it is vastly more important.

Now, it would be obviously ridiculous to state that every person with an accumulation of waste must be ill; if that were true we would all be incapacitated. But it is true, and you yourself probably know that this condition, when only moderate, makes us dull, dispirited and in every way about fifty per cent. efficient—when acute it brings on Biliousness, Indigestion and Fever, and so weakens our powers of resistance that we are easy prey for the contraction of any serious disease which may be prevalent.

The clearest proof of the universality of this trouble is the fact that more drugs are used in an endeavor to correct it than for all other complaints combined—

But drugs are habit-forming, and are only partly effective at best; and the only reason they are effective at all is because they are noxious to the system and cause it to make a supreme effort to throw them off— Every dose, therefore, is a jolt to Nature instead of an assistant.

Note the opinions on drugging of two most eminent physicians:

Prof. Alonzo Clark, M.D., of the New York College of Physicians and Surgeons, says: "All of our curative agents are poisons, and as a consequence, every dose diminishes the patient's vitality."

Prof. Joseph M. Smith, M.D., of the same school, says: "All medicines which enter the circulation poison the blood in the same manner as do the poisons that produce disease."

How much better to remove the entire cause of the trouble with Nature's own cleanser and purifier, Warm Water—That's what they did and do in the hospitals when they want to remove all the waste— And if drugs were adequate for this purpose, they would be infinitely easier to give than the baths. Physicians are not looking for more work; they are seeking the highest possible efficiency, and have found it in the Internal Bath. Not that an Internal Bath is difficult to administer, but naturally it takes a little more time than it does to swallow a pill— But it more than pays for the little additional time.

Internal Bathing should become a cult. Everybody should know and understand its great significance, its health-insuring value. An interesting treatise on the subject is to be found in Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell's little book, "The What, the Why, the Way of Internal Bathing." It is, without question, the best and most informing book on the subject that has ever been placed within the reach of the lay reader. Internal Bathing, in that little book, is treated exhaustively and in a manner to awaken interest in this important subject.

Twenty-five years ago Charles A. Tyrrell, M.D., of New York, was given up as a hopeless case by several physicians, but persisted in taking Internal Baths, because he calculated they could do him no harm, and would at least give his functions the best possible opportunity for asserting and strengthening themselves.

He recovered, and his experience and indications at that time were such as to induce him to specialize on intestinal troubles and Internal Bathing. For twenty-five years he has been treating these troubles and perfecting the system of Internal Bathing.

The results of these many years of research and practical experience are summed up in a little book which he has called "The What, the Why, the Way of Internal Bathing," and which will be sent free for the asking if you will address Dr. Chas. A. Tyrrell, 134 W. 65th St., New York, and mention having read this in Christian Herald.

If you are interested to know just how and why nearly a million progressive Americans have found and are now travelling the "Royal Road to Health" it will be well worth your while and that of your family to write for this free book. (Adv.)

Personality in Speech

VOICE is personality; a charming personality can be taught through the training of the voice. Everything that makes great music can be put in the speaking voice. Technique in music gives proper expression, likewise technique in speech properly expresses thought.

Speak musically, not discordantly, and you will develop a pleasing personality through the law of suggestion. As you practice musical tones in speaking you are developing harmonious thought and feeling. Avoid giving expression to thoughts of anger, fear, etc., for by so doing you present throaty, nasal, breathy sounds and discourage thoughts detrimental to a cheerful personality.

I will give you exercises to assist in acquiring an attractive speaking voice. Strike center C on the piano and sing Moe-moe, holding the second tone, repeating several times, using your lips freely and easily, not muscularly; in doing this you should feel a vibration between the edge of the lips and the front of the teeth, and until you feel this vibration your tone is not properly placed. In the same manner sing Me-me and repeat, holding second tone; this vibration should be felt back of the upper front teeth. Next sing Moe-me moe-me moe, holding the last tone; now sing Many-any many-any ah, holding tone of Ah. Sing the Ah without effort; let it be clear and open. After the exercises I have just given you, strike center G and chant any good ballad. Repeat several times, starting a key lower each repetition. Follow these exercises by reading aloud verses expressive of cheerfulness, endeavoring to use musical tones in your speaking voice.

The human body is the most perfect musical instrument in the world, therefore pleasant tones can be developed by practice.

Voice texture is classified in four degrees, coarse, hard, soft and fine; it is the soft texture that is most desired for charm and personality. Texture is determined by emotion and relaxation is necessary to promote the desired emotion. The following exercise you will find valuable for easy speech and voice texture. Open the mouth, letting the head drop forward for first position. Then let the head fall around from side to side relaxed with mouth open, at the same time saying Ah (the same Ah sound you are familiar with when the doctor puts a spoon on your tongue and tells you to say Ah). The object of this exercise is to open and relax the throat, throw the tone forward and place it correctly.

You will find your acquired laugh and trained musical speaking tones valuable factors in obtaining proper voice texture. Unconsciously as you practice daily soft speaking and happy laughter, you will find your mental attitude toward your fellow man and yourself happier. There is no need for the mind to conceive disagreeable thoughts unless the voice gives expression to them, therefore a pleasing personality will follow, just as surely as the spring thaw follows the winter's freeze.

THEORA CARTER,
President, Society of Good Cheer.

◆

AMONG the inspiring features of the recent St. Paul Laymen's Missionary Convention was the great banquet tendered the delegates by a group of Christian business men of the city. Fourteen hundred men were seated at the tables. St. Paul has been popularly considered a Roman Catholic city because of the fact that it is the seat of the archdiocese of the Northwest, but Protestant Christianity is not dead, or dormant even, in St. Paul.

At the banquet there were four great missionary addresses. Mr. William B. Millar gave a fine address on "The Challenge of New World Conditions." James P. McNaughton presented "The Peril of Mohammedanism." S. Hall Young told a most fascinating story of experiences in Alaska with Indian chiefs and with the great pioneer John Muir. J. E. Crowther, fresh from his extensive travels in Africa, gave a thrilling story of the situation presenting itself to Christian men of today. Following the convention, arrangements were made for a general campaign of evangelism to culminate with Easter Sunday.

S. T. WILLIS, LL.D.

Onl a fe w dro s

That all you ed — j st eno h Hi ls Crea to moisten the skin, and you may sta ut on cold days as much as you lik

Hinds
HONEY AND ALMOND
Cream

is a wonderful help to sensitive skin. I ill prevent chapping, windburn and roug ss, and will keep your complexion fresh and ar wherever you may spend the winter.

Let us send you liberal Samples of Cr . Enclose 2c stamp for postage.

Selling everywhere, or postpaid by us on rec of price. Hinds Cream in bottles, 50c; H Cold Cream in tubes, 25c. Do not take a stitute; Hinds Cream will improve your s

Try HINDS CREAM SOAP; delightfully fragrant and beneficial; 10c and 25c. Trial size cake 5c postpaid.

A. S. HINDS, 291 West Street, Portland, I ne

As Shown in the Pictu
There is Comfort and Joy

BURSON
FASHIONED HOSE

The reason is—they are withc seams and yet knit to shape.

Art Silk, Mercerized, Lisle, Cotton, 75c, 50c, 25c. Ask your dealer. Booklet free on requ

Burson Knitting Company
63 Church Street Rockford.

DUST WIT
The Old Stand-By

LIQUID VENEER

KEEPS your piano, furniture and woodw looking bright and clean—just like new. stantly removes spots and stains. Leaves oily film. Send 8c in stamps for liberal t bottle.

BUFFALO SPECIALTY CO
371 Ellicott Street
BUFFALO, N. Y.

10,000 Cookers At My Bargain Price Before I Have to Meet War Cost of Aluminum

Be the First in Your Neighborhood to Get This Special Proposition

WAR cut off the supply of aluminum from Europe — prices in America sky-rocketed. While preparing to meet these conditions, by advancing my prices, I made a fortunate buy of aluminum at less than present market value which enables me to offer 10,000 Rapid Fireless Cookers, priced away down.

It will be a year at least before I can again offer the Rapid at my present special low prices. I am giving you this supreme opportunity to get a Rapid Fireless Cooker complete, equipped with pure Aluminum Cooking Utensils, at less than before-the-war prices. Write today for big special offer.

I am the original Fireless Cooker man, doing business on a large scale direct from my factories. My plan is low prices, quick sales, and satisfaction guaranteed. My Rapid Fireless Cooker actually reduces the cost of living. It will actually save you a large per cent of your fuel bill, save you work and worry, and will cook all kinds of foods better. It makes them more digestible — brings out their delicious quality. All the flavor of the food remains in the food after it is cooked.

Rapid

Fireless Cooker

Aluminum Lined Throughout — Full Equipment of "Wear-Ever" Aluminum Cooking Utensils

Don't you want to make a home test of one of my celebrated Rapid Fireless Cookers? The fastest cooker on the market. Just try one a month at my expense and prove that all I say for my cooker is true. I will take the cooker back gladly at the end of the test and refund all of your money if everything about it is not more than satisfactory.

I want you to use it every day—three times a day if you wish. And while the meals are cooking I want you to go out—see your friends—make some of the calls you've planned for so long—and when you return you will find things cooked better than if you'd stood over a hot stove fretting and worrying.

30 Days' Trial in Your Home

On My Personal Money Back Guarantee

I want you to use the Rapid Fireless Cooker this way for 30 days. Then I want you to take a vote of the entire family and yourself—and if you don't decide that the Rapid Fireless Cooker is a marvel—if the whole family don't say that they never had better meals, more wholesomely cooked, and if you don't say you did it with far less work than you ever did before—then I want you to send it right back at my expense.

Remember you need pay only the wholesale, factory price—the price I can offer you by dealing direct with me. I make you a price so low that the Rapid will soon pay for itself in fuel bills. You'll all say that you wouldn't be without the delicious, savory dishes possible only on the Rapid, even if it cost twice as much. But remember whichever way you decide, the trial costs you not one cent.

Send for Big Free Book

Write today for my Home Science Book giving you all the facts about this wonderful kitchen help. The book contains 150 recipes by famous chefs, showing how, with the Rapid, you can cook or prepare every dish you serve on your table. It roasts, boils, stews, steams, fries, bakes every kind of meat, fish and vegetables—makes delicious soups, puddings, breakfast foods, preserves, does a score of things you never knew a fireless cooker could do. Did you know that ice-cream and all ices and salads are prepared by the Rapid? Send for the Free Book. With it will come my special price proposition. Write today. A postal will do. Address Wm. Campbell, *Pres.

"It is marvelous—marvelous The taste supreme"
The Rapid
Home Science Book

The William Campbell Co., 167 Addison St., Detroit, Michigan

Victor Record of "I Hear You Calling Me" sung by McCormack

McCormack

Victor
Tenor with orchestra in English
I Hear You Calling Me
(Harford-Marshall)
John McCormack
64120
Victor Talking Machine Co. Camden, N.J.

©
James Bushnc

Both are McCormack

The Victor Record of McCormack's voice is just as truly McCormack as McCormack himself.

Whether you hear the great Irish tenor on the Victrola or on the concert stage, it is all the same.

The same natural voice of surpassing beauty, the same distinctness of enunciation—the same McCormack.

The proof is in the hearing. Any Victor dealer in any city in the world will gladly play for you any of the hundred and three McCormack Records, or Victor Records by any other of the world's greatest artists.

There are Victors and Victrolas in great variety of styles from $10 to $400.

Victor Talking Machine Co., Camden, N. J., U. S. A.
Berliner Gramophone Co., Montreal, Canadian Distributors

Important warning. Victor Records can be safely and satisfactorily played only with Victor Needles or Tungs-tone Stylus on Victors or Victrolas. Victor Records cannot be safely played on machines with jeweled or other reproducing points.

Victor
Victor
"HIS MASTER'S VOICE"
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

Victrola

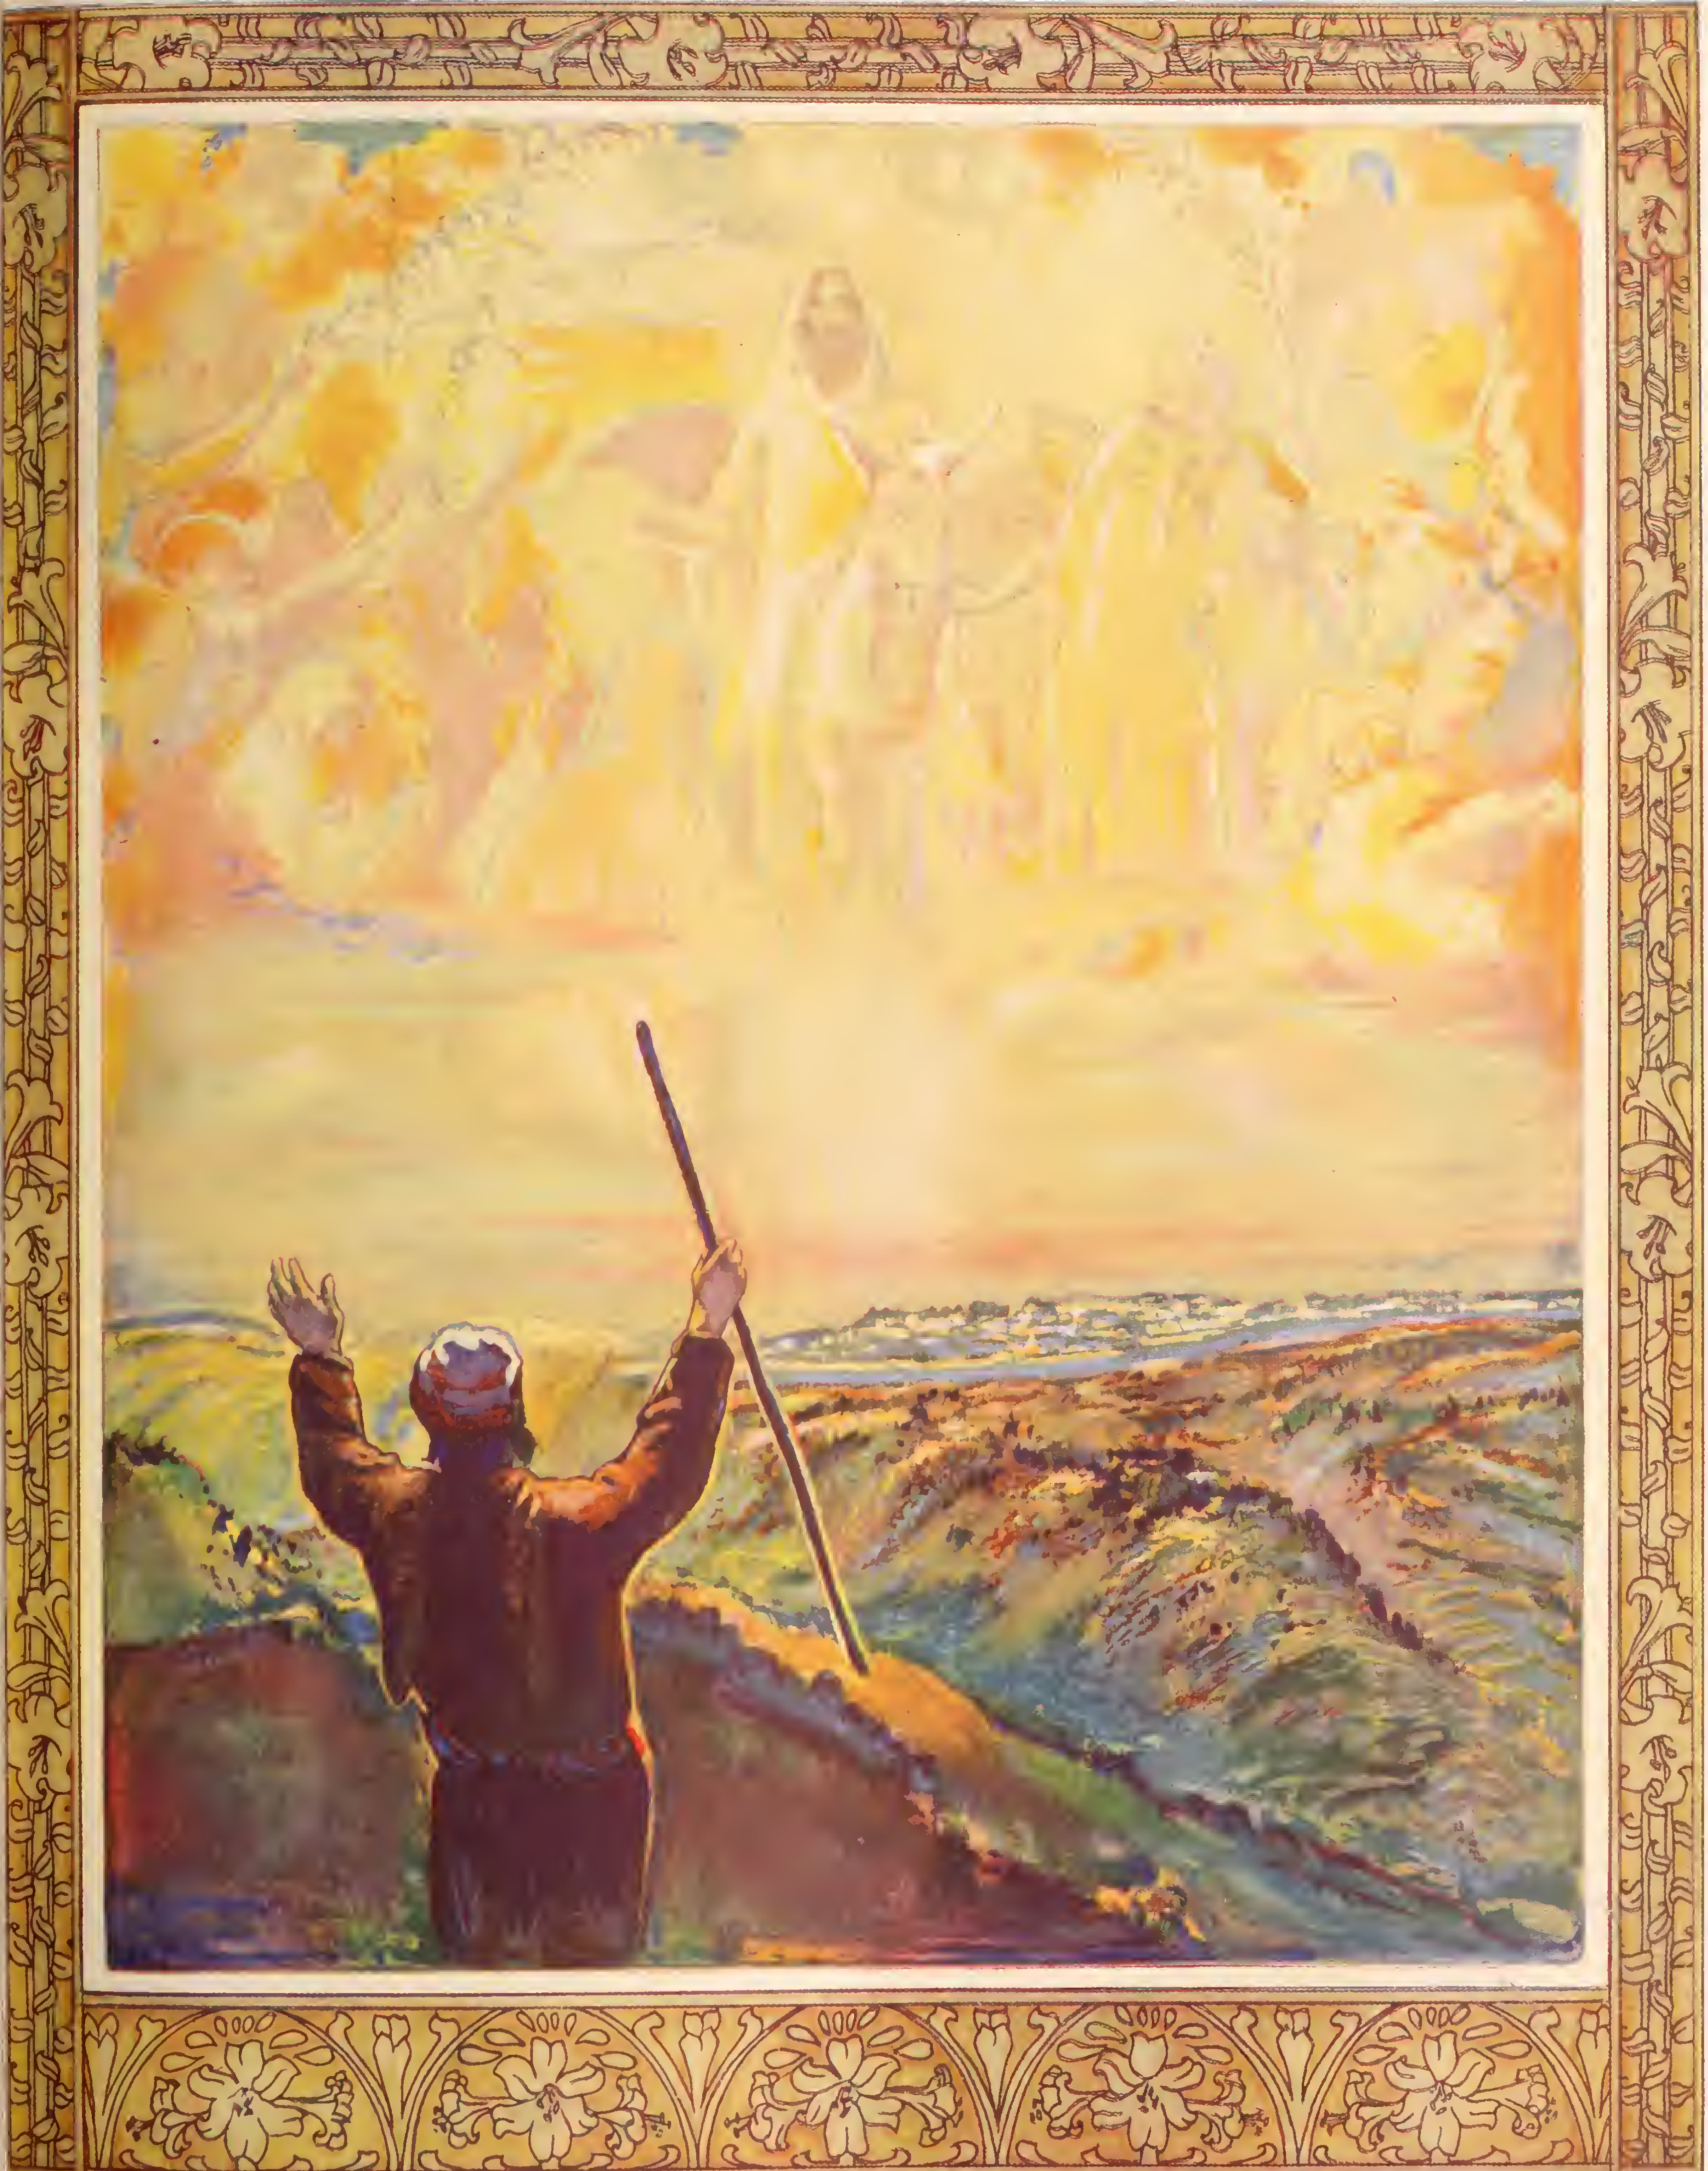
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

UBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
UBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

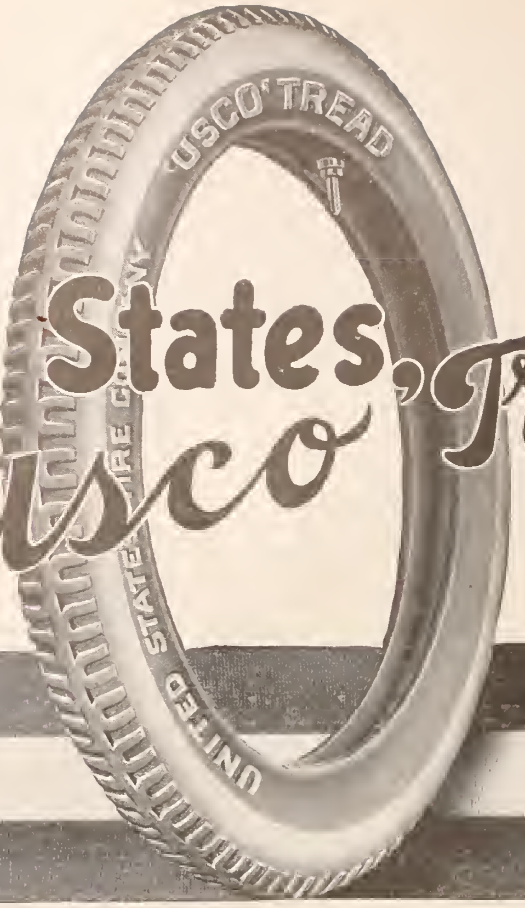
NEW YORK, MARCH 8, 1916

VOL. 39—NO. 10. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



Painting by H. Willard Orthp

THE VISION OF ZECHARIAH. "REJOICE GREATLY, O DAUGHTER OF ZION. SHOUT, O DAUGHTER OF JERUSALEM. BEHOLD, THY KING COMETH UNTO THEE. HE IS JUST, AND HAVING SALVATION." ZECH. 9:9; MATT. 21:5



United States 'Usco' Tread Tires

Why 'Usco'—

Make something wonderfully good and you say, "This is mine"—you call it by your name.

That is exactly our case.

We have made a tire so fine, so sturdy, so responsible that we want it known as ours. So we named it 'Usco' (U. S. Co.)

Because we have put our name on this tire—because its success was a matter of business pride, of business honour—we pledged ourselves to see that it "made good"—and it has.

Think of it—a really wonderful new anti-skid tire priced at only a little more than plain treads.

New Prices of 'Usco' Tread Tires

30 inch x 3 inch	$10.40	34 inch x 4 inch	$22.40
30 inch x 3 1-2 inch	13.40	36 inch x 4 1-2 inch	31.55
32 inch x 3 1-2 inch	15.40	37 inch x 5 inch	37.30

United States Tire Company

'Usco' 'Chain' 'Nobby' 'Royal Cord' 'Plain' Tread

"Individualized Tires"

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
US
RUBBER SYSTEM
AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

Delegates to the Congress Inspecting the Pedro Miguel Locks

For the Evangelization of Latin America

A Foreword on the Great Interdenominational Congress at Panama

By WILLARD PRICE

I order to write you this story, I am "cutting" one of the sessions of what is probably the most important and far-reaching religious conference ever held in the Western Hemisphere!

Here in my hotel room, on the fringe of the city of Pa ma, I can hear the steady drone of a speaker's voi in the great hall down stairs, and every now and the the crackle of applause. For this is the afterno session of the seventh day of the great "Congress on hristian Work in Latin America," which is taking th American continents into its hands as a potter tal his clay, shaping dirt into beauty.

r boat from New York to the Canal Zone was a ll of Fame Some of the strongest Christian sta smen of the world were on board. It was comfor ng to note that their statesmanship seemed to no preventive of seasickness, and the rail was fre ently overhung with great minds. Some found it tiff undertaking to keep up their dignity. Others di 't try.

THE sea was persistently rough and the ship rolled like a sailor on shore leave. It was a happy evening when we left the Caribbean Sea (they pronounce it rib'bean here) with its flying fish behind us and sail into Cristobal (Cristóbal), the port of the Ca l Zone.

ien into a train and off across the Isthmus to the cit of Panama, which lies on the Pacific side.

was during that night flight by train from ocean to ean that I gained my first impressions of the Ca l Zone. You smell the Canal Zone almost before yo see it. Oil! It lies a velvet film over the many po and lakes. Its purpose, of course, is to disco age the breeding of mosquitoes.

y imagination had pictured Panama merely as a gr t ditch. I had not associated the Canal Zone wi the idea of scenic beauty. But now we fled th gh tropical jungles, fragrant wherever the oil gave the woody perfume a chance, past lakes and bays, through hills and then mountains, on the tops of which the crescent moon tobogganed and caught its horns in the fronds of hundred-foot palms—majestic palm trees that compare with our poor, potted orchestra-hiding scrubs about as the Panama ditch compares with a carriage rut.

SUDDENLY we flashed into view of the Gatun Locks, sentineled by rows of lights like candles on tall, white candlesticks. Then we sped for eight miles over a corner of what used to be an impenetrable jungle and is now the largest artificially formed body of water in the world—Gatun Lake.

Our train now crawled across the Canal itself on a remarkable floating bridge, supported on a great barge. The Canal is here a deep, black gorge, into which the low moon could hardly penetrate. It is in this general region that the most serious slides occur.

We backed into Culebra, which means "snake," an appropriate name for this district, where the great mountains are squirming their way down into the man-made ditch as if in resentment of "the greatest liberty man ever took with Nature." Then, recrossing the Canal, we came to a final halt in the railroad station at Panama.

The city of Panama is a vegetable stew of races. Spanish, Negro, India, Anglo-Saxon, Chinese, Japanese, German, Hindu, Arab, Greek—they are all here. But the dominating flavor in the whole potpourri is Spanish. We were at last in Latin America. And it was to sèrve Latin America that this congress had been called.

LATIN AMERICA—where according to Dr. Speer one-fourth to one-half of the population is illegitimate. Where about seventy-five per cent. of the children die under two years of age. Where the general rate of mortality is nearly double that of Europe. Where Valparaiso, Chile, with a population of 140,000, shows more cases of drunkenness reported to the police than London with 5,000,000 souls. Where virtual slavery is common and disdain for labor is ingrained. Where atheism is sweeping like a storm-cloud over the land and only a pitiful minority have ever been brought into an understanding of Christianity.

A dark picture? Of course there is a brighter side. The Latin Americans are a dynamic people, capable of great and notable things. But they cannot grow to their fullest height until the parasitic vines of atheism, disease and ignorance are stripped away.

And here in the Hotel Tivoli, just up the hill from the station, we found the men and women, three hundred and fifty strong, that a dozen steamers had brought from all parts of the hemisphere to help in this continental job of tree-trimming.

THERE was John R. Mott, towering like a cliff. There was John Goucher, a mite in stature, a giant in soul. There was nightingale-tongued Bishop Oldham. There was Robert Speer, gentle general, always mild, always firm. Henry Churchill King, the encyclopedic president of Oberlin. J. W. Butler, the famous missionary to Mexico; Professor Harlan P. Beach of Yale University; Professor Eduardo Monteverde of Uruguay, president of the Congress; Charles S. Macfarland, S. Earl Taylor, Bishops Kinsolving, Stuntz, Lloyd, McConnell.

Notable laymen too: C. E. Welch, Eben E. Olcott, Fleming H. Revell.

It is these and other such men of rich natures, together with a host of fine Christian Latin Americans whose names would not be so well known to you of North America, who are gathered here to approach the needs of the Latin New World. Of the work of the congress itself I shall tell in two later articles.

Ancon Hill at the Pacific Entrance to the Canal

There Is Something Attractive About This Mexican Horse Car

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

CHAPTER IX—Continued

THE outlines of the Sanctuary of Explanation, in perspective, I had already seen; so they were familiar to my eyes. We were admitted through a gateway of myriad arches. Not the beauty of the interior impressed me as did the transcendent joy so evident upon the countenances of those who thronged the halls and chambers of this place. Have you seen the face of a child light up when, after painful wrestling with a difficult problem, the moment of comprehension comes? More plainly than words, the radiant eyes and smiling lips proclaim, "Now I understand!" Well, it was the light of understanding, the joy of complete comprehension, which irradiated every face.

THE walls of these chambers were covered with a material of satin softness and sheen; upon this surface as upon a canvas of rare texture appeared pictures like those I had seen in the Pavilion of the Past, except that these had for their subjects incidents in individual lives rather than great historic movements. At times the pictures reminded me of etchings on silk; at other times they resembled photographs in color, and at still others they were like wonderfully wrought paintings. Yet no etching or photograph or painting speaks. These pictures moved and spoke, or, rather, the figures in them moved and spoke. By what possible process such effects were produced I could not know and did not attempt to discover. I was aware that what I saw was the result of forces for which earthly art and science have no name. As we passed from chamber to chamber, my guide said: "Here are the Arcanum of Knowledge, the Court of Wisdom, the Place of Timely Revealing of which Jesus spoke when he said, 'I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now,' and the Place of the Interpretation of Providence." I would have recognized the last-named chamber from the fact that above the door leading into it I saw the Master's words, "What I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter." The door opened, apparently in response to my thought, "Would I could enter here."

I HAVE referred to certain pictures in the Sanctuary of Explanation as individual rather than historic. Those I now saw were not only individual but personal—personal to me, I mean, and therefore of them I may not write thus publicly. Is it not sufficient to say that I beheld a very concrete and indubitable vindication of the providence of God in my own past? I do not mean to say that what I saw covered all my earthly experience; that was not necessary; but light was cast on certain problems in my life which until that moment had vexed my understanding and taxed my faith in the assurance "that all things work together for good to them that love God." Now I know it is literally true. I can never again think of certain events and circumstances as I once thought of them. Hope deferred never again will make my heart sick. Help delayed will not cause my faith to waver. I have seen the benevolence of some unanswered prayers. Like Frances Ridley Havergal, I thank God that he has not always taken me at my word. I understand better the kindly purpose of pain. I saw, somewhat as Moses must have seen the passing pageant of divine goodness, God's reason for the failure of many a darling plan, for the wreck of many a cherished hope. Would I could speak my word of assurance to the inner ear of every impatient soul—every soul "caught in the clutch of cruel circumstance"! I have seen a little, only a little, but enough to know that May Riley Smith is absolutely right when she says:

"Some time, when all life's lessons have been learned,
When sun and stars forevermore have set,
The things which our weak judgments here have spurned,
The things o'er which we grieved with lashes wet,
Will flash before us out of life's dark night
As stars shine most in deepest tints of blue;
And we shall see how all God's plans were right,
And how what seems reproof was love most true."

"Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."

I TURNED to leave the Chamber of the Interpretation of Providence when I beheld not far from me a gray-clad pilgrim. It seems that some of the problems of her life had been not unlike those of mine, and that, in addition to these, she had lived in the shadow of three great griefs—literally in the shadow of them; she had followed Christ in the dark. I was permitted to converse with her. She told me she had experienced a great sorrow in her young womanhood, a disappointment in love. She said, "I have seen here what would have been my fate if the desire of my young, proud heart had been granted." What she had always called an accident defeated her purpose to achieve a career as a singer. She continued, "I have seen the 'career' I coveted, and I bless the God of my life that I was turned aside from it. Vanity and vexation of spirit alone lay that way." She alluded to the third and the severest of her earthly trials thus: "I married, and God gave me three children. The first-born died in infancy and though I did believe the Good Shepherd had taken my lamb, I fear I never quite forgave him for my loss. It required the utmost spiritual effort to look at the empty crib and the little shoes without begrudging God the gift he gave and took away. But," and as she spoke her face was transfigured with happiness, "now I see that it was better for him to have come here. The God who endowed him with certain unusual mental faculties the very uniqueness of which would have caused him to be 'an alien to his mother's children,' a stranger on earth, in tender pity sent a messenger to reclaim his gift. My baby awaited me when I entered the City a little while ago. He is with me now." Turning, she beckoned closer to her side a youth, tall and fair and manly, his face the image of his mother's, every attitude and motion one of unstudied but faultless grace. Calling him by the affectionate diminutive name she had applied to him in infancy, she said, "If you had remained with me in the other world, I would have been your teacher, but you must be my teacher now." He looked at her and smiled, then looked at me with pity in his eyes because he knew I was but a transient sojourner here; then, hand in hand, mother and son moved away together. As they left me, I heard him call her by the nam his infant lips had scarcely learned to fashion i the other world, as he said, "Ammo, come wit me to the place the Master has helped me to pr are for you."

I HAVE had very definite and perhaps pec iar ideas as to the misuse of the phrase, the providence of God." I have resented the n ion which so many seem to entertain that Provi nce is responsible for every untimely death, ery heart-breaking sorrow, every tragedy of in idism, every unhappy accident, every case f a child born blind or lame or deaf or dumb. I ve believed, and still believe, that, were the cts known, human ignorance and disregard of atural or moral law are responsible for many ich a "providential dispensation." But my v ws, while they have not been reversed, have gr tly enlarged since my vision in the Sanctua of Explanation. I now see that the Provide of God—his special interposition in human aff s—has a wider scope than most of us have tho ht.

MY guide next constrained me to ter a chamber the approach to which was y a wide stairway of marble inlaid with n ny-colored semi-precious stones. There I aw, visualized, the divine method of over ing the wrath of man, of bringing evil to naug , of counteracting the natural consequences of norance and sin, and of turning hostile force nto agencies that make for the power and lift of human life. I saw how unfortunate eve s in my own experience have given me a quic ess, sincerity and depth of sympathy I coul not otherwise have had, and how my own err s in judgment have turned to the greater glory my Lord.

HERE, as in the Chamber of Interpret on, I saw far beyond the narrow limits my own earthly experience. Among the f ures which moved before my vision was that f a shipwrecked apostle, to whom the di ster which threatened the success of his ente rise became a great opportunity to reach the arts of his companions in peril. Another was a oet who became blind just at the threshold his manhood; but from the moment of gat ing darkness, his mind was illumined with a unearthly light, and his spirit was more r ant than it could have been if accident ha not deprived him of sight. The whole effect of hat I saw here was to give me a glimpse int the method, the rich and manifold compens ory processes, by which God's providence in th ives of his children turns opposition into b efit, and transforms the weapons of their foe into agencies of praise.

MY guide did not tell me the name o this chamber, but it was unnecessary t t I should be told, for everything in it w an illustration, a demonstration, indeed, the truth of the words, "All things work to her for good to them that love God." It wa the place of the vision of over-ruling Provi nce. Even more distinctly than the incidents to ich I have just alluded, I shall carry with m the memory of a series of pictures which touch my heart as few things ever have, either on rth or within the Gates of Pearl. It was as t ugh a great book stood before me, its pages tur by invisible hands. It might have been the Book of Memory, or the Book of History. First I saw, in a city in a far-distant land, a group of buildings, a mission compound. There were a chapel, a hospital, and two schools, one for boys and one for girls. A mob gathered in the street under strange banners, beating drums and "breathing out threatenings and slaughter." I heard the babel of angry voices, and saw a smaller company of the mob separate themselves from the main body, enter one of the main buildings and apply the torch. The flames spread, and looting began. I saw the frightened, huddled missionaries and their children, hiding from the wild beasts in human form who sought them. Spears and stones were hurled. A child was the first to fall, a girl of eight or nine years of age. She called, "Mother!" and I saw a pale-faced woman return and gather up the bruised body. A furious madman hurled both of them to the ground. Then shots were fired, other missionaries fell, and the whole group of buildings was a scene of cruelty and violence, bloodshed and death.

INSTANTLY I saw a group of white-robed figures hovering over the place, passing through the flames unscathed. Their faces were like those I had seen within this City. Indeed, I recognized some of the angel faces as the very same I had seen accompanying martyrs and little children up the crystal stairway at one of the twelve gates. They had come to the relief, the eternal deliverance, of the slaughtered servants of God. Not all the martyrs were missionaries. I plainly saw a woman, a teacher, surrounded by a group of her pupils. They looked to me like frightened birds taking shelter under their mother's wings. The teacher was the first to fall, but one by one the children's lives were taken, some by a single swift stroke of a sword, others by slower methods of torture. A group of older boys and girls were given the opportunity to save their lives by denying their faith in Christ, but the last and the least of them refused to recant. I saw their radiant spirits rise straight from their mangled forms, and felt no longer sad.

Another great leaf of the book turned, and I saw men and women in the home-lands whose gifts had gone into the building of the mission which had been destroyed. Tears streamed down their faces when the message came which told of the death of their friends and the destruction of the first-fruit of their sacrifice and labor. (Some of these faces were very familiar to me.) I read the heart-anguish, the almost black despair which like a somber cloud enshrouded their brave spirits, and I longed to tell them not to weep for the saints who had fallen, when lo! I saw an angel form approaching one, a mother whose daughter was among the victims of the missionary massacre. He bent above her and seemed to whisper into her ear words which caused her to dry her tears and lift her face toward the sky as if in praise.

To be continued

The Southern California Flood

VARIOUS sections of the country have suffered from storm and flood and fire so far this year, but those fortunate spots unvisited by such calamity have scarcely troubled to read the press dispatches in the daily papers; at least, have scarcely remembered the events after reading, so completely does the war and its allied subjects crowd the public thought. A correspondent living in San Diego, California, writes briefly but vividly of the perennial flood, which this year worked its will in that state early in February. While most of us have slept securely in our homes, and with untroubled minds have attended to our daily tasks, homes like ours, farms like ours, business houses like ours, and towns like ours have been fighting hand to hand with death and destruction. We give our correspondent's account below.

IT is estimated that the flood tides reached the highest mark ever remembered in this region. Whole valleys have been inundated and in some cases dwellings have been carried away before the occupants had time to flee. Destruction, suffering and death have followed. In almost every part of the state roads have been washed out, bridges carried away and whole lines of railway track torn up. But in San Diego County the raging torrents wrought the most havoc.

Old Town, the initial seat of the chain of twenty-one missions where civilization in California began, was the first to suffer. When the two great railway and heavy concrete wagon bridges were carried away, Mission Valley was covered with a sheet of swift-flowing water. Though the inhabitants had been warned, many dead bodies were taken from the wreck of floating houses, or picked up by boatmen.

San Luis Rey Valley, situated in the northern part of San Diego County, tells a tale of equal sadness. Fertile ranches have been turned into river beds, and dead bodies have been dug from the débris that floated down the Pascual River on its way to the ocean. The home of the Herman family was near the Old San Luis Rey Mission. When the flood began to pour on them, the father grasped the two younger children and called to the others to wait till he came back. The wife and older children attempted to leave before he was able to return: they were drowned. Scores of horses and cattle, some struggling on pieces of broken timber, floated down the river to the Western Ocean.

A portion of Sweetwater Dam gave way, allowing a ten-foot wave to sweep over the vicinity, devastating the land and tearing up the tracks of the San Diego and Arizona Railway and the trolley lines. Nevertheless, when the writer visited this scene, there, significantly, stood the hearse.

The most serious disaster occurred when the lower Otay Dam was swept away. These dams were placed across the canyon and the Otay River, forming extensive lakes or storage reservoirs to supply the city and surrounding regions during the dry seasons. A wave forty feet high and like a wall of steel dashed through the valley, converting the rich bottom region into a tract of bare gravel. It came without warning and was merciless, cracking the heaviest timbers as if they had been matches, and left not a trace of homes or families.

The Daneri Ranch was located in this region. Of the eight occupants only two survive. Six persons were seated at the table in the dining-room. Emuelle Daneri was coming from the cellar; his wife stood at the door. When the man had reached the second step from the top, he saw the first sheet of water pass through a side window. "Run for your lives!" he screamed. Mrs. Daneri bounded forward; they both ran up the hillside and were saved. Those seated at the table were not seen again. Emuelle Daneri and his wife had lived on this ranch for thirty-seven years; they are now homeless and penniless. But thousands of others found themselves in a similar condition.

A deputy United States marshal, who was making a heroic effort to warn the inhabitants, thus describes the disappearance of the embankment at the mouth of the Otay River: "The wall of water roared and raged against it for a moment, and then turned and began to wipe out houses in Otay Village. One two-story house was swirled about and finally set down on a spot near its original location. The wave then returned with renewed fury to attack the embankment, and passed through it as if only a sheet of paper had stood in its way."

In places trees were swept away as if they had been twigs. A tall eucalyptus grove was flattened like grass. Broken furniture and timbers were found on embankments forty feet high.

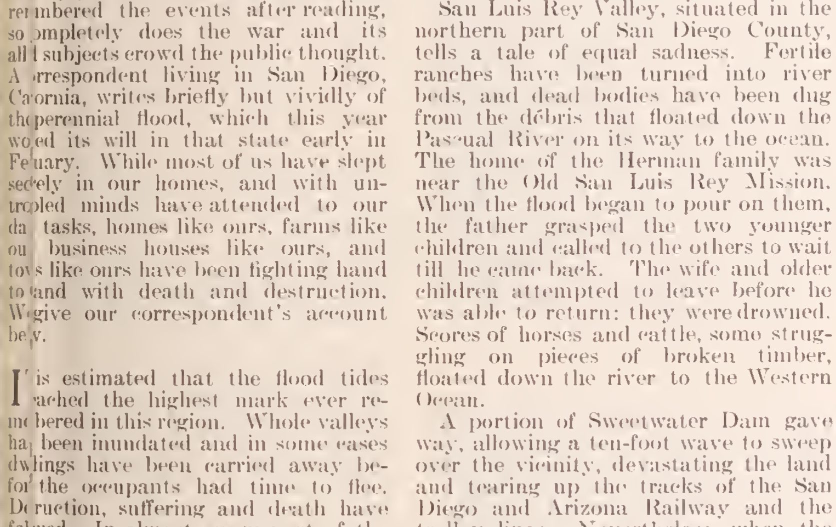
A number of Chinese and Japanese were seated on a long table on a piece of high ground. When questioned, there was a flash of teeth and one bright Japanese boy volunteered: "Yes, all gone. Lots Chinese and Japanese run to schoolhouse. Tomorrow may be there. Maybe no."

"Where are the tracks of the S. D. S. E.?" one of a rescue party inquired of a section man who, with a gang of workmen, was trying to save a roadbed. "There," and the man pointed to a sea of water extending from the roadbed to the bay.

Another of the party spoke to a man he knew, saying, "Your brother is not here." "No," replied the man, "he was lost in the waters. He has a wife and three children. Say! can you manage to tell them?"

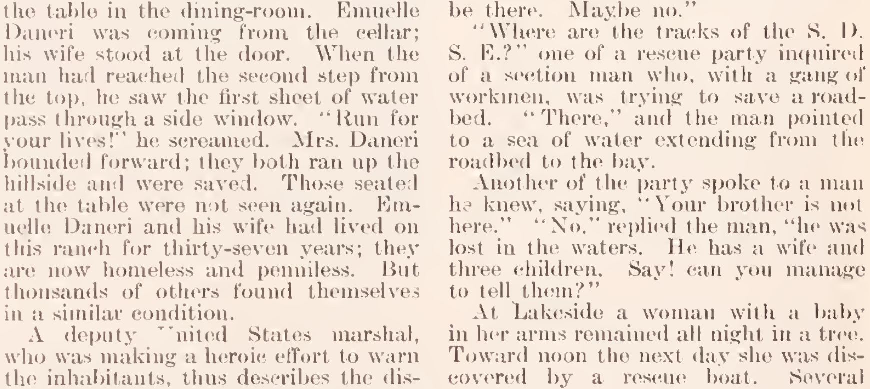
At Lakeside a woman with a baby in her arms remained all night in a tree. Toward noon the next day she was discovered by a rescue boat. Several persons stood on the roofs of houses which floated on the crest of the flood. Some were saved by swinging themselves up to the branches of trees. Piles of wreckage lined the ocean front from Coronado Heights to Imperial Beach, a distance of several miles. It is estimated that fifty persons met death in the storm-flood. A boat has been employed to do mail service during the noncommunication by rail. The great work of repairing the widespread destruction is being pushed to the utmost.

ROSE N. CUNNINGHAM.



Friendly Spans from Shore to Shore Were Swept Away

© International Film Service, Inc.



Débris Left High and Dry by the Receding Waters

A Week in the World's News

THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS. At a conference between the President and Speaker Clark, Democratic leader Kitchin, and Chairman Flood on February 25, the Speaker told the President that if a resolution warning Americans not to take passage on armed merchant ships came before the House, it would be adopted two to one. The President informed the congressional leaders emphatically that his position as stated in his letter of the 24th was unalterable. Mr. Clark suggested that probably not only the Congress but public sentiment might be found to be against the Administration's course, to which the President replied that time would show that his position was right. Senator Gore introduced a concurrent resolution in the Senate on the 24th. The resolution stated that whereas the right of American citizens to travel on armed belligerent vessels rather than upon unarmed vessels is essential neither to their life, liberty nor safety, nor to the independence, dignity or security of the United States, therefore it was the sense of the Congress that all persons owing allegiance to the United States should forbear to exercise the right to travel as passengers on any armed vessel whether such vessel be armed for offeusive or defensive purposes. On the 25th, Senator Jones of Washington, Republican, introduced into the Senate a resolution which in substance stated that since this was a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, it is contrary to the fundamental principles of the government that the people should be involved in war through the decision or by the act of any one man; and that since Congress was given by the Constitution the power to declare war, it is the sense of the Congress that any issue which might affect the national honor should be referred to the Congress and that no ultimatum should be sent to any power, and no severance of diplomatic relations should be brought about by executive action, until after the advice and consent of Congress. There was no discussion of the question in the Senate during the day, and the tension in the House appeared to be somewhat relieved by the possibility that the date for the beginning of submarine warfare on armed liners would be postponed from March 1 to April 1, in which case it appeared likely that Congress would assume an attitude of "watchful waiting" pending the outcome of the diplomatic efforts of President Wilson and Secretary Lansing.

AMBASSADOR MORGENTHAU ON FURLOUGH. Henry Morgenthau, who has been for two years and four months in Constantinople as American ambassador to Turkey, and who has in that time wou the formal thanks of all the nations with whom Turkey is at war, and the respect of Turkey and of her allies, returned to New York on February 22 for a vaction of sixty days. Mr. Morgenthau has been chairman of the Christian Herald Relief Committee at Constantinople.

NEW HAVEN RAILWAY STILL UNFORTUNATE. On February 22 a local train on the New York, New Haven and Hartford, running at the rate of forty miles an hour, struck an express train which had been halted by a block. A freight train passing in the other direction became mixed in the mêlèe and all three trains were wrecked. Ten persons were killed and upwards of sixty hurt, and these numbers would have been greatly increased had not the express train been composed largely of steel cars. All the employees who might explain the wreck were killed, so that the reason for it may never be known. The block signal which should have prevented the wreck was found to be properly set, and the only apparent explanation is that it was another failure of the human element in the equation of safety.

AMBASSADOR TO RUSSIA RESIGNS. George T. Marye, ambassador of the United States to Russia, has resigned and his resignation has been accepted. The President, however, requested Mr. Marye to remain at his post until the First Secretary of the embassy, Mr. Fred M. Dearing, could reach Petrograd from Madrid. The President has offered the Russian post to ex-Governor David R. Francis of Missouri, and it was announced on February 22 that Mr. Francis would accept, although he himself refused either to admit or deny the facts.

THE WORK OF CONGRESS. The work of Congress in the past two weeks has been largely in the hearings before various committees. Early in the week the Naval Affairs Committee of the House heard Admir Blue present the department's proposals r a redrafting of the naval reserve law, by hich it is hoped to get 30,000 reservists withi few years. It was reported on February that the House Committee on Military fairs had agreed upon the fundamental f ures of the Army Bill. The Ways and eans Committee of the House has determi d to report a bill repealing the free sugar cl se of the Underwood Tariff Law. The con ittee is expected to report an omnibus bill em cing all the revenue legislation deemed ne sary to meet the demands of the present sit ion. There is a possibility that the bill will p vide for a tax ou the manufacture of mu ons. On February 15 the Susan B. Anthony endment for nation-wide woman suffrage w sidetracked for the session by the Judiciar ommittee of the House. An attempt to elve the national prohibition resolution resi d in a tie vote. The proposal for prohibitio the District of Columbia appears to have a ance of passing. The report of the Federal erve Board for the first full year of operatio suggested six amendments to the act, one o hich was that the banks should be author l to exercise a wide discretion in the mal g of farm loans. The Senate Committee c Foreign Relations on February 9 reported vorably the Haitian treaty providing for nancial protectorate over the republic the United States. It was reported on Fe ary 14 that the River and Harbor Appror tion Bill had been completed in committ and would appropriate about $40,000,000, for

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

THE latest reports from Erzerum seem to indicate that, though the Russians undoubtedly got the fortress, they got very little besides the bare possession of the Turkish stronghold. Even according to the Russian claims, the number of guns captured has dropped from over 1,000 to a scant 140.

As to the number of Turkish troops taken, the figures are even yet indefinite. A few thousands will probably cover the number, Petrograd admitting that the great bulk of the garrison got away in safety. In fact it would seem as though the Turks at Erzerum, finding that it would be impossible for them to hold that fortress, adopted the tactics pursued so consistently by the present commander of the Russian forces in the Caucasus, in Galicia and Poland last spring and summer, and beat a strategic retreat. The Russians, it is said, are intending, now that they are masters of Erzerum, to move northwest, with their objective Trebizond, on the Black Sea.

The Russians make the statement that their forces are now within 35 miles to the east of that port, but these 35 miles happen to be through an almost roadless tangle of mountains running from 6,000 to 8,000 feet in height, and it is quite possible, not to say probable, that the Russian army will not drive its way through this snow-covered chaos in a day.

The reports in the press in regard to the Russian plans of moving on either Constantinople to the west or Bagdad to the southeast of their present position, must be looked on as decidedly premature, as it is about 600 miles to Constantinople and about 550 to Bagdad, with topographical difficulties of some moment in both cases presenting themselves in the intervening country.

There have been no new developments during the week as to the ultimate military action of Rumania.

A settlement of the mail controversy between Great Britain and Sweden seems in sight. By this Great Britain will let all mails on Swedish steamers, be the destination of these mails what it may, severely alone, Sweden in return allowing the mails between England and Russia to cross her territory freely. The question arising from the interference with Swedish commercial rights, however, is still open.

IN the west during the week ending February 28, events have succeeded each other with rapidity and in the assault on the great fortress of Verdun, begun by the Germans early in the week, we have entered into one of the critical phases of the war. Before, however, taking up this very important subject we will cast a glance at the events on the rest of the line.

Carrying out the "nibbling" policy which they have been pursuing since about the first of the year, the Germans on Sunday, February 20, launched an attack in considerable force against the French trenches stretching north and south nearly parallel to the northern part of the road running from Givenchy-en-Gohelle to Neuville-St. Vaast to the east of Souchez, and succeeded in completely carrying the first line of trenches over a front more than a half mile long and in many places penetrating into the second line.

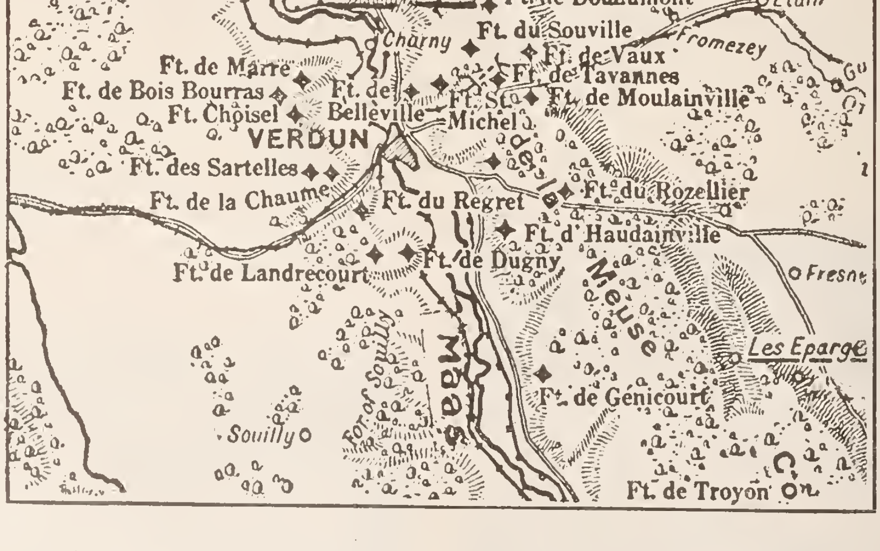
From the second line, however, the French succeeded at nearly all points in expelling the Germans by violent counter-attacks. The result of this advance is that the Germans are now to the west of Hills 140 and 119, and about a mile to the east of the cemetery at Souchez, having recovered approximately three-fifths of the ground which the French offensive last autumn wrested from them in this region. In the fighting the Germans took a few hundred French prisoners, the French, however, claiming to have inflicted heavy losses on the charging Teutons as these latter rushed their positions.

The next two days the French made gallant but unsuccessful attempts to retake the lost positions, and on Wednesday the Germans resumed the offensive, but were thrown back for no gains. Thereafter, probably on account of the importance of events taking place elsewhere, the fighting here languished, and the week closed with no further changes in the positions here.

Farther west on the portion of the front held by the British and Belgians only routine fighting took place during the week, hardly worthy of comment. There was some aerial activity on this portion of the front by both sides, but it cannot be said to have accomplished much.

On Monday the Germans began a general assault on the French positions north of Verdun, with the apparent intention of forcing the French line back to a point where a general assault by both artillery and infantry could be delivered on the fortress itself.

Verdun, together with the chain of forts connecting it with Toul to the south and with Toul itself, has always been regarded as one of the two keys of France, the other being Rheims including Chalons and the plain thereof. From a strategic point of view the highest importance has always been given to the fortress of Verdun in the past, and as this importance has not grown less today it seems safe to say there could be no harder blow to the Allies than its capture by their enemies.



On Monday, the attack was co ned to a heavy artillery bombardme by the Germans, infantry fighting nly taking place between Conservo on the Meuse and Brabant a little the south, both places being almost di tly north of and about ten miles om Verdun. This artillery attack ontinued all Monday night, growing ore and more intense until, Tuesday rning, it attained a severity unpar led thus far in the war.

Towards mid-day Tuesday the erman infantry began to attack the F nch in force, and these latter fightin valiantly were slowly driven back, Brabant and the village of Aumont the east thereof falling into German nds together with some 3,000 pris ers. The coming of night, Tuesday, br ght no cessation of the fighting. The F nch and German artillery fought wi almost superhuman desperation ar the infantry struggled in wild hand-to and conflicts in the darkness, and on th ugh the ensuing day till night again f

The Germans had thrown corps fter corps into the battle, and on Wedr day night are stated to have had c entrated on the fifteen mile front, to iich by that time the battle line ha extended, over 300,000 men in a on. The French had brought up large einforcements and were struggling ith a determination worthy of the i portance of the stake, to hold the Ge ans back.

BUT Wednesday night saw the French forced farther back o the whole front, and slowly but sure the German machine plowed its vay through the French line, which ave ground only by inches and not ore those inches were drenched in od. The fighting of Wednesday and T ursday last, on this line, was by fa the bloodiest of the war up to the p ent time. The struggle continu all Wednesday night, the Germans ontinually bringing up more and ore artillery until on this fifteen mile ont over 600 cannon were hurling ath at their adversaries.

On Thursday the struggle grew ven more intense, though a heavy ow storm was raging, and on the ev ing of the same day the Germans admi dly had captured Samogneux, on the s thern side of the northern curve the big bend to the westward whic the Meuse river makes a few miles ove Verdun, from which fortress this h alet is distant six miles.

This formed the westward en of the German line, which ran thence astward to the westerly side of th soprects now in course of completion, except ot item of $700,000 for the deepening of the chnel between upper New York Bay and the Boklyn navy yard. On February 15, Rear Ahiral Grant, chief of submarines, U. S. A. pented to the House Naval Committee a pl for fleet and coast defense submarine opations in the Atlantic and Pacific, which wd require 183 underwater boats of all tys. The United States now has twenty-seu submarines. Admiral Badger, member ofe Navy General Board, told the House Cmittee February 23 that we should have a ttle fleet in the Pacific large enough to dcinate the ocean without regard to any pc ble use of the Panama Canal. Admiral Bazer stated that our navy stands third in llging power, with France a close fourth. Th Stephens Bill now pending in Congress, wch will permit a manufacturer to maintain th retail selling price of his product, was suppoed before the National Retail Dry-Goods Aciation by several speakers, but the asso tion went on record with a vote of 89 peent. of its members in opposition to price matenance by the manufacturer. It was exted that the Immigration Bill carrying th teracy test would be passed by the House dug the week of February 20. Leaders in Cgress believe that if the bill is again ved they can now marshal the necessary twhirds majority in both houses to pass it ov the veto.

Continued on page 307

FFRAGE LOSES AND GAINS. The resition proposing a referendum on woman suge was rejected on February 18 by the Vinia House of Delegates. A similar resolutn was favorably reported on February 21 a committee of the New York Assembly.

IMMEDIATE COFFEE DROUGHT. An gent of the Lloyd Brazileiro Company haecently stated that in spite of a shortage of ips, there will still be carriers enough to takcare of the normal movement of Brazilian co to the United States. The freight rate to uth America has increased only 100 per cet during the war as against 400 to 500 per cet to Europe. And while there are ships engh to carry the coffee cargoes to America, the are not ships enough to take care of the ouard-bound freight, which is much heavier an greater volume. It was announced on Feary 21 that the Grace Steamship Compa was preparing to inaugurate a line of fasmail steamers between New York City anports in South America. The company haurchased three Dutch steamers of 5,700 to each, which will be transferred to the Arican flag.

SEUMS ABROAD. It was announced on ebruary 18 in Paris that the Louvre, wh was closed to the public during the Gean advance in September of 1914, would beopened on March 1. Seven hundred paings which were sent to Toulouse after theattle of Charleroi are stored there under excent conditions and will be kept where the are until the end of the war. Great Brin, on the other hand, has closed the Brh Museum, the Natural History Museu, the South Kensington Science Museu, the Geological Museum, the London Meum, the Tate Gallery and the National Poait Gallery, transferring the persons emyed to other lines of work. The museus will not be reopened until after the war.

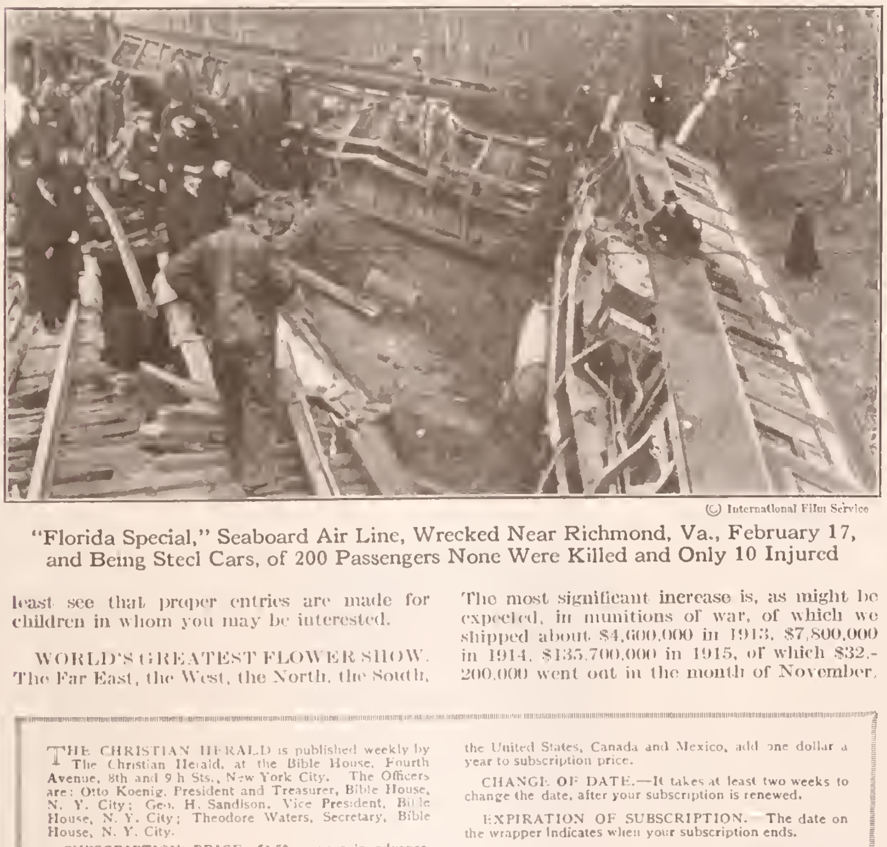
IREE STATES PROFIT THROUGH PHIBITION. In the American Issue of Feary 12, statistics from the governors of o states and the mayor of one city gave so visible results of prohibition. Governor Caon of Colorado stated that during Janua 1916, the first month under prohibition, 2.0 new savings accounts were opened in the Deer savings banks and the deposits of cig Denver banks increased $575,000, while thank clearings for the month exceeded those of year before by $8,000,000. In the city of eblo, at the end of the month, savings depits totaled $23,000 against $7,000 the sa time a year ago. Denver's largest depament store reported collections were 25 pe cent. greater than the year before, and meants reported hundreds of accounts bei paid up which they had considered "no go" Arrests for drunkenness decreased fro 212 in January, 1915, to 53 in January, 19 Arrests for vagrancy fell from 421 to 11 On February 1, 1915, the city jail at Pulo held 37 men; on February 1, 1916, onl 6. According to Governor Craig of No Carolina, where prohibition has been in eff eight years, twenty-one more children outf every hundred of school age are now ened and thirty-one more children out of eve hundred of school age have actually been at hool each day, than attended in 1908. Th chool fund of the city has increased more th 85 per cent. Deposits in the banks have incsed 100 per cent. and in building and loa associations 250 per cent. Mayor Albee of ortland reports that in January, 1916, therst saloonless month, 91 drunks and 110 vaants were arrested as against 526 drunks an35 vagrants in January, 1915.

N YOU PROVE THAT YOU WERE BN? The Children's Bureau of the United Stas Department of Labor in a recent bullet calls attention to the importance of a leg record of birth, including date, place anparentage. In most states the laws require physicians to file proper certificates, but there is much carelessness in this regard. Complete registry of all births is important both to the individual and to the nation: to the nation in order that it may know the exact increase in population, and to the individual in order that he may establish his right to a possible inheritance, to the full legal measure of schooling, or to freedom from under-age work, and also in his later years that he may establish his right to benefits under old-age pension laws or similar enactments. If you cannot prove that you were born, you can at least see that proper entries are made for children in whom you may be interested.

Boulogne and Paris Express Wrecked by Collision with Transport and Ammunition Train; 100 Killed

© Underwood & Underwood

The Wrecked New York and New Haven Express, Local and Freight Trains, February 22



© International Film Service

"Florida Special," Seaboard Air Line, Wrecked Near Richmond, Va., February 17, and Being Steel Cars, of 200 Passengers None Were Killed and Only 10 Injured

WORLD'S GREATEST FLOWER SHOW. The Far East, the West, the North, the South, the tropics and every zone in which things blossom, will be drawn upon for their choicest specimens that they may be exhibited at the Grand Central Palace in New York in the week of April 5-12. There will be lilies from China, acacias from Australia, amaryllis from South Africa, and roses of high and low degree. A special feature of the show will be rock garden exhibits.

OUR INCREASING EXPORTS. Figures are now at hand covering all the American exports for the first eleven months of 1915. The most significant increase is, as might be expected, in munitions of war, of which we shipped about $4,600,000 in 1913, $7,800,000 in 1914, $135,700,000 in 1915, of which $32,200,000 went out in the month of November. There are figures in our exports which, however, are much more comforting than these regarding munitions. Our exports of chemicals, drugs, dyes and medicine totaled $36,000,000, over four times as much as in 1913. Prepared chocolate and cocoa reached a total of more than $2,000,000, six times our normal exports. The exports of cotton manufacturers doubled, the increase in cotton wearing apparel reaching 200 per cent. Glass and glassware was exported to the value of $8,000,000—more than twice the figures of 1913. Tin-plate exports were more than doubled. Two and one-half times as much wrapping paper was exported. Exports in perfumery and toilet articles increased one-third. Manufactured silk goods made a gain of 50 per cent., as did motion-picture films. Three times as much starch and twice as much in value of toys left our ports in the eleven months. Exports of leather and tanned skins and of boots and shoes were more than double normal quantities. Woolen manufactures increased nine times, but these last items were no doubt affected directly by the necessities of the armies abroad.

PRESIDENT YUAN SHI KAI DISCUSSES CHINA'S FUTURE. In an interview on February 19 with a correspondent of the Associated Press, President Yuan, when questioned regarding the rebellion in Yunnan Province, said of the efforts to repress the rebellion: "This is no campaign, but only a skirmish." He said that the time of putting down the rebellion depended upon the roads and the rapidity of communication, and the rebels had few troops and little ammunition, and the government troops must make a difficult trip to meet the rebels, but that well-supplied troops will speedily crush the rebellion on reaching the scene. President Yuan stated that the enthronement and the beginning of the new empire had been postponed because of the military operations made necessary by the rebellion. He said, however, that the drafting of the new constitution would be begun in a few days and that they would adopt from all countries the provisions most suited to China, without leaning to any foreign constitution. As to probable recognition of the monarchy by foreign governments, Yuan Shi Kai refused to make any prediction. The president stated that China had made every effort to maintain strict neutrality in the present world war. On February 22 a rebel attack on the governor's mansion at Changsha, capital of Yunnan, was repulsed and the leaders were captured and executed.

MINERS AND OPERATORS CONFER. A joint conference of anthracite coal operators and miners met on January 21 at the Hotel McAlpin in New York City. There was no feeling of antagonism at the conference. The operators expressed a willingness to go into the demands of the union and to arrive at a satisfactory solution. The operators authorized the statement that they were willing to stand for reasonable conditions of labor and pay and even to go beyond this as far as their own business conditions and their responsibility to the public would permit. The operators expressed a willingness to arbitrate any matters in dispute. The miners, however, left the conference insisting that they were still determined to seek a full compliance with their demands. It is apparent that an open break is most likely to come over the question of recognition of the union, upon which the men insist, and which the operators express an unwillingness to grant. The conference adjourned for several days to permit the bituminous operators and employees to come to a final agreement. It was not expected, however, on either side that the questions between the operators and their men in the anthracite field would result in a strike, as the talk was all of peace.

EMPEROR NICHOLAS OPENS THE DUMA. The Russian Duma reconvened February 22, the first session being opened by Emperor Nicholas in person. This is said to be the first time that a Russian emperor has ever visited the Duma or has recognized it in any formal way as a part of the government.

CAN USE EVERYTHING BUT KEGS. One brewer in the state of Washington has discovered that the prohibition law, instead of destroying his brewery, has opened up to him a much more profitable business. He is now bottling and pasteurizing milk and manufacturing cheese. His big beer trucks are hauling milk instead of beer. His steam plant and refrigerating apparatus are cooling milk and cream and curing cheese, and he finds it necessary to employ even more men than before. Other brewers in the state of Washington are reported to be about to profit by this brewer's experience.

SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS CORPORATION TAX. On February 21 the Supreme Court of the United States upheld the corporation tax in the state of Kansas. The suit was brought by the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Memphis Railway Company, a Kansas corporation which had been assessed upon its entire capital stock of $31,000,000. The law was attacked as unconstitutional and unjust in that it enforced a double tax, the property of the company being already assessed.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

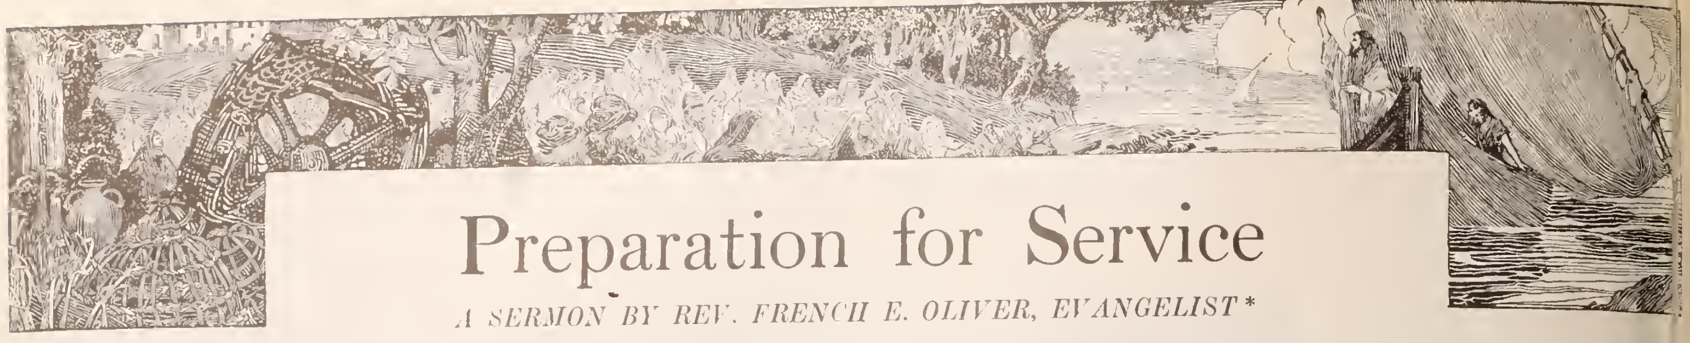
EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa



Preparation for Service

A SERMON BY REV. FRENCH E. OLIVER, EVANGELIST *

TEXT: Isa. 6:8. "I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?"

THE sixth chapter of Isaiah is an intensely interesting story. The prophet gives us a model for an experience meeting. The first verse deals with a dead king and a live prophet. The story of the live prophet will give us inspiration. The story of the dead king gives us a warning.

The preparation of Isaiah for service presents to our consideration this fact: If God would call him to a great work, he must have preparation commensurate to the greatness of the work to which he was called. Success in any great undertaking is to a degree dependent upon preparation. If a man is to speak God's message he must have a vision of the Lord. The prophet says: "In the year that king Uzziah died, I saw also the Lord." God would have us see him today. "Look unto me and be ye saved; for I am Jehovah, and there is none else." Again he says, "Ye shall seek me and find me when ye shall search for me with your whole heart."

It is an unfortunate trait of human nature to forget God in times of prosperity. Men and women can see the Lord if they will search for him; but the great mass of people seem indifferent to God and religion until trouble comes. Then they feel the need of God's presence. They long for the Comforter. They long to hear the voice of Jesus, saying, "Be of good cheer; it is I, be not afraid."

NOTICE the experience of Ezekiel, recorded in the first verse of his prophecy. He says, "Now it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I was among the captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God." The sentence, "As I was among the captives by the river of Chebar," tells the whole story. When he was in captivity he began to look up. He felt his need of God. His soul was crying out in distress. When men and women will genuinely seek the Lord, He will be found. I really believe God permits trouble to enter our hearts and our homes in order that we may be taught our dependence upon the everlasting arms. Some of us may be drifting straight toward the rocks and shoals of sadness, grief and indescribable suffering. We may have despised God's authority and refused the messages of his ambassadors. Is it safe for any one to refuse to listen to the call of God to a spiritual experience?

You will notice that Isaiah saw the Lord "in the temple." He was not in the courts of the ungodly, nor standing in the way of sinners, nor sitting in the seat of the scornful. He was not engaged in heathenish practices. He was in the temple where he belonged. Stand by the church, my brother. You cannot do any good by leaving it. If you are "the salt of the earth," stay in the church and use your power!

IT is very interesting to notice that in the vision of Isaiah," the Lord was sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple." Jehovah's throne appeared first to the prophet. Isaiah saw that he must place the Lord first within his heart above all earthly thrones. What he saw and heard and said forms an interesting story. Above the throne stood the seraphim; each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. What a glorious picture of reverence in performing holy service about the throne of the Lord! The seraphim are the burning ones who minister in the things of fire around the heavenly altars. The cherubim are those who are said to know the secrets of God. Listen to the words of the seraphim, those fiery messengers of heaven. They cried one to the other, saying, "Holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts. The whole earth is full of his glory." Suppose the one who knows you best should be compelled to speak his knowledge of your moral character, as the seraphim reveal the holiness of the Lord in their burning words. I consider it the greatest honor of life to be able to live so consistently as Christian fathers and mothers that our children will have perfect confidence in the religion we profess; for their ideas of religion are formed by our lives and our example far more than by our words or precepts. The Holy Spirit is here. The excarnate, intangible God, the unseen Spirit, is here searching, trying, knowing all our hearts. Let us be still in his presence. May the Spirit of God reveal our hearts to ourselves!

The glory of God was so powerful in the temple that day that the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke. Isaiah was face to face with the holiness, the majesty, the power of God. The effect of the vision is recorded in the fifth verse. He saw himself. after having seen the Lord. The contrast was irresistible. He said, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." The world is full of people of unclean lips. Isaiah's complaint against himself was this: "I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." He was not any better than those he dwelt with. Let me see the associates of your son and your daughter, and I will tell you in which direction they are traveling, heavenward or hellward. Isaiah was not gossiping about his neighbors when he said they were a people of unclean lips. He was accusing himself of associating with undesirable companions. The young people of our nation have suffered irreparable injury because of evil associations.

His confession preceded his cleansing. If you are interested to know why he branded himself and his companions as unclean, I will ask him. Isaiah answers: "Because mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." Oh, for a vision of the King today! Could we see him in his beauty, in his power, in his purity, I believe we would repent in sackcloth and ashes. If you would see him in his cleansing power, you must confess and forsake your sins. Isaiah received the baptism of fire. He says, "Then flew one of the seraphim unto me, having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar; and he laid it upon my mouth." This fire-cleansing immediately followed the honest confession of his uncleanness. If you would have victory over sin, drag out your besetting sin before Almighty God and call it by name, as Isaiah did. Drag the deadly serpent from its hiding-place and kill it with your confession.

The seraph placed a live coal upon Isaiah's lips. If he was to speak God's holy message his lips must be cleansed by fire. But lips of themselves cannot be unclean, spiritually speaking. "Out of the heart are the issues of life." The lips merely express and prove the purity or the rottenness of the heart itself. When the seraph put the live coal upon his lips, a mighty work of grace purged and thrilled his heart. He became a partaker of the divine nature. For our God is a consuming fire. He sits as the refiner of his people. "If any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creature." This baptism of fire cannot be found upon any bargain counter, but rather in the furnace of affliction.

Many years ago, in one of the cities of Illinois, a certain pastor seemed to have unusual power with God and with men. Many wondered because of it. They tried to explain it, but they found it impossible to account for his unusual power by human measurements. It was not his learning, personality, language or platform delivery. There was an undercurrent of conviction in every sermon which seemed to bring men and women to God. When a friend of mine was conducting a meeting in that city, the singer, Peter Bilhorn, sang one of his own compositions, "Blessed Jesus, keep me white." The minister whom I have mentioned ran from the tent weeping when Mr. Bilhorn had proceeded but a little way in the song. The next day, when he sang the hymn again, the same minister was unable to control his emotions, and hurried from the tent, weeping as he went.

My friend asked him why he could not bear to hear the song. He answered, "We had a little boy in our home who was four years of age; as sweet a child as you ever saw. That song was his favorite. He sang it around the house day after day. We thought it was best for him to lie down about an hour every afternoon, whether he slept or not. One day he was on the lounge in my study when his mother came to have him go on an errand across the street. He was singing 'Blessed Jesus, Keep Me White.' He got up and started across to our neighbor's home. He saw the street car coming up the street, but did not see the one running down the hill on the other track; so, in avoiding one car, he ran immediately in front of the other and was instantly killed. His mangled body was brought back to our door in less than five minutes after he had been singing that hymn." That minister did not quarrel with God, but made his way to the secret place and said: "O God, there is a void in my heart that the world cannot fill. Let the Spirit's fulness and power fill up this void." God heard his prayer. The baptism of sorrow became to that minister a baptism of fire. My friends, I know what it is to suffer heartaches and disappointments. I know what it is to struggle in the hours of night in prayer beca e of heavy burdens upon my heart; and I speak no e word when I say that if I am not where God n trust me, I am ready to be placed in the furnac f affliction again that I may know him in the powe f his resurrection!

ISAIAH'S experience brought assurance with t. He did not say, "I hope the live coal touched y lips," but he gives this as the basis of his assura e. The seraph said: "Lo, this hath touched thy lips; d thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purg ." Notice that after his confession came the cleans g! After the cleansing he heard the voice of the L d! You will notice, in the eighth verse, the connecting k in the story, "Also I heard the voice of the Lord. y-ing—" Clean people can hear the voice of the l d calling them to service. The unclean cannot hear le voice of the Lord. The fact is this: God does ot want any unclean or compromised person preten ig to do religious work. If you are not clean in the s it of God, he is not calling you to volunteer service, it he is calling you to clean up. Mr. Moody once d, "God does not want gold or silver vessels; he w ts clean vessels." I really believe that there are t u-sands who would do personal work and try to d souls to Christ, if they themselves were not face to e with their unclean lives. They know that there re people in their communities whom they could no p-proach on the subject of religion. Therefore, bec se they are unwilling to clean up, they stand in ir tracks.

When Isaiah was clean, he heard the voice of he Lord saying: "Whom shall I send, and who wi go for us?" Be careful, Isaiah; this may be a cal or foreign missionary work or home missionary v k. You may be compelled to go down in the slum is-tricts of Jerusalem and preach to outcasts. He vo n-teered. And yet God did not mention his name. od will not mention your name. He is calling for vo n-teers. Volunteers make the best workers. Volu er service is the most beautiful service in the world It not only involves love, but courtesy. Compu ry service means drudgery. Listen to the happy h se-wife singing about her work. Listen to the grum ng and complaining of the prisoners who are sente ed to hard labor for their crimes. Isaiah said, "Her m I; send me." Then he received his commis on: "Go and tell this people." God wants you to go nd tell his message of love and salvation to peri ng sinners. Isaiah asked, "Lord, how long?" He f nd that God was not issuing annual clergy per ts. God's commission is a life-work. There are som ex-ceptions, of course; but many times the man ho leaves the mission field or ministry acts like a an whom God had not called to the work. God answ ed Isaiah, "Until the cities be wasted without inhab nt, and the houses without man, and the land be u rly desolate, and the Lord have removed men far a ay, and there be a great forsaking in the midst o he land." In other words when there is no one left be warned, your work is at an end. Isaiah continu his work for sixty years and at the end of a lifeti of faithful service his heartless hearers stoned h to death.

Your influence is at stake in these days! Wha ou do will doubtless determine where some peopl will spend eternity. I wish that every pastor, every us-band, wife, child, father and mother would realiz hat God expects your faithful service, for your influe e is to be either a blight or a blessing.

MANY years ago, when Dakota Territory w be-ing settled, a young woman left her ho to visit her father and mother. She was the moth f a little child and was anxious for her parents to s her little one. Her father returned from the post fice and reported an approaching blizzard from the r th-west. The young mother, against the advice her father, cut her visit short and decided to hasten me. When she had traveled on her homeward journey me thirty or forty minutes, the blizzard broke up the country in all its fury. She became greatly agi ed, for she feared that the train might be snowbound She asked the trainmen repeatedly not to forget whe she was to leave the train, and they assured her hey would not forget. A traveling man sitting behi her calmed her fears with the statement that he was ing far beyond her station, and would tell her wl to leave the train. The engine began to lose power The train was running late. After a long, tiresome jo ney they came to the station preceding the one whe she desired to leave the train. The traveling ma aid.

Continued on page 308

---

*Rev. Dr. Oliver (interdenominational) is one of the leaders in American evangelism.

Venice in War Time

By REV. ALEXANDER ROBERTSON, D.D., Venice

AMERICANS who have visited Venice in times of peace and prosperity (what thousands have done so from New York alone!) would be rather surprised to see it ow in war-time. It has undergone a double chge—an outward, material one, and an inwa l moral and spiritual one; and if the former ha a tendency to sadden them, the latter, I am su, would gladden them. So there is compensati in all things, and in God's providence trouble ar sorrow and suffering are overruled for higher gol. As the apostle Paul says in Phil. 1: 12, re ring to his stricter imprisonment in Rome, "t I would ye should understand, brethren, that th hings which have happened unto me have falle ut rather unto the furtherance of the Gospel."

he one danger to which Venice is exposed is th damage caused by aeroplanes. Her security fr every kind of danger by sea or land is sure an certain. To the north, the fighting is in Austri beyond her borders, and no enemy ship can co e near the Italian Adriatic coast, far less reach th agoons. But nowadays battles are fought in th ir and from the air.

young Austrian aviator, who deserted and jo d the Italian ranks, as all Austrians of Italian de ent do whenever they can, has told us how he fle five times above Venice, as pilot in an aeropl e, when on each occasion a good many bombs we dropped. On the last visit he was ordered to above St. Mark's. He saw the Piazza full of pe le, sitting at the cafés and walking about, or st ding gazing up at their aircraft. A bomb was dr ped. Instantly the Piazza cleared, but soon it illed, and much curiosity was excited over the ho made in the pavement of the Piazza, between th Campanile and St. Mark's Church. This raid an others did considerable material damage, the mo serious being the destruction of the Scalzi Ch ch, with its magnificent ceiling-fresco by Ti olo.

protect herself against these air raids, Venice has ha to adopt certain measures, and these have in part br ght about the outward change I speak of. To be n with, St. Mark's Church, that unique building wi all the glorious mosaics exhibiting in its atriums th leading facts of the Old Testament and in the ch ch itself the life of our Lord—a book to read, a pl to worship in—has been fortified by sand-bags ins e and outside. The bronze horses above the ma door—a unique example of a Roman quadriga—ha been removed, and are safely stabled in a secure pla. Marble statues and art treasures removable ha also been taken away. Of course, the precious Bi cal mosaics in gold and color cannot be touched; bu it is hoped, should the church unfortunately be hit that the sand-bags may prevent the domes and va ts from giving way. The Doges' Palace, which Ru kin calls "the central building of the world," has ha all the arches of its colonnades and loggias below an above, inside and outside, built up, and besides th whole building, like St. Mark's Church, is protec d with sand-bags. Other public monuments, like th tatue of King Victor Emanuel II on the Riva dei Sc voni, and the Coleoni statue at San Giovanni, an Paulo, are all protected as well as is possible. The cla ic pictures which adorned the churches, and those ga ered in the great Belle Arti, have all been carefully packed by the government and taken away to Florence and Rome, the government guaranteeing their safe return when the war is over.

© Donald McLeish

Church of Santa Maria della Salute at the Entrance to the Grand Canal, Built in Commemoration of the Great Plague, 1630

THE hotels along the Grand Canal and throughout the city, which during normal times are filled with healthy, happy travelers, are now Red Cross hospitals, filled with sick and suffering soldiers. The Grand Canal, which by day used to be a scene of constant animation, as gondolas filled with sight-seers glided up and down, is now quiet and deserted. At night, when with barges lit up with colored lanterns and with singers and musicians on board, it used to be a scene of light and glory, it is now a silent street, a dark, still water. And the city after eight o'clock at night is a city of the dead, for no lights are allowed to be seen, neither public nor private. Canals, calles, shops, squares, campos, all alike are silent and dark. Of course, there is no possibility of going out, as the danger of stumbling into a canal is so great.

Outwardly, materially, Venice is a changed city—and so changed that its condition is now such as to sadden the hearts of American travelers, were they now to pay it a visit. But if Venice is changed outwardly from gladness to sadness, from light to darkness, inwardly the change has just been reversed; for here it is, I may venture to say, from darkness to light, from sadness to gladness. Solomon has said: "Sorrow is better than laughter, for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better." Well, the heart of Venice has been made better. Morally and spiritually, the war has benefited Venice. It has been said, "A nation is born in war and expires in peace." It seems a strange saying, but it is true, and the past and present condition of Venice is a proof of it. In times of peace and prosperity God is apt to be forgotten. Long ago Moses warned the children of Israel of this danger, when he said, "Beware that thou forget not God, . . . lest when thou hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein, and when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God." And David said, "When He slew them, then they sought him." Therefore, human nature being what it is, prone to evil, in times of peace and prosperity God is often forgotten; but in times of trial and trouble, of sorrow and suffering, then he is sought after. Thus Venice, happy and go-lucky, careless and thoughtless, given to money-making and pleasure-seeking, neglectful of Bible-reading and of Sabbath-keeping, of prayer and praise, has now become thoughtful and serious, self-forgetful and self-sacrificing. The Scriptures are being eagerly sought and read. A colporteur writes: "Since the outbreak of war I have had greater spiritual consolation in my work than hitherto. I have found people more disposed to pay heed to the message of the Gospel." That is the experience of all colporteurs and Bible-readers. Pastors also find their week-night and Sunday services better attended, and also a deeper religious tone in their congregations.

THE self-sacrifice exhibited by all classes in Venice is remarkable. Schemes of all kinds have been started to bring comfort to the sorrowing, healing to the sick, daily food to the poor, clothing to those exposed to cold and hardships, and all these charities are being willingly and generously supported. Drunkenness and crime are diminished. The people are living more "soberly, righteously and godly." Venice is being to a large extent reborn. There is a revival of true religion—not of an attachment of outward rites and ceremonies, whic content unconverted human nature and are observed as a matter of formality when no needs of the soul are felt, but a revival in the sense of soul-needs being felt, and of an ardent desire to have them satisfied. 'My soul thirsts for God, for the living God."

The old, outward appearance of Venice will one day return. The walls of her galleries and churches will one day become again resplendent with the gl w of her old classic pictures, her canals and piazzas and hotels will again be scenes of busy, happy life, and St. Mark's Church and the Palace of the Doges will be disclosed as of old, and in all their glory. Outwardly, materially, Venice will be as of old. Let us hope and pray that inwardly, morally and spiritually, her present condition may be permanent, that it may be continuous, intensified, until her character and her life are in complete harmony with her Christian monuments, and with that life of our Lord exhibited in color and figure on the walls of St. Mark's Church.

To Aid the Farmer

By UNITED STATES SENATOR MORRIS SHEPPARD

I AM glad to have your letter of February 17, asking for a summary of the provisions of my bill, S. 3704, to establish a Landschaft Sy em of Rural Credit in the United St es.

e bill provides for: 1. A National Ru l Credit Institute, and 2. Local La lschafts. The positions of Assistant Se tary of Agriculture for Rural Cr it and Assistant Secretary of the Tr sury for Rural Credit are created, wh h officials, together with the Secreta of Agriculture and the Secretary of th Treasury and three other citizens of th United States, are constituted "a bo, corporate to be known as the Na onal Rural Credit Institute, with po er to form local units or chapters kn n as Landschafts in the District of Co mbia, and in such states of the Un ed States as will admit the Institu for the purpose of exercising its po rs of chartering and supervising La lschafts within their respective lin s."

e members of the Institute are ap inted by the President with the co ent of the Senate. At least four of th members must have had ten years of rming experience, and at least one mu be an expert student in rural cr ts. Each is to receive a salary of $7,500. The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of the Treasury act as ex-officio chairmen in one-year rotation.

The Institute is to study the problems involved in promoting Landschaft organizations, make recommendations to Congress and the states bearing thereon and conduct a campaign of education. It is not to organize the Landschaft anywhere before legislation bearing on title registration and foreclosure is deemed sufficient to make the operation of the Landschaft effective. It has power to issue charters to local Landschafts and to exercise supervision and control over them, subject to the provisions of the Act.

© G. V. Buck

Hon. Morris Sheppard

The Landschaft is to be made up of farm-owners within a designated area, who desire long-term loans on the security of their farms. All members must be applicants for loans. Membership ceases on repayment of such loans. The voting power of each member is determined by the amount of his mortgages.

The local control of the Landschaft is divided between a general meeting, the directorate, and a council of administration. The directorate consists of a president, two vice-presidents, an attorney, a secretary and treasurer. The directorate designates an appraiser or committee of appraisal, and exercises general administrative power. No statement is made regarding the functions of the council of administration.

The Landschaft "may issue debentures and exchange them for annuity contracts secured by mortgages, executed by members in its favor on farms within its territory, in consideration of loans made to them. The contract between the member and the Landschaft is an agreement to pay an annuity to the Landschaft as long as membership continues, that is, until the loan is paid." Such annuity "consists of the interest at the agreed rate and usually one-half or one-fourth of one per cent. of the principal, both calculated on the full, original amount of the loan, together with a contribution to the expense of doing business." Bonds carry an interest rate of 3, 3½ and 4 per cent.

Members are subject to fines for

Continued on page 309

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

Facing the Future

YOU have heard of a cantilever bridge. Perhaps you have seen one being built. The odd structure pushes out inch by inch from either shore to a point in the middle of the river at which the two parts shall join. But the men at work on both shores place all their confidence backward instead of forward. For every inch they venture out toward the deeper water there must be a corresponding weight that holds them back to the shore. Every bit of progress is dependent on what is behind them, not on what is before them.

We find these backward-looking workers in every phase of life. The backward pull of precedent, the cautious linking of each day's work to all that has gone before, the dread of daring leaps, uncertainty and distrust about the future—things like these prevent many a life from being splendid and triumphant and truly beautiful.

There is nothing the matter with a cantilever bridge. It is a perfectly safe and useful sort of a bridge. The cantilever method will do for bridge building, but is not the best method for living.

The world's great men are those who felt the tug of the future rather than the tugs and weights of the past. If Columbus had followed precedent, he would never have found America. If Marconi had believed all that the earlier scientists had told him, he would never have reached the wonder of the Wireless. If Peter had looked backward to the ceremonial law and the ancient parchments, he would not have followed the voice of the angel of his dream out into the glories of the Christian conquest of the Gentiles.

A college professor once insisted before his class that it was absolutely impossible to change the lateral course of a projectile after it had left the propelling force. But the students knew that they had seen baseball players throw a ball that curved. They made the professor stand where he could watch the ball and convinced him that they were right. His experiments and studies had taught him one thing; life taught him something else.

Truth lies ahead, not behind. The Bible gives us the principles of truth, but life is constantly teaching us afresh how to apply these principles. Paul, like Peter, and more consistently than he, broke with Jewish tradition and laid the broad foundations of a world-wide Christianity founded upon grace, not upon law. Luther broke with the Roman hierarchy and founded not only a new Church but a new Age.

God is splendidly in the past, but he is gloriously, alluringly, compellingly, in the future.

> Every day is a fresh beginning,
> Every day is a world made new.

The writer to the Hebrews urges us to run with patience the race set before us, looking unto the risen Jesus, who is the author and finisher of our faith. Paul declared that forgetting the things that were behind he was pressing forward to those which lay before. "Remember ye not the former things, neither consider the things of old," Jehovah challenges. "Behold I will do a new thing. Now it shall spring forth."

There is no time for brooding over the sins, the errors, the heartaches, the disappointments of the past. There is no need to square up and fit in every day's achievement with all that has gone before. That is living with our minds back toward the shore. The living Christ beckons us onward and outward and upward toward undreamed of duties and unheard of hopes. It takes courage to live like this; it takes faith. But it is the sort of life to which Jesus calls us. We must not care if the past is against us; we must not care if the world is against us. We are going forward with God.

> Scarcely I catch the words of his revealing,
> Hardly I hear him, dimly understand;
> Only the power that is within me pealing,
> Lives on my lips and beckons with my hand.

So the poet F. W. H. Myers characterizes the passion of St. Paul.

> Whoso has felt the Spirit of the Highest > Cannot confound, nor doubt him, nor deny;
> Yea, with one voice, O world, though thou deniest
> Stand thou on that side, for on this am I!

Faces forward toward God, toward the splendid future that shall be on this earth, toward the transcendent rewards and opportunities of heaven—Christ's saints press on. Here is the Christian—

> One who never turned his back but marched breast-forward,
> Never doubted clouds would break,

> And at death he dares to > Greet the unseen with a cheer!

> While his friends
> Bid him forward, breast and back as either should be.
> "Strive and thrive!" cry "Speed—fight on, fare ever
> There as here!"

Undismayed

HENRY FORD is not discouraged. His Peace Ship venture, which has cost him some $375,000 thus far, has not been an altogether unprofitable experience. It has led him to conclude that "preparedness" for peace is needed more at this end of the line than anywhere else, and he is accordingly planning a home campaign, to cost a million dollars, and which will enlighten the country as to the "internal dangers" of militarism. The people, he believes, need this kind of education. Instead of generalizing, they must know the innermost details of the campaign to terrorize the nation which has been industriously going on for months past. The country must know the material facts. It must be informed as to the origin and purpose of those mysterious terrorizing dispatches which are said to have been sent almost hourly to the President during his recent speaking tour. Mr. Ford argues with reason that our citizens have a right to know all about the source of these alarms. If they were genuine and well founded, there can be no good reason for concealment. If they were meant to "throw a scare" into the popular mind and start a war panic, the originators should be forced into the limelight. Mr. Ford's plan has the merit of directness. It opens the way for the President to change his mind about privacy and executive prerogative, and to take the people fully into his confidence concerning the real causes behind the extraordinary effort to force the nation, in hot haste and at incalculable expense, to arm itself in readiness for a conflict, in the possibility of which he has frequently declared he did not believe.

Of course there are people who will deride Mr. Ford, just as every man who has advanced new ideas has been mocked at as an impractical dreamer. They will charge him with being unpatriotic and incapable of understanding the "American spirit." But what Henry Ford does understand is that the world is sick of war, and that the time has come for some man, bold enough to face derision and contempt, to stand forth in defense of the truth. He sees militarism as a gratuitous and insufferable burden, altogether out of tune with the real spirit of the age. He believes that to stand for the things that make for war is to stand for war itself, and that such a policy, once adopted, inevitably brings war. This is the substance of his message and it is one which it would be well to heed, for it has in it the essence of absolute truth.

Swindlers and Their Dupes

HOW credulous people are! How easily people are swindled! How easily money takes wing and flies away! We frequently read in the newspapers of the exposure of some clever scheme to separate people from their money. We are told of the apprehension and indictment of some smooth, plausible, conscienceless broker, who has been caught in the act of selling worthless stock or land to confiding investors. The toll this class of sharks takes from unsuspecting investors amounts annually to an immense sum. When the get-rich-quick bubbles burst and the law steps in, receivers are usually appointed so that something tangible may be saved from the wreckage. But, unfortunately, there is almost invariably a total loss to the patrons of the concern. And the pity of it all is that these recurring losses are so unnecessary; for in these days, when there are so many facilities for ascertaining the truth about the claims made by promoters and of determining the responsibility of the latter, no man need blindly send his money to a stranger for investment. The most recent case of swindling is recorded in the newspapers a few days ago of the breaking up of a chain of brokerage offices with headquarters at 68 Broad Street, New York City. It is estimated that the dupes of this concern have sent in nearly a million dollars, not a penny of which can be recovered. After the raid by the police, money still continued to come in through the mails at the rate of $15,000 per day. This concern was created and its business conducted by the world's most notorious international swindler, Dr. John Grant Lyman, a man who has been flirting with prison doors for twenty years, but whose adroitness has enabled him to keep outside the bars. His scheme was a simple one. With slight variations, it has been practiced hundreds of times by other swindlers. His method was to get investors to buy legitimate stock on the instalment plan. He sent out hundreds of thousands of alluring circulars recommending the immediate purchase of a certain oil stock. Probably everything said in circulars had the foundation of truth, for the st in question has recently advanced more than 1, per cent. above its par value. But the firm of swind never filled any orders for the purchase of oil, for ev order was immediately "bucketed" and the mo received through the mails was nightly carried from the offices and never returned. One of the m remarkable phases of this swindle is that many the victims were business men, who had easily command facilities for finding out if the concern a reputable one. But they did not take this precaut and accepted the unsupported word of a total strang But there is no need today for prudent people to their hard-earned money in such swindles. Com- tent expert advice on investments is easily obtain Many magazines offer their readers free counsel the investments of funds. Moreover, any ban would gladly advise depositors, who seek to withd their funds for more remunerative rates of inter For more than three years, the Christian Herald maintained a department of free investment coun Thousands of our readers have used this departm and have been saved from the pitfalls of fraudu securities and directed to those that are of ster worth. No reader of this journal, who has follo our advice, since the Department of Investm Counsel was established has lost money through swindling scheme. So long as people are ready accept the word of a stranger and are willing to sp money for "investments" of a fraudulent charac just so long will men of the Lyman type flou despite the vigilance of police, district attorneys postal authorities.

Congress and the Army

FROM the action of the House Military Af Committee on the Army Reorganization which it has drafted for Congress, it is evi that the "war scare" has had very little if influence in determining its course. It has perfor its task in a spirit of moderation, having taken to be well informed on the subject under discus Its members saw no "sky full of sparks," threate momentarily to involve the country in a warlike flagration. It showed not the slightest indicatio panic over "preparedness." Its recommendat for meeting the needs of improved national def may be summarized briefly as follows:

1. A standing army of 135,000 men with 7,000 officers former capable in time of war of being expanded to 275 the total peace footing, including complementary forces medical corps, to be 147,000 men.
2. The State militia to be federalized on a pay basis be recruited for 6 years, serving 3 years with the colors 3 as reserves, with authority to the President to use the militia force in time of need, without requisition; the mum strength of the militia to be 425,000.
3. Provides for 4 aerial squadrons.
4. A Federal nitrate plant to be operated jointly by government and private interests, to supply the nit needed for the manufacture of explosives and to be ca of meeting all requirements.

Under the reserve provision of the bill, it is mated that in ten years the country would hav disposal a reserve of over 1,000,000 trained men. whole measure is to involve an expenditure for next fiscal year of $155,000,000 as against $115,00 last year. It is probable that the House bill include a recommendation for the establishme State-supported military training schools, directe regular army officers.

Not one of the eighteen members composing House Military Affairs Committee brought up Continental Army proposition which the Presi had so strongly urged in his Western speeches was passed over in silence. Instead, the comm discussed the upbuilding of the National G as the logical second line of defense. Nor were of the other startling "preparedness" sugges considered. Universal service, a regular army million, and a budget of $300,000,000 and upw were not even mentioned. It seems to have bee plan of the committee to avoid extremes, an exclude alike the views of the peace-at-any- advocates and the hysterical war alarmists.

Meanwhile the Senate Military Committee framed a bill on lines very similar to those of House Committee measure The principal diffe between the two is that the Senate bill provide an army with a peace strength of 200,000 men figure recommended by the War College plan of years ago. A compromise between the two Hou expected.

These conservative figures are significant as sho that the Senators have been as little influenced by preparedness" scare as the Representatives. The tempt to stampede Congress into a program volving tremendous appropriations for national efense has been a sorry failure thus far. The people's presentatives evidently share the opinion of the eat majority of our citizens that, after having withood the danger of war for a year and a half, there is valid reason why we should not continue to do so, d that to adopt any other policy now would be to vite the crisis we have striven to avoid.

Walking

WHO has time to walk nowadays? A birdman is boasting that he will circle the globe in fourteen days. If a flying machine is not at hand the modern traveler takes an xpress train. Or if he has not time to wait for the ain he starts out in his automobile. Horses are beoming something like curiosities on most roads. And for walking, who indeed has time for that?

Yet the other day several groups of enthusiastic alkers set out in different directions from New York ong the wintry roads, some on tramps of twenty iles, some as far as ninety. These people believe in alking. They refuse to be lured from it by the arms of trains and air-ships. They take time for e scenery; they inspect the towns they touch; they ke quietness for talking—and for thinking.

That is, after all, the great value of a walk—that gives one time to think. Today's rapid pace makes ep thinking difficult. We haven't time to go to the ottom of things. Meditation is a lost art.

What price could tempt the forfeit of old memories quiet walks? Through the splendor of autumn aves, through the richness of summer's fulness, rough the delicate green of spring and the fragrance growing things, through the wide white snows of inter—tips of blue hills in the distance—or, in any ason, a stroll on the sands along the beating surf—n journeys like these we saw visions and dreamed reams and solved life's riddles, and understood anew fe's beauties.

Walks in the city are delightful, too. To discover a uaint corner, to happen upon a queer little bookstore, catch a flash of merriment from a child's eyes, to atch a glance through slum hallways of brave homeke merriment in the midst of poverty, to come upon a rave and silent church, to meet a swarm of school ildren romping home, later to see the fathers and rothers and big sisters flocking from their toil, this is get new sympathy with life itself, to feel new hopes helping folks to the best and pleasantest things.

A "hike" is a different sort of walk. There is in at pastime the suggestion of strength and speed and chievement. Certain ground is to be covered, a rtain goal reached, with exercise and companionip and jollity all combined.

But the choicest blessings of the road are for him ho will go alone, or with one best friend. Across the ver from old Heidelberg is the "Philosophen-Weg," e Philosophers' Path. It is a place for quiet thinkg, while the river gleams and memories of castle and ollege cluster. At Oxford the visitor finds Addison's alk and thinks of the philosopher letting the great ees help him think. Along the Thames, or the Rhone, r the Arno one strolls in time of peace, and tries almly to link up the lessons of the past with the roblems of the day. There will be sad walks in Euope when the war is done.

But, best of all, walking makes good atmosphere for raying. Enoch walked with God long ago. Two sad en walking from Jerusalem to Emmaus were joined y a matchless Stranger who struck joyous, comforting res in their hearts. And there is the promise that in he country yet unseen some "shall walk with him n white, for they are worthy."

Education's Rising Cost

WITH all the luxuries and many of the necessaries of life affected by the general rise in prices during the last eighteen months, it need surprise nobody to learn hat the colleges have already begun to fall in line ith the countrywide advance in prices. Today, the ost of a university education in many of our univeritiesis higher than at any time in their history. Living xpenses in city and country have risen, and the upard movement has reached almost all of our educaional institutions. New York and Columbia niversities have advanced their tuition fees from 3 to 25 per cent., the increased cost of laboratory work d the higher salaries of professors rendering this ecessary. Harvard has done likewise. The Women's olleges, Barnard, Bryn Mawr, Wellesley and Radcliffe, have followed the prevailing example. Cornell, Brown, Yale, Amherst, Johns Hopkins, University of Pennsylvania and several others have not yet ielded to the pressure. If the cost of living—food, entals and clothing—continues to mount, it would ot be surprising to find all of the colleges in line on he higher basis. To a large class of students, even the lightest increase in college expense must come as a ardship; yet it would seem to be inevitable. At Harvard, tuition fees have not risen in forty-seven ears, and doubtless there are other universities that an tell a similar tale of long and generous consideraion given to student needs. But a time like the present, when everything is mounting, leaves little room for discrimination.

The Dancing Mania

IF one might judge from the columns of the newspapers of the predominant feature of American social life at the present time, he might be led to the conclusion that in this, the most serious year in half a century, the country had been seized with a dancing mania. Dancing in hotels, in clubs, in theaters, in other places innumerable, is going on at a rate never known before. People dance for charity, for the benefit of the church, and for the sheer love of doubtful amusement. In restaurants and cabarets, they may be seen dancing between courses, age and youth mingling on the floor, while the waiters rearrange the tables. Hardly a public hall, apartment, or hotel parlor is without its regular contribution to the dizzy procession. We even hear of certain religious denominations which, in deference to popular demand, are preparing to let down the long-established ecclesiastical bars, and grant to their congregations the right to "shake a toe" and take their share in the social dissipation. To what is this amazing spectacle of a dancing nation going to lead? Is it merely a mild form of mania that will presently die out, or must we regard it as a violent development of the national love of excitement and dissipation that is as silly as it is pernicious? Dancing, drinking and the dangers that come of promiscuous acquaintanceships formed under such conditions are matters that challenge serious consideration. They cannot be lightly dismissed with a wave of the hand. Nero fiddled while Rome burned, and surely the spectacle of a nation so giddy and thoughtless that it dances while the world is passing through the greatest crisis in its history is one to make even the angels look on with wonder and amazement.

Building a Nation

GIVE us, O God, a house of prayer,
Upon whose simple faith to rear
A Christian nation, great and fair,
To every patriot builder dear.

Spare us this day from love of self,
From money greed, ill-gotten gain;
Make of us not a house of wealth,
If wealth thy love and laws disdain.

Make of us not a house of mirth,
Where mirth is only blatant revel;
Banish that laughter from the earth
That echoes laughter from the devil.

Build for us not a house of war,
Charged with ambition's hate and strife.
Seal up the temple-gates of Thor,
Teach us the wonder of thy life.

Give us, O God, a house of love;
A house of joy, whose open door
Reveals the hearth-fire's light above
The peasant group from distant shore.

Gathered to read thy Book, O Lord,
Sturdy of limb and brave of heart,
Simple in faith and true of word,
Fine product for the Builder's art.

Give us, O God, a house of prayer,
Of love, of joy that knows not hate,
And we shall set our builders there
To rear a nation truly great.

H. B. S.

Our Lenten Covers

THE Christian Herald feels that it is making a great contribution to both the religious and artistic life of the world in presenting H. Willard Ortlip's wonderful series of Prophecy Pictures. Seldom indeed is an artist found who combines intense religious conviction and enthusiasm and clear spiritual insight with a perfect and powerful art technique. Merely as paintings Mr. Ortlip's pictures are wonderful. His drawing, his color climaxes, the touch of glory on his figures and landscapes, these alone would make the paintings noteworthy. But with this rare skill is a deep comprehension and appreciation of divine things. Mr. Ortlip has studied prophecy. He feels the thrill of the visions of these ancient seers, who "testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow." He has tried to see again what these divinely illumined men saw long ago. He has studied not only their words, but the times in which they lived, their surroundings, their land. He has studied his New Testament to find the fulfilment of their prophecies. He has seen in the Gospels the historic facts which had been in the dreams of these holy men of God who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Each picture portrays the prophet and his actual surroundings, and also the vision that was then in his soul and upon his tongue, and which came at length to pass in the career of Jesus the Messiah.

We publish this week the first of a series of Lenten Covers. It portrays the Triumphal Entry, the vision Zechariah beheld—the Messiah riding upon the ass's colt into the Holy City, just, lowly, and having salvation. The prophet made his word picture of the vision (Zech. 9:9). Later it all came true, while the multitude waved branches of trees, spread their garments in the way and shouted, "Hosanna; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" (Matt. 21, Mark 11, Luke 19). Now we have this wonderful twentieth century color picture, showing the prophet's dream, and the happy scene, itself, from Jesus' life. A painting in the series will appear every week until the week following Easter. The pictures will portray the events of Passion week, leading to the cross and through the tomb to the glories of Resurrection and Ascension. One of the pictures of this Messianic series was published as our Christmas cover last December. Others will appear later this year. Mr. Ortlip insists that his wife, Aimée E. Ortlip, share the credit of this work, since the conception was originally hers, and since she has helped him in the necessary Bible study as well as in the beautiful designs with which each picture of the series is bordered.

We are sure that multitudes of Christian Herald readers will wish these pictures in more permanent form, and are hoping to make special arrangements to issue the whole series as an art portfolio when it is completed.

A New View of Preparedness

I HAVE read many of your letters on preparedness and no doubt your readers generally feel as I do—unable to agree with our good President and his coherents in this policy. We wonder what is the use of preparing for war with nations that are now fast depleting themselves. Could we possibly conceive of any of the nations of Europe willingly entering a war with this country after this conflict? How sick they must be! What heartaches—what saddened homes! The great difficulty England is having in driving her people to volunteer for the war is one of the signs of the times. Soon the people will arise en masse and say they will no longer be tools of emperors to satisfy their lust for lands, or the munition manufacturers in their greed for money.

The writer ventures a suggestion along the line of preparedness, as an alternative to this terrible waste of money: Instead of spending these billions for battleships and other defenses, why not lay them aside temporarily as a War-Peace Fund. At the close of the war, address the nations as follows:

"Here is a fund which we proposed to prepare for war with. Your sad conflict has brought us great wealth. The majority of our people would have been willing to have foregone this wealth, rather than have such a lamentable conflict. It has been difficult for us to see our way clear to avoid amassing wealth and remain neutral. We therefore, as a Christian nation, in the name of the Prince of Peace, make you the following proposal: If you will disarm and lend your influence to induce all nations to disarm, we will loan you this money at a low rate of interest to rebuild your homes, your factories, your roads and all that the war has destroyed."

This may be idealism, but what a grand realization it would be, and can be, if those to whom we have entrusted the reins of our government would go forward in the name of Christ to accomplish it. God grant it! G. F. YOUNG.

Tampa, Fla.

Comment by the Way

"INDIFFERENCE, languid interest or actual opposition," is the terse description of religious conditions in the Latin American countries, as reported by a Commission of the Panama Church Congress, which completed its work a few days ago. This is the prevailing attitude toward evangelistic work in the Southern countries, and the description bears out all that the missionaries and others have said and written on the subject. Further, it justifies the title of "the Neglected Continent," for the Christian churches of America, while sending their strongest workers to far-off mission fields, have overlooked too long the vast and spiritually needy field close at hand. One of the good results of the Congress may be a warmer interest and a more generous support of Protestant missions in South America generally.

THE news that a number of college fraternities have voluntarily prohibited the use of alcoholic liquors in any form is cheering and significant. In twelve states these organizations have taken the lead in a radical temperance movement which may help, in course of time, to revolutionize college life in America. Whether this be the result of new educational insight, or the influence of the great temperance wave now spreading in many states, it is equally welcome. Too long have good fellowship and sociability been cultivated in the fraternities at the expense of health, money and sound morals, to say nothing of the intellectual impairment involved. Many a promising career has been blighted by the convivial habits acquired in the "frats."

WHILE the "anvil chorus" is being hammered out with nation-wide clangor over the Brandeis appointment, and extra energy is being put into the strokes that reveal the appointee as a man who has changed his mind and his attitude regarding certain corporation matters, there is one resonant note that somehow persists and claims the public ear, in spite of the unmelodious uproar. It is the deep note of popular dissent from the effort on the part of the clamant group who are distressed because a great Hebrew jurist, who intellectually stands head and shoulders above his critics should be considered in connection with the Supreme Court. It has been questioned whether he has the "judicial temperament," but there is no question as to his fine legal ability and high character, and these are the recognized tests that have guided the appointing power in choosing Supreme Court justices in the past. But the real obstacle in the mind of the opponents of Mr. Brandeis is the fact that a Jew, who is also a distinguished social reformer, should be considered even for a moment in connection with a Supreme Court judgeship. If this is not the refinement of Jew-baiting, what else is it?

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

The Importance of Small Loyalties

SUNDAY, March 12. Luke 16: 10. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much." "He is greatest in his own class-room!" That was the testimony given by an eminently qualified student concerning one of the greatest and most powerful men of our time. He was a giant on small occasions. He revealed himself at his mightiest, not when he faced vast assemblies and received the homage of tumultuous applause, but when he was out of sight, when the crowd was away, and no reporter was linking him with the wider world. It is an index of rare wealth of character; and the test is specially pertinent to all who claim to be followers of Christ. Is the power of our spiritual current evident in commonplace tasks? Does it tingle even in apparent trifles? Are there flavors of the King's gardens in our passing courtesies? Is there about us the fragrance of the Kingdom when we are out of sight? Is the King's superscription on the penny as well as on the pound? Is it stamped on our unrehearsed conversation as clearly as on our prepared and conventional speech? Is it sealed on the secret thought as well as on the public deed? Are we faithful "in that which is least"?

We cannot overestimate the importance of small loyalties in our common fellowship. Petty negligences play havoc with the corporate life. If a tiny back window is left unlatched the burglar can get in! If the pointing of the house is overlooked the damp will penetrate the living rooms, and hard on the heels of damp there stalks the form of disease. Apparently trifling treacheries can despoil and paralyze the church. These insignificant infidelities are momentous. In national life every man who shirks his duty, however obscure and uninfluential it may seem, is surely draining the national strength. There is a leakage of blood wherever the smallest duty is left undone. But he who does his task, faithfully perfecting that which is least, enriches the circulating blood of the nation, and increases and consolidates its strength.

But we need great power if we are to do small things powerfully. When all our commonplace things are lit up, life will be very radiant. And that is the line of progress in the Christian life: we grow in the detection of the things which are least, and in our power to stamp them with the strength and beauty of the Lord. When our daily commonplaces are all perfected our witness to the grace of the Saviour will be perfected. J. H. J.

Jesus in the Village Synagogue

MONDAY, March 13. Isa. 61: 1-14. "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me." These words formed the foundation of our Lord's first address in the synagogue of his native village. He had sat there as a lad; the Levite who handed him the scroll of Scripture had not improbably taught him to read; the men and women who gathered in the seats, with strangely aroused interest, had grown up with him and were his familiars. It must have cost him much—speaking of it from the human side—to appropriate these great words to himself. But how much had happened since the days when he had left his home to follow the crowds to the scene of the Baptist's ministry! Much indeed had happened since the heaven had opened above his head, and the Spirit, with dove-like motion, had descended to rest in his heart.

It is very wonderful that under such conditions he maintained the olden customs of worshiping with the ordinary folk in the village synagogue! Surely we might suppose that he would have passed into a plane of religious experience that rendered the early sanctuary needless; but as his custom was, at Nazareth, where he had been brought up, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day. It is still more wonderful that, though he was born of the Holy Spirit, he had never spoken or acted like this until he had received a very definite anointing by the Spirit for his life-work. What a lesson for us all! If our divine Master awaited that anointing as essential to his public ministry, how much more do we need to seek for a similar chrism! F. B. M.

The Faith That Transforms the Life

TUESDAY, March 14. Mark 5: 36. "Only believe." Men for nearly two thousand years have looked to Christ as their ideal. Many characterizations have been made of his greatness. Some have said that it existed in his obedience, others in his suffering, still others in his friendship for men. Soaring above all these traits, however, and giving point and inspiration to them, was irresistible faith in his divine and omnipotent Father. He believed in God more implicitly than has any other person who has ever lived. This raised Christ above all human circumstances. This determined his Godhood.

To the Master, faith literally could remove mountains, since it was unfettered by doubt. He typified religion as a little child, looking up implicitly into his father's face and believing utterly in his parent. The child is not troubled with the shame and sorrow and fears of the universe—he leaves them to his father. These things are not in the child's consciousness; if they come, the confidence the child has in his parent surmounts them. Faith is first and foremost.

Christianity is thus at bottom a great adventure of faith. Faith is the foolishness that, the Scriptures tell us, confounds the wise. The righteous, says Paul, shall live by faith. A Christian is best defined as a believer; a non-Christian as an unbeliever. Christ staked all on this principle, which he uttered to the ruler of the synagogue, as a determining factor. His insistent rule of Christian power and success is: "All things are possible to him that believeth."

Do we realize what this means? All things! Do we act as though we really believed this first principle of Christianity? In my life this day, let me apply it to something definite. Two thousand years ago, the ruler of a Jewish synagogue believed and the seemingly impossible was performed. C. S. C.

The Love That Leads to Service

WEDNESDAY, March 15. John 21: 15-19. "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me"? Peter had been warned thrice, had thrice denied, and now was thrice asked if he really loved, that he might have an opportunity of wiping out the record of failure by new avowals of his attachment. Our Lord does not parade our failures before the sun, but probes us with questions that break us down. An old man, eighty years of age, who had grievously belied the promise of his early days, once found his way to the penitent form, crying, "I've come here to be broke."

Christ thrice questioned Peter's love, to convince him that nothing less would suffice for the shepherd's life and work. We must love men before we can really help them. But how can we love those who hate, persecute, and deride us? It cannot be unless we first love Christ. He therefore seems to say: "Dost thou love me? Henceforth there will be little opportunity of serving me directly; thou canst not shelter me in thy home, or help me by acts of thoughtful care; but as thou lovest me, and desirest to show thy love, expend it on those for whom I died and whom I long to see enfolded with my sheep."

There are two Greek words for love. The first used was of the closest intimacy of human love; but Peter, in his humility, did not dare to take this upon his lips, and he chose the term for a more temperate and respectful affection, as though he could not bring himself to talk of love in its deepest and most passionate aspect. He felt an incongruity between such an expression and his recent fall. Our Lord in his last question stooped to his level. He is so eager for our love that he will take all that he can get in the hope of raising wild flowers to rare exotics beneath his culture. Thus Peter, after Pentecost, in his Epistle returned to our Lord's first challenge and used his word: "Whom having not seen we love." F. B. M.

Listening to Conscience

THURSDAY, March 16. I Kings 19: 12. "And after the fire, a still small voice." Have you ever, in times of important decision, seemed to hear almost an audible voice directing you? Have you not felt that, at a certain point in your temptation to do wrong, there was a presence near to warn, to hold you back from sin? Some one has said, "There is always a point in temptation when victory is possible." We are usually conscious or half conscious of this decisive moment. The still small voice of conscience, which is the voice of God, speaks; happy the man who has learned to listen and to act promptly in accordance with its dictates.

This voice comes to me with peculiar clearness in times of trouble or fear. It seems to take on almost a personal form; it always speaks to me in words something like this: "Do not fear, it will be all right; straight on and do the right!" This assurance, h ever, is always connected with action and w renewed trust in the unseen voice. I can not thin anything that has been more salutary and certai my life than this personal experience.

People have felt this in different ways. Tenny wrote of the "Two Voices." It is by conviction th by listening for and following this "still small voic which Elijah heard above the wind and the ea quake, it becomes more clear by the very effort listening for it. We can train our ears to hear the mu of God's presence, even as a seaman trains his e to see faint objects far off at sea. We need to pray be made sensitive to this voice of the Highest wit us. We need to cultivate watchfulness for the a of his presence that attends us. C. S. C

The Quickening of the Soul

FRIDAY, March 17. Gen. 2: 7-25. "Man becam living soul." It is obvious that our first pare knew God. When the soft evening breeze was brea ing over the landscape as they walked through glades of Paradise they communed with him. T were living souls, but they had an undoubted real tion of their almighty Friend. Probably all relig begins on that level. It is the result of soul-activ We fear God, we seek after him, we abstain fr evil words and deeds, we worship. Our religious is largely one of the intellect, of emotion, of natural sense of awe and reverence. We do not that this is invariably so; but it is by no means uncommon experience for those who lay great st on doctrine, morality, or ritual.

Adam, we are told, was the figure of him that to come. "The first man Adam became a living s the last Adam became a life-giving Spirit." Rom. 5: 14 and 1 Cor. 15: 45. There is a higher le than that of the soul. The soul has an affinity w the world around us through the body, and affinity with the spiritual world through the spi but, alas! our spiritual aptitude often resemble disused muscle of the body. It is atrophied by dis until Jesus quickens it. He is a quickening or l giving Spirit. In other words, he imparts his own l so that "the Spirit of life, which is in Christ Jesu makes us free to mount into the life of God. The f Adam, who is the Lord from heaven, touches spirit with his Spirit, and we understand what P meant when he said: "The natural man receiveth the things of the Spirit of God, because they spiritually discerned; but we have received, not spirit of the world, but that which is of God, that may know the things which are freely given to us God." F. B. M

The "Wonderfulness" of Jesus

SATURDAY, March 18. Isa. 9: 6. "His Name sl be called Wonderful." Christ is wonderful prophecy. He was given names a thousand ye before the Christmas morning—names descriptive his living, dying, rising and reigning. He is wonc ful in fulfilling more than three hundred prophec regarding himself; wonderful in those yet to fulfilled; wonderful in his miraculous works; wonde in the experience of his followers; not only blind e were opened, but stone-blind souls. Not only w dead bodies quickened, but men dead in trespas and sin were raised to newness of life. Christ wonderful in history; around Mount Calvary h torians have written B. C. and A. D., covering all little arc of time in the great circle of eternity. H wonderful in art and learning; take Christ away a you would rob the galleries of the nations; erase name from literature and libraries would be destroy He is wonderful in his love, which is only his ot name for God. The music of his love is melodi in nature, beautiful in the Bible, glorious in hum hearts. It is the song of the ages; its thrill has bu hospitals, homes, churches, and is building mansi in immortal realms. Jesus is wonderful as victor o death, hell and the grave, over nations and kingdo over hearts in rebellion. He will be wonderful in second coming and in his eternal reign.

We may link together names like Washington a Lincoln, but no human name in the sense of equal can be united with the name of Jesus. Great a noble human beings come into view as the years going by, but there will never be another Chri E. W. C

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

Iollie Fancher Passes Away

MOLLIE FANCHER, known throughout the world as "the famous invalid," passed to her reward in her home in boklyn February 12. On a beautiful d in June, 1865, while riding a spirited hse given to her by her father, Miss Fncher was thrown. She suffered an iiry to her spine and for several nths was unable to leave her bed. S got better, and then was caught and dgged by a street car, bringing back t old trouble and sending her to bed, were she remained over fifty years. Oly a week before her death she cele-lted the fiftieth anniversary of her ialidism. She was a bright, beautiful sit, full of faith in God, and was so pient and victorio over her infirmity tt people came fm all parts of our on and other countes to visit her. She lightened and lped thousands and ts of thousands who cne under her miniy. At the time of t accident Miss Fncher was engaged t be married. She cceled the engagemnt, although the yng man was willi to marry her. It lked as though all lht had been shut o from her life, but gat light was let in Te four walls of her rm did not fetter l; she broke them dvn with her overcning faith and eimed the universe a her home. When t visitors asked her hv she could endure fy years of such aiction, her favorii reply was: "In i distress I called ton the Lord, and cd unto my God. I heard my voice out of his temple, and d cry came before him, even into his es. He brought me forth also into a lge place." (Ps. 18 : 6, 19.)

Butterfly Orchid, a Singularly Beautiful and Fragrant Flower

ORCHIDS of one kind or another are found in most parts of the earth, in the temperate and torrid zones. In Europe the temperate parts of Asia, in North America and the Cape of Good Hope, they grow on the ground, in the woods, in marshes, and in damp meadows; while in the West and East Indies in Madagascar and other islands in that region in the moist forests of Brazil, and the warm parts of Central America and Mexico, they do not care for the earth but fasten themselves to the trunks or branches of trees and to rocks and live largely on the atmosphere. One of the most exquisitely beautiful and deliciously fragrant of this family of plants is the Butterfly Orchid (Oncidium Papilio), a native of the West Indies. It has the form of a butterfly, with extended wings the antennæ having a great part in completing the resemblance. The wings of the flower are striped with brown and yellow, forming a beautiful contrast. The orchid is an aristocratic flower. It is the delight of the horticulturist and one of the fads of the millionaire. He sends his special gardener to almost any nation to find some new specimen of this beautiful family of flowers, and will spare no means or care in its cultivation. The subject of our picture is one of the many treasures in the United States Botanical Gardens. The poet has given language to the flowers. They all reflect the Absolute Beauty, and tell of his love. Christ, who incarnates that beauty, is thus described. "I am the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys. (Song of Sol 2: 1)

icht Distributes Literature

CAPTAIN C. P. PARSONS, ex-president of the Maritime Excnge, once a ship-owner, brigadier gieral in the Civil War, and sea captn in the West India trade, gives an aount of the work of the Messenger l, a fifty-ton boat that takes books a periodicals to ships in the harbor. I is run under the auspices of the ssion Yacht Association, which makes its business to collect periodicals by t ton and distribute them among feen thousand ships a year. The fst Messenger was built with contritions from ship captains and men. e second was an old launch of the ttleship Maine, recovered from the eek and fitted out with an engine. e third, the present Messenger, is w, built last year for the work. The rk of collecting the magazines was gun in Pittsburg. Now they are st in large numbers from different arters, and the Messenger takes em to piers and on board all kinds of ssels that have men on board. The nishing of wholesome literature to the lor is a blessed benevolence. Such distribution of secular and religious rature contributes to the broad sion thus given by the Psalmist: "hey that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters, these see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep." (Ps. 107 : 23, 24.)

Blind Congressman's Thanks

A TOUCHING scene was enacted in the House of Representatives the other day when Thomas D. Schall, a blind member from Minnesota, thanked his colleagues for passing in his absence a resolution giving him the personal service of a page at all times. In his words of thanks he said: "To the blind man, work is a pleasure, and by giving me the means of doing more work you have expanded my pleasure and released me from bondage and given me freedom. The hands which reach out to me and the voices which encourage me make bright the otherwise gray days and give me a renewed zest to fight the game of life. They say that whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth. I have often wished that he had not loved me quite so much, but you know Robert Louis Stevenson says that so long as a man has a friend he is not useless, and I find that I have many friends, and through their kindness I am not useless." How beautiful this action upon the part of the congressmen and how gracious and timely the reply of the blind member. Added to his native ability and character it was the hard work of which he spoke that enabled him, despite his serious handicap, to win in "the game of life" May he be spared to do hard work for his constituency and the nation. The hard work mentioned by the blind congressman is necessary to success in the spiritual realm, according to this injunction: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." (Phil. 2 : 12.)

Light and Efficiency

UNTIL comparatively recently, very little attention has been paid to the relation between light and efficiency in the industrial plants of the country. It is estimated that the cost of injuries to workmen amounts within a year to a quarter of a billion dollars, and that anywhere from five to twenty-five per cent. of those injuries can be traced to bad illumination. Workmen stumble over boxes, run into wheels, fall down trapdoors, and hurt themselves in apartments not sufficiently lighted. This is a great shame that can and must be prevented. Besides, a well-lighted plant in the daytime, rendered brilliant at night with artificial light, gives good cheer, and swiftness and accuracy to the task at hand, and greatly increases the output. The new manufacturing plants of the large cities, many of them, are recognizing this necessity of good light for the greatest efficiency, and installing their appliances accordingly. Light is a good thing to give life and health to plant, animal and man, to check crime and promote industry. Light is the life of the soul, and Christ is that light. "In him was life, and the life was the light of men." (John 1 : 4.)

Increase of Pneumonia

THE United States Health Department has just issued a bulletin of warning on pneumonia. It says that ten per cent. of the deaths of the country are due to it. Tuberculosis and heart disease, each causing one-ninth of all fatalities, are the only diseases that outrank pneumonia as the enemy of human life. Seventy per cent. of all cases of pneumonia occur between December and May. The bulletin warns against exposure to cold, against crowded or overheated rooms, contact with those infected, and the use of alcohol, in these words. "The most important agent is alcohol. It is in truth the handmaid of pneumonia, and there is none more certain of success, especially if liberally and continuously used." Diseases of the body are types of the diseases of the soul, to be cured only by a higher power. "Who healeth all thy diseases, who redeemeth thy life from destruction." (Ps. 103 : 3, 4.)

Returns Marjorie's Dime

A LITTLE 13-year-old school girl of Brooklyn wrote a letter to the New York Tribune enclosing a dime with which to start a popular fund for building a new battleship for national defense. She said, "My grandpa and great-grandpa were soldiers. If I was a boy I would be a soldier, too. Mamma gives me a dime every week for helping her. I am sending you this week's dime to help build a battleship for Uncle Sam. I am a true blue American, and want to see Uncle Sam prepared to lick all creation like John Paul Jones did. Please call the battleship America." The editor sent the letter to Mr. Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, who sent an answer to the child, recognizing her patriotic intention but saying the necessary ships would be furnished by taxing the whole people. Marjorie's patriotism is a rich treasure, but she could have served her country and contributed to its "preparedness" for peril better by putting her attention on her books at school, by working in the home with her mother, and spending the proper time in skating, coasting, or some other healthful sport, than in poring over the columns of "preparedness" in the papers, and, crazed with its hysteria, rushing out into the limelight to help Uncle Sam lick the earth. The child's whole performance is a fitting accompaniment to the wild plans of some who have the responsibility for the country's protection, and who, knowing that the afflicted nations of Europe have lost much of their best blood and all their money, rave at the ghost of impossible enemies and demand that the country turn into a camp of war. A proper preparation for our nation's defense is wise and just; but to yield to the war devil that is deluging the earth with blood as never before would be a sin before God and man. Let the nation's energy now go out .in prayer to God and in pleading with the warring peoples for peace, and take up this prophecy: "The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet." (Rom. 16 : 20.)

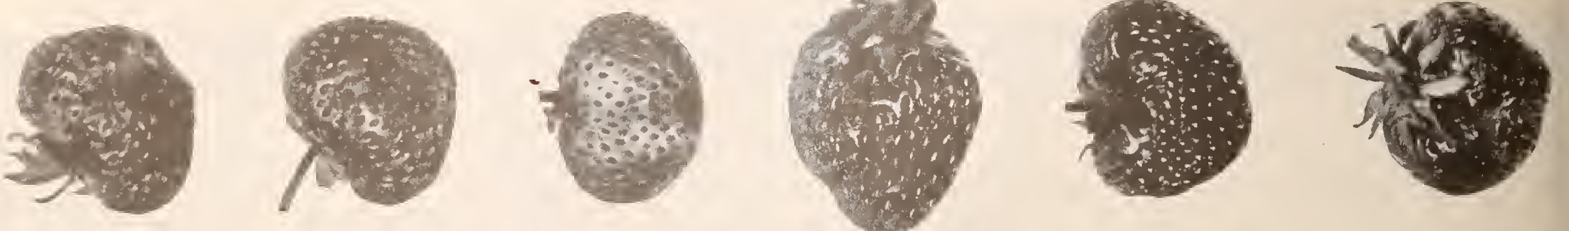
Undaunted Missionaries

THE American Board has advices from its workers in European and Asiatic Turkey up to February 14. In Constantinople, notwithstanding the war, the colleges and mission schools have a full quota of students, the chief difficulty being the procuring of fuel and supplies. In Brousa, the missionaries are busy with relief work and school duties. In Smyrna high food prices prevail and there is a good deal of suffering. The missionaries, however, are in good spirits and student work continues, with relief work added. At Marsovan the mission college and schools are running, with a decreased number of pupils and fewer missionaries. At Van nearly all the main buildings have been destroyed, and the missionaries have left. At Harpoot there is a good force of missionaries still at work, and colleges and schools have a fair attendance. At Marash the work is still going on, also at Adana, Tarsus and Hadjin. Summarized, of the 163 regular missionaries connected with the work in Turkey, about 70 are out of the country and more are likely to follow. For the most part the missionaries of the Cross here and elsewhere, have "Ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ." (Acts 5 : 42.)

Farming in Alaska

CONTINUING
FRANK G. CARPENTER'S NARRATIVE

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter



Six of the 4,000 Varieties Grown at the Sitka Station, Alaska

I HAVE just had my first view of the practical possibilities of Alaskan farming. Our Agricultural Department has one of its experimental stations at Sitka, and here also is the headquarters from which the three other experiment stations are managed. One of these is at Rampart, on the Yukon River, near the Arctic Circle. Another is near Fairbanks in the rich valley of the Tanana, in the heart of Alaska, and a third is on the Island of Kodiak, situated within a short distance of Seward, the ocean terminus of the new railroad. Kodiak is bigger than Porto Rico. Its specialty is stock rearing and dairying. The Fairbanks station is in the center of a great agricultural region. It is devoted to all-round farming. Rampart is so far north that it forms the best place for the breeding of oats, barley and wheat for the cold lands. The experiments at Sitka are devoted to vegetable gardening, and the raising of berries and other small fruit. This part of the territory is mountainous and is largely made up of islands. It has no great farming areas, and the crops come from patches of land about the bays or in the valleys. Nevertheless, there are many small farms, and the mining communities and towns are getting some of their supplies from the country about.

The experiment farm at Sitka lies under the shadow of Mount Verstovia, within a quarter of a mile of the town. It is gently rolling, rising from the muskeg or swamp up the slopes of the hills. The farm has a great greenhouse or fruit-forcing plant, and the fields about this are devoted to vegetables and grain and to gardens and orchards.

There are acres of strawberries and raspberries and orchards of apples, cherries and apricots. The strawberries are finer than I have seen in any part of the United States or Europe. There are hundreds of rows of them. The plants are vigorous and are loaded with fruit. I saw some berries almost as big as hen's eggs and many over an inch in diameter. The berries have been produced by cross-breeding the wild native plants with other strawberries brought here from all parts of the world. According to Professor Georgeson, 4,000 different kinds of strawberries are grown here, and nearly all of them have more or less Alaskan blood in their veins. I wish you could taste them. They are strawberry all through. Only a few have a tart flavor, and the most are so delicious that they fairly melt in your mouth. The plants have a hardihood not known to our strawberries. They keep on bearing for about two months during the summer, and are still yielding fruit as late as September.

Among the other experiments going on at this station is the crossing of the red and yellow salmonberries with the raspberry. The salmonberry is as big as the largest blackberry, but it is red or pale yellow in color. It is delicious to taste, and is used in great quantities all over Alaska. Raspberries also will grow well almost anywhere, and the crossing is successful, although the new fruit partakes more of the flavor of the salmonberry.

The station is also breeding apple trees that will grow in many parts of the territory, and it is making experiments with cherries and with filberts and other nuts of the hardier varieties.

The most surprising feature of the gardening is in pansies, poppies, roses and other beautiful flowers. Among the pansies now growing are many as big around as the bottom of a tumbler, and some are as black as ink and as soft as silk plush. There are also roses of exquisite perfume and poppies of the most brilliant red and as big around as a tea plate. These poppies come from Asia, and they are perennial. They are among the new wonders of Alaska.

I WENT over the experiment farm with Professor C. C. Georgeson, who, under Secretary Houston, is in charge of Uncle Sam's farming interests in Alaska. In the last eighteen years he has traveled all over the territory, studying its soil, climate, plant life and farming possibilities. He has been tho chief manager of a half dozen different experiment stations and has raked the world for grasses and plants suited to this part of the United States.

We were looking at some alfalfa grown from seed imported last year from Siberia, when I asked Professor Georgeson to give me his idea of the future of Alaskan farming. He replied:

"There is no doubt but that Alaska will some day support a large farming population. I see no reason why the territory should not eventually have a stable population of three millions or more. We are discovering new plants and grains every season. I estimate that Alaska has about 100,000 square miles that can be used for agricultural purposes. That means that it has 64,000,000 acres, or an area two and a half times that of Ohio or Virginia, that can be turned into farms and ranches.

"Of this territory about fifty-seven million acres lie in the interior beyond the coast range of mountains. The other six or seven million acres are in the coast region and on the islands near by. Each section will have its own crop based on its soil and climate. Some of the islands will be devoted to grazing and dairying, while Southeastern Alaska, where we are now, will have gardens from which vegetables will be shipped to Seattle, commanding a higher price than the Puget Sound products on account of their superior quality. Indeed, such shipments are even now being made."

"Do you think that Alaska will ever raise dairy products for the United States market?"

"There is no reason why it should not. The climate of the Aleutian Islands is mild, and hardy cattle and sheep can in many seasons run out all winter or be kept over with a small amount of hay and fodder. We are now wintering our cattle on the Island of Kodiak on the equivalent of two tons of hay per head. We do not use hay, but put green grass into the silos. The cattle are kept shut up at night, but that is to protect them from the bears rather than on account of the cold. We can raise cattle almost anywhere in the Yukon Valley, but the trouble there is the long winters, when they have to be fed for something like eight months of the year.

"In the interior of Alaska the grass grows almost everywhere to the height of one's head," continued Professor Georgeson. "I have seen many patches as tall as a man on horseback. A few years ago I visited the Holy Cross Mission on the Lower Yukon. The mission station owned a small herd of cattle, which it had in a pasture. Adjoining this were about ninety acres of wild grass that had been reserved for hay. I asked permission to turn the cattle into this tract, that I might photograph them. They were driven in, but I could not make the picture. The animals were lost in the grass, which towered two or three feet above their heads. Such grass is found in Southwestern Alaska, and everywl e on the moist ground throughout e interior. It makes valuable hay if s cut early, but if left to ripen it beco s tough and woody.

During 1915 the Government Farm at Fairbanks Harvested 1,200 Bushels of Grain

"At Fairbanks such hay now br s $50 and upward a ton, while impo d alfalfa sells for $125 a ton. I remem r that I got as much as $240 a ton r grain hay when we had an experin t station on the Copper River near C- dova, and that we often sold hay t e for as high as five cents a pound. is was before the people had started fa n- ing. After that thoy sent in object s to tho Agricultural Department t Washington, saying that the exp i- ment station ought not to compet n the markets. The matter was brou t before Secretary Wilson. He rep d that $240 a ton was too high for i, and ordered us to keep on raising it d selling it until the price went dow o $75 a ton. He said that he thou t $75 a ton was enough for hay anywhe "

"How about your experiments h alfalfa?"

"THE experiment stations have n working for several years on t problem, the most of our experim s having been made at Rampart, r north on the Yukon. We have brou t in seed from many parts of the ea h, but so far have found only one spe s that was absolutely hardy. This a yellow-flowered alfalfa indigenous o Siberia, whence the seed came thro h our Department of Agriculture. It s smaller leaves than the common alfa a, and the stems are more slender. e flowers are yellow instead of pu e, and it has this fault: that the pods it open and scatter much of the see n the handling. That alfalfa has n er been winter-killed at the Ram t station, and we have made sev al crosses between it and other vari es which are nearly as hardy."

"Tell me something about the so f Alaska. How does it compare with t of the best parts of the United Stat "

"The best soil of our Middle W "replied Professor Georgeson, "ca e duplicated in very few places on e h. I doubt Alaska has any agricult al area equal to that. The country ha o prairie lands, and there are no ex - sive bodies of uniform quality. ll, some parts of the country aro excel t for farming. The silt loam of e Tanana Valley will compare in pro c- tiveness with some of the best soi o be found elsewhere, and we have at e Fairbanks station land that is exce d only by the rich prairie soils of e Middlo West. That land is a light l m of a grayish color. It is sandy, t free from gravel, and it holds e moisture. It can be easily wor l. We have been growing wheat upo it at the rate of fifty bushels to the a e, and we have had average yields of s y bushels of oats. There are good l s in the Matanuska and Susitna Vall s, and, in fact, there are tens of mill s of acres that can be made into far "

The conversation here turned to e grains of Alaska, and I asked Profe r Georgeson what grains could be - cessfully raised during the short s - mer season. He replied:

"We are now ripening all of the l - ing grains at our interior experim t s tions. During 1915 we matured and h vested on our farm at Fairbanks t lve hundred bushels of grain, comp ing wheat, rye, barley and oats. It is rue that these were made up of the e liest and hardiest varieties, but the d elopment of varieties suitable to t country is one of the tasks of the e eriment stations. With that in view w have made a number of crosses and h e succeeded in producing many p mising hybrids. We are raising earli and more productive barleys than t best we have been able to mature in more southern latitudes, and we h e a dwarf spring wheat that is very e ly. It came from an experiment s ion in Siberia. We are now making m ny experiments as to winter rye a are succeeding. We are also exp imenting with winter wheat and I t nk we shall eventually produce all t grains for both flour and feed that w be needed by the people who in abit the territory, and that as fr ght rates fall it may even pay to e ort grain to the States. Today all g in is high in the interior of the count Feed-grain brings $90 a ton at F rbanks and $104 at Rampart."

Where will be the farming center of A ska?"

There will be many such," said Prof or Georgeson. "Farms will spring up a ut every important mining settlem t. Fairbanks is the largest of the g l camps today, and that region has

Produce Exhibit of the Tanana Valley, Alaska

t most and best farmers. Since the g ernment has decided to build the r road two or three hundred families h e located homesteads in the Matan ska Valley with a view to supplying t demands of the coal mines of that r on. There are a number of succ sful farms in the neighborhood of S ard and many small farms about J eau, which is another mining center o great importance. There are little f ns scattered throughout this part o the territory, and indeed wherever t re is a local market you will find a farm center. These centers will e rge and as new settlements are est lished other farms will be opened u and Alaska will become a great and p ulous state."

Would you advise Americans to c e to Alaska to engage in farming?"

Yes, if they understand the condit ns and know what they are going to fi l when they reach here and are r dy to stay and grow up with the c ntry. I would not advise people to r h in pell-mell and take up homes ds wherever they can be found s ply because Uncle Sam will give t m a farm for nothing. The wouldb speculators will stand a slim chance o making money by a rise in land v ues. There is no land for sale, and U cle Sam is the sole owner. He will n sell his lands, but will give them a ay only to bona fide settlers and t those who will keep on the job and a in the development of the country.

The farmers most likely to succeed are the men who know the climate and what crops can be grown. Scandinavians, and especially Norwegians and Swedes and Finlanders, have been brought up under conditions such as we have here. They expect long winters and short summers; they understand the methods of culture necessary, and they are, I believe, best suited to the country."

"How much money should a young man have who wishes to take up a homestead? Give me some idea of the cost of clearing the land."

"The right young man might come to Alaska and make a success without any money," said Professor Georgeson. "But in that case he would have to work for wages for other farmers or in the mining camps to get sufficient to live on until his farm paid. He would have to endure hardships and his path would not be an easy one. On the other hand, if he had a thousand dollars or so he could buy a team of horses or yoke of oxen and some farm tools. He could put up a modest house and furnish it.

"He might still have to work out occasionally, but he could soon clear enough land and get a sufficient start in cattle, sheep and poultry to make life on the farm practicable. Such a man should locate on land that is already surveyed by the government, and he should investigate the cost of implements, furniture and freight before starting. He will find the freight rates high. The average price of carrying goods from Puget Sound to Fairbanks is about $60 a ton. If the man could have four or five thousand dollars it would be still better, but with that amount of money he could make a fair start almost anywhere in the States.

"There is one thing that should be well understood," continued Professor Georgeson, "and that is that the settler must have enough muscle and skill to work his own farm, and should expect to do the most of the work himself. If he starts out paying wages for clearing land he will soon be bankrupt. The wages of Alaska are governed by those in the mines, and until recently the mineowners have been paying as high as $7.50 a day without board. I remember that when I started the station at Fairbanks I wanted labor. I went into a saloon where a score of loafers were standing about the bar. I asked all who wanted to work to come outside. A half dozen responded, coming out wiping the froth from their lips. I offered $5 a day and board. They laughed at me and said they could not work for such wages as that. I had to pay $7.50 a day at the station there until the present year, when the wages fell to 75 cents an hour or $6 for an eight-hour day. At the former rate of wages it cost us on the average about $125 an acre to clear the land."

To be continued

Campbell's CONDENSED
OX TAIL
SOUP
JOSEPH CAMPBELL COMPANY
C

"I'll never let go of Campbell's!"

Of course not. Campbell's is an inside protection.

Umbrellas and over-shoes are all right, but what you need most of all to fight the elements is the warm-blooded vigorous health which comes from good food and good digestion. And right here is where you want

Campbell's Ox Tail Soup

Rich with nourishment and delicious in flavor, this popular Campbell "kind" is the very best sort of a foundation for building up strength and vitality.

We use for this soup selected ox tails of medium size—the best size for making soup. And we prepare them as carefully and daintily as it could be done in your own home kitchen.

The meaty marrow sliced joints are combined with diced carrots and yellow turnips, barley, celery and parsley in a purée made from whole tomatoes, and flavored with a dry Spanish sherry which we import especially for this purpose.

Order a few cans of this wholesome soup from your grocer. Try it for dinner today, and see if it isn't one of the most delightful and satisfying dishes you ever tasted.

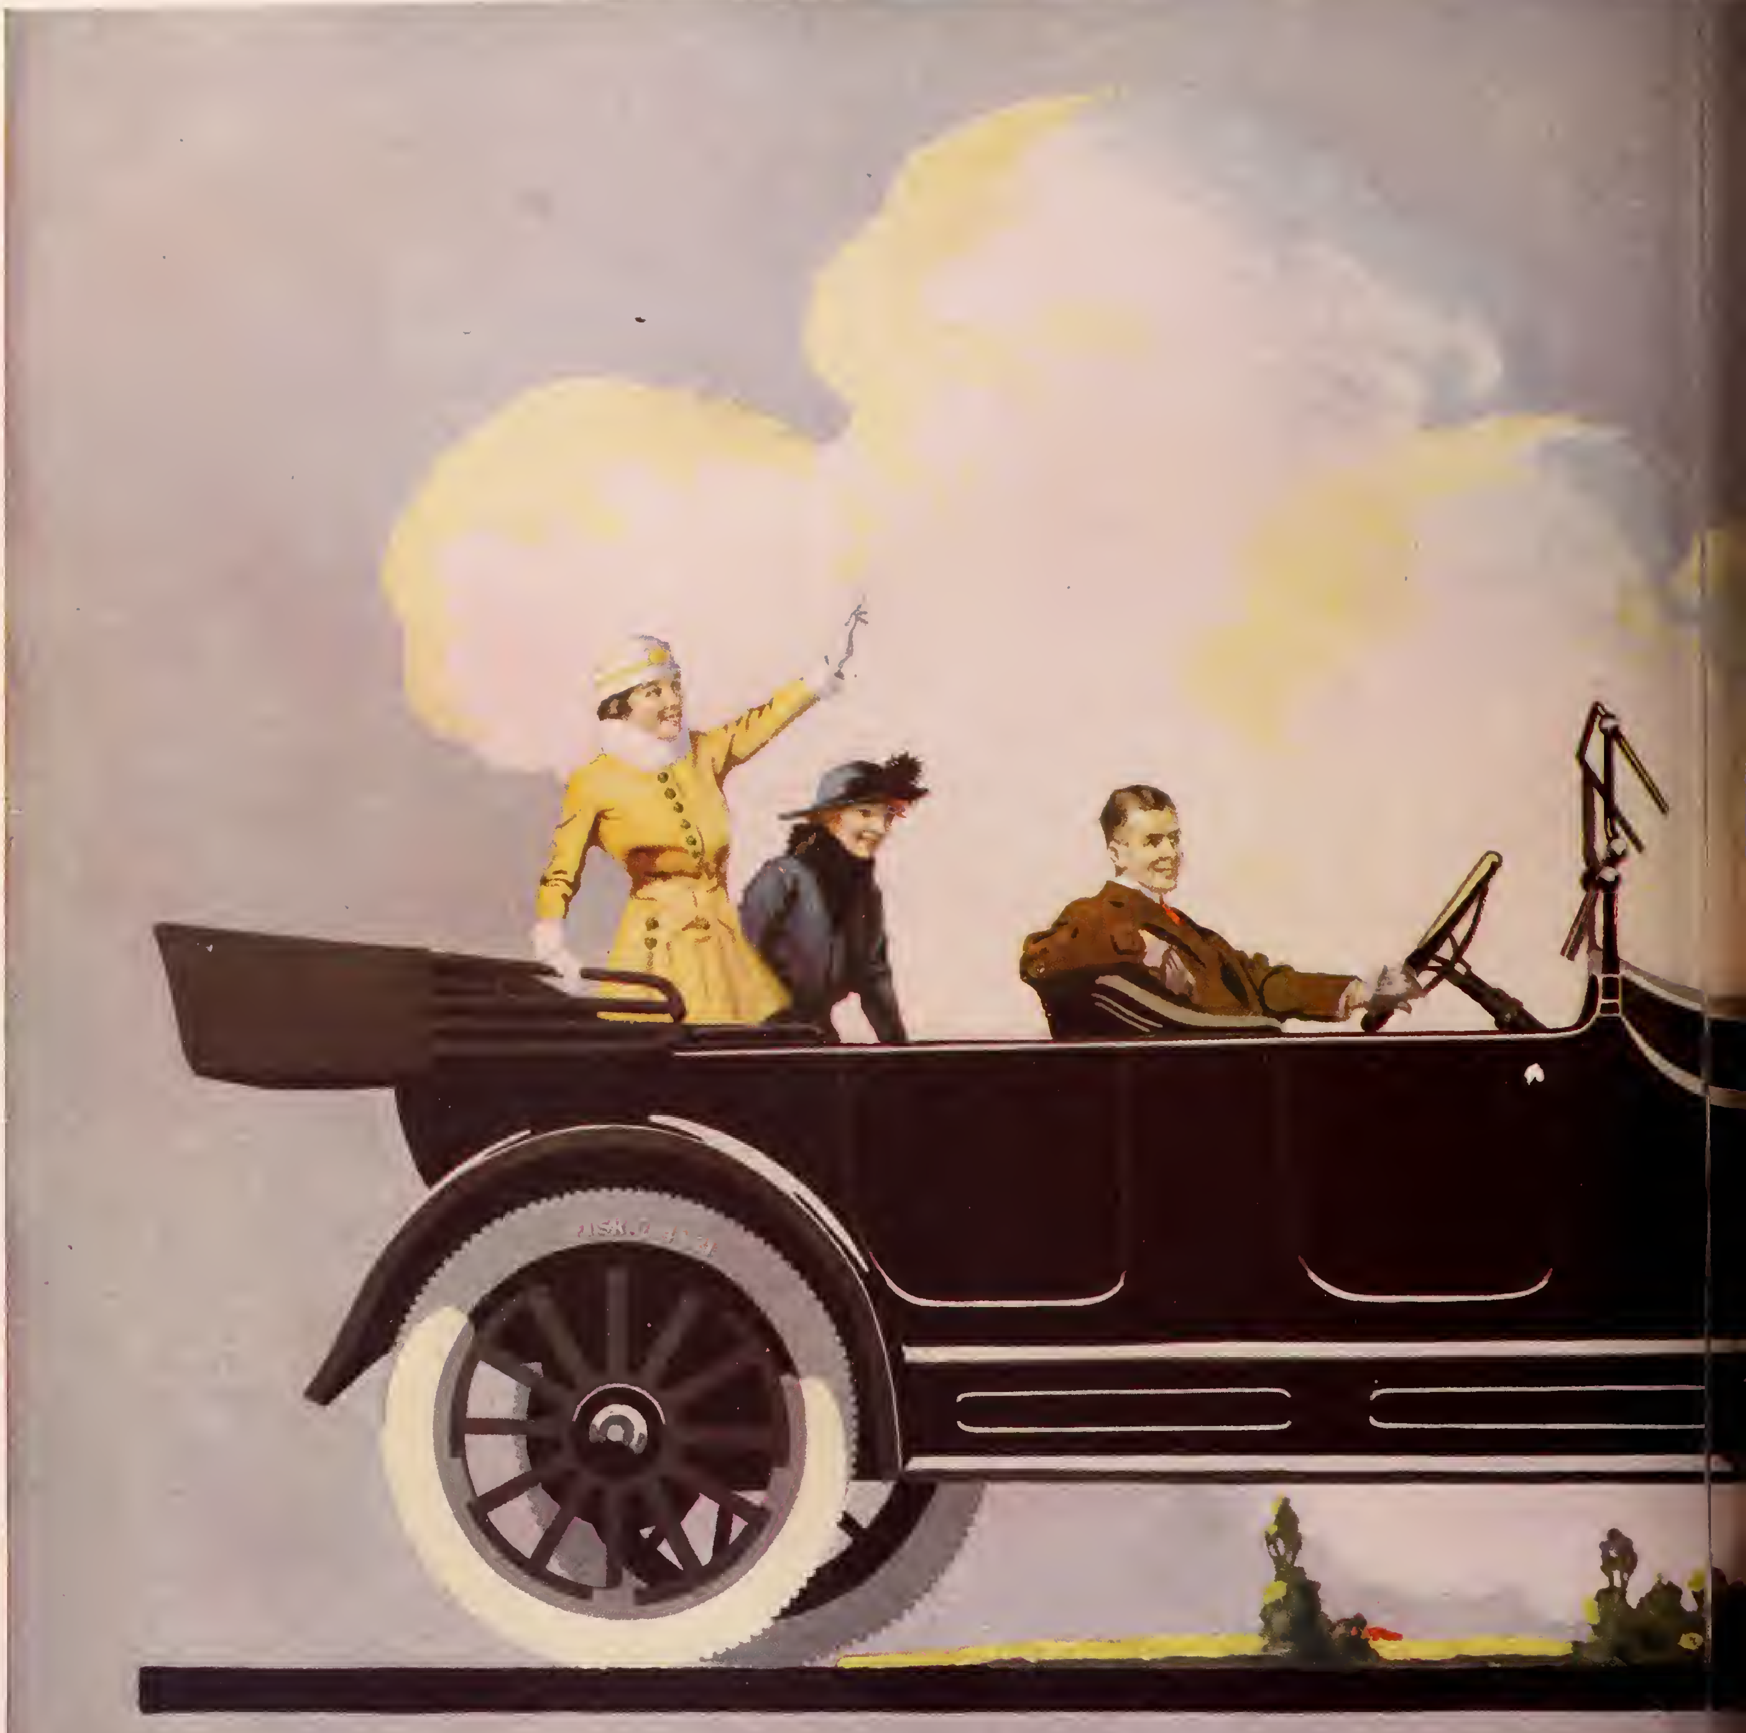
Your money back if not satisfied.

21 kinds 10c a can

Campbell's Condensed 21 Kinds Soup Joseph Campbell Company Camden N J U S A

Campbell's SOUPS

LOOK FOR THE RED-AND-WHITE LABEL



MODEL 75

$615

Roadster $595
f.o.b. Toledo

Its Completeness Won Ist

Never before has any model been such a complete and instantaneous success.

Small wonder, really.

For never before has there been so complete a car at anywhere near so low a price.

It stands out alone—boldly—conspicuously—unapproach—a car complete r o
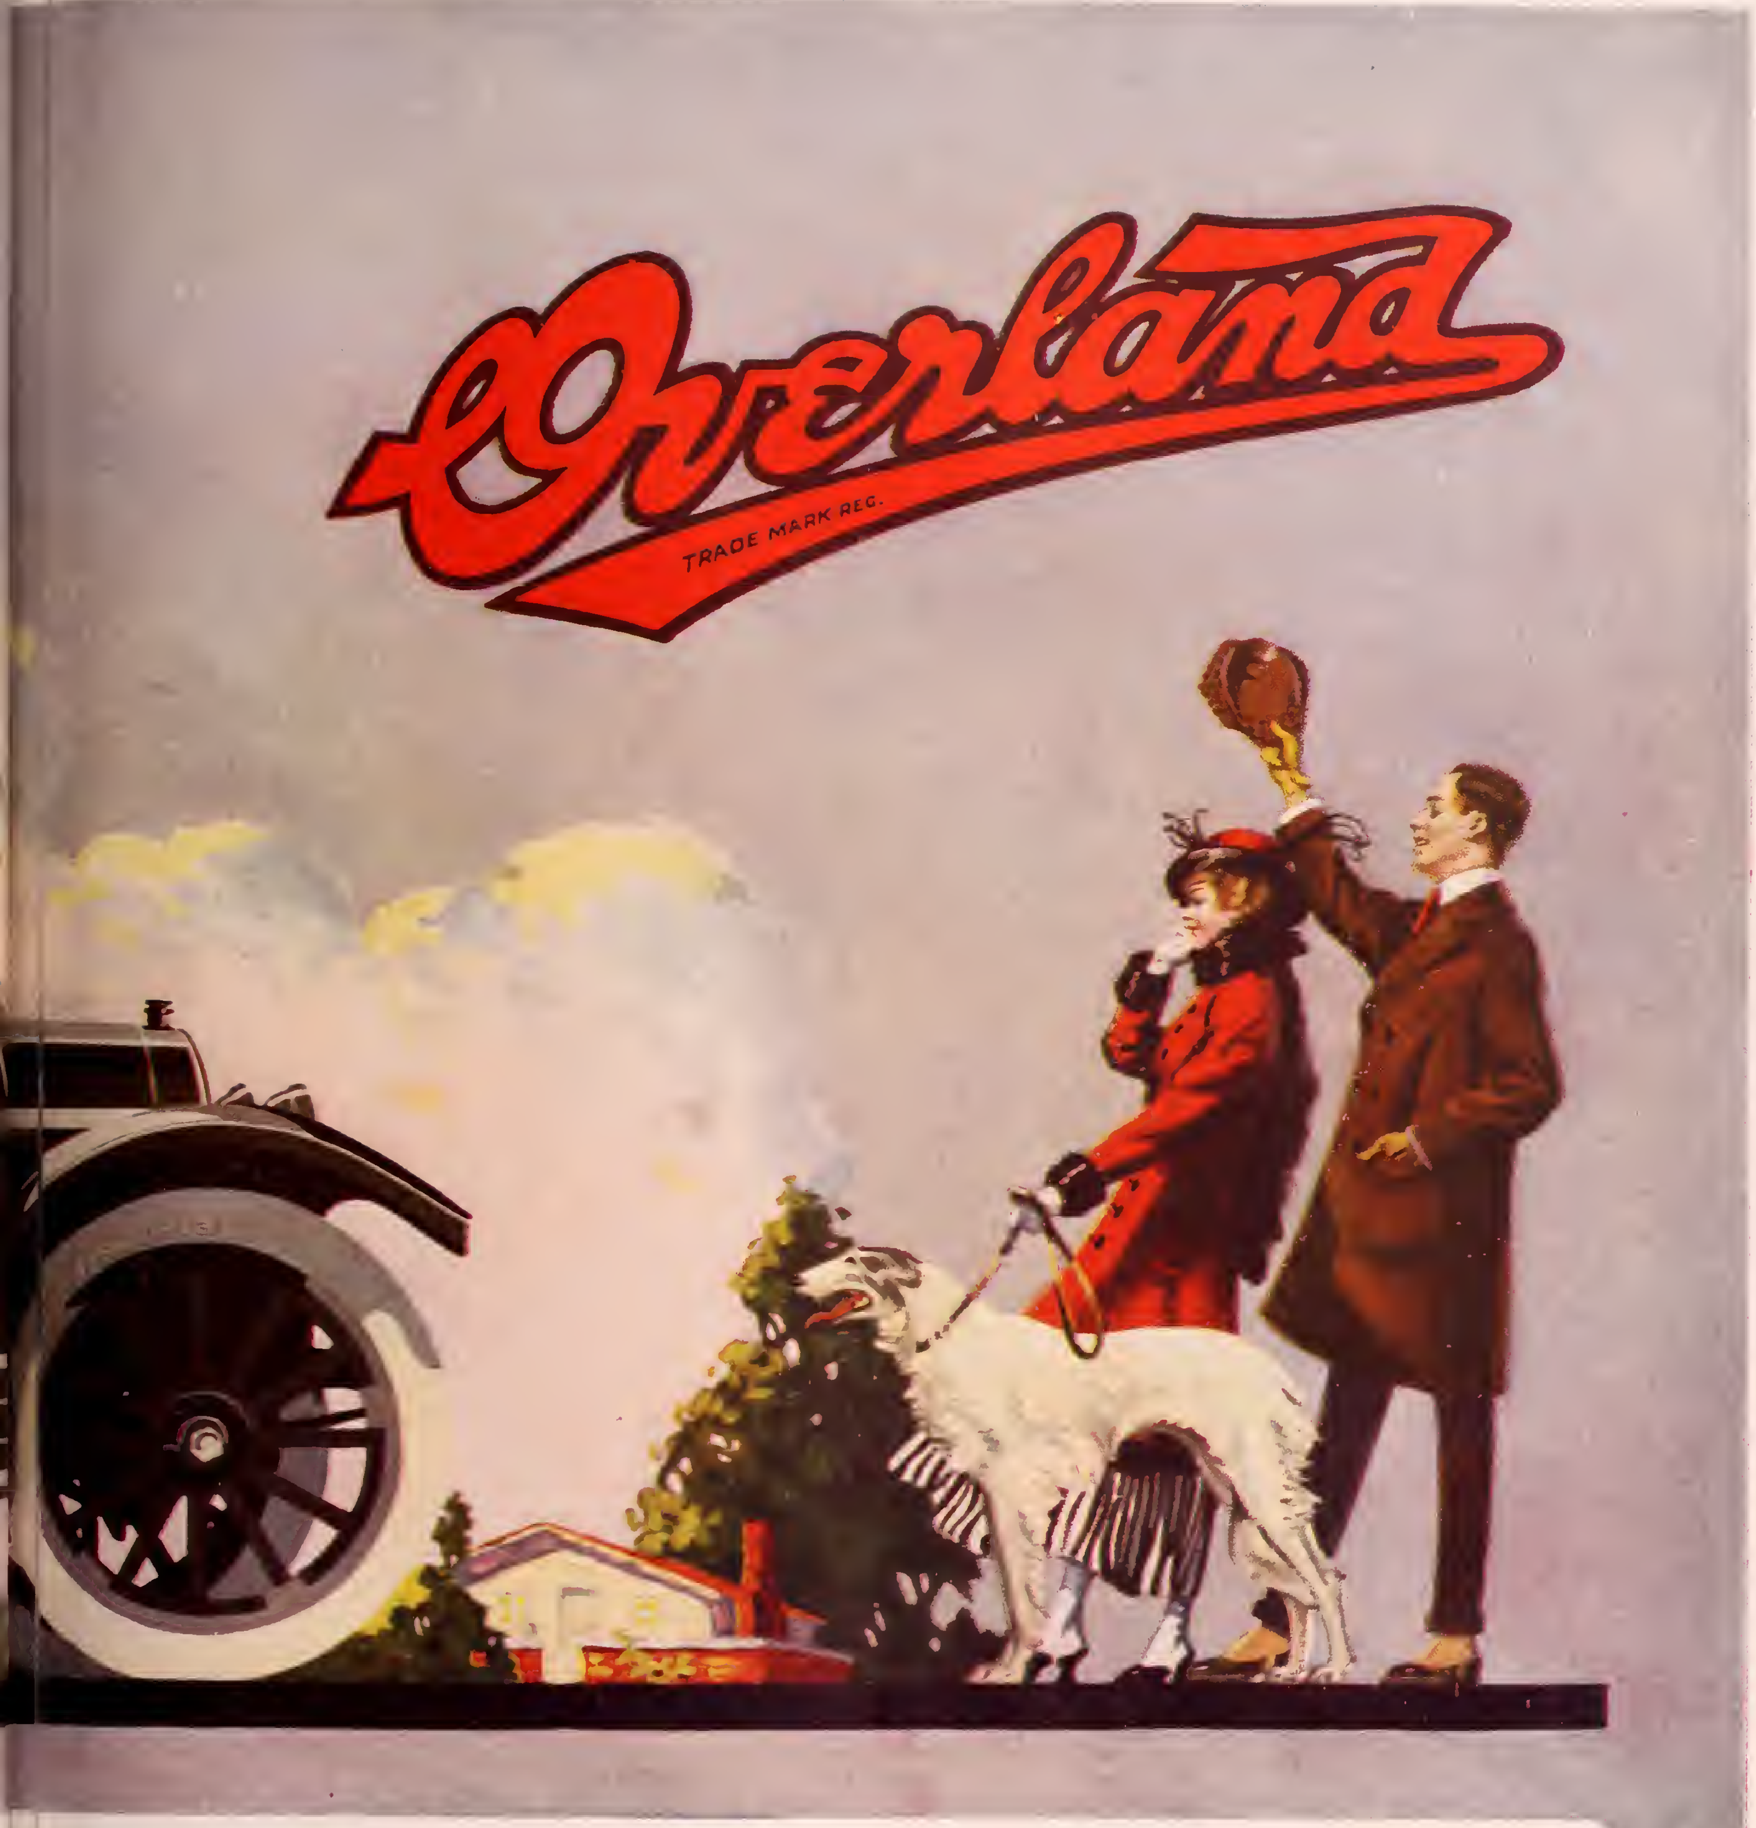
Note th w
That m ns
electric hor ma
necessary it h.
extras to bu

Cat g on

The Willys-Ovela



uccess

pasnger touring nd ectric lights, er-n fact every

g. There are no

ress ept. 614

ay, Toledo, Ohio

Note that the motor is the very latest en bloc design—the last word in fine engineering.

Note that the tires are four inch size. Many cars costing more have smaller tires.

Note that the rear springs are the famous cantilever type. Many bigger more expensive cars are nowhere near as easy riding.

Note the headlight dimmers—the electric control buttons on steering column—demountable rims and one man top—all big features—high-priced-car features.

And it is a perfect beauty—snappy, stylish, speedy.

No wonder there's a rush to possess the car the world has been waiting for.

But that means quick action on your part in order to get a prompt delivery.

Don't delay—get your order in today.

Remember it comes complete—only $615.

"Made in U. S. A."

"This is how weather destroys an unpainted or poorly painted house"

Look over your house. Is the bare wood exposed anywhere? If so decay has already started and nothing but paint will stop it. Do not put off this important matter. The cost is small—the saving enormous.

There is on sale in your town a paint that has been protecting houses for 50 years. Your painter knows it as

SWP

(Sherwin-Williams Prepared Paint)

Ask him to use it. He will like the way it spreads and covers. You will like the way it wears and holds its looks.

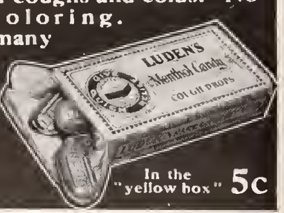
A FREE BOOKLET TO SEND FOR

Ask for new, free, helpful booklet, "The ABC of Home Painting." It tells you how to paint, varnish, stain or enamel any surface.

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINTS & VARNISHES

COVER THE EARTH

Address all inquiries to 719 Canal Road, N.W., Cleveland, O.
Showrooms—New York, 116 W. 32d St.; Chicago, People's Gas Bldg.; San Francisco, 523 Market St. Sales Offices and Warehouses in principal cities. Best dealers everywhere



A Clear Voice—No Throat Strain If You Use

LUDEN'S MENTHOL CANDY COUGH DROPS

Quick relief from coughs and colds. No narcotics; no coloring. LUDEN'S have many uses.

WM. H. LUDEN
Manufacturing Confectioner
READING PA.

In the "yellow box" 5c

They always work

That's the joy of having your shades mounted on Hartshorn Improved Rollers. With Hartshorn Rollers your shades move quietly, at a touch, and stay right where you want them; with other rollers—well you never know. Hartshorn Rollers cost but a few cents more than the poorest rollers made.

FREE Send for valuable book "How to get the Best Service from your Shade Rollers." You'll find it pays to look when you buy shade rollers for this signature:

Stewart Hartshorn

Stewart Hartshorn Co., Dept. 37, E. Newark, N. J.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

A Voice in the Wildernes

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

CHAPTER XV—Continued

THE minister was visibly annoyed, and for the moment a trifle flustered, but, concluding that his remarks had been too deep for the rough creature, he gathered up the thread of his argument and proceeded:

"We need to get to work at our duty toward our fellow men. We need to stop insisting that men shall believe in the inspiration of the Bible and get to work at something practical!"

The impressive pause after this sentence was interrupted by a sharp rasping sound of Big Jim clearing his throat, and shuffling to his feet. He too looked the minister full in the face with a searching gaze, shook his head sadly, and walked leisurely down the aisle and out of the door. The minister paused again and frowned. This was becoming annoying.

Margaret sat in startled wonder. Could it be possible that these rough men were objecting to the sermon from a theological point of view, or was it just a happening that they had gone out at such pointed moments? She sat back after a minute telling herself that of course the man must just have been weary of the long sentences, which no doubt he could not understand. She began to hope that Gardley was not within hearing. It was not probable that many others understood enough to get harm from the sermon, but her soul boiled with indignation that a man could go forth and call himself a minister of an evangelical church and yet talk such terrible heresy.

Big Tim's steps died slowly away on the clay path outside, and the preacher resumed his discourse:

"We have preached long enough of hell and torment. It is time for a gospel of love to our brothers. Hell is a superstition of the dark ages. There is no hell!"

Fiddling Boss turned sharply toward Jasper Kemp as if waiting for a signal, and Jasper gave a slight, almost imperceptible nod, whereupon Fiddling Boss cleared his throat loudly and arose, faced the minister, and marched down the aisle, while Jasper Kemp remained quietly seated as if nothing had happened, a vacancy each side of him.

By this time the color began to rise in the minister's cheeks. He looked at the retreating back of the Fiddling Boss, and then suspiciously down at the row of men, but every one of them sat with folded arms and eyes intent upon the sermon as if their comrades had not left them. The minister thought he must have been mistaken and took up the broken thread once more, or tried to, but he had hopelessly lost the place in his manuscript and the only clue that offered was a quotation of a poem about the devil. To be sure, the connection was somewhat abrupt, but he clutched it with his eye gratefully and began reading it dramatically:

"Men don't believe in the devil now
As their fathers used to do—"

But he had got no further when a whole clearing house of throats sounded and "Fadeaway Forbes" stumbled to his feet frantically, bolting down the aisle as if he had been sent for. He had not quite reached the door when Stocky clumped after him, followed by Croaker and Fudge, just as the minister had begun:

"Um! Ah! To resume—"

And now only Jasper Kemp remained of the front-seaters, his fine gray eyes boring through and through the minister as he floundered through the remaining portion of his manuscript up to the point where it began "and finally—" which opened with another poem:

"I need no Christ to die for me"—

The sturdy gray-haired Scotchman suddenly lowered his folded arms, slapping a hand resoundingly on each knee, bent his shoulders the better to pull himself to his feet, pressing his weight on his hands till his elbows were a mbo, uttered a deep sigh and a "Ye -well —ah!"

With that he got to his fe and dragged them slowly out of the hoolhouse.

BY this time the minister wa eady to burst with indignation. ever before in all the bombastic days f his egotism had he been so grossly i lted, and by such rude creatures! A yet there was really nothing that c d be said or done. These men appear to be simple creatures who had wand d in idly, perhaps for a few moments' usement, and finding the discourse bove their caliber had innocently wa lered out again. That was the way had been made to appear. But hi plans had been cruelly upset by such ions, and he was mortified in the e eme. His face was purple with his em ions, and he struggled and splutter or a way out of his trying dilemm At last he spoke, and his voice was al rdly dignified:

"Is there—ah!—any other- h!— auditor—ah!—who is desirous o vithdrawing before the close of the s vice? If so, he may do so now or ah!— He paused for a suitable ending and f iliar words rushed to his lips withou consciousness for the moment o their meaning—"or forever after hol heir peace—ah!"

Thus the closing eloquence pr eded to its finish, and at last the serv was over. Margaret looked about fo Mom Wallis, but she had disappeared She signed to Bud, and togethe they hastened out, but a quiet Sabbat eace reigned about the door of the oolhouse, and not a man from th amp was in sight; no, nor even the rses upon which they had come.

And yet, when the minister h finished shaking hands with the wor ping women and a few men and c lren, and come with Mr. Tanner to t door of the schoolhouse, the wome and children had most suddenly an nysteriously melted out of sight. hose eight men stood in a solemn ro four on each side of the walk each ding his chin in his right hand, his righ bow in his left hand, and all eyes on sper Kemp, who kept his eyes thoug fully up in the sky.

"H'w air yeh, Tanner? P sant 'casion. Mind steppin' on a bit We men wanta have a word with t parson."

Mr. Tanner stepped on hu edly, and the minister was left standi nonplussed and alone in the doorway the schoolhouse.

CHAPTER XVI

"UM—ah!—" began the m ster, trying to summon hi best clerical manner to et— what? He did not know. was best to assume they were a p tent band of inquirers for the truth But the memory of their recent odus from the service was rather to lear in his mind for his pleasantest exp sion to be uppermost toward these ough creatures. Insolent fellows! He ught to give them a good lesson in be vior!

"Um—ah!—" he began agai but found to his surprise that his r arks thus far had had no effect whate r on the eight stolid countenances fore him. In fact, they seemed t ave grown grim and menacing even i heir quiet attitude, and their eyes we fulfilling the promise of the look th had given him when they left the s vice.

"What does all this mean any y?" he burst forth suddenly.

"Calm yourself, elder, calm you elf," spoke up Long Bill. "There ain any occasion to get excited."

"I'm not an elder, I'm a mini r of the Gospel!" exploded West in hi nost pompous tones. "I should like t now who you are and what all this m ns?"

"Yes, parson, we understan who you are. We understand quite w and We're a-goin' to tell you who we are. We're a band of al-tru-ists! That's what we are. We're altruists!" It was Jasper Kemp of the keen eyes and sturdy countenance who spoke. "And we've come here in brotherly love to exercise a little of that dynamic force of altruism you was talkin' about. We just thought we'd begin on you so's you could see that we got some works to go 'long with our faith."

"What do you mean, sir?" said West, looking from one grim countenance to another. "I—I don't quite understand." The minister was beginning to be frightened, he couldn't exactly tell why. He wished he had kept Brother Tanner with him. It was the first time he had ever thought of Mr. Tanner as "brother."

"We mean just this, parson. You been talkin' a lot of lies in there, about there bein' no Saviour an' no hell, ner no devil, an' while we ain't much credit to God ourselves, bein' just common men, we know all that stuff you said ain't true about the Bible an' the devil bein' superstitions, an' we thought we better exercise a little of that there altruism you was talkin' about and teach you better. You see, it's real brotherly kindness, parson. An' now we're goin' to give you a sample of that dynamics you spoke about. Are you ready, boys?"

"All ready!" they cried as one man.

THERE seemed to be no concerted motion, nor was there warning. Swifter than the weaver's shuttle, sudden as the lightning's flash, the minister was caught from where he stood pompously in that doorway, hat in hand, all grandly as he was attired, and hurled from man to man. Across the walk and back; across and back; across and back; until it seemed to him it was a thousand miles all in a minute of time. He had no time to prepare for the onslaught. He jammed his high silk hat, wherewith he had thought to overawe the community, upon his sleek head, and clasped his precious sermon case to his breast; the sermon was flung to the four winds of heaven and fortunately was no more—that is, existing as a whole. The time came when each of those eight men recovered and retained a portion of the learned oration, and Mom Wallis, not quite understanding, pinned up and used as a sort of shrine the portion about doubting the devil; but as a sermon the parts were never assembled on this earth, nor could be, for some of it was ground to powder under eight pairs of ponderous heels. But the minister at that trying moment was too much otherwise engaged to notice that the child of his brain lay scattered on the ground.

Seven times he made the round up and down, up and down, that merciless group; tossed like a thistledown from man to man. And at last, when his breath was gone, when the world had grown black before him, and he felt smaller and more inadequate than he had ever felt in his whole conceited life before, he found himself bound, helplessly bound, and cast ignominiously into a wagon. And it was a strange thing that though seemingly but five short minutes before the place had been swarming with worshiping admirers thanking him for his sermon, now there did not seem to be a creature within hearing, for he called and cried aloud and roared with his raucous voice until it would seem that all the surrounding States might have heard that cry from Arizona, yet none came to his relief.

They carried him away, somewhere, he did not know where; it was a lonely spot and near a water-hole. When he protested and loudly blamed them, threatening all the law in the land upon them, they regarded him as one might a naughty child who needed chastisement; leniently and with sorrow, but also with determination.

They took him down by the water's side, and stood him up among them. He began to tremble with fear as he looked from one to another, for he was not a man of courage, and he had heard strange tales of this wild free land, where every man was a law unto himself. Were they going to drown him then and there? Then up spoke Jasper Kemp.

"Mr. Parson," he said, and his voice was kind but firm; one might almost say there was a hint of humor in it, and there surely was a twinkle in his eye, but the sternness of his lips belied it, and the minister was in no state to appreciate humor—"Mr. Parson, we've brought you here to do you good, an' you oughtn't to complain. This is altruism, an' we're but actin' out what you've been preachin'. You're our brother an' we're tryin' to do you good; an' now we're about to show you what a dynamic force we are. You see, Mr. Parson, I was brought up by a good Scotch grandmother, an' I know a lie when I hear it, an' when I hear a man preach error I know it's time to set him straight; so now we're a-goin' to set you straight. I don't know where you come from, nor who brung you up, nor what church set you afloat, but I know by all my grandmother taught me—even if I hadn't been a-listenin' off an' on for two years back to Mr. Brownleigh, our missionary—that you're a dangerous man to have at large. I'd as soon have a mad dog let loose. Why, what you preach ain't the Gospel, an' it ain't the truth, an' the time has come for you to know it, an' own it and recant. Recant! That's what they call it. That's what we're here to see 't you do, or we'll know the reason why. That's the dynamics of it. See?"

The minister saw. He saw the deep muddy water-hole. He saw nothing more.

"Folks are all too heady to believe them there things you was gettin' off without havin' 'em preached to 'em to justify 'em in their evil ways. We gotta think of those poor ignorant brothers of ourn that might listen to you. See? That's the altruism of it."

"What do you want me to do?" The wretched man's tone was not merely humble, it was abject. His grand Prince Albert coat was torn in three places, one tail hung down dejectedly over his hip, one sleeve was ripped half way out. His collar was unbuttoned and the ends rode up hilariously over his cheeks. His necktie was gone. His sleek hair stuck out in damp wisps about his frightened eyes, and his hat had been "stove in" and jammed down as far as it would go until his ample ears stuck out like sails at half mast. His feet were imbedded in the heavy mud on the margin of the water hole and their fine silk socks, which had showed at one time above the erstwhile neat tyings, were torn and covered with mud.

"Well, in the first place," said Jasper Kemp with a slow wink around at the company, "that little matter about hell needs adjustin'. Hell ain't no superstition. I ain't dictatin' what kind of a hell there is, you can make it fire or water or anything else you like, but there is a hell, and you b'lieve in it. D'ye understand? We'd just like to have you make that statement publicly right here and now."

"But how can I say what I don't believe?" whined West, almost ready to cry. He had come proudly through a test by clergy on these very same points and had posed as being a man who had the courage of his convictions. He could not thus easily surrender his pride of original thought and broad-mindedness. He had received congratulations from a number of noble martyrs who had left their chosen church for just such reasons, congratulating him on his brave stand. It had been the first notice from big men he had ever been able to attract to himself, and it had gone to his head like wine. Give that up for a few miserable cowboys! It might get into the papers and go back East. He must think of his reputation.

"That's just where the dynamics of the thing comes in, brother," said Jasper Kemp patronizingly. "We're here to make you believe in a hell. We're the force that will bring you back into the right way of thinkin' again. Are you ready, boys?"

The quiet utterance brought gooseflesh up to West's very ears, and his eyes bulged with horror.

"Oh, that isn't necessary! I believe yes, I believe in hell!" he shouted as they seized him.

But it was too late. The Rev. Frederick West was plunged into the water-hole, from whose sheep-muddied waters he came up spluttering: "Yes, I believe in hell!" and for the first time

Continued on page 308

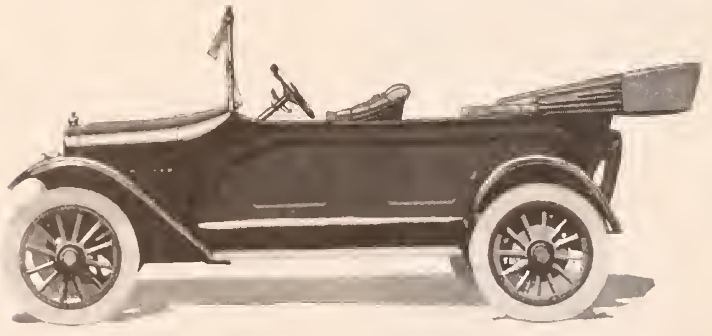
Maxwell

Complete Motor Cars

IN addition to the element of convenience, motoring can and rightly should be a pleasure and recreation—free from the endless annoyances due to inadequate equipment.

It is true that electric starting and lighting systems, demountable rims and other refinements can be purchased and added to the car that lacks these devices. But experience has shown that to buy the entire and finished car from one manufacturer is not only less expensive, but much more satisfactory in that responsibility for the whole product can be centered in one institution.

Maxwell Motor Cars, being otherwise designed to earn and retain the approval of particular people, are, of course, provided with every accessory of established merit that would add to the convenience and comfort of their owners.



One Chassis, Five Body Styles

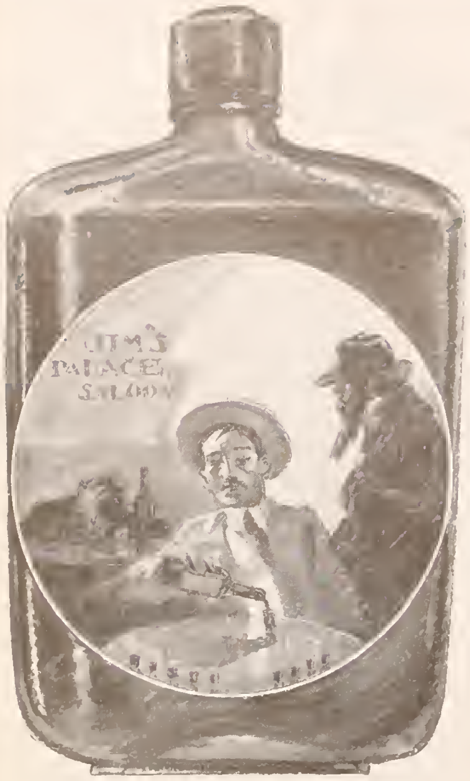
Two-Passenger Roadster $635
Five-Passenger Touring Car 655
Touring Car (with All Weather Top) . 710
Two-Passenger Cabriolet 865
Six-Passenger Town Car 915
f. o. b. Detroit

Full equipment, including Electric Starter and Lights.
In Canada $830, $850, $975, $1150, $1250, f.o.b. Windsor.

Maxwell

MOTOR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICHIGAN

"THE BOTTLE"—III.



SELFISH DISSIPATION

Dear John:

You're wrong, old fellow, for I have landed right side up in a new job.

Flory and I had hard sledding for a while, but we're going strong again.

My present customers are a rougher bunch than I've been used to. Sometimes they are pretty raw, but a drink or two smooths that all out. They're just "diamonds in the rough."

I've sworn off "mixing my drinks." You see I can control my drinking. The mixed drinks got me a bit confused that day I told the Boss what I thought of him.

I've learned my lesson. I'm going to stick to "whisky straights." So you see I'm safe. So don't worry, old fellow.

Yours,

BILL.

Dear Bill:

Jane and I were so glad you found a new position. We were quite worried when we couldn't find you at your old address.

I tried to get the Boss to take you back.

He said, "No. A drinking salesman may have a comet's brilliancy for a while, but it's only a comet. Now, people are demanding dependable fixed constellations."

He quoted Andrew Carnegie as saying, "There is no use wasting time on any young man who drinks liquor, no matter how exceptional his talents."

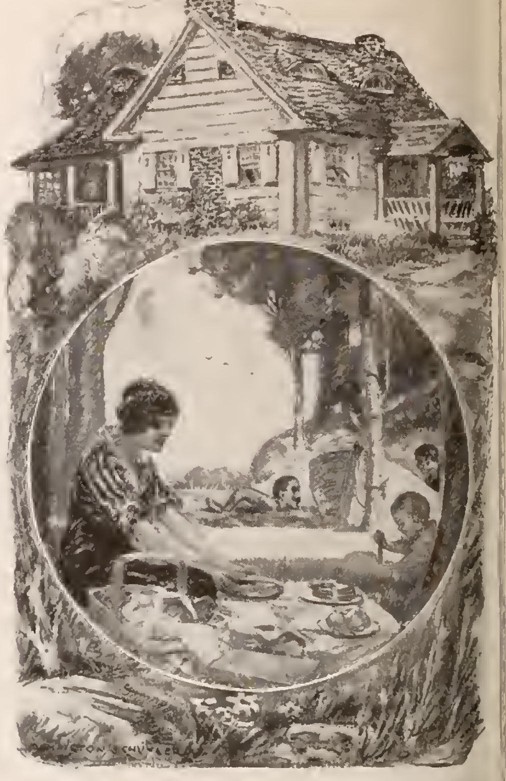
In the old days he used to ask salesmen who applied for jobs, "Can you drink?" From now on he is going to ask them, "Do you drink?"

Yesterday, two men were injured in the cutting room. One had been drinking and got careless. Today, all over the factory are notices, "Any employee found drinking, or under the influence of liquor, will be discharged."

Come up and see us soon and spend the evening with

Your old friends,

JANE and JOHN.



UNSELFISH RECREATION

No. I

No. II

The Baby-Week Movement

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

No. I

No. II

NINETEEN SIXTEEN is Baby Year. The facts about American babies, the needs of American babies, and America's responsibility to her babies will this year be known as never before. The reason, you ask? Why, the first week in March will be Baby Week throughout the whole of this country. Four hundred communities, representing every state in the union, have already laid their plans for the weekdays and 1,727 other communities are considering some preparation. Large cities are going into the work with interest and delight, and small towns are teeming with excitement. For the babies are the future generation. And as such they deserve unlimited homage and respect and consideration.

The Baby Week idea originated in Chicago not quite two years ago. Then New York had a Baby Week. Pittsburg and other cities followed their lead, until state health officials and national organizations, interested in public health and child welfare, began to take notice of the growing movement. Then the General Federation of Women's Clubs, seeing the vast importance of the step, undertook to promote the idea, until it had a nation-wide observance. Even the extension divisions of the state universities promise special assistance in helping the development of Baby Weeks in rural communities.

JEWELERS have conventions, so do milliners and dressmakers and plumbers and undertakers and hardware manufacturers, to say nothing of the hundreds of others who foregather every so often to talk over trade, and buyers, and efficiency, and ways and means. These conventions result in a booming of trade and an increased interest, and, more than that, an increased understanding. And yet, although babies are of more importance to the welfare of the country than jewelry and millinery and hardware, until two years ago nobody ever thought of having a convention in regard to babies. Very few people thought of efficiency in the bringing up of children; very few people cared to talk over babies as a class. Of course every parent wanted to talk of his or her baby to the most sympathetic listener, but nobody considered the possibilities that might result if the parents of the nation should talk together about their babies. And then, two years ago, somebody did realize. And Chicago—a pioneer—organized Baby Week.

It isn't hard, the government Bulletin tells us (for the general interest has gone so far that the government is issuing bulletins), to start a Baby Week movement in any fairly large-sized community. It should merely be a campaign in which one organization—for instance, a women's club, the health department, the local infant welfare or visiting nurse society, or any other organization—may take the initiative, but in which all other organizations should be asked to cooperate. One of the greatest advantages of Baby Week is the fact that it brings together the various organizations of a community—brings them together for a common aim. For every one has a more vital interest in a work if he has helped to organize that work.

A PAMPHLET entitled "Greater New York Baby Week," published by the New York Milk Committee, contains a detailed account of the features of the typical baby convention. I am quoting almost directly from their outline.

Purpose: To call attention to needs met and to needs not met in a campaign for better babies.

First Day: Reading of letter from mayor, or, if Sunday, the preaching of special sermons.

Second Day: Special articles and editorials printed in leading papers.

Third Day: Little Mothers' Day to be observed.

Fourth Day: Milk Station Day, to be observed as "visiting day" in the public and private milk stations.

Fifth Day: Hospital and clinic day, to be observed, as above, by visiting.

Sixth Day: Nursery and demonstration day, to be observed in all institutions sheltering well babies, such as day nurseries, temporary shelters, convalescent homes, and asylums.

Seventh Day: Outing Day, with special excursions to recreation parks, playgrounds, piers, and so forth.

This program can of course be varied to suit the community. But it makes a rather good guide. And any week will do, if your town missed the official Baby Week.

BABY WEEKS are usually held in the springtime. And they are held at that time for a significant reason—not because the spring of the year is the prettiest season or because the babies are (as the poets sometimes tell us) like the pink and white apple-blossoms that festoon the trees. Baby Week is usually held in the springtime because the death rate among babies is highest during the summer months.

Perhaps your babies, who live in comfortable, breezy country homes, do not suffer. But the babies of the slums, of the crowded foreign sections, the babies who live and sleep on the sidewalks, sometimes in the scorching glare of the sun, wither and die like flowers that have been heedlessly torn up and thrown away. It is a good thing to remind the cities, at least, that there are babies. And it is a good thing to have that reminder come with the first whisper of the summer's heat.

Over the sea, the babies of Europe are being born, and are dying, or are weakly living in the midst of horror and sadness and distress. That horror and sadness and distress will be their heritage through the dismal years to come. The mothers of Europe are too busy sewing shrouds to make dainty baby dresses; too tired, after working in the fields all day, to sing lullabys; too worried over ceaseless troubles to be interested. Baby Weeks—the mothers of Europe could not understand the term—weak babies would mean more to them; for underfed, poorly dressed, unwanted babies are very often not healthy babies—neither strong mentally nor physically. And the next generation in Europe—the fighting men, the professional men, the statesmen, ever he future mothers, must be these ne babies—grown up!

WE are at peace. But the ba es of our nation will in the na al order of things grow up, even as he babies of Europe will grow up. ey will be the lawyers, the writers, he government-builders, and the mo ers and fathers of tomorrow. Perhaps he babies of the slums, the babies who ve never had a chance, will be the dr kards and gamblers and criminals. ho knows?

Baby Week is to give every ba a chance. That is the object of the v le movement. The different states o he Union realize that. Texas has ad ed the slogan, "Baby health is T as wealth." Other states will soon ve their catch phrases and cries. F no matter how innocent and tiny nd ineffectual a baby may look, foll are beginning to realize (and they sh ld have realized it before!) that the ars are swift in going and that babie are not long in becoming men and wo en.

That is why women's clubs and b ds of health and departments of e ation are beginning to wake up. at is why our government is issuing l letins about the care of the little es. For folk are realizing at last that etter babies make better homes, nd better homes make better cities, nd better cities make better nations.

◆

CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York: ust today was it my very great pleas to read in the Christian Herald of Decemb 15, 1915, your article under the title of ' fty Years of the Thirteenth Amendment." side from showing the progress of the Neg for these fifty years, there crop out, her and there, expressions so kindly in their ton hat I feel myself under obligations to extend you my heartfelt thanks. As a race, our st ggle for existence—our efforts to rise to ma ood in this country—would be so much ea r if there were sufficient white men that see you see to predominate public sentiment. urs very truly, REV JAMES D. BARKSD

Presiding Elder Missouri Conference, A E Church, Commerce, Mo.

The War Prisoners' Cry Heard

THE appeal of the War Prisoners Gospel Fund Committee which was published in the Christian Herald of February 23 has aldy begun to bear fruit. When the anuncement was made of the commie's purpose to carry the message of lvation to the multitudes of war priners in the various European detion camps, it was felt that many of od's people in this country would tal advantage of this opportunity of hag a share in this much-needed wo of evangelization. Letters that rea us from readers encourage us to belve that the number of those who dee to send the Gospel to the var prisoners will rapidl increase. We quote fro a few of the letters bel:

v. W. R. Wieand, St. Petersburg, Fla. ($5), wris: "This is for sending the ospel to the Russian priners interned in Teuton prins, with a prayer for the ivine blessing upon it and on your work of love and nercy 'In His Name.'" Re Joseph W. Kemp, of Caary Baptist Church, Ne York ($10), writes: "Elosed was handed to me y Mr. Osgood for the wo among the prisoners in rmany and Austria." M. A. Kraus of New Yo sends $20, and writes: "Ts is the offering and conibution from the First Gean Baptist Church, Harlem, taken at eir meeting on the evening of Feliary 1, at which Rev. W. Fetler spo. I was present at the organization of is committee in the Bible House on ebruary 1, and it was a great pleare and privilege to have this offng taken up on the evening of the same day the committee was orgized. There is no doubt that Cht himself is back of this great moment to bring the Gospel to the milns of war prisoners, and we are onl his humble and weak agents, caring out his will."

L. N. Turner, Savannah, Ga. ($2 writes: "To be applied to the evagelization of Russian prisoners of wa May the Lord bless the Christian He d most abundantly." A donor in Poll, Pa., who desires to remain nulown, sends $1. Miss M. M. M., Parsburg, W. Va., sends $5, and wris: "My little mite to help in the Gol work among war prisoners." F . Mason, treasurer, Elmhurst Bast Church, Elmhurst, N. Y., sends a clek for $14 to send the Gospel to the Ruan war prisoners. A money order for 3, the donation of the Greenberg Unn Sunday School, White Plains, N , and $6, representing two donatior received in Boston for the work, hav been forwarded through Pastor Fetr. A number of other letters have bee received, containing various amnts from $1 upward, and all expssing the warmest approval of the prot.

A a meeting in the First Baptist Church, New York, on February 11, ranged by Rev. I. M. Haldeman, the istor, the interest was very marked. Sor had come from Atlantic City and oth places to attend. Pastor Fetler spo feelingly on the work among the war prisoners in Europe, after which Dr. Haldeman, in an impassioned apl, showed the open door to evangelze e Russian soldiers in German and Ausian prison camps, and then through the to reach the great Russian nation on return home after the war. Many of te audience came up to Dr. Haldena after the meeting, passing up their gift or the work, until the pulpit table was overed with money and checks, he mount exceeding $550.

Itor Fetler gives this graphic picre of conditions in Russia and Gerany at the present time: "A great battle within the Russian empire has begun in the spiritual realm between darkness and light. The masses of the Russian people have remained in ignorance; many millions being still unable to read or write, except the soldiers, who are compelled to learn. This very ignorance has kept the nation from imbibing the atheistic and materialistic literature which would have closed the doors of their minds to the Gospel message when the time should come to preach it. From all signs at hand, it appears that Russia, in her awakening, is to become preeminently a land of the Gospel. But, right here, the greatest of all difficulties arose—how to reach them with the Gospel when every foreign missionary is barred from entering Russia as a preacher, when native evangelists are prohibited from traveling from place to place, and when Sunday schools are closed. Here, when the disciples' resources failed, the Master came and said, 'Behold, I have set before thee an open door; and no man can shut it.' At the present time, there are in Germany and Austria some two and a half millions of Russian war prisoners. Although the Gospel preacher in Russia is prohibited, here, by a way much more severe, the congregations are brought together ready for the Gospel message. In these prison camps there are prisoners from all parts of Russia—Siberia, Archangel, the Caucasus and Crimea, and from eighty other provinces of the empire."

"PERHAPS the greatest victory during the present war will be won, by God's grace, through the evangelization of the war prisoners by means of the War Prisoners Gospel Fund. I pray that God may open the hearts of many of our co-workers in America to this great cause, and that he may be pleased to raise up many earnest friends May God find it possible to accomplish through all of us, his unworthy servants, his eternal and sublime purposes."—(Rev.) W Fetler, Pastor-Evangelist of the Dom Evangelia, Petrograd, Russia, an exile for the Faith.

Pastor Fetler

PASTOR FETLER holds that the quick carrying out of the evangelistic plan of the committee in the war prison camps will save the Church of Christ a tremendous expenditure of its energies and resources in the future. It would be impossible, he urges, to obtain the same result under the circumstances that are usual in times of peace. "It would be practically impossible to reach the same people in Russia under ordinary times, and certainly we, having seen the light, will be required to answer for our neglect if we do not reach them with the Gospel now. If we perform our duty faithfully in these camps, then we may look forward, after the war is finished, to the time when many converted soldiers will return to their native villages."

The pastor gives a graphic foreshadowing of spiritual conditions after the war when the converted soldiers reach their homes. "The villagers come together to welcome him. They would sit down in his house at tea, and inquire of him as to his experiences of the war, the wonderful things he has seen in the land of his captivity. He relates all that. And then he would get up and tell them of that which has been the most wonderful experience in his life; how, unexpectedly, a Gospel tract or book, with the inscription on the title page, 'A gift of American Christian friends,' came into his hands; how in his hours of homesickness he began to read it; how the truth about Christ crucified entered his conscience and made him a new creature. There and then, in his captivity, he learned to pray in spirit and in truth. There he had made up his mind upon his return to start his home life all anew. Instead of vodka he will now drink of the Word. Instead of bad language, in his house will be heard the voice of praise. . . . What power on earth is able to stop the influence of such transformed lives? What priests will succeed in driving out from their homes men who have borne the brunt of the battle and suffered for their country? This might be the turning of a new leaf in the national life of Russia."

THIS vivid picture applies not only to the Russian prisoners, but to many of other nationalities as well, who are hungering in their prison camps for the Gospel. In order to carry on the work effectively, the utmost expedition is needed. "The King's business requires haste." If the gifts of the Lord's people should come in sufficient abundance, Gospel workers, under the arrangements made by the committee, are assured of free entrance to the prison camps and can begin the great work without delay. It is an opportunity which is now probably at the maximum, and never again will it be so attractive nor so full of glorious promise as at the present moment. The committee is going ahead on faith with its plans, trusting confidently that Christian America will stand by it and hold up the hands in this work for the salvation of souls.

All contributions for the War Prisoners Gospel Fund should be addressed to the Christian Herald, Bible House, New ork. Every gift will be acknowledged. We make special appeal to churches, missionary societies, mission leagues, Christian Endeavorers, Epworth Leagues, Baptist Young People's Societies, Sunday schools, and Prayer League Circles. By a united effort—every member having a share, however small, in the enterprise—great and blessed results may be accomplished. Send in your offering without delay.

◆

Revival Work in Soldiers' Camps

FOR ten months it has been my privilege to go up and down Scotland, by train, motor car, and bicycle, visiting the military camps and preaching Christ to the British soldiers. In audiences composed of hundreds of soldiers I have seen at the close of the service two-thirds or more of the men present stand up and publicly declare their acceptance of Christ as their personal Saviour. More than 44,000 soldiers have been presented with Testaments and enrolled in the Pocket Testament League. More than 26,000 soldiers have signed the combined League and Decision cards declaring their acceptance of Christ.

For several months the general plan of campaign among the soldiers was to visit the various camps by train or motor car, spending only one night in each place. During the past four months, however, the plan has been followed of conducting brief missions in each camp, lasting three or four days. Some time ago I conducted meetings for four nights at a certain camp in the south. The gatherings grew in power and intensity, and several hundred soldiers professed acceptance of Christ as their Saviour.

For five weeks meetings were held with the soldiers stationed in and around Edinburgh, chiefly in Y. M. C. A. marquees, and in tents in the military camps. Over 2,000 soldiers made the great decision.

God is continuing marvelously to bless the work of the Pocket Testament League among the soldiers in Scotland.

I will appreciate it more than I can express in words, if those who read these lines will pray earnestly for God's blessing upon this effort to win the soldiers to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. GEORGE T. B. DAVIS.

Four generations of our family have read your paper, and the fifth one enjoys the pictures.
Otisville, N. Y. HERBERT H. KING.

Tonight
Let's End That Corn!
Apply a little Blue-jay plaster. That brings a wonderful wax in touch with the corn, and protects it.
This wax was invented by a chemist who has spent 25 years studying corns.
Tomorrow
You'll forget the corn. Blue-jay ends all pain.
It will prove to you that all corn pains are needless. You can stop them in an instant—and forever—with a Blue-jay. You will always do that when you know the facts.
Next Day
The corn will disappear for good. And no soreness follows. Blue-jay has proved that on 70 million corns. It will prove it to you, we promise. After that, you will never keep a corn.
BAUER & BLACK, Chicago and New York
Makers of Surgical Dressings, etc.
15c and 25c at Druggists
Blue-jay
Ends Corns

Rider AGENTS Wanted
1916 Model
in each town to ride and show a new 1916 model "RANGER" bicycle Write for our special offer on a sample to introduce.
DELIVERED FREE on approval and 30 days' trial. Send for big free catalog and particulars of most marvelous offer ever made on a bicycle. You will be astonished at our low prices and remarkable terms.
94 STYLES, sizes and colors in Ranger bicycles. Most complete line in America. Other guaranteed models $11.95, $14.75 and $17.60. A few good second-hand bicycles taken in trade, $3 to $8 to clear.
Tires, lamps, wheels, sundries, parts, and all bicycle supplies at half usual prices. Do not buy until you get our catalog and offers. Write Now.
MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. K-71, CHICAGO

BECOME A NURSE
WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.
Fifteenth Year.
The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St., Jamestown, N.Y.

LePAGE'S GLUE 10c
BETTER THAN PASTE

Valuable Book on Cats Free
Every Lover of Cats
Should have this book giving valuable information on the care of the great household pet and methods of treatment when ill.
Also book on the dog, mailed free.
Address Dept. D.
DR. A. C. DANIELS, Inc.
172 Milk St., Boston, Mass.

Are You Like This Woman?

MORNING NEWS

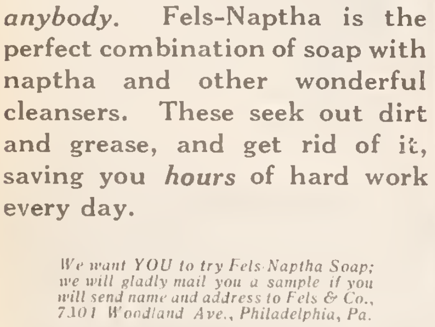
Mrs. Savetime reads the paper while her clothes soak with Fels-Naptha Soap. She uses Fels-Naptha nowadays, because it cuts the hard work out of her washing and all her soap-and-water housework. "Labor without reward is the meanest and most irksome thing on earth," she read.

"How true that is," she thought "I remember when I used to work, work, work all day, and had no time to do anything—not even to make myself a dress. And I was always too tired to go anywhere, even if I'd had the time. I spent more money too, because I had to have help with the heaviest work and at house-cleaning time.

"I really do more work nowadays. But I'm not all tired out and I have plenty of time for rest and pleasure. I've saved money, too, because I haven't had to pay for any outside help Fels-Naptha Soap has been my reward, and it certainly has taken away all my old dread of washday."

What Fels-Naptha Soap did for Mrs. Savetime it will do for anybody. Fels-Naptha is the perfect combination of soap with naptha and other wonderful cleansers. These seek out dirt and grease, and get rid of it, saving you hours of hard work every day.

We want YOU to try Fels-Naptha Soap; we will gladly mail you a sample if you will send name and address to Fels & Co., 7301 Woodland Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.



Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League. All correspondents are specially requested to make their letters as brief as possible. Write requests and acknowledgments on separate sheets.

THE influence of the Christian Herald Prayer League is rapidly widening. In this week's mail are three specially interesting letters:

W. S. Wagner writes from Troy, Ohio, asking prayers for a convict in the Ohio State Reformatory who is ill with lung trouble. Shortly after his conviction, this young man asked Mr. Wagner to send him the Christian Herald. He did so, and now the prisoner writes: "Dear Brother: Will you please write the Christian Herald Prayer League, explaining to them my condition, and asking if they would also unite in prayer for my recovery, and for the conversion of my cellmate?" We are sure that the Prayer League will pray with special earnestness for the healing of this young prisoner and the conversion of his friend.

The second letter is from Mrs. Mary J. Peele, of Rich Square, S. C., who wishes to organize a local Prayer League in that place.

The third letter is from A. B., who writes from Turner, Me.: "The Prayer League is a wonderful provision for people isolated from other Christians. They feel as though they were a part of the great Christian Herald Family prayer meeting."

Here is a letter full of good news. Mrs. C. E. W. writes from Protection, Kan.: "We had a wonderful outpouring of the Holy Spirit at our revival. Two hundred professed conversion and $11,000 was raised for building a new church. My son was converted and my little daughter. Pray that those who were converted will persevere."

A Louisiana mother writes: "Two years ago I asked prayer for my son, who was stricken with epilepsy at the age of thirty years, and continued to have attacks every three weeks for a year. I am so happy to tell you that he has been free from them now for over twelve months." Mrs. J. M. writes: "It is with a thankful heart that I write to tell you that our prayers are being answered. One son received an increase in wages, which he sorely needed; the other son tells me that he has cut out drinking." A friend from Virginia writes: "Since I last wrote you my brother has quit drinking and has gone to work. Last summer when he was doing so badly I agonized in prayer for him, and my prayer has been answered."

Mrs. H. A. W. writes: "I asked prayer that we be helped out of financial difficulties and that my health might be better. Both prayers have been answered, the first when it seemed all hope was gone." Mrs. M. J. H. writes: "I have recently received such blessed answers to prayer for my health, and also for financial aid, that I wish to acknowledge the glorious goodness of God."

G. H. C. writes from Strasburg, Va.: "I wish to state that I, rather we, as a financial institution, were threatened with a heavy loss, which would have seriously embarrassed us. It rested upon a contingency for several years. I resorted to prayer these years to save us from the loss, and just yesterday this prayer was answered with not the loss of a dollar."

An Ohio mother writes to thank God for prayers answered for her oldest son, who has stopped drinking and is at work. She asks prayer that her other sons may be saved from the drink habit, and that two sons who are deaf may have their hearing restored.

Acknowledgments of answered prayers have also been received from:

G. E. J., Jollets, Va.; C. A. D., Vincennes, Ind.; Mrs. H. C., Benton Harbor, Mich.; A Friend, Farmersville, Ohio; D. D., Florence, Pa.; Thankful Mother, Ramsey, Ill.; Mrs. C. L. H., Kingman, Ariz.; H. C. L., Cortland, N. Y.; Mrs. A. K., Dallas, Texas; A. C. W., Little Rock, Ark.; Mrs. S. Y. E., Morgantown, Ky.; A Reader, Max Meadows, Va.; J. M., East Poultney, Vt.; Mrs. L. G. B., Lisbon, N. H.; Mrs. O. M., Port Orange, Fla.; Mrs. W. E. B., Cambridge Springs, Pa.; S. A., Smethport, Pa.; M. L. S., Visalia, Calif.

A lady from New England writes: "Will the Prayer League and Brotherhood meeting pray for me? I can not tell you my trouble, but God knows." Prayers are asked for the recovery of Miss Ruth Gossard, niece of Mr. J. W. Gossard of Chicago.

Mr. W. H. Collinson, a faithful Christian worker of Mount Vernon, N. Y., wrote on February 15 to say that his dear wife and coworker had died suddenly on that day and to ask the earnest prayers of the Christian Herald readers that he might receive grace in this time of bitter trial.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Rantoul, Kan.; Milton, Iowa; Irvington, Ky.; Rich Square, N. C.; Holmsville, Wis.; Riverhead, N. Y.; Edson, Kan.; Florence, Pa.; Champaign, Ill.; Sag Harbor, L. I.; Jackson, Mo.; Vining, Okla.; Ithaca, N. Y.; Storm Lake, Iowa; Gilroy, Cal.; Hunter, N. Y.; Reamsville, Kan.; Constantia, N. Y.; Loveland, Colo.; Quincy, Mass.; Harford, N. Y.; Westbrook, Me.; Palisade, Colo.; Alice, Texas; Belle Plaine, Sask., N. W. T.; Powow, Okla.; Pilot Mountain, Tenn.; Melrose, Wis.; Live Oak, Fla.; Sheffield, Pa.; Scales Mound, Ill.; Ashland, Ore.; Hastings, Ind.; Loveland, Ohio (in the Methodist Church); Greensboro, N. C. (in the Methodist Church); Louisville, Ky. (that all departments of Sunday school may increase); Parker City (that all the saloons may be closed); Grindstone Hill Church and vicinity, Chambersburg, Pa.; St. Louis, Mo. (in the Richmond Heights Presbyterian Church); State Line, Ind. (in the M. E. Church), A Friend, Newark, N. J., asks prayer that sixty-one friends may be saved; Bristol, Ind. (in the united churches of Baptist and Free Baptist); A Reader, St. Andrew, Fla., asks prayer that Bay County may be voted dry.

A Mother, Mrs. D. B. R., Mrs. G. C. S., A Widow, Mrs. S. M. Y., Mrs. M. R. C., ask prayers that their sons' minds may be restored; Mrs. A. C. M., Mrs. P. H. H., A Mother, Mrs. W. R. O., Mrs. J. L., their daughters'; Mrs. J. B., R. E. O., their mothers'; E. M. G. asks prayer that the mind of a young physician may be restored. Fifteen other friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for other relatives, friends or themselves.

Mrs. R. H. asks prayers that daughter's sight may be restored; Mrs. R., Mrs. C. F. J., Mrs. W. W., ask prayer that sisters sight may be restored. Mrs. S. P. H. asks prayer that sight of eye may be restored, and husband's sight strengthened. Eighteen other friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for friends, relatives or themselves.

Sixty-five friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessings.

Eight parents ask prayer that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit. Mrs. M. A. B., that son and his wife may be delivered from the liquor habit. M. L. S., Mrs. M. J. H., their husbands. Twenty-two other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be delivered from this habit.

M. W. asks prayers that daughter may be delivered from the drug and cigarette habit. Mrs. M., Mrs. A. R. T., ask prayer that friends may be cured of the drug habit.

E. V. asks prayer that four sons may be saved. Mrs. L. H. S., C. A. D and M. H. ask prayer that their sons may be saved. Mrs. R. P. asks prayer that son may be saved and reconciled to his wife. Forty-nine other parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; twenty-five wives, their husbands. Ninety-five friends ask prayers that friends or relatives may be converted.

Twenty-one readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends.

One hundred and forty friends ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including Mrs. L. C., that a nine-year-old boy may gain the power of speech; and Mrs. A. P. B., that a deaf and dumb family may be healed.

Eighty-nine ask prayer for healing of self; including W. S. H., that an operation may be successful.

Eight friends ask prayer that hearing may be restored. Mrs. F. M. R. asks prayer that mother's and sister's hearing may be restored. Thirteen others ask prayer that hearing of friends may be restored.

Thirty-nine friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs, including Mrs. A. B., that church debt may be lifted.

Sixty-one friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including Mrs. J. D. M., that a young man, who mysteriously disappeared, may return to his mother; another, Mrs. S. P. H., Newark, Ohio, that a Presbyterian minister may receive a call to a church.

Cash o
Credit—Unbeatabl Quality

We pay frei and shi wit 24 h

Write for Wholesale Price on this beautiful Kalamazoo Missio Range—and 500 other styles and sizes o stoves and ranges shown in our new cat alog—latest improvements—the best of qualit —at low factory-to-you price. 30 days' trial— 360 days' approval test. We also make Malleabl Steel Ranges. Ask for catalog No. 103.

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., MFRS
Kalamazoo, Mich.

"A Kalamazo
Trade Mark Registered Direct to You

PAINT
VARNISH

On every side you will find
WHITING-ADAMS
Trade VULCAN Mark
Rubber Cemented
BRUSHES

Bristles fastened with Vulcanized Har Rubber, and held in a vise-like grip.Heddir of bristles and failure of brushes impossibl

The most extensive and best line of Brush in the world

Send for illustrated literature

John L. Whiting-J. J. Adams C
690 to 710 Harrison Ave., Boston, U. S.
Brush Manufacturers for Over 100 Yea

Whiting-Adams Brushes Awarded Gold Medal, the high award at Panama-Pacific Exposition, 1915

The Chines Woolflowe

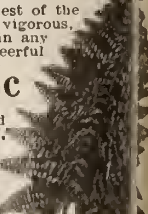
introduced by us las has proved a grea cess everywhere most wonderful novelty. It is a Cel new form and easy g Plants throw out of branches hearin of crimson wool a foot thick. Also laterals with heads, and fresh foliage. Flowers fo June but none fa fore frost, continu expand and glow w wonderful crimso let color, very sho succeeds anywher

Seed per pkt. 10c., 3 for 25c., together wit TRAILING PETUNIA AND ANNUAL S WILLIAM (fine novelties) free.

Our Big Catalog of Flower and Veg. Seeds, Plants and rare new Fruits free. Write for it.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Inc., Floral Park,

New Beautiful Fern
"Fluffy Ruffles"



Newest, daintiest and loveliest of the ostrich plumed type. Strong, vigorous, hardy—will grow and thrive in any home. Makes whole house cheerful

4 Fancy Ferns Postpaid for 35c

One Fluffy Ruffles and 3 others The Boston, arched and interlaced with long, sword like fronds, Emerald Feather, a drooping, feathery sort, and a Dainty Table Fern, a fitting ornament for any nook or corner

All Nice Growing Plants. Will qu grow in size and value. Send 35 cents toda these four fine ferns together with our co catalog of desirable Seeds, Plants and Bulbs.

Iowa Seed Co., Dept. E Des Moines

GREIDER'S FINE CATAL

of pure bred poultry; 70 breeds illustrate scribed, many in color. Perfect poultr all facts Low prices on stock and hatc Incubators and brooders. 23 years in You need this book. Send 10c for it—

B. H. GREIDER, Box 14 Rhe

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOKS

TWO BOOKS BY FAMOUS PASTOR

REV. J. H. JOWETT, D. D., has been aptly described as the most spiritual preacher in America. He has written two volumes, "Thirsting for the Springs" and Brooks by the Traveler's Way." These delightful books are written in this great preacher's ppiest vein and the gift of felicitous expression shines out on every page.

These two volumes, aggregating 530 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, postpaid, for $2.00. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, these two volumes for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

IARGARET E. SANGSTER'S NEW BOOK

MARGARET E. SANGSTER, JR., does not make up her stories and poems—they just form themselves on the background of r mind as winter sprites trace wonderful pictures on windowpanes, and then simply cause she cannot help herself, she sets down a description of these pictures. There are, all, in her new book, "Real People and Dreams," about eighty poems and thirty-two ort stories and sketches.

We will send this new volume by Margaret E. Sangster, Jr., handsomely bound in cloth, with a new photographic frontispiece of Margaret E. Sangster herself, and with illustrations for a number of the poems, together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, postpaid, for $1.85. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

"FORTY THOUSAND EAUTIFUL QUOTATIONS"

SOME years ago the Christian Herald published a work entitled "Forty Thousand Sublime and Beautiful Thoughts." It was composed a collection of the best sayings on every conceivable subject which the compiler could come on. In the course of time the edition of this book was exhausted. We have had so many quiries for it that we have decided to republish it this year thoroughly revised.

We will send you this volume, together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, for $3.00, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, "Forty Thousand Sublime and Beautiful Thoughts" for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $3.00.

UTHER IN LIGHT OF RECENT RESEARCH

WHILE there are several lives of Luther, Professor Heinrich Boehmer's famous work, which has attracted universal attention in Europe, is one of the best at has ever appeared. It comes most opportunely in view of the approaching celebration the four hundredth anniversary of the nailing of Luther's famous Thesis on the gate of e old castle church at Wittenberg, which was the beginning of the Reformation. The ristian Herald has had the good fortune to secure the exclusive American rights of this ok and has had it translated by Professor Carl F. Huth, Jr., of the University of Chicago.

The Life of Luther, handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent together with the Christian Herald for one whole year, postpaid, for $2.25, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $3.00.

A NEW "DO OMETHING" BOOK

DID you read "Janice Day," which was offered with the Christian Herald last year? You will remember it was the "Do Something" book. The suc- ss of the book was such that the author, Helen Beecher Long, wrote a sequel entitled "The sting of Janice Day." It is a vivid and delightful picture of typical New England life d character.

We will send "The Testing of Janice Day," 310 pages, attractive cloth covers, together with the Christian Herald for one whole year for $2.00, or we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, "The Testing of Janice Day," for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

UR ART CALENDAR FOR 1916

THIS beautiful calendar is composed of a reproduction of that remarkable picture of Christ walking beside the plowman in the field, which was published der the title of "Lo, I Am With You Alway." The picture is described in verses by Margaret Sangster, Jr. This calendar is printed in eight colors, achieving a most beautiful effect.

We will send this superb calendar together with the Christian Herald for one whole year for $1.75, or to old subscribers sending us their renewal and one new subscription to the Christian Herald, we will send two copies of this calendar mailed to separate addresses if desired, FREE.

COMPANION O THE BIBLE

HAVE you bought your copy of "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered?" Here is another book which has had a wonderful success during the past year and every lover of the Bible should ssess a copy. Indeed it is a wonderful help to Bible study. This book is the result of search covering a period of twenty-seven years. Its theology is thoroughly sound.

We will send "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered" together with the Christian Herald for one whole year for $1.85. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

STORY FOR THE FAMILY CIRCLE

WE do not know when we have had quite as much pleasure in reading any book this year as "Little Sir Galahad." There is so much that is charming and morous and intensely human in the whole story that it appeals to the reader probably th greater force than if the action were on a more dignified level.

"Little Sir Galahad," 376 pages, illustrated and handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent postpaid with one yearly subscription to the Christian Herald for $2.00. Or, we will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a reward, this volume for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

Christian Herald Red Letter Bibles

The Only India Paper Red Letter Bible in the World

The only genuine edition of the Red Letter Bible s the Authorized or King James Version, unhanged save for the variation of the color in the ype. Two colors (Red and Black) are employed, n accordance with the simple plan devised by the ate Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Originator of the Red Letter principle applied to the Holy Scriptures.

1—In the Old Testament the passages quoted y our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are Printed in Red.

2—In the New Testament, the words uniersally accepted as those of the Saviour are Printed in Red.

3—A Red Star (★) immediately following a erse in the Old Testament indicates that the erse embodies a prophetic reference to Christ s the coming Messiah.

Contains Full References; also a Concordance, Subject Index, and Dictionary, Helps, Maps, and Numerous Illustrations.

Large type, bound in American Levant, overapping edges, red under-gold, weight 20 ounces.

We send this superb Bible prepaid, together with the Christian Herald for one whole year for $3.00

OR: We will send it to old subscribers Free as a reward for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $1.50 each.

Bound in Genuine Morocco, Calf Finish, Leather Lining, Silk Sewed, will be sent, prepaid, with the Christian Herald, for one year FOR ONLY $4.00

OR: We will send it to old subscribers Free as a reward for sending us three new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $1.50 each.

Christian Herald Red Letter Testament

Only New Testament which contains all the words spoken by our Lord printed in Red. Bound in American Levant, with over-lapping edges—red-under-gold—with book mark. Issued in both the Authorized and Revised Versions, and is Sent Prepaid, together with the Christian Herald for One Year FOR ONLY . . $2.00

Or: We will send it to old subscribers Free as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $1.50.

"Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book," constituting the Bible Picture Outfit, can be included in any of the above offers for 50 cents additional.

ddress, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

The War in Europe

Continued from page 290

called heights of Louvemont, which it then mounted and crossed south of Beaumont, captured the day before, and just north of the hamlet of Louvemont, from which these heights derive their name, and thence, still running to the east, crossed the railroad running north to Damvilliers, at a point a little south of Ornes, also captured the day before.

From this point the line curved to the southeast and crossed the railroad running from Verdun east to Etain, at a point to the west of the latter named place and between it and Hautecourt. The German gains southward toward Verdun along the whole length of the above line slightly exceeded five miles, and brought them to within approximately four miles of the most northerly of northern forts of the outer defenses of the fortress.

This northern group of forts comprises the five forts bearing the following names; Fort Douaumont, the most northerly; Fort Sauville, west; Fort Vaux, east; and Forts Belleville and St. Michel, the closest in to the citadel. Of these the first three were reached by the projectiles of the German artillery, as was also Fort de Marre, the most northerly of the westerly group of forts on the west side of the Meuse, which forts run in a north and south line paralleling the river.

The offensive has probably not been lightly or desperately undertaken. Not lightly, because all the German operations of this character during the war have been initiated only after a long and careful study of the problem presented, its difficulties, natural and artificial, and the ways and means to be adopted to overcome these difficulties. Not desperately, because there is absolutely nothing in the German military situation which would lead the Germans to stake all on one throw. So that we are now witnessing one of the most interesting and, in a strategic sense, decisive operations of the war.

For the past eighteen months the French, well knowing the importance of this key position, have sought in every possible way, using all the resources available, to strengthen its defensive power. There is an army of about 200,000 men specially assigned to its defense in and out of the fortress under able and scientific commanders, and such reenforcements to this army as are necessary will be provided from other parts of the line, or from such reserves as are at the disposal of the French commanders.

On the other hand, the fortress is being assailed by an equally determined, equally well led and large force, and this force possesses what may prove to be the determining factor in the contest, high-angle guns of great power against a fixed target.

ON Friday, the battle continued to rage even more fiercely than on the preceding days, and in the afternoon of that day after a bombardment lasting all the preceding night and the forenoon of Friday, the most northerly of the exterior defenses, Fort Douaumont was stormed by the 24th Brandenburg regiment, and after most terrific fighting, captured. This capture meant a gain of approximately two more miles for the Germans and, even more important, it removed the obstacle to a German advance to the south from Ornes, as the plain to the south of that town lay under the guns of this fort.

Fort Douaumont was regarded as one of the strongest of the northern exterior forts which guard the citadel of Verdun; built of steel, stone and concrete, it was defended with the heaviest guns the French army possess. After the capture of this fort the Germans worked all Friday night bringing up fresh guns and supplies of explosive, and so forth, and at daylight Saturday opened an artillery attack on the remaining forts of this northern group and on the citadel itself. As these lines are written, Monday morning February 28, unverified reports reach us that the French succeeded in recapturing the lost fort, but again lost it, and that the Germans are in possession. The other fronts present little of interest in view of the absorbing struggle taking place in the west. The Austro-Italian situation is practically unchanged, and so is the situation in Mesopotamia.

The German raider which captured and sent in the Appam to Newport News, Va., was again heard from when the Westburn, a new victim of the mysterious raider, suddenly appeared at Santa Crux, Teneriffe, on Wednesday, in charge of a German prize crew and with 206 prisoners taken from various vessels which this raider had captured. The prisoners being landed, the prize crew Thursday took the Westburn outside the Spanish three-mile limit and sunk her, saving themselves in small boats. This procedure avoided all trouble for Spain with Great Britain on the subject and accomplished the main object the Germans had in view.

Portugal took forcible possession on Wednesday of the German and Austrian vessels in the River Tagus at Lisbon and hoisted the Portuguese flag over them. It is stated that this act was done by the commander of the naval division of Lisbon on his own initiative, and that his motive in doing so was to prevent these ships from escaping and turning commerce destroyers.

THE latest word is to the effect that British lines in Belgium and France are being extended to replace French troops who are being rushed to the Verdun region to take part in the fighting "which has settled down to a terrific slaughter." Twenty German army divisions comprising 400,000 men are said to have been thrown into this great battle, and fifteen divisions of French troops. Commenting on the movement, a German critic is quoted in the New York Times as stating that "the hardest step in conquering a fortress is the first break through the circle of outer forts. Therefore, success at this point, is as a rule of decisive import."

On February 22 Premier Asquith announced in the House of Commons the basic terms that England will accept in making peace, his statement being in reply to a question and as follows: "I have stated in clear, direct, explicit, and emphatic language what are the terms upon which we in this country are prepared to make peace. I will repeat them. They are familiar to our Allies and well known to the German Chancellor. What I said November 9, 1914, I repeat now: 'We shall never sheathe the sword which we have not lightly drawn until Belgium—and, I will add, Serbia—recover in full measure all and more than they have sacrificed; until France is adequately secured against aggression; until the rights of the small nations of Europe are based upon an unassailable foundation, and until the military domination of Prussia is wholly and finally destroyed.' What is there wanting in clearness and directness in that? I ask Mr. Trevelyan and the German Chancellor how I can make it fuller and more intelligible? How can I do more to convince him and all our enemies 'that not until a peace based upon those foundations is within sight of attainment, and not until then, shall we or any of our allies abate by one jot our prosecution of this war.'"

The press states that Germany has now taken similar steps to those lately announced in England in regard to the importation of articles of luxury, and the prohibited list published in Berlin includes pineapples, candy, perfumes, cosmetics, silk and lace dresses, precious stones, paintings.

On February 27 the steamship Maloja of the Peninsular & Oriental Line carrying 119 passengers and a crew of about 300, struck a mine two miles off of Dover and sank, carrying down 170, 55 being passengers. Many of these are believed to have been killed by the explosion. A tanker, The Empress of Fort William, went to the Maloja's aid and also struck a mine and sank, but none of her crew were lost.

Physical Victory!

What Does It Mean To You?

It means that you can be Strong, Vigorous — full of Life and energy- Realize The Best Within Yourself for yourself, your family and friends.

You can be free from Chronic Ailments.
You can have a Clear Skin.
You can have a Good Figure.

You Can Weigh What You Should Weigh

I no longer need to say what "I can do," but what "I HAVE DONE". I have helped 75,000 of the most cultured, intelligent women of America to arise to their very best—why not you?

No Drugs—No Medicines

My pupils simply comply with Nature's Laws.

I think I do not exaggerate when I say I have built up the vitality and strength of more women during the past eleven years than any ten physicians—the most progressive physicians are my friends—their wives and daughters are my pupils—the medical magazines advertise my work.

I am at my desk from 8 A. M. to 5 P. M. personally supervising my work. When in Chicago come to see me.

My work has grown in favor because results are quick, natural and permanent, and because they are scientific and appeal to common sense. Fully one-third of my pupils are sent to me by those who have finished my work.

I have published a free booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly, and giving other information of vital interest to woman. You can judge what I can do for you by what I have done for others.

If you are perfectly well and your figure is just what you wish, you may be able to help a dear friend—at least you will help me by your interest in this great movement for perfect health, greater culture, refinement and beauty in woman. Won't you join us?

Sit down and write to me NOW. Don't wait—you may forget it. I have had a wonderful experience, and I should like to tell you about it.

SUSANNA COCROFT
Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

The fact that Miss Cocroft has advertised in this magazine for 14 years is evidence that she accomplishes what she claims. Rand McNally & Co., have just published her new book. "Beauty a Duty." For sale at all booksellers. Beautifully bound.

Send Us Your Old Carpets
We Dye Them and Weave
Velvety Rugs

Beautiful new rugs in plain, fancy or Oriental patterns — any color you want, any size—totally different and far superior to other rugs woven from old carpets.

Rugs, $1.00 and Up

Reversible, seamless, soft, bright, durable rugs, guaranteed to wear 10 years. Money back if not satisfied. Every order completed in three days.

You Save 1-2

Your old carpets are worth money, no matter how badly worn.

FREE Write for book of designs in color, our liberal freight payment offer and full information.

OLSON RUG CO.
Dept. A-32. 40 Laflin St., Chicago, Ill.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your own home 30 days free, no matter where you live. Show your friends. Send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of thousands in daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, made of high grade material, beautifully finished, smooth design, guaranteed for years by our Two Million Dollar Bond.

Ask your dealers to show you Hoosier Stoves. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today. Write your name and address plainly. No obligations.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

A Voice in the Wilderness

Continued from page 303

in his life, perhaps, he really did believe in it, and thought that he was in it.

The men were standing knee deep in the water and holding their captive lightly by his arms and legs, their eyes upon their leader, waiting now.

Jasper Kemp stood in the water also, looking down benevolently upon his victim, his chin in his hand, his elbow in his other hand, an attitude which carried a feeling of hopelessness to the frightened minister.

"And now there's that little matter of the devil," said Jasper Kemp reflectively. "We'll just fix that up next while we're near his place of residence. You believe in the devil, Mr. Parson, from now on. If you'd ever tried resistin' him I figger you'd have b'lieved in him long ago. But you believe in him from now on, an' you don't preach against him any more! We're not goin' to have our Arizona men gettin' off their guard an' thinkin' their enemy is dead. There is a devil, Parson, an' you believe in him! Duck him, boys!"

Down went the minister into the water again, and came up spluttering, "Yes, I—I—I believe in the devil!"

"Very well, so far as it goes," said Jasper Kemp thoughtfully. "But now, boys, we're comin' to the most important of all, an' you better put him under about three times, for there mustn't be no mistake about this matter. You believe in the Bible, parson—the whole Bible!"

"Yes!" gasped West as he went down the first time and got a mouthful of the bitter water; "I believe—" The voice was fairly anguished. Down he went again. Another mouthful of water! "I believe in the whole Bible!" he screamed, and went down the third time. His voice was growing weaker, but he came up and reiterated it without request, and was lifted out upon the mud for a brief respite. The men of the bunkhouse were succeeding better than the clergymen back in the East had been able to do. The conceit was no longer visible in the face of the Rev. Frederick. His teeth were chattering, and he was beginning to see one really needed to believe in something when one came as near to his end as this. He lay, panting, upon his back in the mud.

"I ain't any sort of a Christian myself," Jasper Kemp went on, "but I just can't stand it to see a parson floatin' round that don't even know the name of the Firm he's workin' for. Now, parson, there's just one more requirement, an' then you can go home."

THE minister opened his eyes and looked around with a frightened appeal, but no one moved an atom, and Jasper Kemp went on.

"You say you had a church in New York. What was the name an' *ad*dress of your workin' boss up there?"

"What do you mean? I hadn't any boss."

"Why, him that hired you an' paid you. The chief elder or whatever you called him."

"Oh!" the minister's tone expressed lack of interest in the subject, but he answered languidly, "Ezekiel Newbold, Hazelton."

"Very good. Now, parson, you'll just kindly write two copies of a letter to Mr. Ezekiel Newbold statin' what you've just said to us concernin' your change of faith, sign your name, address one to Mr. Newbold an' give the duplicate to me. We just want this little matter put on record so you can't change your mind any in future. Do you get my idea?"

"Yes," said the minister dispiritedly.

"Will you do it?"

"Yes." (Apathetically.)

"Well, now I got a piece of advice for you. It would be just as well for your health for you to leave Arizona about as quick as you can find it convenient to pack, but you won't be allowed to leave this town, day or night, horse, cars or afoot, until them there letters are all O. K. Do you get me?"

"Yes." (Pathetically.)

"I might add, by way of explainin', that if you had come to Arizona an' minded your own business you wouldn't have been interfered with. You mighta preached whatever bosh you pleased so far as we was concerned—only you wouldn't have had no sorta audience after the first try of that stuff you give today. But when you come to Arizona an' put your fingers in other folks' pie; when you tried to squeal on the young gentleman who was keen enough to shoot out the lights to save a man's life, why, we ain't no further use for you. In the first place, you was all wrong. You thought the Kid shot out the lights to steal the gamin' money; but he didn't. He put it all in the hands of the sheriff some hours before your 'private information' reached him through the mail. You thought you were awful sharp, you little sneak! But I wasn't the only man present who saw you put your foot out an' cover a gold piece that rolled on the floor just when the fight began. You thought nobody was a lookin', but you'll favor us, please, with that identical gold piece along with the letter before you leave. Well, boys, that'll be about all. Untie him!"

IN silence and with a kind of contemptuous pity in their faces the strong men stooped and unbound him; then without another word they left him.

Jasper Kemp lingered for a moment looking down at the wretched man.

"Would you care to have us carry you back to the house?" he asked reflectively.

"No!" said the minister bitterly, "No!" And without another word Jasper Kemp left him.

Into the mesquite bushes crept the minister, his glory all departed, and hid his misery from the light, groaning in bitterness of spirit. He who had made the hearts of a score of old ministers to sorrow for Zion, who had split in two a pleasantly united congregation, and disrupted a session, was at last conquered. The Rev. Frederick West had recanted!

CHAPTER XVII

WHEN Margaret left the schoolhouse with Bud she had walked but a few steps when she remembered Mom Wallis and turned back to search for her; but nowhere could she find a trace of her. The front of the schoolhouse was as empty of any people from the camp as if no one had been there that morning. The curtain had not yet risen for the scene of the undoing of West.

"I suppose she must have gone home with them," said the girl wistfully. "I'm sorry not to have spoken with

She was good to me."

"You mean Mom Wallis?" said boy, "No, she ain't gone home. S hiking 'long to our house to see The Kid went along of her. See, the down by those cottonwood trees. Th them."

Margaret turned with eagerness hurried along with Bud now. She k who it was they called The Kid in tone of voice. She remembered how men had spoken of and to him, a gling of respect and gentleness showed how much beloved he was.
cheeks wore a heightened color and heart gave an odd flutter.

They walked rapidly and caught with their guests before they reached the Tanner house, and Marg had the pleasure of seeing Mom Wal face flush with shy delight when caught her softly round the waist, st ing quietly up from behind, and gre her with a kiss. There had not many kisses for Mom Wallis in the years, and the two that were to M garet Earle's account seemed sweet. Mom Wallis's eyes shone she had been a young girl as she tu with a smothered "Oh!" She wa woman not given to expressing her indeed, it might be said that the twenty years of her life had been of self-repression. She gave that little gasp of recognition and plea and then she relapsed into embarra silence beside the two young people found pleasure in their own greeti
Bud, boylike, was after a cotto along with Cap, who had appeared no one knew where and was atten the party joyously.

Mom Wallis in her big rough sh on the heels of which her scant br calico gown was lifted as she wall trudged shyly along between the young people, as carefully watched helped over the humps and bump the way as if she had been a prin
Margaret noticed with a happy appr how Gardley's hand was ready under old woman's elbow to assist her as poli as he might have done for her own mo had she been walking by his side.

Presently Bud and Cap returned,
Bud with observant eye soon timed step to Margaret's on her other side touched her elbow lightly to help over the next rut. This was his sec lesson in manners from Gardley.
had his first the Sunday before, wa ing the two while he and Cap wal behind. Bud was learning. He keen eyes and an alert brain. Marg smiled understandingly at him and face grew deep red with pleasure.

"He was bringin' me to see where was livin'," explained Mom W suddenly, nodding toward Gardley if he had been a king. "We wa hopin' to see you, except mebbe as you come by, goin' in."

"Oh, then I'm so glad I caught with you in time. I wouldn't h missed you for anything. I went b to look for you. Now you're comin to dinner with me, both of yo declared Margaret joyfully. "Willi your mother will have enough din for us all, won't she?"

"Sure!" said Bud with that assura born of his life acquaintance with mother, who had never failed him i trying situation so far as things to were concerned.

To be continued

Preparation for Service

Continued from page 292

"The next stop is your station. Get your wraps and bundles ready." So she got ready. In about forty minutes the train came to a standstill. No station had been called, but the traveling man said, "This is your station, madam." She hurriedly left the train. After a while the train pulled out and probably thirty or forty minutes later, the trainman called the station at which the woman had intended leaving. The traveling man sprang to his feet. "Haven't you made a mistake?" he cried. "No, sir. I know every station on this line," said the trainman. "Where is the woman who is to leave here?" The traveling man answered, "I thought we stopped at that station thirty minutes ago, and I told her to get off." "We didn't stop at any station thirty minutes ago," the brakeman said. "Something was wrong with the engine and we stopped to fix it. We were out on the open prairie, and it is miles to the nearest house, and in such a blizzard, I don't see how that woman can escape death." When they reached the station the conductor telegraphed the division superintendent the situation and the latter answered by wire, "Spare no pense. Take an engine and a car every available man and find t woman." They searched many ho in that blinding blizzard. About d light they found her and her baby fro to death. She had followed the wro advice and it had cost her life.

To our church members everywher would say: beware of the temptation lead unclean, compromised, godl lives, the examples of which may r others for eternity. If there are s among you, clean up, for Jesus' sa and let us take America for Christ!

Does YOUR Church
Need a New Organ?

Or new furnishings? How much is needed to complete the interest on the mortgage? What amount does the Missionary Society need to complete the fund they want?

We have a plan whereby $100.00 or over can be obtained through the members of your church. If interested address the

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT
CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York

vans Art
ianos and Players
Factory to You
125 d up can be saved by my plan of lling direct from my factory to you. I can ve you from $125 to $250 on an Evans Artist
odel Piano or Player.
reight Paid The easiest kind of terms, weekly, monthly, quarterly or yearly yments to suit your convenience. All middle-en, jobbers, dealers and agents profits cut it. These are some of the reasons why I can sell e Evans Artist Model Pianos for such little oney. Let me send you the other reasons.
30 DAYS FREE TRIAL
If you are not entirely satisfied, we will take it back thout any cost to you—you are the sole judge to decide
Music Lessons Without Cost
We will give a two years course of piano instruction
e. Ask about our Insurance plan.
STORY & CLARK PIANO CO.
O. EVANS, Gen. Mgr., Dept. D-11, Chicago

Amy and Navy Liquid Glue
Odorless, Clean, Mighty to Mend
Th ONLY liquid hide and sinew glue Send 10 Cents an e will send you at once anywhere, postpaid, a large sealing container of this REAL glue.
Name of your dealer appreciated
ST DARD GLUE CO., Dept. C, Baltimore, Md.

DIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.
mas Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio

By Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
N atter what book you want, if it is a good book, w an supply it, no matter who publishes it, write
T CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

ividual Communion Cups
Convenient, Noiseless and Sanitary
L of thousands of churches using our cups and FREE
CALOG with quotations sent upon request.
SA ARY COMMUNION OUTFIT CO. 67th ST., ROCHESTER, N. Y.

LYMYER
CHURCH
ELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS
SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE.
OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
le to Cincinnati Bell Foundry B-51 Cincinnati, O.

OU CAN AFFORD Familiar Songs of the Gospel (No. 1 or 2). Round or shape notes. $3 hundred; samples, 5c each, 83 songs, words and music.
A.K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

RAYERS For Public Worship, Private Devotion and Personal Ministry. A
C plete Guide to Devotion. This book is helpful to all, to ome and public use. Cloth postpaid $1.00.
M. MUNSON, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

F e Bright, Capable Ladies to travel, demon-st e and sell dealers. Good pay. Railroad fare paid
G DRICH DRUG CO., Dept. 71, Omaha, Nebr.

To Aid the Farmer

Continued from page 293

defaults or disregard of rules and regulations. The Landschaft may recall the member's loan at will, but it can not sell or assign the mortgage or annuity contract. All loans are based on first mortgages, and must not exceed 50 per cent. of the value of the mortgaged property. Before a final decision of the committee of appraisal has been rendered, the matter must have been reviewed in public hearing, duly advertised, and the synopses of such hearing are to be kept on file with the Landschaft and a copy sent to the National Rural Credit Institute. The contracts and mortgages of members must be approved not only by the Landschaft but by the Institute, and all debentures must likewise have the Institute's approval. Before the National Institute approves a mortgage, it verifies the value of the security by means of its own special appraiser or appraisers. All mortgages issued as a basis of debenture issues are forwarded to the National Institute, which, in turn, deposits them in the Treasury of the United States.

The borrower receives debentures equivalent to the amount of his loan, which debentures command the same rate of interest as his note to the Landschaft. The National Institute may maintain a selling bureau to assist the members of the Landschaft in marketing their debentures, such a bureau serving merely as an agent, with the right to charge a commission for its service.

A Landschaft keeps a separate bookkeeping record with each member, debiting him with the amount of his loan and accruing charges, and crediting him with payments made. Until his account is balanced, the borrower continues to be indebted to the Landschaft and "his mortgage remains intact of record." The Landschaft's contract with a member is to constitute a rent charge on the land, with a prior claim thereon as against all other indebtedness. The borrower may pay off his loan in whole or in part by increasing his credit balance. Withdrawals from the sinking funds may also be permitted to a borrower after he has paid a portion of his loan.

The members of the Landschaft are personally and severally liable for its losses, but members cannot be proceeded against until the mortgage security and assets of the Landschaft are exhausted, and they are proceeded against in the same way as property owned in a bonded school or drainage district. Where a member defaults, the Landschaft covers the impairment "by apportioning the loss among all members and deducting it from their credit balances in their respective accounts." Members must agree, through proper clauses in their mortgages, to the summary foreclosure and seizure proceedings, which the Landschaft is to have the power to exercise.

The Institute may buy debentures and the members may pay dues with them. As payments are made to the Landschaft by members, the latter must deposit these funds in a depository named by the Institute to the credit of the Institute. The Institute pays all interest payments, salaries, expenses, etc., for the Landschaft. The Institute may take over the affairs of any Landschaft whenever it deems such a course desirable.

The sum of $500,000 is appropriated by Congress to carry out the purposes of the Act, which is to be in force and effect for a period of three years.

Let it be remembered by American farmers that these Landschafts have been in operation in Germany for nearly one hundred and fifty years and that they have never failed. No member has ever been called on to stand for the default of another member. Ought not that to be sufficient assurance?

They provide credit for the farmers at 3 and 4 per cent. They eliminate the middleman. They bring the borrowing farmer into direct contact with the owner of savings, who wants a safe and long-time investment.

Billions are available in the Eastern manufacturing centers for long-time investment at 3 and 4 per cent. Why should not the farmer so mobilize his security as to get the advantage of money at this rate? Why should not the land, the chief source of the nation's subsistence, its greatest asset, be made the basis of liquid wealth?

[SENATOR SHEPPARD, who is chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, represents one of the greatest of our agricultural states, Texas, and is familiar with the problems that confront the farmers of the country. We shall be glad to have readers write in briefly, expressing their views on this much-needed reform which would benefit not only the crop-raiser, but consumers generally.—The Editor.]

Valuable Free Booklets for Investors

THE following booklets have been prepared by great banking firms for guidance of their patrons who wish to make investments of funds on secure and profitable lines. Any reader of the Christian Herald who has $100 or more for investment may obtain any of the following booklets free.

A. H. Bickmore & Co., 111 Broadway, New York City, tell about 6 per cent. public service corporation notes, due July 1, 1917, in Circular "H-11." Write for it.

Peabody, Houghteling & Co., 10 South La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill., a firm having fifty years' successful experience in handling Chicago mortgages, tell how amounts of $100 or more can be invested to bring 6 per cent., in Circular "C." Write for it.

Many persons buy stocks and bonds on the partial payment plan. Full information on how this plan may be applied to Christian Herald readers who have money for investment is described in Booklet "E-2," prepared by Sheldon, Morgan & Co., 42 Broadway, New York.

Write to E. J. Lander & Co., Grand Forks, N. D., for their Booklet "O," giving a list of their current offerings of 6 per cent. farm mortgages.

If you will write to Slattery & Co., 40 Exchange Place, New York City, for Booklet "9-C. H.," it will give you full particulars regarding the Standard Oil issues, for maximum income yield.

Charles S. Kidder & Co., W. C. T. U. Building, Chicago, Ill., will send you free a list of their attractive investment offerings in denominations of $100 and $500, yielding from 5 per cent. to 6 per cent.

L. R. Latrobe & Co., 111 Broadway, New York City, will send you free on request a booklet about their Partial Payment Plan, Investor's Guide (270 pages), and a market letter. All of these are a help to the investor.

Write to Bowman, Cost & Co., Third National Bank Building, St. Louis, Mo., and ask them to place your name on their mailing list for "Investment Factors." This will tell you what to do with $100, $500 or $1,000 that you may have for investment.

Harvey Fisk & Sons, 62 Cedar Street, New York City, will tell you all about the Postal Savings System, Savings Banks and The Investment Banker if you will write to Department "227."

Send a postal card to Spooner & Robinson, 10 South La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill., and ask them for "Farm Mortgages as an Investment." You will find this very interesting.

If you will write to George M. Forman & Co., 11 South La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill., they will tell you all about their 6 per cent. Forman Farm Mortgages. As far as safety is concerned there is no better form of investment than farm mortgages.

P. W. Brooks & Co., 115 Broadway, New York City, will send you Booklet "A" and list of public utility bonds, which may be obtained on the instalment or partial payment plan under very advantageous terms.

Write to Aurelius-Swanson Co., Inc., 40 State National Bank Building, Oklahoma City, Okla., for a booklet describing methods, and lists of loans from $300 to $10,000, on Oklahoma real estate.

Drop a line to Bolger, Mosser & Willaman, 29 South La Salle Street, Chicago, Ill., and ask them to send you their list of Municipal Bonds free from the income tax. This concern has had twenty years' experience as specialists in municipal bonds.

Sidney Spitzer & Co., Dealers in Municipal Bonds, 115 Broadway, New York City, have issued for distribution an excellent circular for investors describing 43 different Municipal Bond Offerings, yielding attractively of suitable maturities and exempt from Federal Income and State Tax. Any Christian Herald reader may obtain a free copy of this circular.

EASTER MUSIC
Two fine new Sunday school services—"The Easter Message" and "Easter Offering"—5c per copy, 55c per doz., $4.35 per 100, postpaid. Sample copies free.
"The Gospel Choir"—Easter number—contains some of the finest music ever written for the "average" choir. 15c per copy, 10c per copy in lots of 10 or more. Sample copies free.
EASTER RECITATIONS
32 pages of bright, new recitations, drills and exercises by the best writers. 15c per copy, $1.80 per doz., postpaid. No free samples.
RAINBOW SONGS
The best book of primary and junior songs as yet compiled. Chas. H. Gabriel, Editor. 30c per copy, $3.50 per doz., postpaid. Sample for 15-day examination.
THE RODEHEAVER CO.
1083 Monon Building . . CHICAGO
633 Lippincott Building, PHILADELPHIA

BROWN'S
Bronchial
TROCHES
For Sore Throat
Relieve irritation and hoarseness, ease coughing, strengthen the voice.
10c TRIAL SIZE BOX
fits purse or pocket—convenient to carry. These Troches may be taken as required. Contain nothing harmful. Other sizes 25c, 50c & $1. At all druggists.
If your dealer cannot supply you, we will mail any size upon receipt of price.
JOHN I. BROWN & SON, Dept. 84, Boston, Mass.

A VACUUM CLEANER ON FREE TRIAL
The Reeves $5 Vacuum Cleaner is guaranteed to take ALL the dust from both rugs and furniture. Delivered at your door on 30 days' free trial. Send for booklet.
AGENTS WANTED
THE REEVES V. C. CO.
130 Broad Street Milford, Conn.

"Best" Hand Lantern
A powerful portable lamp, giving a 300 candle power pure white light. Just what the farmer, dairyman, stockman, etc. needs. Safe—Reliable—Economical—Absolutely Rain, Storm and Bug proof. Burns either gasoline or kerosene. Light in weight. Agents wanted. Big Profits. Write for Catalog. THE BEST LIGHT CO.
470 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

MERRY-GO-ROUNDS
MAKE BIG MONEY We make everything in the Riding-Gallery and Carousselle Line, from the smallest to the highest grade. Bring in hundreds of dollars daily. Finest appearing, easiest running and most attractive line manufactured. Write for catalog and particulars.
HERSCHELL-SPILLMAN CO., Park Amusement Outfitters, 625 Sweeney Street, North Tonawanda, New York.

Lowest Priced Boat in the World
Two sizes—15 and 17 feet. $25 to $45 for K.D. Boat.
All materials fitted—including hardware.
10 to 32 miles with 4 to 25 H P
$89 for 15-footer with motor installed—finished ready to run. Builder-Agents Wanted—Postal brings free catalog showing 100 boats.
BROOKS MFG. CO., 6753 Rust Ave., Saginaw, Mich.

Mend the Leaks
in your Granite, Tin, Aluminum and Iron Dishes, Kettles, Pans, etc., with PECK'S Soft Metal RIVETS
Anyone can do it. Quick and easy. No solder, cement or bolt. Fit any surface. Send for sample box of 25 assorted sizes, 10c postpaid. Regular package 25c.
PECK & CO., 334 Main St., Batavia, N.Y.
AGENTS WANTED

LAME PEOPLE
OLD WAY
The Perfection Extension Shoe for any person with one short limb. Worn with any style of ready-made shoes with perfect ease and comfort. Shipped on trial. Write for booklet.
Henry E. Lotz, 313 Third Ave., N. Y. City
OUR WAY
THE NATURAL WALK

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES For 30 yrs Standard Relief for Asthma (Inhalation)
All Druggists; or by mail, 35c.
STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

Fancy Poultry Beautiful Blue Andalusians, non-setters, imported and American, great layers, large eggs. First prizes everywhere. Free circular tells what women can make
O. P. WOOD EMSWORTH, PA.

INVENTORS Do Not Sacrifice Your Inventions
Get full money value. RELIABLE Book Free. Write
R. S. & A. B. Lacey, 610 Barrister Bldg., Washington, D.C.

Magazine Bargains

IF you have not ordered your magazines for this year, now is the time to do so. The Christian Herald Magazine Bureau has made arrangements with the publishers of other magazines whereby readers of the Christian Herald can obtain two or more magazines at a considerable saving over the price if ordered singly. The prices given here are for one year (new or renewal) and can go to different addresses, excepting in a few cases noted otherwise. No one can fill your order for these magazines at any lower price.

Canadian postage 50 cents additional; foreign postage, $1.00 additional.

BIBLE PICTURE CONTEST

Christian Herald Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.00
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.50
Christian Herald American Messenger Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.10
Christian Herald Orange Judd Am. Agriculturist Gems from Bible and Reply Book	$2.50

GEMS FROM THE BIBLE and REPLY BOOK are supplied only with above magazines. See full details of Bible Picture Contest on page 312.

SPECIAL COMBINATIONS

Christian Herald Housewife	$1.55	Save 45c
Christian Herald McCall's (free pattern) Housewife To-day's (free pattern)	$1.90	Save $1.10
Christian Herald Pictorial Review	$2.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion	$2.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald Home Needlework	$1.75	Save 50c
Christian Herald Mother's Magazine	$2.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald Etude (Music)	$2.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald *Mother's Magazine *Ladies' World *McCall's (free pattern)	$2.40	Save $2.10
Christian Herald People's Home Jnl	$1.55	Save 45c
Christian Herald Little Folks	$1.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald Ladies' World Housewife	$2.00	Save $1.00
Christian Herald American Poultry Advocate Book—200 Eggs a Year per Hen	$2.00	Save 50c
Christian Herald American	$2.40	Save 60c
Christian Herald *Woman's Home Companion *American	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald *Delineator *Everybody's	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Youth's Companion McCall's (pattern)	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald Everybody's Woman's Home Companion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion Review of Revs.	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald McCall's (pattern)	$1.65	Save 35c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla	$2.00	Save 50c
Christian Herald McCall's (pattern) Housewife People's Home Jnl.	$2.15	Save 85c
Christian Herald McCall's (pattern) Woman's Home Companion	$2.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Pictorial Review	$3.05	Save 95c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Woman's Home Companion	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald American Boy Woman's Home Companion	$3.25	Save 75c
Christian Herald Pictorial Review Woman's Home Companion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Woman's Home Companion World's Work	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald Everybody's Review of Revs.	$4.40	Save $1.60
Christian Herald Ladies' World	$1.90	Save 60c
Christian Herald McClure's Mag.	$2.15	Save 35c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Home Needlework	$2.40	Save 85c
Christian Herald Boys' Magazine Housewife Illustrated World	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Pictorial Review Metropolitan	$3.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Delineator Woman's Home Companion	$3.55	Save 95c
Christian Herald Current Opinion	$3.65	Save 85c
Christian Herald Modern Priscilla Pictorial Review Ladies' World	$3.65	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Collier's Woman's Home Companion	$4.15	Save $1.35
Christian Herald Youth's Comp'n Woman's Home Companion	$4.40	Save 60c

* Must go to the same address.

Send All Orders and Make All Remittances Payable to

CHRISTIAN HERALD MAGAZINE BUREAU

Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Philip and the Ethiopian

International Sunday School Lesson for March 19. Acts 8:26 0

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

"Understandest thou what thou readest?" Acts 8 : 30

This swarthy Ethiopian statesman, who was perhaps the premier of the great city and country of his birth, sets a good example to all travelers as to the literature which they should carry with them for perusal on their journeys. The newspaper, serial and review may be quite good in their place, but how much time is spent in cursory and superficial reading on railway trains or ocean voyages, which might be given to the careful study of Scripture, or biography, or devotional books. Of course, such studies call for a certain amount of absorption and concentration, but these would follow necessarily, if we were as eager toward God and the coming of his kingdom as we are to thing of this passing show. And the evangelis also gives us a fine lead as to the way i which our journeys might be utilized. W can help people to understand the mysteries of divine providence, to solve life' problems, and to obtain a deeper religiou knowledge. It is good when our hearts ar open to the promptings of God's Spiri saying, "Go join thyself to this man. The circumstances will be found to b absolutely propitious. We shall discove souls on the alert to know more, Th doors of opportunity will stand wide oper and the result of such an interview will b to send many on their way rejoicing.

Two Busy Men — and God

By Arthur H. Howland

SAUL, having sanctioned the execution of Stephen, "made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women, committed them to prison." Then the Christian brotherhood was scattered. Its members ran to save their lives. If they had been called upon to stay at Jerusalem to witness for the truth they would have done that. There were doubtless very few of them who would not have been willing to stay and die for Jesus. But God had use for them in other quarters. The first chapter of the church's story had closed. They were now to begin to carry out the expanding order of Jesus: "Ye shall be witnesses unto me at Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and to the uttermost parts of the earth." Some of them were probably driven out of the city by police orders; some of them fled without being ordered away. But along all roads to nearer and distant towns and provinces went these Jews who believed in Jesus.

But what did they do as they fled? "Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word." Among those who went was Philip, the deacon and evangelist, one of the seven men who had been chosen to distribute the daily supplies of the church. These seven had been chosen as "men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and wisdom." With this splendid equipment, Philip, his work done at Jerusalem, goes northward to Samaria.

We are to find in this story about Philip two different kinds of divine guidance. We do not read that he was specifically directed to Samaria. We know nothing about what impulses led him there. He may have left Jerusalem hastily; he may have accompanied other friends. He may have taken his family to Samaria. We find him later living at Cæsarea, far beyond Samaria, with four earnest Christian daughters. He may not have been especially directed by the Holy Spirit to go to Samaria, but he took the Spirit with him as he went. We are to see later another kind of guidance, when the Holy Spirit said: "Philip, go down to the desert road toward Gaza and talk to a man you will find there."

It is important to understand both kinds of guidance. In some matters God allows us to use our own judgment, to be influenced by circumstances; at other times he tells us plainly to do a special thing. Some people make the mistake of waiting too long for these special leadings, and so miss the chance of doing good. They are afraid God will not bless them until they have a definite order from the Spirit. But God will bless any good man wherever he goes and whatever he does. He need not wait for the Spirit to send him. He may go—and take the Spirit with him. God is under obligation to go with him wherever he goes, giving him heavenly help.

Philip had a glorious time in Samaria. They had a real revival. Many of the people must have remembered Jesus. Later, Peter and John came to the c y, and those who had believed were ll further blessed. The Pentecostal gi of the Holy Spirit fell upon them and m e their glad hearts gladder still.

But Simon the magician made a t ible blunder. He thought he could m e money out of this Pentecostal bless g. He offered the apostles money and s : "Give me also this power, that on wh soever I lay hands, he may receive e Holy Ghost."

It was then that Peter spoke the n e words: "Thy money perish with th " The church would have had a clea r, stronger, more triumphant career if r leaders had always been brave eno h to say these words when occasion manded.

But we must follow Philip. Peter d John went back to Jerusalem, but d said to Philip, "Arise, and go tov d the south, unto the way that goeth d n from Jerusalem unto Gaza, that is, e desert way."

Those are beautiful days when d talks to us as plain as that. How l t our feet are, how fluent our words, w rapid our pen, how eager and glad r whole mind and body and spirit. d has his hand upon us. God has a k for us. God is going to help us t o some special thing for him. That is e at its highest and best.

Philip "arose and went." Certai y. How could he do anything else? I w preposterous for a man to say "no o God when he speaks as plainly as t t! Yet how many sad and broken l s there are, inside and outside the chu , sad and broken because they have d "no" to God!

Some people allow themselves t e greatly perplexed about the proble f divine guidance. They have all sor f queer impulses, suggestions, fancie f duty—some of them difficult and tesque and absurd. They are not e God wants them to do these things, t they are afraid he does. What w d these people think of themselves if t y treated their own children as they t k God treats them? "My sheep know y voice," said Jesus. So if we do t know it is his voice, it is not his. "He forth I call you not servants, b l have called you friends," he said ag . "Come now, and let us reason togeth " saith the Lord. No guide so carefu o painstaking, so accurate as Jesus; o friend so considerate, so gentle as ; no one so able to make us underst l. We have only to follow when he tell s plainly what to do. When he does t t, go down toward Gaza as Philip l; when he does not, go to Samaria, or y in Jerusalem as our judgment dicta s.

Down on the Gaza road a little str n was shining under the hot rays of e Arabian sun. A chariot is coming so ward; a splendid equipage, acc panied by other chariots and s e horsemen. A man, evidently f h rank, sits or stands reading, a can y over his head. A pedestrian sudd y appears. He runs near the chario f the man who is reading. He seem o have been reading aloud. "Do u understand this?" asks the plain n afoot.

"How can I except some one gi e me?" answers the great man. The e as the plain man to come up into the ch iot with him.

e are used nowadays to seeing adve sements extolling the influence of th 'man who knows." People spirituar hungry are looking for this sort of a n. Not a man who guesses, but a ma who knows; a man who has seen an heard and experienced things that he an talk about confidently. Philip wa his sort of a man; so the Ethiopian wa ed him alongside him in the ch. ot.

ie plain man says: "This man wh n they killed a few months ago was Go s messenger, the very one whom th prophet is describing in the words yo have been reading from the parchme ."

ien the great man saw the stream. "W y may I not be baptized now?"

f thou believest with all thine he , thou mayest," answered Philip.

believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of od."

ie order was given to stop. The tw men went down into the stream. Th great man was baptized. Philip wa iurried away on another errand for Go The eunuch went on his way rejoi g—rejoicing in a new love of God, a w comprehension of him, a new frie dship for the world's Saviour, a new dese to lead his people to the true God. Ph p's heart was glad too, and at Az us, and other cities, all the way up to esarea, where he later came to live, he pt announcing the evangel of Jesus.

e church has always wanted to kn more of this eunuch and what he did with his new faith when he got back home. Ethiopia is a broad, indefinite term for all the land south of Egypt. Scholars think that the country referred to here is Meroë, a country east of the Nile. Candace seems to have been not the individual name of a queen, but her title, like Pharaoh or Cæsar. This land of Meroë is known to have been governed by queens at this period and as late as three hundred years after Christ. Tradition has given the name of Judich to this eunuch and declared that he preached the Gospel on his return to the palace and won many converts. We could be reasonably sure that this is true even if history or tradition said nothing about it. Such rich and sudden joy as this that the traveler found he would be sure to tell of.

One question should sound in every heart as the result of this lesson: "Whom am I leading to Jesus?" Some years before this, another Philip had found Nathanael and brought him to Jesus. Now this later Philip found the Ethiopian. Both went from that Arabian stream that day to find others. In due course the Gospel has reached us. Whose feet are we leading to the feet of Christ?

Tell about missionary work; about evangelistic work; about personal work; about the work of silently shining for Jesus. Read Paul's great personal work verse: "Christ . . . whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." (Col. 1: 28.)

The How Column

Conducted by FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

H to Interest the Inattentive Scholar in the Lesson

O E teacher whose lesson was spoiled each unday by one active boy visited the mo r to say that on account of the boy he wo have to give up the class. The mother rep d: "I can do nothing with him either. Jus see what he has done here." And all abo the walls of the kitchen the boy had dra pictures of cats, cows, dogs, etc. The tea r found the key to the problem. The ne Sunday the teacher had a pad and pencil rea . "William, I understand you are an art ." The boy straightened up. "William, do u think you can draw this map of Palestin or me?" "I'll try," answered the boy. "C you draw this coast line?" And it was do "Now this Sea of Galilee?" And that we lown. "Now this crooked river Jordan?" An he crooked line followed. "The Dead Sea And the live boy put in the Dead Sea "N the City of Jerusalem, just off to the left of Dead Sea?" "Thank you, William; tha splendid. Just one thing more; that Cit of Bethlehem just a little way off?" And wit Bethlehem the lesson began, and that tea r had William and the rest of the class tha Sunday and succeeding Sundays.

chain is stronger than its weakest link. On estless, inattentive scholar may spoil the wh lesson for teacher and class. In nearly eve class there is such a scholar. It does no goo to say don't. His activity must be har ssed. He must be given expression of son sort. Special thought must be given to his se.

Viety in the questions asked is essential.

T story is told of a teacher who was accus ned to ask the same question of the same sch r each Sunday. Tom always had the que on, "Where is the lesson located?" He was ways prepared on that question, and that bei answered felt no further interest in the less . Tom was away one Sunday. On the Su y following the teacher asked, "Where we you last Sunday, Tom?" and he answered me nically: "Nine miles southwest of Jer lem."

eacher of a class of twenty-eight girls in the ges of thirteen and fourteen solves the ina ntion question in this fashion: "By giving redits for attention, deportment and rec tions; by dividing the class in competitiv roups for recitation of the lesson."

Brooklyn teacher of teen-age girls: "I alw s ask questions of the inattentive pupil, for have found that will generally make her att ive. I never embarrass a pupil or hurt her elings, but let everything be done in good spi ."

ood method comes from a Junior boys' tea er of Columbus, Ohio: "I play directly to n with my stories and examples of expla tion, using that boy's name for the one hei talked about."

eacher of older girls says aptly of this age "They are attentive if the lesson applies to eryday life."

S eral teachers of scholars about the Junior age below find this as the key: "I give them son hing to do to help me." oys' teacher says: "I never go on teaching without at least apparent attention and quiet. If one boy is inattentive I wait. The others soon show their disapproval of him."

A live New York teacher solves the question thus: "I keep him busy—make him a part of the class. Ask questions, assign him work in advance. Call on him to teach. Stop my teaching until he is through his fooling."

A New Jersey teacher of sixteen-year-olds has this solution: "By knowing him. By being a boy with him. By being companionable. Boys are easily interested."

A Brooklyn teacher of young ladies keeps something in hand ready for the one who may lose interest: "I give her a clipping which I have brought to be read in connection with the lesson. I try to make that girl feel that I am more than interested in her and that she has disappointed me greatly if she is anything but attentive."

Another good suggestion comes from a teacher of New Jersey girls: "I repeat the question to that scholar and she will usually answer. I usually give the inattentive one the most interesting question."

Another teacher gives him something to do that he likes to do and that appeals to his pride.

Another gets him to read frequently.

By a group of beginners and primary teachers, these pertinent suggestions are made: "Sometimes I arouse his interest before I begin the story by associating it with some experience of his." "Sometimes while telling the story I address my remarks to him personally, calling him by name." "If there is too much inattention I have an exercise or song or march." "I seat them so they can see and hear readily." "I usually have the inattentive child pass the materials and papers and call him my helper."

A Denver teacher says: "I study him—if he is worth it—and approach from the standpoint of his interests if I can."

An honest teacher of Pennsylvania ladies confesses: "That the inattentive scholar is always the one who has prepared the least. If she visits I keep asking her questions till she gives attention. Sometimes a story or an explanation of a verse will cause interest."

A wise Connecticut teacher has this method with her class of young ladies: "I ask any one who seems inattentive to give a synopsis of what has been said, or ask a question; or if ear gate is tired, try eye gate by pictures, or blackboard or pad or hand gate."

◆

Young People's Topics for March 19

Getting Power from a Pledge

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Ps. 25: 1-14.

A World Program for the League

Epworth League. Matt. 28 : 19-20 (all nations represented in costume).

KEEPS THE SKIN HEALTHY
Resinol Soap
Resinol Chemical Co.
RESINOL SOAP FOR THE SKIN AND COMPLEXION

Try this easy way to clear your skin

Bathe your face for several minutes with Resinol Soap and warm water, working the creamy lather into the skin gently with the finger tips. Then wash off with more Resinol Soap and warm water, finishing with a dash of clear cold water to close the pores.

Do this once or twice a day, and you will be astonished how quickly the healing, antiseptic Resinol medication soothes and cleanses the pores, lessens the tendency to pimples, and leaves the complexion clear, fresh and velvety.

If the skin is in bad condition through neglect or an unwise use of cosmetics, apply a little Resinol Ointment* and let it remain on ten minutes before the final washing with Resinol Soap.

Resinol Soap contains no harsh, drying alkali, and is not artificially colored, its rich brown being entirely due to the Resinol balsams in it. Sold by all druggists and dealers in toilet goods. For trial free, write to Dept. 6-C, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

 Physicians have prescribed Resinol Ointment for over twenty years in the treatment of skin and scalp affections.*

Resinol Soap

"Oh see what my mother bought for me! A pair of Children's Hickory Garters that'll keep up my stockings neatly and evenly, always. The lady at the store told us that these garters will wear longer than any others and can't tear the stockings."

"Gee! I wish I wore 'em too. I need good garters."

The patent rubber clasp that saves darning—the improved buckle—the strong, rustless pin—the superior elastic—all insure the longest, best service.

Send 15c for a pair for trial. Give child's age; state color preference, white or black.

CHILDREN'S Hickory GARTERS

15 cents and up, per pair

A. Stein & Co.
Makers PARIS GARTERS
349 Congress Street Chicago, Ill.

Trade Mark Reg. U. S. Patent Office

Can you take INTELLIGENT care of your child? Do you know how he should be fed, how fast he ought to grow, how to recognize signs of infantile diseases, how to begin training the young mind?

INFANCY AND CHILDHOOD

By WALTER REEVE RAMSEY, M.D.

A thoroughly practical book on child rearing. It covers a wide range of facts which every mother and expectant mother ought to know. Fully illustrated. Price $1,25

AT YOUR BOOKSELLERS OR FROM
E. P. DUTTON & CO., 681 Fifth Ave., New York

Book on Law Free

Write today for our new 171-page book on "The Power of Law Training." It carries a vital and inspiring message to every ambitious man. Find out about the opportunities that await the law trained man. Find out how you can learn from masters of the law right in your own home. No obligations. The book is absolutely FREE.

Write Today—now while we are making a special reduced price offer.

American Correspondence School of Law
2493 Manhattan Bldg. Chicago, Illinois

Do a Friend a Favor at Our Expense

WE WILL AID YOU TO PERFORM THAT KINDNESS
FOR THREE FRIENDS OR NEIGHBORS, IF YOU ACT PROMPTLY

In Our Bible Picture Contest

Special Free Offer

FOR THE BENEFIT OF

Any 3 Persons You Name

Use the coupon below in this way: Write your own name and address across the top, under the words "Recommended By." Then along the length of the coupon fill in the name and address of each of three persons, to whom you would like us to send all details and information and some sample Contest pictures, free, so that these persons may be enabled to start at once in the Bible Picture Contest and enjoy it just as you are doing and will continue to do.

We shall be glad to do our part if you will do yours — namely, conscientiously recommend one, two or three individuals who you believe would be benefited by the stimulating, instructive and entertaining qualities of this novel "search of the Scriptures" embodied in the Bible Picture Contest.

There will be at least 419 rewards. The first reward is $1,250. The other rewards are commensurate. These sums are offered as prizes, because we want you to feel that, if you apply yourself to the solving of the pictures, and excel, you will be in a position to gratify some really substantial wish of a private or public character.

You cannot fail to derive many educational advantages, such as practice in observation and subconscious memory training, and you will soon be as enthusiastic as Mrs. Colgate (see her letter up at the right) regarding the spiritual quickening that results. Put those same advantages within the reach of others, by filling out and mailing to us the coupon below — which you can cut out and use, or else copy and communicate to us in the form of a letter.

THIS COUPON IS VALUABLE UP TO MARCH 31, 1916

To The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York, N.Y.

RECOMMENDED BY

Name....................................

Address.................................

....

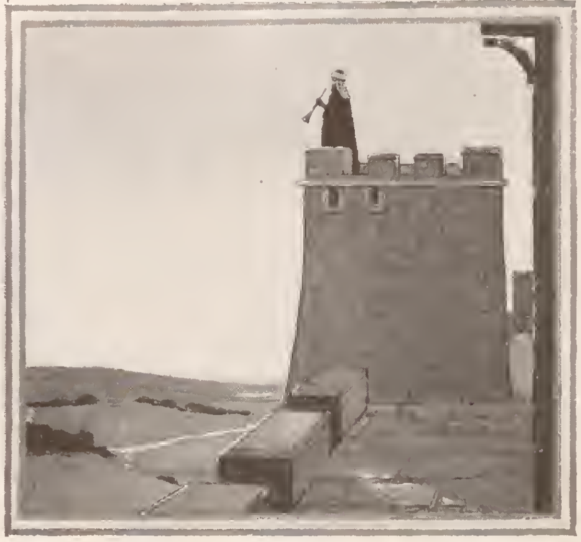
SEND SOME SPECIMEN PICTURES FREE
And also Illustrated Information, Rules, Object Lessons, Etc., About Your Bible Contest to

(1) Name..........
Address..........

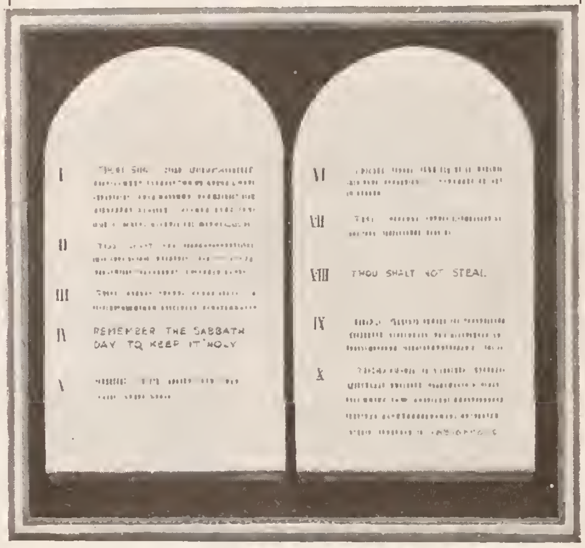
(2) Name..........
Address..........

(3) Name..........
Address..........

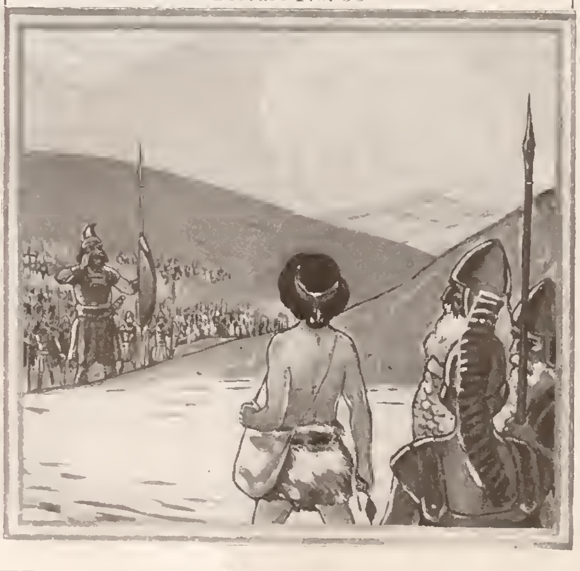
Picture No. 34



Picture No. 35



Picture No. 36



An Interesting Letter

"I would like to add a word of appreciation of the Picture Contest.

"At first sight, it seemed rather superficial. I did not see how matching pictures with a lot of disconnected texts could give one any real knowledge of, or love for, the Bible.

"Neither could it, if that were all. But I have learned that each picture is a magic key that opens before one's eyes a wonderful storehouse.

"One naturally turns to the Bible to verify the quotation selected. Studying the picture has concentrated the attention, and one reads on and on, grasping (as never before) the truth and beauty of the Bible narrative to which the picture points with compelling force. Brief biographies, portraying with matchless power the elemental passions of humanity, vivid visions of the seer, depicting the inevitable consequences of sin; glowing gems of Hebrew poetry rich in the mystic beauty of the Orient; strong stories of heroism and devotion; tender tales of love and sacrifice, each in turn holds one enthralled, and makes one realize that the Bible is indeed the Book of Books." MRS. O. W. COLGATE.

Pennsylvania.

What the Bible Picture Contest Is

On this page you see pictures numbered, respectively, 34, 35, 36. They are part of a series. By now, three dozen pictures have been published. Two dozen more are to come. We give a few each week in the Christian Herald; so by May (1916) the complete series will have appeared.

While you may save the pictures as you get them, and study them, you must not send any answers to us until the end — when you have seen all the pictures.

Then you will be asked to submit from one to five solutions or answers for each of the 60 pictures; and a Committee of Judges will award prizes (419 rewards amounting to $3,500 all together) for the best answers.

An answer to a picture consists of one Scriptural quotation which describes that picture.

All the possible answers are grouped by us in a list of 2,000 Bible verses, printed as a unique little volume called "Gems from the Bible."

For convenient writing down and submitting of your answers, we give the Contest Reply Book with the "Gems from the Bible."

When requested, all the pictures to date are included free with the two books just mentioned to make up the complete, convenient Bible Picture Contest OUTFIT. We will send you this Outfit as a premium on receipt of $2.00 to pay for your yearly subscription to the Christian Herald — new, renewal or extension. Or provided you are a subscriber, we will send you the Outfit entirely free on receipt of your order for a new yearly Christian Herald subscription in behalf of some other person, the price being $1.50 for the subscription alone, or $2.00 for the subscription and an Outfit to that person also in addition to the free Outfit you will receive.

Or you may receive a Bible Picture Contest Outfit in connection with any one of the following combination subscriptions:

Orange Judd Weekly American Agriculturist (edited for your section of the country) for one year, and the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50.

Modern Priscilla, the standard magazine for needlewomen, for one year and the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50.

American Messenger, a helpful religious monthly, for one year and the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.10.

Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, NEW YORK CITY

Crooked Spines Made Straight

Thousands of Remarkable Cases

An old lady, 72 years of age, who suffered for many years and was absolutely helpless, found relief. A man who was helpless, unable to rise from his chair, was riding horseback and playing tennis within a year. A little child, paralyzed, was playing about the house after wearing a Philo Burt Appliance 3 weeks. We have successfully ated more than 25,000 cases the past 15 years.

0 Days' Trial

e will prove its value in r own case. There is no son why you should not ac t our offer. The photographs w how light, cool, elastic l easily adjusted the lo Burt Appliance is— different from the torturous plaster, her or steel jackets. very sufferer with a kened or deformed e owes it to himself nvestigate thoroughly. e within reach of all.

d For Our Free Book ou will describe the case ill aid us in giving you ate information at once.

ILO BURT MFG. CO.
07 Odd Fellows Temple, Jamestown, N. Y.

Pint Without Oil

Reарkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A ee Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. , has discovered a process of making a new kin of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Po paint. It comes in the form of a dry powder an that is required is cold water to make a paint we er proof, fire proof, sanitary and durable for out e or inside painting. It is the cement principle app d to paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, sto or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and cos bout one-fourth as much.

te to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r., 164 North St., Ad s, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package also color card and full information showing yo w you can save a good many dollars. Write to- .

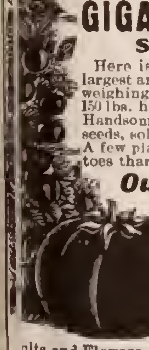
(nly $12.35 per H. P.

THIS ENGINE

DETROIT
THE FARM ENGINE THAT WORKS

B and guaranteed by the largest producers of farm engines —ple, durable, powerful—four cycle, suction feed, make an reak ignition—every part interchangeable—fully tested. Gu nteed to Develop Rated H. P.

AVES FUEL, TIME, LABOR, MONEY
8 Horsepower Detroit only $98.75
Ca u beat that? Write for big illustrated Engine book to-day.
F Line Detroit Engines 1½ horsepower up
DE IT ENGINE WORKS 445 Bellevue Ave., DETROIT, MICH.



GIGANTIC TOMATO
SEEDS FREE

Here is the king of all Tomatoes, largest and most productive, fruit often weighing 2 to 3 lbs., each, and 100 to 150 lbs. have been grown on one plant. Handsome red color, very smooth, few seeds, solid all through, ripens early. A few plants will produce more Tomatoes than a family can use.

Our Special Offer

We want every person who uses seeds to see our 1916 Seed Book and try this Giant Climbing Tomato. We will send a sample packet in a 10c coupon envelope for trial, with Seed Book Free. This Book describes the best Vegetables, nts and Flowers. Send your address today.
LLS SEED HOUSE, Dept. 25, Rose Hill, New York

earl Grit Aids digestion, makes shells, makes eggs, makes feathers, makes ngth. Send for prices and free valuable booklet. Write to-day.
e Ohio Marble Co., 31 S. Cleveland St., Piqua, Ohio

FRIENDSHIP LINK RING --- ONLY 18c
Sterling Silver or Rolled Gold Beaded or Plain Designs, 3 Initials ENGRAVED FREE, to introduce our Bracelet Links. Send 18c. and size today. FRIENDSHIP JEWELRY CO. 83 Chambers St., Dept. 362 New York

Merry Moments

[SOLOMON in his wisdom said this: "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine." Most of us can bear witness to the correctness of this observation. A vast deal of good can be done by judicious doses of that kind of medicine. A good laugh will cure many ills. A good laugh never wears out. Perhaps you have stored away in your memory some laughs of extra potency in doing good. Tell us about them. We want little, short things for this column, that are packed full of merry laughter; so full that there is no sting in them, no offensiveness of any kind, no malice, certainly no irreverence, nothing but pure fun. We will pay according to the length and, in our judgment, the merits of such contributions. None can be returned, however, unless accompanied by a stamped and addressed envelope. They will be paid for promptly upon acceptance. Just address them to The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.—THE EDITOR.]

VIRTUE BRINGS ITS OWN REWARD.—Rev. Stephen Merritt tells this of the self-denial practised by his little grandson, Conrad. Conrad's father, as was usual with him at the approach of Lent, asked the members of his family one evening to say what special sacrifices they would make during that season. Conrad asked if he must decide at once. "No," he was told, "you may think it over, but we should know your decision by tomorrow. And remember, it must be something that you like very much." The next morning Conrad announced that he had finally decided to give up going to Sunday school.

READY LETTER WRITER — Student (writing home): "How do you spell 'financially'?"

Other: "F-i-n-a-n-c-i-a-l-l-y, and there are two R's in 'embarrassed'."—Harper's Magazine.

GOOD, EVEN IF YOU OMIT THE DENOMINATION ENTIRELY.—A negro preacher heard the word procrastination used and liked it. He used it often in his Sunday morning sermon. After the service one of his flock asked him;

"Parson, what am da meanin' of dat word procrastination?"

"Donne yo'all know da meanin' ob dat word?" said the preacher. "Why, dat am one ob da chiefest doctrines ob da Presbyterian Church."

AND HERE YOU MIGHT SUBSTITUTE ANY OTHER DENOMINATION.—The following "ad" appeared in a daily newspaper in a New England city:

"Wanted: A horse to do the work of a Methodist minister."

A DETERMINED PACIFIST.—Local Curate: "What are you running for, sonny?"

Boy: "I'm trying to keep two fellers from fightin'."

Local Curate: "Who are the fellows?"

Boy: "Bill Perkins over there and me."—Sabbath Record.

RESOURCEFULNESS.—A Scotch minister in need of funds thus conveyed his intentions to his congregation:

"Weel, friends, the kirk is urgently in need of siller, and as we have failed to get money honestly we will have to see what a bazaar can do for us."—Tit-Bits.

AND SEVEN DAYS A WEEK, TOO.—Sunday-School Teacher: "Children, do you know the house that is open to all—to the poor, the rich, the sad, the happy, to man and to woman, to young and to old—do you know the house I mean?"

Small Boy: "Yes, miss—the station-house."—Boston Transcript.

ESPECIALLY WHEN THE MINISTER IS.—"'The wicked flee when no man pursueth'," quoted the deacon to the minister.

"Yes," said the minister, who believed in muscular Christianity, "that is true; but they make much better time when somebody is after them."—Christian Register.

Answers to Bible Contest Inquiries

Question Would like to have you explain rule 6 more fully One person may send in as many as three sets of answers. Now suppose John sends in but one set and has ten incorrect answers in that one set. Then suppose Henry sends in three sets and his best set is the same as John's, i.e., has ten incorrect answers. Now Henry has one hundred and thirty incorrect while John has only ten. According to Rule 6 (a) John would win. So taking into consideration (a), (c) and (d) of Rule 6, would it not be an advantage to a person to send but one set of answers? In any case, where is the advantage in sending more than one set? Perhaps I do not understand (c) and (d) correctly. Does it mean the fewest words and letters in all his answers together, whether he sends one, two or three sets? These things are not clear to me.—Mrs. A. C., Farmdale, Ohio.

Answer: Probably it will clear up everything in your mind when you understand this: A contestant may send in three sets of answers, and each set will be considered separately. That is, the three sets will be considered just as though three different people had sent them in, except, of course, that only one reward will be given the person, even though two or three of the sets might merit a reward. The highest reward merited will be paid.

The advantage in sending in more than one set of verses consists in the fact that the contestant is having three different opportunities to submit few or many verses, and to submit verses in different order. And for some pictures you may wish to submit more than five verses. You can do this, by submitting another set, for in each set you can make as many as five answers to each picture.

Question: Will the Reply Books containing answers to pictures be returned to sender after being judged by the Judges? I would greatly prefer to have mine returned, even at my own expense, as I wish to keep it for a keepsake of the Contest.—J. B. A., Berthoud, Colo.

Answer: We have had to make a decision not to do this. You see, there may be thousands of sets submitted and it would be a tremendous task to go through them and select a particular set. We can appreciate your desire to see how your set checks up with the announced best verses, and so we recommend that you make a copy of your set before sending it in, and keep it for comparison with the list of best verses when that appears in the Christian Herald. You can even secure an extra Reply Book in which to keep this home record, if you think that more convenient just by getting a new yearly subscriber for the Christian Herald. We will send you "Gems from the Bible" and "Reply Book" free for doing that.

Question: You say that every member of the family can compete individually. My son was (with me) a subscriber when the contest began. His business required him to go to the southern part of the state yesterday. Won't he be eligible to a reward if he too conforms with the rules, even though he is for a short time in the southern part of the state? —G. P. H., Denver, Colo.

Answer: Your son may compete independently in the Contest, and he may win a separate reward, in case he takes up his residence permanently away from you. The rule regarding family participation permits every member of the family, living at one address, to submit the full allowance of three sets of answers: but in case two or more sets from that family would merit a reward, then only the set meriting the higher reward is retained. Thus a family may never be able to win the highest prizes all for itself, in the remote contingency of a family being so ingenious as to submit a number of very perfect sets. If your son is away only for a short time, and his real address is still your own address, then he may compete independently, but, as stated above, only one prize will be allowed to go to your address to related persons, even though two or more sets from your address may merit rewards.

Question: I am living in an apartment house, also one Mrs. S. and Miss W. Now we all get our mail at the same address, but are not relations, nor do we use same rooms, yet we noticed in one issue of the Christian Herald that prizes would not be given to two at the same address. Now we are busy on these pictures and we think they are also. Would like to know if two or more at same address will bar one of us. Please let us hear from you.—W. F. H., Denison, Texas.

Answer: You can compete independently of unrelated persons living at the same address, and each of you may win a prize. Our rule is to limit members of one family at one address for one reward for that family. Unrelated persons living at the same address may each win a reward, and even related persons living at different addresses may each win a reward.

THE FIRST TASTE

Learned to Drink Coffee When a Boy.

If parents realized the fact that coffee contains a drug—caffeine—which is especially harmful to children, they would doubtless hesitate before giving them coffee to drink.

"When I was a child in my mother's arms and first began to nibble things at the table, Mother used to give me sips of coffee. And so I contracted the coffee habit early.

"I continued to use coffee until I was 27, and when I got into office work I began to have nervous spells. Especially after breakfast I was so nervous I could scarcely attend to my correspondence.

"At night, after having had coffee for supper, I could hardly sleep, and on rising in the morning would feel weak and nervous.

"A friend persuaded me to try Postum.

"I can now get good sleep, am free from nervousness and headaches. I recommend Postum to all coffee drinkers."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms:

Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

Instant Postum—a soluble powder—dissolves quickly in a cup of hot water, and, with cream and sugar, makes a delicious beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

Both forms are equally delicious and cost about the same per cup.

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

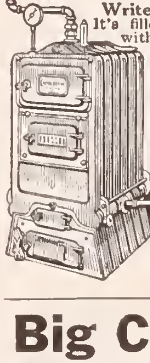
—sold by Grocers.

Live In Comfort For $150

Buy a Modern Hot Water Heating System

NOW is the time to buy your heating plant while our low wrecking prices prevail. Keen posted buyers, familiar with the metal market, all know that the recent rise in prices of metal products, is just the beginning. But we are prepared — our big purchases at forced sales, places the world's best heating equipment before you at tremendous savings—that's why we are now offering the greatest known bargains. Here is a specimen snap:

Complete hot water heating system for a 6-room house, with 300 ft. of radiation, — a high grade sectional boiler ready to install for $150. (Mention special lot No. EG 202A.



Write Now for Free Book

It's filled from cover to cover with bargains selected from our present mammoth plumbing and heating stocks. And it tells you just what is necessary—how to do the work yourself and increase your savings. Ask for your copy today EG 202

PLUMBING BARGAINS

High grade A-1 Bath-room outfit, consisting of 6ft. roll rim white enameled tub, apron lavatory, complete low down closet, $29.75—ask for EG 2 2 B.

Harris Bros. Co.
35th and Iron Sts.
Chicago, Illinois

Big Cash Profits

Every Week on Chicks. Write me for details showing how beginners with Belle City outfits make $10 to $25 a week on day-old chicks. Get the facts! Any man, woman, boy or girl can do it by following my plan and using my

25 Times World's Champion

402,000 in Use

Get all facts, proofs, particulars—my low prices—money-back guaranty—also my $1300.00 Gold Offers—all come with my big illustrated Free Book "Hatching Facts," in colors. Write me today. Jim Rohan, Pres.

Freight Prepaid. 1, 2 or 3 Months' Home Test

Belle City Incubators and Brooders

Belle City Incubator Co., Box 127, Racine, Wis.

TELL ME YOUR FOOT TROUBLES

It will ease your Mind;
I will ease your Feet.
Enlarged Joints Reduced
and Toes Straightened by

ACHFELDT'S
"Pefection" TOE SPRING

Worn at night without inconvenience, with auxiliary appliances for day use. Sent on approval. Money refunded if not as represented.

WITHOUT WITH

Use My Improved Arch Supporter for "Flat Foot" and broken down instep. Send outline of foot. Full particulars and advice in plain sealed envelope

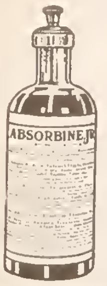
M. ACHFELDT, Foot Specialist, Marbridge Building.
DEPT. D-C 1328 Broadway (at 34th St.), NEW YORK

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

Don't Throw It Away

MENDETS
PATENT PATCH

Mend leaks instantly in all utensils, graniteware, aluminum, tin, brass, hot water bags, etc. No solder, cement or rivet. Any one can use them. Send for sample box, 10c; large box, all sizes, 25c, postpaid. Agents Wanted. Collette Mfg. Co., Box 302, Amsterdam, N. Y.



For Sore Muscles

Absorbine, Jr. brings quick relief. Keep it always at hand for instant use.

Athletes use Absorbine, Jr., for the muscle that has been strained, for the cut or laceration that runs a chance of infection; for the abrasion that pains and the limbs that are stiff and lame from over-exertion.

Absorbine Jr.
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

When applied to cuts, bruises and sores, it kills the germs, makes the wound aseptically clean and promotes rapid and healthy healing. It allays pain and inflammation promptly. Swollen glands, painful varicose veins, wens and bursal enlargements yield readily to the application of Absorbine, Jr.

Absorbine, Jr. is made of herbs and is non-poisonous—safe to use anywhere, even by the smallest member of the family.

$1.00 a bottle at druggists or postpaid.

A LIBERAL TRIAL BOTTLE will be sent to your address upon receipt of 10c in stamps.

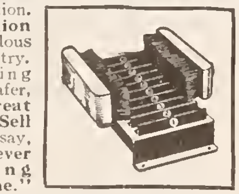
W. F. Young, P. D. F.
5 Temple St. Springfield, Mass.

Delicate Girls and Women are too often dosed with drugs when their blood is really starved. They need that blood-strength which comes from medicinal nourishment. No drugs can make blood.

SCOTT'S EMULSION is a highly concentrated blood-food and every drop yields returns in strengthening both body and brain.

If you are frail, languid, delicate or nervous, take Scott's Emulsion after meals for one month. No Alcohol.

SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J. 14-62



AGENTS—Make Clean Money From Unclean Millions!

Sensational new invention. Just out yet half million already sold. Tremendous rapid sale staggers country. Agents happy—making enormous sales. Shafer, Iowa, writes:—"A great seller." Cook, Wash., "Sell themselves." Lindsay, Ind., "Best thing I ever found. Like getting money from home." Gassmann, Ills., "Overwhelmed with orders." Grabs Scientific Shoe Scraper sells itself. Every family in the land wants one on their doorstep. Millions to be sold. Replaces unsightly, unsanitary, crude door mat. Automatically removes mud, dirt, snow from shoe in one operation. Cleans sole, sides, heel. Works like magic. Saves drudgery, time, money, shoes, rugs, carpets, floors. Attaches without screws, nuts, bolts. Rotates for sweeping. Has 10 blades, 10 dirt outlets, adjustable and removable brushes, compound springs. Can't clog. Selling price strong feature—only $1.00. Your profits big. Satisfaction guaranteed. Write quick for free catalog. Investigate sure.

SECURITY MFG. CO., Dept. 240, Toledo, Ohio

SAVE HALF Your Paint Bills

By using INGERSOLL PAINT—proved best by 66 years' use. It will please you. Only paint endorsed by the "Grange." Made in all colors—for all purposes.

DELIVERED FREE
From the Mill Direct to You at Factory Prices.

INGERSOLL PAINT BOOK—FREE

Tells all about Paint and Painting for Durability. How to avoid trouble and expense caused by paints fading, chalking and peeling. Valuable information free to you, with Sample Color Cards. Write me. DO IT NOW. I can save you money

O. W. Ingersoll, 253 Plymouth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

FREE Our handsome 1916 Seed Catalogue. Fully illustrated in colors. Reliable seeds at bargain prices. A full line of garden and flower seeds Cherry's Famous Dependable Seeds, fresh and reliable, are used by successful gardeners everywhere. Send your name and address on a postal for a copy of our bargain catalog. SEEDS

Chas. J. Cherry & Co., 212 Vine St., Rockford, Ill.

Investing in Human Lives

We would utter here the most eloquent word of which we are capable in behalf of that great host who cannot speak for themselves to you, the innocent victims of the war in Europe. We have told you of their needs again and again, and with unfailing readiness to help you have responded. Perhaps the most eloquent words in such a cause are the names of the men, women and little children who have opened their hearts and their purses in confidence that gifts to these suffering families are investments in human lives. Investments whose returns will be reaped in the years to come by the lands that are now being swept as by fire. It is impossible to estimate what it is going to mean to the whole world, to save these mothers and children from death to say nothing of what it means to them themselves to be saved from the agonies of the death that threatens them by starvation and exposure. And so we will give here as many of such names as our space will permit. They compose but a small section of the great numbers of Christian Herald readers who have responded, sometimes repeatedly, to this bitter cry from Europe. Every contribution eventually will have been acknowledged in the Christian Herald, and we will make these acknowledgments as rapidly as possible. Give and keep giving, never forgetting that these mothers and little children must weep and keep on weeping for many weary months, and for the most part their greatest hope of relief is in the Christian hearts of America. Please address all your gifts to the Widows and Orphans Relief Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Miscellaneous Amounts

J. N. Welander, $3.50; Mr. & Mrs. J. F. & Pauline Lacy, $41.00; Two Friends, Oil City, Pa., $6.00; Mrs. J. P. V. Evans, $7.50; Ladies Bible Class, M. E. S. S. Chambersburg, Pa., $14.00; A Friend, Delhi, Minn., $150.00; A. Mottaz, $30.00; Apple Valley S. S., Day School & Social Club, Victorville, Calif., $6.18; Mrs. M. J. Clements, $4.00; Sabbath School, Potts Grove, Pa., $7.00; Scholars & Teacher, S. S. Class, Shannon, Ill., $3.70.

Y. P. S., of Volga Bethania Church, S. D., $31.34; Ivan Shreve, 30c; The Ashbrooks, $30.00; The Scranton Road Free Bapt. Church, Cleveland, Ohio, $11.00; Friends, Tientsin, China, $14.13.

Maud Miller, $6.00; A. G. Newton, $2.10; Rev. John B. Irons, 30c.; Children, Danish Bapt. S. S., Albert Lea, Minn, $23.66; Mr. & Mrs. A. B. Church, $4.00; Union S. S., Presby. Church, Ludlow, Mo., $10.68.

J. L. Boyd, $8.00; "I. H. N.," Harper, Ill., $21.00; Cong. Endeavor Society, Rumnells, Ia., $4.10; Swedish Mission Church S. S., & Others, Stamford, Nebr., $20.15; ——, Philadelphia, Pa., $3.05; Mrs. Henry S. Hulse, 15c.; Mrs. J. Gottehause, $3.50; R. Hinckley, $5.50.

Emma L. Ott, $6.00; Mrs. Wm. Borden, $3.35; M. V. Flanagan, $2.90; Janet Cowan, 30c.; Mr. A. P. Putnam, 40c.; Mrs. Chas. Mann, $1.40; Chas. Stetzer, $4.00; Miss Nettie Cunclier, $3.50; Calie Sinkreg, 40c.

E. A. Lewis, $2.75; Mrs. Shirley McCoy, $7.50; J. V. Rutledge, $1.70; Johnson Maunsey, $2.80; Mrs. Lavinia, Anna L. & Mabel J. March, $6.50; Catherine J. Low, $1.10; Mrs. Eliz. L. Hines, $3.05; Mary J. Roy, $4.00.

Mrs. R. H. Hosford, $4.40; John Barker, 45c.; Jennie McDowell, 70c.; Herbert, Lena & Rhoda Dallyn, $14.00; Rev. B. Marck, 40c.; Geo. J. Thompson, $2.90; Miss E. S. Frazier, $4.00; S. S., Ref. Church, Fairview, Ill., $20.25.

Mrs. W. Wylie, $3.50; G. P. Hawley, $6.10; A. H. Ellis, $5.50.

Gift of $100.00

Mrs. Sarah A. Browse.

Gifts of $50.00 Each

Geo. Lippman.
Fred. L. Rosemond, Mrs. Emma Riddle

Gifts of $25.00 Each

Rev. Geo. T. & Mrs. E. M. Price; J. T. Lindland; James Edge; Mrs. K. B. Fletcher.

G. A. Funkhouser, Jr., Mrs. H. H. Norcross.

Nettie Marriage, E. Murray Lucas, J. G. Pennings, Mrs. P. H. H., Jackson, Miss.; M. D. Ulmer, F. A. Funkhauser.

Gifts of $20.00 Each

Ruskin-Cave College, Ruskin, Tenn.; Mrs. E. H. Boynton, A. Mottaz, Mrs. M. Moon, John K. Loyd, Mary P. Hotchkiss, Annie F. Hastings.

Gifts of $15.00 Each

M. E. S. S., Galena, Ohio; Josiah H. Smith, Mrs. Grace F. Burger.

Gifts of $10.00 Each

Mrs. H. L. Harris & Mrs. H. D. Ford; L. W. Felter; Miss M. C. Melendy; A. Maude Rochford, Mrs. A. R. Johnson & Children; Olive A. Langley; Henry Ratcliffe.

Christina F. Frey, C. L. Walker; Gilbert Eyk; Christina Mackey; A Friend, Princeton, Ill.; James M. Ramsburg; R. C. Brown; Mrs. March; W. H. Reed; Mr. Wallace Griggs; Mrs. A. L. Cadmus.

M. C. Ely; J. G. Evans; L. N. Williamson; E. P. Currier; Mrs. Sarah E. Jackson.

Mrs. Lydia E. Herr, H. Schmidt, Nellie B. Langhead, Miss Fannie T. Somerville, O. C. Scarborough, Mrs. A. M. McKay, A. M. Manning, Horace Martin, Emil Anderson, A Subscriber, A. J. Akers, ——, Souris, N. D.; A Subscriber to the C. H., Pendleton, Ore.; John Ehrick Parmly, Albert Bucknall, Mrs. Mary B. Olmsted.

Mrs. Gus Hendrix, G. M. Fuller, E. L. B., Santa Monica, Calif.; Mrs. C. A. Walrod, S. H. Bradwell, Mrs. Edith R. Scofield, Mary A. Taecker, W. G. Dewey, Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Robb; Mrs. Robert Morris, Trinity Ladies' Aid, Oldham, S. D.; ——, Alhambra, Calif.; A Friend, Syracuse, N. Y.; Cong. S. S., Thompson, Conn.; F. C. L. and G. A. R., Do Kalb Junction, N. Y.; Mrs. Elizabeth Link, Wm. Meyer, Jr., ——, Fond du Lac, Wis.; Mrs. Ursula Bells, Rev. Chas. M. Taylor, Mr. and Mrs. J. P. McNay.

Gifts of $5.00 Each

Mrs. C. E. Skinner; Andrew N. Folk; Creed R. Vinson; Anna E. M. Reich; Delsio M. Phinney; Mrs. Catherine Riegel; Mother & Daughters; Mrs. Bays Osborn.

J. T. Parris; Mrs. Nate C. Smith; A Friend, Lockport, N. Y.; C. V. Kintner; John L. Davis; Mrs. Jno. M. Oakey; Addie Marsh; M. A. & Leola I. Fleming.

Gertrude Cranor; A Friend, Orange, N. J.; Mrs. C. F. Gelgard; Mrs. Geo. Moffatt; Mrs. F. T. Getman; G. T. G.; Anna M. Kniese; Mrs. Laura Catherwood.

Mrs. Annie Rankin; Three Teachers; Colegio Presbyteriano, Sancti Spiritus, Cuba; Dr. E. J. Mosely, Jr.; "Inasmuch," Cando, N. D.; Mrs. E. B. Alexander; Miss Lulu Plagge; Mrs. Henry Plagge.

Friends, San Jose, Calif.; O. C. Scarborough; Sisters, Bowling Green, Ohio; Mrs. Lamont Eltinge; W. E. Detwiler; A Reader of the C. H., Pa.; Mrs. Nellie L. Slaughter; Mrs. S. May Wilson.

Miss E. M. Boyd; J. L. Stickney; C. M. D. Browne; H. Russell Case; "Cash," Sandy Lake, Pa.; F. D. Wheelwright; Mrs. Kate Clapp; J. A. M. Blackburn; Mrs. C. G. Valentine; A. L. Bell.

Jas. M. Jordan & Family; G. Harris Field; Miss M. Hanna; M. E. Getzendaner; Miss Etta Hancock; Jacob Ruedy; Emily H. Pinn; E. F. Montgomery; A. L. McNair.

Mrs. Jas. C. McNitt, Chas. L. Black, A Friend, Wells, Minn.; Fort Wayne, Ind., Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Brisbine, Mrs. Geo. Sharp, Wm. Smith, Mrs. E. L. Hitchcock, Mrs. Hannah Hall, L. J. Bennett.

Mrs. Glee Congleton, Mrs. N. C. Williams, Mabel Spencer, Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Dunkelberger, ——, Morrisville, Vt.; Mrs. D. K. Sargent and Family, In Jesus Name, New-Market, N. J.

Mrs. Charles J. Rice, H. L. H., Mr. Wm. Hann, W. R. Gilson, Mrs. and Helen Breckenridge, Miss V. E. Gittings, H. M. Sanders, Miss A. J. Kirkland's S. S. Class, Richard Bliss, T. A Garland.

James S. Cogue, Mrs. J. N. Goozen, Mrs. Anna Bengelsdorf, ——, Seven Mile, Ohio; Mrs. A. A. Dadman, Mr. and Mrs. I. O. Jones, C. J. Smith, Mrs. Julia Scott, Mrs. H. W. Weise.

Mrs. J. C. Carlsen, Mrs. Grace Whitwell, Amelia Rhoades, ——, Quincy, Mich.; E. M. P., Mrs. Belle Williams, J. J., Montezuma, Ohio; ——, Steubenville, Ohio; H. L. Lyon, Mrs. Thomas Lawrence.

Anna C. Boyd, J. H. Hehn, Miss A. V. Cooper.

Gifts of $3.00 Each

Mrs. M. E. Groves; Mr. & Mrs. H. W. Hall; S. S., Germantown, Wis.; Miss E. M. Mason, Two Friends, Hagaman, N. Y.; Chas. Wilkinson; Joseph Parkin; E. P. Stevens; David Stiffler; Mrs. Martha Borland; W. C. Wiester; M. P. Davis; B. H. Rolph.

Mrs. Henry Snow, J. C. Painter, Martin Fee, M. C. Spangler, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Pope, Bridegroom's Messenger, Atlanta, Ga.; F. J. W., Mrs. Mary W. Holmes, Mrs. John Wagner.

Mrs. C. H. Hastings, G. and M. Tomlinson and Alice M. Doren, Mrs. Lillian S. Carr, E. A. Moffitt.

Mrs. G. W. Collins, Mrs. Agnes Bowers and Daughter, ——, Winfield, Ill.; Jennie B. Hunsaker, Inez Frank, W. H. Graham, W. J. Callahan, Miss Louise Hinnah, Geo. McGaffin.

Mrs. Ed. Draper, Miss J. C. Tarbox, Mrs. Nelson Hinckley, Mrs. A. L. Wait, ——, Amsterdam, N. Y.; Nellore M. Concklin, Frances I. Matthews, Mrs. M. L. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Clemons.

Eight Mile Park S. S., Canon City, Colo.

Gifts of $2.50 Each

Robt. B. Lewis; Mrs. S. E. Lipop; Foss Bros.; Mrs. A. R. Wilcox; Daniel Williams; Mrs. M. A. Stevens; Mr. & Mrs. D. H. Richey; Martha A. Gregson.

Box 4, Fern Hill S. S., Cornelius, Ore.; Margaret Phillips.

F. H. Smith, Mrs. A. Moss, V. E. M. and S. B. M., Henry A. Fisk, Inter. C. E. Society, St. John's Lutheran Church, Steelton, Pa., O. K. S., A Friend, Gordon, Neb.

Gifts of $2.00 Each

Mr. & Mrs. Frank Van Tassel; Mattie Irwin; John Sorby; Margaret Whitcomb; W. N. Ratcliff; Allen Cunningham; Mrs. W. G. McCleskey; A Girl, Golden, Mo.

Mrs. L. L. Gordon; Mr. & Mrs. R. N. Wilkinson; A Friend, Marne, Iowa; Miss M. H. Bradley; Glad Game Class of Union S. S., Tyler Hill, Pa.; Mrs. C. B. O'Neill, Agnes Forth; Mr. & Mrs. George W. La Flam.

Isaac Crosby; Mr. & Mrs. Keller; Mrs. H. A. Wilkinson; H. M. Rickert; Wm. F. Graham; Mrs. W. H. Hickox; Mrs. Mary E. Baumgardner; A Friend, Middle Dam, Me.; D. B. Carpenter.

Mrs. Ralph B. Moon; Mrs. E. R. Weaver; Della F. Thompson; A Friend, New York City; T. H. Griffin; Henry Payrollaz; I ma M. Pfreun; Mrs. H. R. Wilson; Mrs. E. Veiler; Rev. Jacob Weber.

Mrs. S. Smith; Dr. D. M. Landes; nna Lewis; Rev. Karl A. Mueller; H. S. & I S.; P. W. Parsons; Adelaide D. Swift; D. Walker; Mrs. A. E. Latter.

Jas. Huddelson, Miss S. K. Torbert, roline E. Furman, ——, Deposit, N. Y.; Ella Scott, Sidney Durston, Mrs. D. G. T on, Miss J. M. Whipple, Miss Lizzie Gantt.

Bessie Ferrer, H. W. Surbeck, Mr. and Irs. M. Booth, M. A. T., ——, Chillicothe, o.; Member, First Presby. Ch., Columbia, n.; A Friend, St. Clair, Mich.; Mrs. E. Vog M. and F. A.

Mrs. A. A. and L. J. Heath, Mrs. I ma Matthews, Martha A. Smith, S. H. West eo. Pinchbeck, Chas. N. Eayrs, Mrs. A. W. eynolds, Mrs. H. Cottrill, Friends, Salem,

Mrs. S. M. Galloway, Sarah E. Howe M. L. Mead, Jane Bailey, Mrs. B. C. Mc an, Miss E. Moore, Mrs. May Coffield, A F nd, Lake Placid, N. Y.; Mrs. John Rowley Irs. K. Reiser.

Leroy Kornbaum, A Friend, Provi nce, R. I.; Miss A. M. E. Booth, Miss De M. Spencer, ——, Salem, Ohio; Settlemen abbath, Martinsburg, W. Va.; E. G. Woo rd

Mr. and Mrs. C. Engstrom, ——, oss Plains, Tenn.; Martha E. Longake lra Clynick, R. Meyer, Mrs. L. B. Carleton Irs. S. R. Schanzenbacher, Mrs. W. A. Ma art, Duane R. Terry.

Mrs. M. J. Stevens, W. M. Mayhen, L. Hollowell, A Friend, Andover, Ohio; liss Anna D. Krimbill, Mr. and Mrs. G E. Starr, Walter Steddom, Mrs. M. Van ew, Amelia J. Ford.

Nettie E. Phillips, Mrs. Hattie Ell ger, E. G. K., Mrs. S. J. Coen, H. M. P., D oit, Mich.; Mary E. Johnston, D. N. Wolf our Children, Lancaster, N. H.

Gifts of $1.00 Each

Arthur Jenson; A Friend, Southold, Y.; Mrs. L. Waldren; Mrs. Laurinda Hilde nd; Ethel J. Susong; Mrs. M. C. Rob on; Mrs. C. A. Grover; Martha W. C ves; Miss A. V. Woodson; ——, Chambe rg, Pa.; M. T. McCormick; Mrs. Eli W. Adams; M. A. Ellsworth; A Friend; R. Howes; Mrs. P. K. Shoemaker; orge Clynick; Charles McKay; Mrs. P ina; S. R. Burges; Mrs. J. A. James; "F the Master's Sake;" Esther Van Arsdale; Irs. C. D. Youngman; "R.," Upland, Ind. Irs. M. A. Forbes; A. L. R. Gardner Co.; L. W. Heikes; Mrs. Jessie B. Brady; Ju H O'Neal; "In His Name," Los Angeles, lif.; Elizabeth Markham; John H. Orne; Irs. J. H. Mercer; Mrs. M. D. Smith; Mrs H. Shaffer; Joseph Wilcox; E. F. Moy A Friend, Richmond, Ky.; Mrs. E. Hol be; Mrs. E. S. Chamberlin; George M. ler; Mrs. H. H. Hill; Rosetta Pulver; " His Name," Lineville, Iowa; Mrs. Mary ark; ——, Tunkhannock, Pa.; Mrs. S. E McCollum; W. D. Norcross; Sarah nes; S. W. Wakeland; Mrs. Nic Midd op; Mrs. M. E. Dodds; Miss M. E. Gil rist; E. Novak; Wm. Post; Gartie Kirkp ick; Mr. & Mrs. John Clark; Mrs. R. L. wn; Wm. H. Mininger; Jennie R. Keech; E. Dorney; Miss R. Ella Chamberlin; lma Christensen; Mr. & Mrs. Wm. Hope Mrs. Sallie S. Gehman; Mrs. Mary E. Ga hell; Mrs. Merilla N. Shaler; Mrs. E. Raab; M. Smith; Mrs. Sarah Butterfield; Mrs. P. Unger; James Lonney; W. H. Ti & Friend; Mrs. A. S. MacKay; A end, Rummerfield, Pa.; An Old Sub ber, Westport, Conn.

Mrs. M. E. Dodds; X., Mariett Ga., Mrs. N. S. Parker; First Methodist S., Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. Martha C. mm; E. McGiff; Mrs. A. W. Giddens; In the ame of D. H. C.; Mrs. M. C. Robinson; s. C. M. Lane; R., Upland, Md.; A Friend, aryland Line, Md.; Mrs. J. C. Adams; Mr E. B. Light; Mrs. M. E. West; Jas. D. mes, Mrs. Wm. Nickert; Miss Emily Davies Mrs. H. J. Grevers; Lena B. Marsh; Mrs. a N. Rowe; Emily I. Maize; Mrs. C. Lutz ——, Hamilton, Mont.; Annette S. S., A ette, Calif.; A. L. Chase; Mrs. H. C. Wa erin; Lu Bird Hendee; Mrs. Emma cutt, Mrs. Alfred Watts; Eliz. Currie; A end, Fairton, N. J.; Jay Wormwood.

A Reader, Billings, Mont.; Jas. A. aup; Mrs. A. W. Giddens; J. M. W., Hobok J.; Mrs. S. E. Browne and Daughter; W., Beaver, Okla.; Mrs. M. J. Hend oltz; Junior Dept., First Eng. Ev. Luthera S., Baltimore, Md.; Miss Emma Chesb ugh. Roscoe Swadner; Bella Giepin; C. O. eterson; T. J. Strickler; Mrs. Mary B line; Kathleen Jenkins; J. E. Spainhour; lary Hay; A Reader, New London, Ohio Mrs. DeWitt C. Haines; A Friend, Osakis, inn. "Family Thankful Box"; A Friend, I wnsville, Tenn.; ——, Franklinville, N. Y J. H Brown; A Friend of the Christian rald. Oak Park, Ill.; A Friend, N. Mex.; N. W., Salem, Mass.; Mrs. J. L. Palmer; D James; Mrs. Lucy Downs; Mrs. H. rollpfeiffer; T. A. Clancy; H. R. Howes Mrs. G. W. Hassler; Mrs. H. M. Wedgwoo Miss M. Niblett; Miss I. Carpenter; Cle tine Callet; Mrs. Gilbert Knapp; Mrs. M. G., Lowell, Mich; Mrs. Clyde Moffitt; Mrs. J. W. Hiday.

Gifts of 50 Cents Each

Miss N. S. Taylor; M. E. S. S., tory, Wis.; Mrs. Helen J. Beagle; Mrs. Nic ddelkoop; ——, Ellensburg, Wash.; allne Jennings; Mr. John Fisher; Martha well A. B. Haflerson

Mrs. T. H. Johnson; Mary D. W ; F P. Dunnington; Mrs. Garbutt.

D. College, Mrs. Margaret Stine, A M. Dauphin, Miss Ruby Hanson.

Gifts of 25 Cents Each

F. M Rouse, Mrs. J. C. Masters, lfred Gilbert Vangesen, Mrs. Gilbert Va esen, A Friend, St. Cloud, Minn.; H. W. rcer.

Additional contributions to be acknow ged.

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

HE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of g ral interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may u a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must c ain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom d lume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

E. A. M., Mesa, Colo. I have been trying to take God at his word that "whosoever cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." But my conscience still keeps my past life before me. Am I to feel that my sins are forgiven when they keep troubling me all the time? Is it because I lack faith or is it that I am beyond forgiveness?

o one is beyond forgiveness who wants to be forgiven. Y must not try to make any exceptions in Christ's gracious "osoever." It is probably a physical, mechanical impos- si ity really to forget all the sins of the past. The things we d and the experiences we have leave an impression upon the b n that cannot be erased. But while we may not be able to f et our sins, we should altogether stop worrying about them w n we have God's clear word that they are all forgiven. It is ot your remembering them that shows a l of faith, but your worrying about them. W ry is just the opposite of trust. While we a trusting God for anything we cannot be w rying about that thing at the same time. Y must insist upon taking God at his word. r ly believing that he does forgive your sins a cleanse your heart, and that he will keep y day by day while you trust him.

C. E. M., Franklin, N. Y. How did we come in possession of the long strip of sea coast extending along down the southern part of Alaska? Was it acquired at the time of purchase by Seward or before in some other way? How far back from the mainland does it extend?

he answer to your question will be found in rank G. Carpenter's story of Alaska in the C istian Herald for March 1.

W. W. S., San Antonio, Texas. Please explain the expression "He led captivity captive and gave gifts unto men." Eph. 4: 8.

o lead captivity captive means to capture t captors. The figure is of a man or a group of en having captured a number of others. A eliverer comes and frees the captives by o powering those who had captured them. T military figure might seem to imply that t gifts given to those thus released were t n from their former captors, but the figure c hardly be carried so far as this. Sin, death and Satan have n possessions that the Redeemer cares to give to those whom h edeems. The meaning is rather that God has certain gifts f mankind, gifts of forgiveness, salvation, holiness, oppor- t ty and service, immortality. But men are not in a position t eceive these gifts because they have been led captive by t powers of evil. Jesus sets them free from their captors and s akes it possible for them to receive the gifts God has sent. T phraseology of this same passage in the Psalms, Ps. 6 :18, is slightly different, "Thou hast received gifts for men." B the meaning is the same. Christ received gifts from God a brings them to men. See especially Acts 2: 33.

J . Please explain Matt. 26: 52, "For all they that take the sword shall perish with the sword." Is not this statement too sweeping? Can our English words be a mistranslation? Or should the words as they stand be taken literally?

sus was here stating a proverb of universal application. H did not mean that every single individual who uses the s rd shall perish by the sword, but that movements and n ons which rely upon force must ultimately and inevitably b overpowered by force. This is the most timely lesson for t human race today. The civilization which shall endure w be based not upon strife, but upon service, not upon force t is destructive, but on that which is constructive.

eader, Jamestown, N. Y. We pay no attention to chain l ers.

. J. T., Warren, Pa. Jesus himself declared that his kingdom " not of this world"—that it is a spiritual kingdom. See L e 17: 21 for the passage, which has a special application h . It is interpreted as meaning that those who follow Christ a accept him as Saviour, and whose lives are guided by h example, have already a part and share in his kingdom, w h is eternal. This cannot be said of those who are in u elief.

T., Loyce, Fla. Each of the missionary boards has a st dard of qualifications which is applied to candidates who d re appointments for the foreign field. Write to the secre- t of your denominational board for full information. It is e ected that every candidate should be a true Christian who h already had, or is about to have, the necessary training, a who possesses the requisite qualifications.

. G., Briggsville, Ill. 1. Jews have the right of suffrage in t United States, both the native-born and the naturalized. 2 nly a native-born American can be President. 3. There is n ar on account of the reason you mention.

J. B., Bloomington, Ill. Jesus was not a non-resistant, b in the nobler sense he was the advocate and exemplar of what has been very appropriately termed the "higher r tance." A writer in a contemporary magazine has ex- p sed it in these well-chosen words: "He was the higher r tance incarnate. The sword he wielded was the dauntless d otion of his soul, the imperial quality of his ideals."

America has the opportunity to lead the way in the Christlike campaign by setting an example to the world of justice and fair dealing, in the love of humanity and consecrated common sense. We should resist the temptation to arm for slaughter, as Europe did. Nations that deliberately "take the sword" and reject God's protection must accept the consequences.

L. G. S., Clarence, Iowa. 1. In the Christian Herald Almanac for 1916 you will find the names and numerical strength, up to date, of practically all the religious organizations in the United States, certainly all the recognized bodies. Price ten cents. 2. The apocryphal books or writings relating to the New Testament, which still exist, are some forty in number. We cannot devote the space to print them. There were nearly 100 others of the same class none of which is now extant.

J. A. C., Youngstown Ohio, in a brief letter to the Mail-Bag, gives this vivid sketch of the Western attitude on preparedness: "We think that Mr. Wilson already realizes that the American people are not going to stand for any such scheme as even his first proposition. What he now proposes is not so unreasonable, but we hope that all good people will hold back as much as possible. How do we know what we have to prepare against? Who knows what even the most formidable coast defenses may be worth, in view of the advance in aircraft? Or what protection will dreadnoughts be five years from now? The preparedness of heart and conduct that will most surely keep the peace is what is most needed Big business is anxious for preparedness to swell their pockets, little caring for peace for its own sake. A united America, minding its own business is in no danger of war with any nation for a generation at least and by that time, let us hope, civilization will have made war impossible. If we had been prepared, as they say we ought to be, and had certain men at the head, we would long ago have had a war with Mexico. One thing is indisputable: if no one is prepared there will be no war."

The Song of the Plow

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

I CUT through the furrows,
  The brown loam springs high,
The sunlight is golden,
  The blue of the sky
Brings promise of summer,
  Of fruit and of grain . . .
I cut through the furrows,
  It's springtime again!

I cut through the furrows;
  The flash of my steel
Is sword-like, but peaceful;
  How happy I feel!
The winter is over,
  The summer is near;
I cut through the furrows,
  For springtime is here!

I cut through the furrows
  As if in a dream—
I see the corn waving,
  The faint golden gleam
That blooms in the summer—
  I hurry and hum;
I cut through the furrows—
  The springtime has come!

I cut through the furrows
  With joy in my soul;
I wish the whole world
  Might be happy and whole.
I wish that the swords
  Of the nations might be
Just plows—and the springtime
  Might come o'er the sea

Many of the letters that come to the Mail-Bag have the intimate note that speaks of true friendship and confidence. A long-time reader in Central Bridge N. Y., writes: "We have to do without something else to take the Herald, but it is such a help and comfort to us it is first after the Bible and helps us to understand the Bible better. We do not often get to hear any sermon for we live four miles from the nearest and six or seven from the next nearest church. Through the summer we have preaching in our schoolhouse, two miles away, so you see the Christian Herald is lots to us old people. Two of our children are church members, and I hope and pray they all may soon be working faithfully for Jesus. Help me to pray for them. God has answered many prayers for me and he has always been my stay and strength." Our heart goes out to these friends, who, even in humble wise and amid simple surroundings, are living the Christian life so faithfully. We are always glad to hear from them.

W. R. K., Cameron, W. Va. The nine lepers who did not come back were ungrateful. They did not return to give glory to God for their healing, as the tenth man did. They all prayed, but only one praised. Therefore they missed the greater blessing of divine forgiveness—that spiritual wholeness which was the supreme reward of faith. If we surrender ourselves wholly to the Saviour, we find that his work in us is never done by halves: it is always complete. "Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases," sang the psalmist. If we are to thank God for blessings, we should do it personally and with all the energy and eloquence of a grateful heart. Jesus did not need the tenth leper, but the leper needed him, as did all the rest, though he alone came to him and fell at his feet in thanksgiving.

Mrs. M. A. F., Alexandria, Va. Cornerstone-laying seems to have been an important ceremony from time immemorial. No one can tell who laid the cornerstones that have been dug up at Nineveh, which Layard describes, nor those of the pyramids, or the great temples at Karnak and Baalbec, or even the temple at Jerusalem, which Hiram helped to build, as related in I Kings, fifth, sixth and seventh chapters.

C. A. W., Crete, Ill. The passage in John 14: 12 is interpreted as indicating the miraculous credentials of the apostolic office, under which Christ empowered the eleven to work. The "greater works" are held to mean not necessarily deeds of a miraculous nature in the physical sense—for certainly they did none such but the glorious ingathering of souls which was to take place after his ascension, and for which his life, crucifixion and resurrection were the preparation. He had sown the seed; they would reap the harvest. (See Luke 5: 10, "From henceforth thou shalt catch men.") The "greater works" were to be miracles indeed, but of a different kind—"the conversion of thousands in a day by the power and presence of the Holy Spirit." There is, in the opinion of the best commentators, no other interpretation admissible than that which relates to the spread of the Gospel—the inbringing of the Kingdom in the hearts of men—and those who claim, on the strength of this passage, to have the power of performing physical miracles are not only misinterpreting the Scriptures, but involving others in a delusion with themselves.

J. B., Covington, Ky. The "greatest picture in the world," in the opinion of the art critics of several generations at least, is "The Transfiguration," by Raphael. It may not be so esteemed today, however, although we have no knowledge of any change in this verdict, which has been generally accepted for a long period.

M. A. S., Webster Grove, Ia. We know of no recorded case of the kind mentioned in your letter. There are, however, instances of the punishment of presumptuous sins. The confusion of tongues at Babel was inflicted to punish a sin of this character (Gen. 11: 4-8).

W. A. M., Angus, Iowa. Jesus was the name of several persons mentioned in the New Testament. It is the Greek form of a Hebrew name which had been borne by at least two notable characters in early Jewish history, viz., Joshua who led Israel into the Promised Land and Joshua the high priest, mentioned in Zech. 3: 1. The original Hebrew form is Jehoshua, which by contraction became Joshua or Jeshua. Another form of the same name is Hoshea.

A friend of the Bowery Mission who signs himself "B." San Antonio, Texas, sends a draft for $75, "to be devoted exclusively to the Bread Line or to the relief of men who are down and out." This gift will be applied precisely as directed, and will prove a real service to the mission's work among the homeless and unemployed. If "B" will kindly send us a note mentioning the date and amounts of his last two remittances (which were anonymous like the present) that we may identify them we shall be glad to give them proper acknowledgment.

Mr. James A. McCrae, Gildford, Mont., writes to the Mail-Bag: "The seventh grade class in reading in our local school has just been studying Longfellow's poem, 'The Arsenal at Springfield.' The present conditions of the civilized world cause the study of this poem to make a deep and lasting impression. If this poem were given a place in every publication in our country, the sentiment against war and war preparations would be overwhelming." At this time, when war has brought so much suffering into the world, and when the peace of our own land is threatened by the advocates of big armaments, it would be an excellent thing to have these noble verses by America's greatest poet read everywhere.

S. B. Miller, Klana, Iowa, who some time ago inquired concerning the authorship of the poem on Periton's Ride in the Valley of the Conemaugh, is informed that the author is Mr. C. A. Hobbs of Mankato, Minn.

W. F. I., Milford We fail to see what possible good could be accomplished by such a promise as that set forth in your letter.

Luxeberry
WHITE ENAMEL

INTERIOR & DINING-ROOM

Homebuilding stimulates a desire for the beautiful that prompts the selection of Luxeberry White Enamel and Liquid Granite.

Luxeberry White Enamel—lasting, washable, beautiful—can also be modified to the newer tones of ivory and French gray in either brilliant or dull effects.

Liquid Granite Floor Varnish is the great general purpose finish. It is waterproof, wear resisting and suitable for all interiors.

Write for interesting book on wood finishing.

BERRY BROTHERS
INCORPORATED
World's Largest Varnish Makers
Established 1858

Factories: Detroit, Walkerville, San Francisco.

(246)

Liquid Granite FLOOR VARNISH

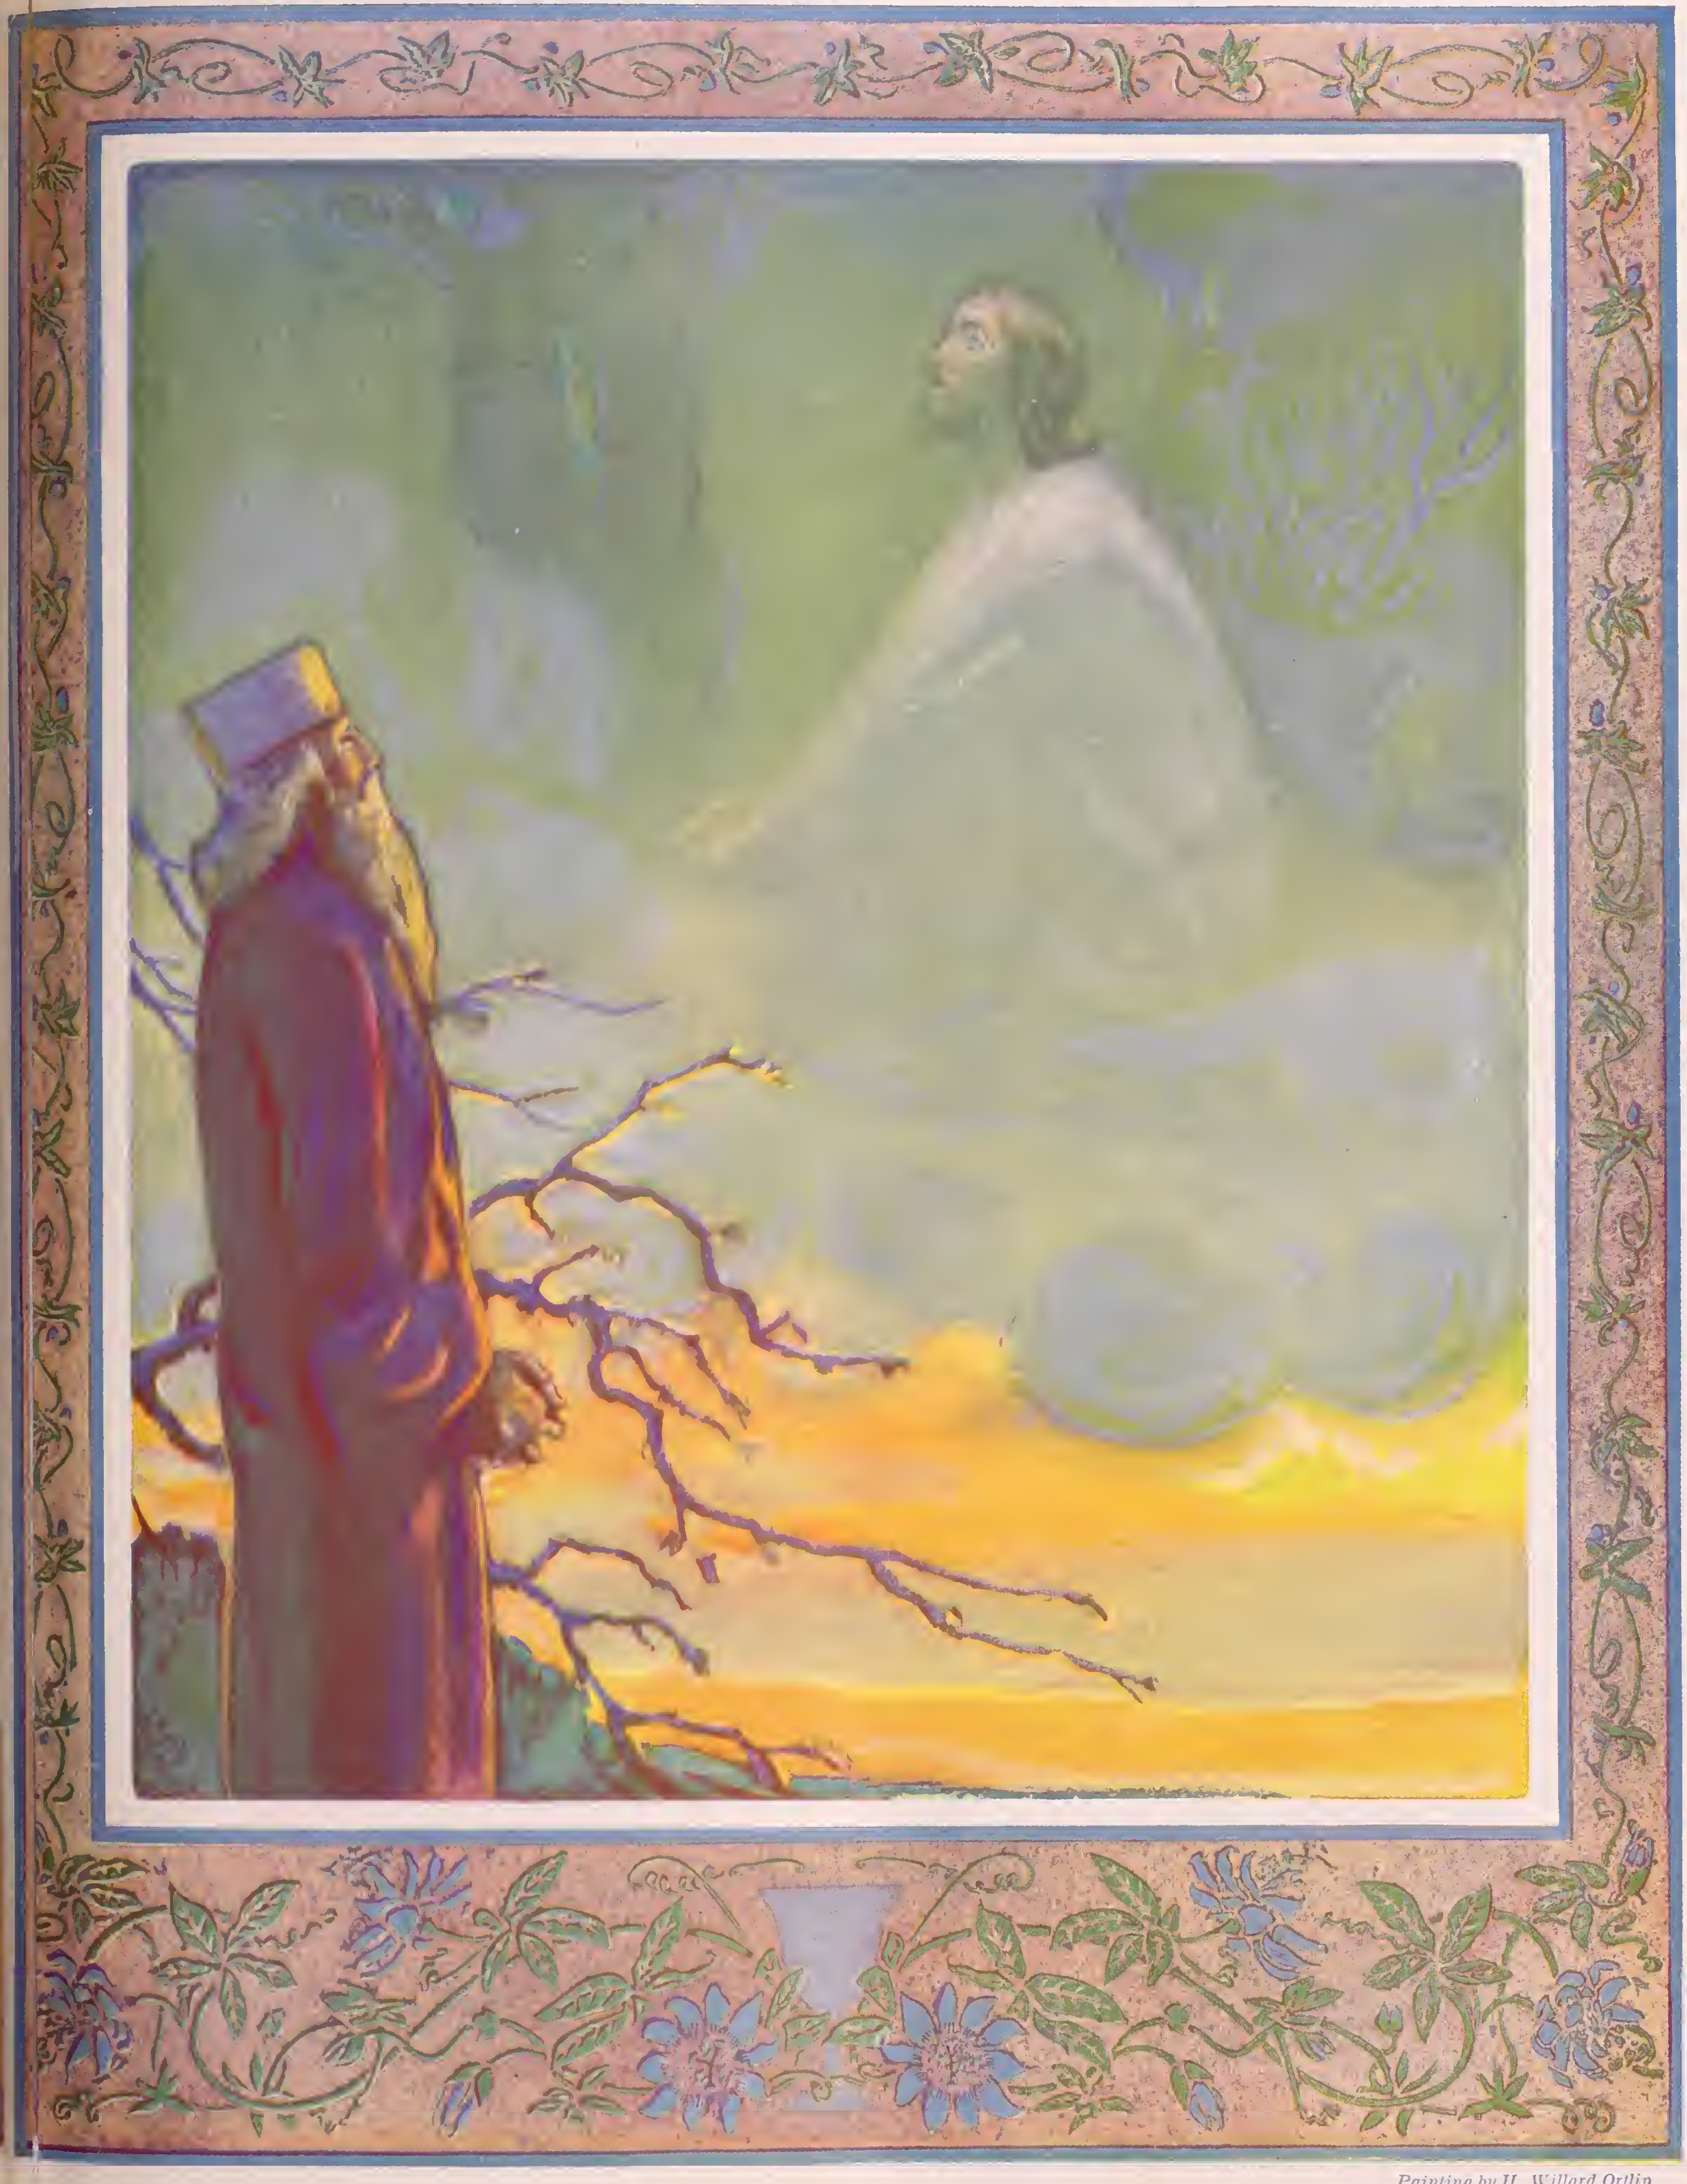
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, MARCH 15, 1916

VOL. 39—NO. 11. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

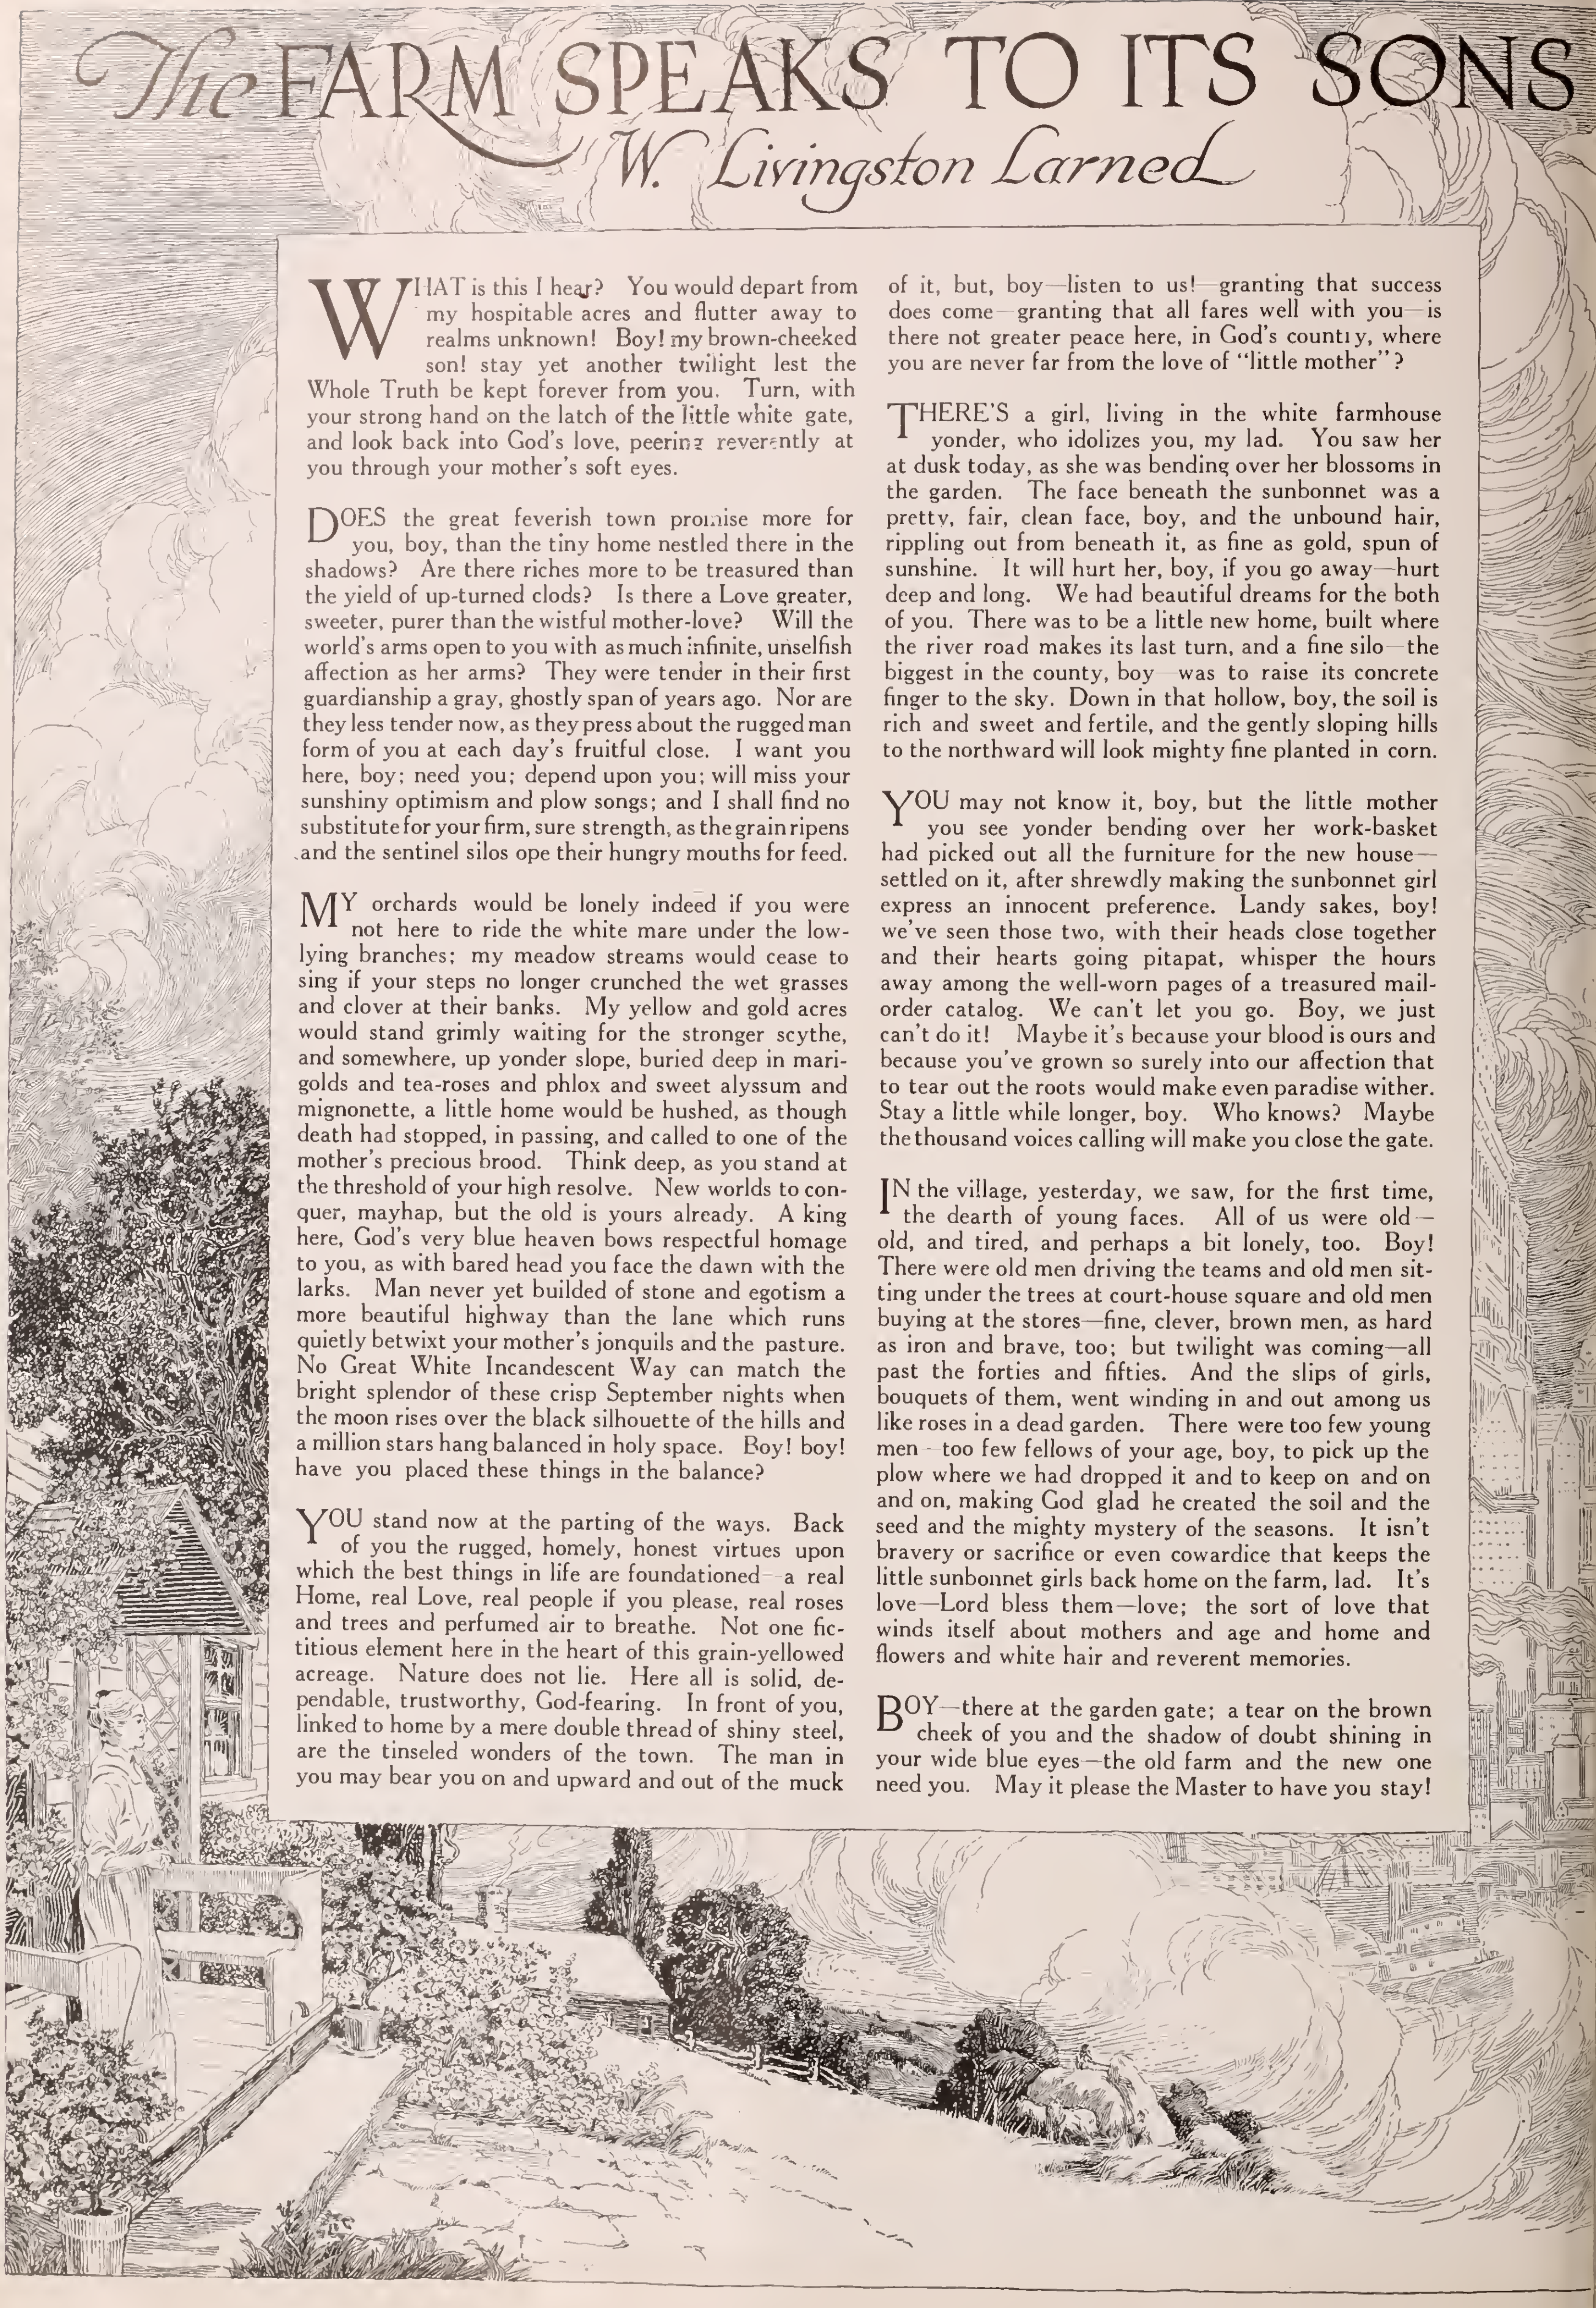


Painting by H. Willard Ortlip

ISAIAH'S VISION OF GETHSEMANE. "A MAN OF SORROWS, AND ACQUAINTED WITH GRIEF." ISA. 53:3; MATT. 26:36-44; MARK 14:32-39; LUKE 22:41-44

The FARM SPEAKS TO ITS SONS

W. Livingston Larned



WHAT is this I hear? You would depart from my hospitable acres and flutter away to realms unknown! Boy! my brown-cheeked son! stay yet another twilight lest the Whole Truth be kept forever from you. Turn, with your strong hand on the latch of the little white gate, and look back into God's love, peering reverently at you through your mother's soft eyes.

DOES the great feverish town promise more for you, boy, than the tiny home nestled there in the shadows? Are there riches more to be treasured than the yield of up-turned clods? Is there a Love greater, sweeter, purer than the wistful mother-love? Will the world's arms open to you with as much infinite, unselfish affection as her arms? They were tender in their first guardianship a gray, ghostly span of years ago. Nor are they less tender now, as they press about the rugged man form of you at each day's fruitful close. I want you here, boy; need you; depend upon you; will miss your sunshiny optimism and plow songs; and I shall find no substitute for your firm, sure strength, as the grain ripens and the sentinel silos ope their hungry mouths for feed.

MY orchards would be lonely indeed if you were not here to ride the white mare under the low-lying branches; my meadow streams would cease to sing if your steps no longer crunched the wet grasses and clover at their banks. My yellow and gold acres would stand grimly waiting for the stronger scythe, and somewhere, up yonder slope, buried deep in marigolds and tea-roses and phlox and sweet alyssum and mignonette, a little home would be hushed, as though death had stopped, in passing, and called to one of the mother's precious brood. Think deep, as you stand at the threshold of your high resolve. New worlds to conquer, mayhap, but the old is yours already. A king here, God's very blue heaven bows respectful homage to you, as with bared head you face the dawn with the larks. Man never yet builded of stone and egotism a more beautiful highway than the lane which runs quietly betwixt your mother's jonquils and the pasture. No Great White Incandescent Way can match the bright splendor of these crisp September nights when the moon rises over the black silhouette of the hills and a million stars hang balanced in holy space. Boy! boy! have you placed these things in the balance?

YOU stand now at the parting of the ways. Back of you the rugged, homely, honest virtues upon which the best things in life are foundationed—a real Home, real Love, real people if you please, real roses and trees and perfumed air to breathe. Not one fictitious element here in the heart of this grain-yellowed acreage. Nature does not lie. Here all is solid, dependable, trustworthy, God-fearing. In front of you, linked to home by a mere double thread of shiny steel, are the tinseled wonders of the town. The man in you may bear you on and upward and out of the muck of it, but, boy—listen to us!—granting that success does come—granting that all fares well with you—is there not greater peace here, in God's country, where you are never far from the love of "little mother"?

THERE'S a girl, living in the white farmhouse yonder, who idolizes you, my lad. You saw her at dusk today, as she was bending over her blossoms in the garden. The face beneath the sunbonnet was a pretty, fair, clean face, boy, and the unbound hair, rippling out from beneath it, as fine as gold, spun of sunshine. It will hurt her, boy, if you go away—hurt deep and long. We had beautiful dreams for the both of you. There was to be a little new home, built where the river road makes its last turn, and a fine silo—the biggest in the county, boy—was to raise its concrete finger to the sky. Down in that hollow, boy, the soil is rich and sweet and fertile, and the gently sloping hills to the northward will look mighty fine planted in corn.

YOU may not know it, boy, but the little mother you see yonder bending over her work-basket had picked out all the furniture for the new house—settled on it, after shrewdly making the sunbonnet girl express an innocent preference. Landy sakes, boy! we've seen those two, with their heads close together and their hearts going pitapat, whisper the hours away among the well-worn pages of a treasured mail-order catalog. We can't let you go. Boy, we just can't do it! Maybe it's because your blood is ours and because you've grown so surely into our affection that to tear out the roots would make even paradise wither. Stay a little while longer, boy. Who knows? Maybe the thousand voices calling will make you close the gate.

IN the village, yesterday, we saw, for the first time, the dearth of young faces. All of us were old—old, and tired, and perhaps a bit lonely, too. Boy! There were old men driving the teams and old men sitting under the trees at court-house square and old men buying at the stores—fine, clever, brown men, as hard as iron and brave, too; but twilight was coming—all past the forties and fifties. And the slips of girls, bouquets of them, went winding in and out among us like roses in a dead garden. There were too few young men—too few fellows of your age, boy, to pick up the plow where we had dropped it and to keep on and on and on, making God glad he created the soil and the seed and the mighty mystery of the seasons. It isn't bravery or sacrifice or even cowardice that keeps the little sunbonnet girls back home on the farm, lad. It's love—Lord bless them—love; the sort of love that winds itself about mothers and age and home and flowers and white hair and reverent memories.

BOY—there at the garden gate; a tear on the brown cheek of you and the shadow of doubt shining in your wide blue eyes—the old farm and the new one need you. May it please the Master to have you stay!

The Armed Merchantman Crisis

By WILLIAM BAYARD HALE

startling than the gravity of the crisis through ch we are passing, is the astonishing nature ts origin. What American could have believed le that his country should be brought to the brink th one of the belligerent European Powers hat Power insisted on accepting, while its declined to accept, a proposal made by our ?

is precisely what has happened. te of January 18, the Department of State, on of President Wilson, submitted to the British tement of its views on the subject of armed n and an argument in support of those The United States Government declared that no longer be any justification for the practise uns on board commercial ships. The com- ran in the following sense: Submarines to visit and warn merchantmen and place and passengers in safety before destroying t submarines have a right to be safe in thus warning merchantmen; and any armament a merchant vessel can only be for the purpose ng submarines carrying out this duty in submarine cannot reasonably be expected tself to almost certain destruction by approaching an armed ship; and it is reasonable to argue that an armed merchantman is not a peaceful, but is a belligerent, vessel; and the United States Government is seriously considering so instructing its officials.

Secretary Lansing's note contained these words: "My government is impressed with the reasonableness of the argument that a merchant vessel carrying an armament of any sort, in view of the character of the submarine warfare and the defensive weakness of under-sea craft, should be held to be an auxiliary cruiser and so treated."

To these representations on the part of the United States, the British Government demurred.

The position was thereupon forthwith abandoned by Mr. Wilson.

In the meantime, however, the German Government had taken action in line with the principles enunciated by the United States. Instructions were issued to German naval commanders to regard armed merchantmen as vessels of combatant character, to be attacked on sight.

On learning of this action by Germany, the President announced that the United States would never "yield" to the position taken by that Power. He now proposed to go to the last extremity to defend the "clear rights of American citizens," namely, to travel on armed ships if they chose. He communicated to leaders in Congress his intention to hand his passports to the German Ambassador, in case one American life was lost on board an armed merchantman.

The alarming nature of these events aroused Congress and bills were introduced in the Senate and the House warning Americans to keep off armed ships. There ensued a dramatic contest between the Chief Executive and Congress, in both branches of which the sentiment was strongly in favor of the warning resolution, although there was naturally the greatest reluctance to seem to antagonize the President in his conduct of diplomatic relations. The particulars of the contest are distressing in the extreme to all lovers of their country, for, whatever the formal issue of the struggle, they have revealed a deep-seated lack of confidence, on the part of the representatives of the people, in the poise of the man upon whom in so large degree the preservation of peace depends. The merest outline, (such as this) of the facts which have newly imperilled our foreign relations, give a disturbing sense of intellectual fickleness and of moral levity where there is a supreme demand for stability, consistency and utter sincerity.

hed But Not Extinguished

WE have already reviewed in the Christian Herald the successive steps which brought the President and face to face on a national First, the secret conference n the President and Senator D ocratic leader in the Senate, r Stone, Chairman of the Senate ttee on Foreign Relations, Repre- e Flood, Chairman of the ffairs Committee of the , at which the President made it that the Administration was ned to stand by its reversal of ey defined in the note of Secre- ng of January 18, even to the ar if need be to uphold the of American citizens to travel on rchantmen, as such vessels d of being "auxiliary cruisers" opinion of the Administration ar, would now be held to be raft.

February 29, stung by criti- and by the growing feeling of the and also by reports of the effect l situation was having upon pitals, President Wilson ad- following letter to Chairman Rules Committee of the House:

Mr. Pou:

ch as I learn that Mr. Henry, n of the Committee on Rules, Texas, I take the liberty of attention as ranking member ittee to a matter of grave con- country, which can, I believe, under the rules of the House, committee.

port that there are divided Congress in regard to the cy of the Government is being trious use of in foreign capi- eve that report to be false, but is anywhere credited it cannot the greatest harm and expose the to the most serious risks.

re feel justified in asking that ttee will permit me to urge an upon the resolutions with re- travel on armed merchantmen, recently been so much talked der that there may be afforded ity for full public discussion upon them, and that all doubts ures may be swept away and relations once more cleared of misunderstandings.

he matter is of so grave importance clearly within the field of itiative that I venture to hope ommittee will not think that I unwarranted liberty in making uggestion as to the business of the I very earnestly commend it nediate consideration.

y and sincerely yours,

"WOODROW WILSON.

te House, February 29, 1916."

e 322 of this issue of th n Herald, the immedi is letter are I and the defeat of the Gore Resolution in the Senate by a vote of 68-14 is recorded, together with the fact that the House would vote on the McLemore Resolution on March 7. This record is hardly complete without further reference to the debate in the Senate. Senator Stone addressed the Senate as the representative to the Administration, but took pains to state that he did not agree with the President.

Senator Stone stated his own belief as follows: "I cannot but believe that a belligerent merchant ship, heavily armed—no matter whether it be called defensive or offensive armament—engaged in transporting contraband war material to the army or navy of her sovereign, is in all essential respects the equivalent of a duly commissioned war vessel. To say the least, I think there can be no manner of doubt that the law covering that question is involved in doubt and may well be considered as debatable."

Senator Lodge, Republican, spoke in defense of the President's position. Senator Lodge said in part that, as he understood matters, the President is interfered with and hampered and crippled in his negotiations with foreign powers by the supposed hostile attitude of Congress. "I think," he said, "he has the right to know what the attitude of Congress is. I do not think that it can be disposed of in any general terms by any votes of general confidence, or any general resolutions, stating the limitations between the executive power in diplomatic negotiations and the legislative power."

To these speeches, Senator Gore replied in defense of his resolution in part as follows: "Whenever the honor, whenever the vital interests of this republic are involved, whenever the essential rights of an American citizen are invaded or violated, every American sword will leap from its scabbard. That sacred sentiment should not be trifled with. It should not be made a toy or a plaything in the hands of any madcap American citizen who may be disposed to venture his life upon the armed ship of any belligerent power. The progress of civilization consists of the withdrawal of individual rights when they become incompatible with the paramount interests of organized society. It is perhaps true that any one of the hundred million American citizens has a right to travel on an armed merchant ship. But I believe that the hundred million citizens have a right to be protected against his recklessness."

It was at this point in his speech that Senator Gore made the startling statement that Mr. Wilson frankly favored war. He said: "Mr. President, I introduced this resolution because I was apprehensive that we were speeding headlong upon war. Perhaps I ought to go further and say what I have hitherto avoided saying, that my action was based upon a report received which seemed to come from the highest and most responsible authority, that certain Senators and certain members of the House in a conference with the President of the United States received from the President the information, if not the declaration, that if Germany insisted upon her position, the United States would insist upon her position, and that it would result probably in a breach of diplomatic relations, and that a breach of diplomatic relations would probably be followed by a state of war, and that a state of war might not be of itself and of necessity an evil to this republic, but the United States by entering upon war now might be able to bring it to a conclusion by midsummer, and thus render a great service to civilization. Mr. President, I cannot say what the truth may be. I tell the tale as it was told to me. This came to my ears in such a way, with such a concurrence of testimony, with such internal and external marks of truth, that I feared it might be the truth, and if such a thing be even conceivable I did not feel that discharging my duty as a Senator, I could withhold whatever feeble service I might render to avert the catastrophe of war."

So amazing was this statement that the Senate promptly demanded of Senators Stone and Kern if they could either substantiate or disprove Senator Gore's assertion. Mr. Stone replied that the President had not stated to him or in his hearing that he believed in any way or in any way entertained the thought that war between the United States and the Central Powers would be desirable, or would result in good to the United States. Mr. Kern stated that the President "had a passion for peace."

Continued next page

Senator Gore's Resolution

Whereas, A number of leading powers of the world are now engaged in a war of unexampled proportions; and

Whereas, The United States is happily at peace with all of the belligerent nations, and

Whereas, It is equally the desire and the interest of the Americon people to remain at peace with all nations, and

Whereas, The President has recently offered fresh and signal proofs of the superiority of diplomacy to butchery, as a method of settling international disputes, and

Whereas, The right of American citizens to travel on unarmed belligerent vessels has recently received renewed guarantees of respect and inviolability, and

Whereas, The right of American citizens to travel on armed belligerent vessels rather than upon unarmed vessels is essential neither to their life, liberty, or safety, nor to the independence, dignity, or security of the United States, and

Whereas, Congress alone has been vested with the power to declare war, which involves the obligation to prevent war by all proper means consistent with the honor and vital interest of the nation, now, therefore, be it

Resolved, By the Senate, the House of Representatives concurring, That it is the sense of the Congress, vested as it is with the sole power to declare war, that all persons owing allegiance to the United States should in behalf of their own safety and the vital interest of the United States, forbear to exercise the right to travel as passengers on any armed vessel of any belligerent power, whether such vessel be armed for offensive or defensive purposes; and it is the further sense of the Congress that no passport should be issued or renewed by the Secretary of State, or any one acting under him, to be used by any person owing allegiance to the United States for purpose of travel upon any such armed vessel of a belligerent power.

This resolution was changed by Mr. Gore to read as follows:

"Resolved, That the sinking by a submarine without notice or warning of armed merchant vessels of her public enemy, resulting in the death of a citizen of the United States, would constitute a just and sufficient cause of war between the United States and the German Empire."

Representative McLemore's Resolution

The McLemore Resolution, after a long preamble giving the points of difference and of argument in the armed ship controversy, the sense of which is given on page 322 of this issue of the Christian Herald, presented the question at issue in the following words, which constituted the first paragraph of the formal resolution:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Sixty-fourth Congress of the United States do, and it hereby solemnly does, request the President to warn all American citizens, within the borders of the United States or its possessions or elsewhere, to refrain from traveling on any and all ships of any and all of the powers now or in future at war, which ship or ships shall mount guns, whether such ship be frankly avowed a part of the naval forces of the power whose flag it flies or shall be called a merchant ship, or otherwise, and whether such gun or guns or other armament be called "offensive" or "defensive"; and in case, American citizens do travel on such armed belligerent ships, that they do so at their own risk.

Our Ship of State Near the War Zone

NO stately liner with precious cargo of innocent children and men and women cautiously threading mine-strewn waters, could be in more imminent danger than has our country during the debates in the House and Senate on the armed merchantman question.

But let the fact not be overlooked that when that stately liner has completed one voyage safely, she has many others still to make through that same dangerous water. And the American government, though for the moment able to breathe in comfort, is by no means beyond the perils with which the diplomatic seas today are strewn. Congress, for reasons which seem good to itself, has refrained from taking that action which is clearly within its rights, namely, to warn American citizens to keep off of armed merchantmen. But the American citizen, man or woman, probably does not live who is unaware of the perils to this country which surround the exercise of the right to sail on an armed merchantman. If the controversy in Congress has resulted in nothing else, it has at least made this unmistakably clear to the whole nation.

It seems impossible to believe that there are sane, honest Americans who believe that an individual actually has the right under these conditions to sail on such vessels. It is useless for individuals to argue about the status of armed merchantmen. The American government recognizes such vessels as non-combatant ships. The American government claims that American citizens have the right to sail upon them. The American government holds that the killing of such a citizen by an illegal attack by a submarine or any other war craft, is in itself a cause for war, though it may not of necessity provoke this nation into war.

But if such a thing happens, who is going to keep this nation out of the war, since our government holds these views? Who indeed, but Congress! And what guide to the possible action of Congress in such an event is furnished by the vote on the Gore and McLemore Resolutions?

Our Government, nevertheless, is still a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. And inasmuch as Americans have not been warned from these ships, and inasmuch as there are America w have shown themselves capable of sailing on suc shi in such times, and inasmuch as it is known in ane that the Administration is determined to protect neri- cans so sailing, and inasmuch as it is not know ad- vance by any definite expression what Congress ll do in such an emergency, it still behooves every A rican citizen to act with exceeding promptness in mak g hi views on this question known to his congressm and the senators from his state, else government of the ople by the people, for the people may "perish from the rth."

The machinery of government does not pro e fo any effective expression of the public mind oth the through the ballot. But the post office departm and the telegraph offices provide machinery which, if perly used, will be as effective as the ballot box.

The question before the Administration, C res the Nation is this and this alone: Shall the prote on the United States extend to its citizens on board rme merchantmen of the belligerents? SHALL IT?

IN reply to Senator Gore's accusation the following denial was issued from the White House March 2:

"When the attention of the White House was called to certain statements in Senator Gore's speech this afternoon, the President authorized an unqualified denial of any utterance to which any such meaning could be attached."

The Vote in the House

THE McLemore resolution, the President's letter to Representative Pou and the question as to how far an American citizen might be supported in his rights without the honor of the nation being compromised or the rights of the great body of the citizens submerged, occupied the House of Representatives to the exclusion of everything else, during the whole day of March 7.

Representative Decker of Missouri described the horrors of warfare in Europe, and registered himself as opposed to the Administration's stand. He said: "The issue is not, shall we stand by the President? The issue in Germany was, shall we stand by the Kaiser? The issue in England was, shall we stand by the King? The issue in Russia was shall we stand by the Czar? The people did not know why they were called upon to die. This is a representative government, thank God. If war is declared, we will stand by the President. But now the issue is, shall we stand by the people of the United States and in order to prevent war, regulate the conduct of a few Americans who wish to travel on armed merchant ships. I have stood by the President of the United States in his efforts to carry out the mandate of the American people. He has said that if an American citizen on board an armed merchant ship is drowned by a German submarine without warning, he will hold Germany to a strict account. Stripped of its diplomatic language, it means that if an American life is lost as the result of the sinking of an armed merchant ship without warning—it means war. I am willing to go to war for an American right, but not for a 'doubtful legal right,' as Mr. Lansing calls it." Here Mr. Decker referred to the warning of American citizens out of Mexico, although they had definite and established rights there.

Acting Chairman Pou of the Rules Committee told the House that the McLemore Resolution had been telegraphed to the capitals of Europe and had paralyzed the arm of the Executive in dealing with foreign nations. Mr. Pou branded as an infamous lie the charge that President Wilson wants war. He said, "No president except Abraham Lincoln has ever gone through trials such as Woodrow Wilson has undergone in the last twelve months."

Representative Meeker of Missouri, Republican, said that 85 per cent. of the men who talked in the House were in favor of the warning. "Do you not think that Germany will hear that," he asked. "Do you not think your talk will go over as well as your vote? You talk one way and then propose to table this resolution in order to duck it and say it never came to a show-down."

Representative Cooper of Wisconsin read an article from the London Times, telling of attacks on submarines by armed merchant vessels, as showing the fallacy of the argument that liners were armed for defense only. Then he read Secretary Lansing's memorandum to the Entente Allies proposing the recognition of armed merchant men as auxiliary cruisers and not entitled to immunity from attack without warning. He contended that Mr. Lansing's expression, "My government" used in this memorandum could not have been used without the sanction of the President. And he contended that President Wilson was now ready to go to war over the armed ship issue, wh a few weeks before he showed t t regarded travel by American izens on armed vessels as a doubtful ht.

Representative Hamill, Demo t of New Jersey, said, "I deeply depl e the necessity at this time of differi with the President of the United St s. am going to vote against tabli th McLemore Resolution because wi not become partner in any pro ding to plunge this country into the E pea inferno of slaughter and then mp to justify my treachery on the imsy pretext of party loyalty." Repr nta tive Sherley of Kentucky, De crat said, "It's one thing for men t hink that people ought not to travel th merchant ships of a belligere it's another thing for Congress to sc nnly make such a declaration."

The vote to table the Res ution was 276–142; 182 Democrats l 93 Republicans supported the Pr lent, 33 Democrats and 102 Republican oted against the tabling of the Resol n.

Common Sense to the re

THE wish to support the a inis tration in its new attitude vard armed merchantmen seems oted in either the soil of party loy y o spread-eagle patriotism. The l k o public opinion is unmistakably ins the fiction that a ship carrying gu and crews to man them will obser th niceties of international law, an over whelmingly against recognizing t any American actually has the "rig" to sail on such vessels under sent conditions. From a number of nan swerable arguments which ha a peared in the press along these l s w quote from one by John Burgess, Dean of the Departments of Phil and Political Science at Co nt University, under date of Marc 7 i the New York American:

> Finally, it must not be overlooked t the is a good deal of deceit and hypocris nixed into all this controversy about the ri of a citizen of a neutral country to travel u bel ligerent merchantmen in declared w reas
>
> We are manufacturing and selling llion of dollars' worth of war munitions t Great Britain and her allies. It is not co lered unneutral for a government not to pro it its citizens from carrying on such trade s ng as it does not reach such dimensions a t make the neutral country a real base of pplies for one of the belligerents against the er.
>
> But the belligerent purchaser must e the risk himself of the delivery of the m ions
>
> His enemy is within his right to ca re or destroy them if he can.
>
> The main object of German submar war fare around the British coasts is to do t and the main object of getting American izens to travel on these merchantmen carry con traband of war is to shift the duty of uring the delivery of these munitions fr the shoulders of the British Navy to the ern ment of the United States of Americ nder the cloak of the claimed legal duty the Government of the United States to l the belligerent operating the submarine rfare against the munition ships of its en y to strict accountability for any injury ha ening to an American citizen by reason of a bma rine attack upon such ships.
>
> TO MY MIND THE POINT OF EAL HUMILIATION TO OUR COU RY. OUR PEOPLE AND OUR GOVERN ENT IS THAT WE SHOULD PERMIT UR SELVES TO BE USED FOR ON MO MENT FOR SUCH A PURPOSE.

The British Admiralty's Order to Merchantmen

ON March 2, the British Admiralty officially published the orders which were issued to armed merchantmen under date of October 2, 1915, and which are at present in force. The orders embrace many points not essential to a layman's understanding of the one point at issue with our government, namely, the character and purpose of the armament. One need not be versed in the interpretation of diplomatic notes nor gifted with more than ordinary common sense to perceive that the effect of these orders is to place armed merchantmen in the category of warships, exactly as was the contention of the United States government in its note of January 18. Immediately an armed merchantman sights an enemy vessel approaching, the merchantman must hoist the British colors and on the assumption that the hostile craft, in particular submarines and air-craft, intends to attack must go into action whether attacked or not, to prevent the hostile craft coming within effective range; and the merchant-vessel shall continue such "defensive" action until she has given valid indication, by stopping her course, hauling down her flag, or otherwise, of intention to surrender. The armament of merchant-vessels can include cannon, rifles, and machine guns. Inasmuch as armed merchantmen, as a rule, carry munitions of war and recruits, they become a challenge to an enemy the moment they appear on the high seas, and the only apparent difference between them and a registered battleship is that they do not seek an enemy vessel for attack. They act from start to finish under Admiralty orders, and practically have no choice but to open fire when an enemy vessel appears in the vicinity, by virtue of the Orders now made public. Upon such vessels Americans, according to the Administration, have the right to sail as passengers, and their death in such a combat is to be considered a cause of war.

Instruction, dated 20th of October, 1915, in re the status of armed merchant ships:

(1) The right of the crew of a merchant vessel to forcibly resist visit and search and fight in self-defense is well recognized in international law and expressly admitted by the German prize regulations in an addendum issued June, 1914, at a time when it was known that numerous merchant vessels were being armed for self-defense.

(2) Armament is supplied solely for the purpose of resisting attack by an armed enemy vessel and must not be used for any other purpose whatsoever.

(4) The status of a British armed merchant vessel cannot be changed upon the high seas.

Rules to be observed in the exercise of the right of self-defense:

(4) Fire must not be opened or continued from a vessel which has stopped, hauled down her flag, or otherwise indicated her intention to surrender.

(5) The expression "armament" includes not only cannon, but also rifles and machine guns in cases where these have been supplied.

(2) Experience has shown that hostile submarines and aircraft have frequently attacked merchant vessels without warning. It is important, therefore, that craft of this description should not be allowed to approach to short range, at which a torpedo or bomb launched without notice would almost certainly be effective. British and allied submarines and aircraft have orders not to approach merchant vessels. Consequently it may be presumed that any submarine or aircraft which deliberately approaches or pursues a merchant vessel does so with hostile intention. In such cases fire may be opened in self-defense in order to prevent the hostile craft from closing to a range at which resistance to a sudden attack with bomb or torpedo would be impossible.

Come Aboard, the Sailing's Fine

IN the thirty-six hours between Friday evening and Sunday morning, March 5, nine ships left New York harbor with more than 55,000 tons of war cargo, the largest quantity of arms, ammunition and other military supplies ever shipped from an American port in a similar length of time. The increase in production of munitions in the United States is being met by the withdrawal of the Cedric, Cymric and Mauretania from the British Naval service for the transportation of munitions and by the elimination of the passenger accommodations on the Lapland, Baltic and Adriatic. The nine ships sailing as above were the Cedric, Rochambeau, Canopic, California, Napoli, Ardmore, Southerdown, Apennine and Headley. The Napoli bound for the Mediterranean, had on board forty tons of trinitrotuluol, the principal element of high explosives, 11,144 copper ingots, large quantities of brass and steel and 850 horses. The Cedric carried the largest single cargo. Some items of the manifest were 23,981 cases of empty shells, 3,528 cases of cartridge cases, 5,200 cases of cartridges, 23 cases of rifles, 20 cases of rifle barrels, 16 cases of revolvers, 341 cases of cannon primers, 13,792 ingots of copper, 889 plates of spelter and 4,314 bales of cotton, a peaceful cargo indeed, the only thing lacking (so far as reported) being an American citizen.

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD
An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

The CHURCH and PUBLICITY

Professor J. H. Ralston

I church publicity does not receive a tremendous forward push in the Middle West, and possibly throughout the country, it will no be because the Church Efficiency Co erence held in Chicago last week wa a frost. The success of that confe ce was not accounted for solely, no even chiefly, on the ground that th advertising men in Chicago had go about preparing for it energetic-all and systematically; but because th ministers and laymen who attended th Conference were there for the pu ose of getting every scrap of infor ation about church publicity that mi t be drawn out from the several me who have been giving special att tion to this subject for a number of ears and have made many tests as its real worth.

ore than a year ago the educatio l committee of the Advertising As ciation of Chicago instituted a we ly conference between expert ad rtisers of that Association and mi sters and Christian laymen of the city. Ten to fifteen ministers at ded these luncheons for some tim. So much was the Association co inced of the feasibility of advertis g men and ministers getting tog her, that a big Conference or Co gress was finally arranged for Fe uary 25. The Association represe about seven hundred advertising me and there are more than a th sand ministers in the city of Chicag alone, besides hundreds in the su rbs. In preparing for the Confer ce the Association invited several mi sters who had tried out advertising to eak, and among these were some me who had written books on the subject, among the lat r Rev. C. F. Reisner, D.D., of New York; Rev. Ch les Stelzle, D.D., Rev. A. F. McGarrah and Mr. H ert Smith. The members of the Association who we taking the leading part in this movement were Ch stian men, so that the movement was not at all a s ular one. The plan also contemplates the spread of ch conferences throughout the country.

T E Conference covered three sessions which were filled to the brim with papers and addresses and sy posia. Every man and woman present was there fo a purpose, and when the symposia were held th to five persons would be on their feet at once, rea y to speak or ask questions.

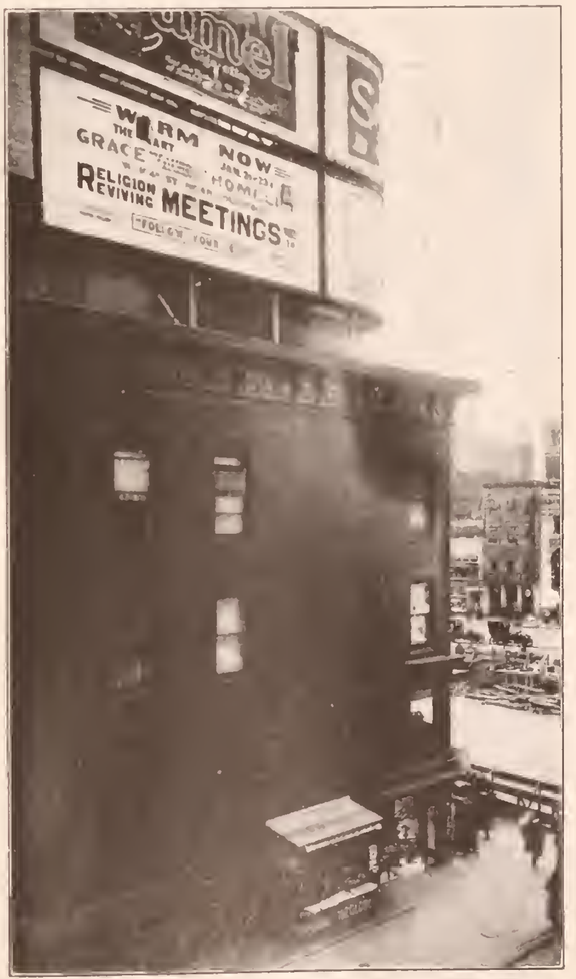
he president of the Chicago Advertising Associatio Mr. S. De Witt Clough, predicted a nation-wide mo ement of the church to arouse the public to the pla that the church occupies in its affairs. Mr. Ar ld Joerns said that ministers must come into clo r touch with the public, which is their "market" — w idea for some ministers. Through publicity ou ness men in the churches will take a keener interest church organization.

ev. O. F. Jordan spoke on "Checking Results of Ch rch Publicity" and said that ordinarily these res ts were easily checked, such as counting noses at a eeting. As to membership, his church has by pu icity cut down the loss of membership one-half, in is way doing far more than shoe-leather has done be re. He urged that all religious advertising should be istinctively religious. By such advertising, men sh ld be made reverent, just as men are made hungry by oking at a plate of "This or That breakfast food."

ev. Roy L. Smith, pastor of a church in the densely po lated west-side of Chicago, spoke on the adaptatio of church work to the particular community in wh h the church may be located, and this would entail in any cases a careful survey of the community. N sensationalism, but employ methods to which the pe le will respond. He had advertised a series of serm s on football, and secured large attendance. He al recommended the use of a trademark to advertise a l al church; for instance, his own church was advertis by a trademark which appeared on all their pr ting: "St. Paul's Methodist Church In the Heart of e West-Side." He had had experience in village w k, and he believed that advertising would give re lts in such communities as well as in the cities.

ev. Wm. E. Barton, D.D., pastor of the First C gregational Church of Oak Park, spoke of his su ess in securing the insertion of church matter in th Boston papers when a pastor in that city through a reful study of the style of those papers. At Oak Pa he endeavored to resuscitate the Sunday evening pr ching service by the use of modern advertising m hods. They adopted a slogan, "The End of a Pe ect Day," and used it very freely in advertising their meetings. They used window cards, signs in the street cars, handbills and a bulletin board which could be electrically lighted at night. The result of this advertising is a greatly increased congregation, and many attend the services who would not go anywhere else to church. The sermons are only twenty minutes in length, and there is special music which is sometimes advertised by the pictures of some of the soloists. The plan thus far has met expenses, so the financial end is satisfactory, and there have been receptions of people into the church who were well worth saving. This plan is nearing the second year of its trial.

Rev. Paul B. Jenkins, Chairman of the Publicity Committee of the Milwaukee Federation of Churches, among other things, said: In the last four or five years the churches of Milwaukee have used many thousands of dollars in publicity; a great part of the service of advertising men was given to this work, most all of it being planned by the Milwaukee Federation of Churches. In the "Go-to-Church Sunday" campaign of 1914 and 1915, not less than $5,000 was spent in advertising, and these are some of the methods that were used: A large amount of space was secured in the city papers and such papers gave editorial notes on the proper observance of the day. Some papers reported the result of the Sunday attendance. Advertisements were placed in all the city street cars; announcements of men's meetings were made on bill-boards by the advertising companies, and space was given on bill-boards even on the tops of buildings; some of them were electrically lighted. The larger churches covered their own communities with dodgers, etc. Buttons to be worn by men, women and children were distributed by the hundreds of thousands. On the second observance of "Go-to-Church Sunday," 32,000 tags were placed on the door-knobs of 32,000 residences. Hotels also gave assistance in placing notices in their elevators, and in permitting cards to go to their guests. Many stores put invitations in their packages. It was estimated by the City Club of Milwaukee, which is not at all a Christian organization, that there was an attendance of 180,000 persons at church on that particular Sunday, which represents nearly all the people who were able to go to church. Some saloons closed for the occasion!



Competing with "the Children of this World"

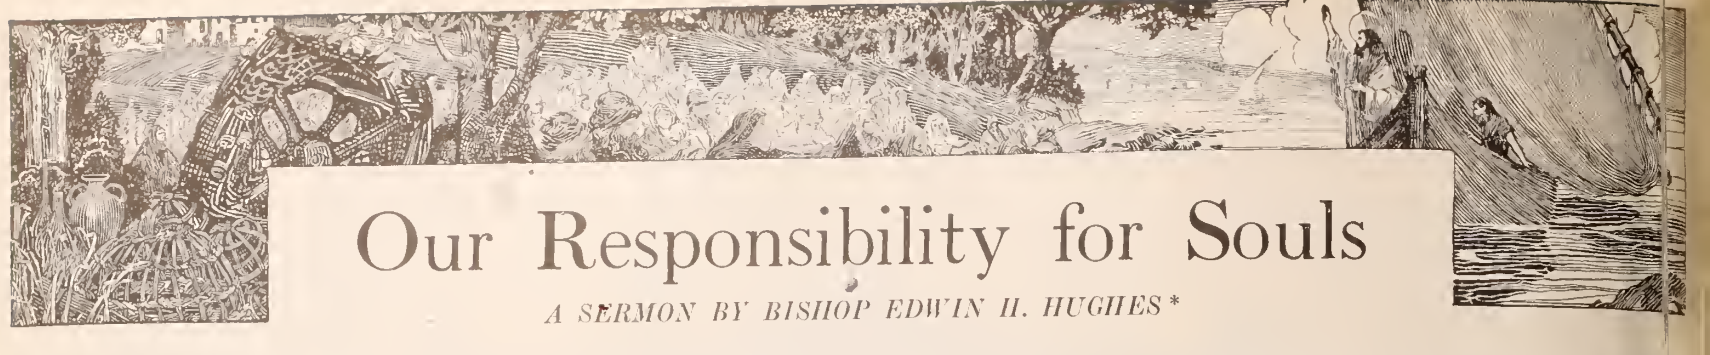
Rev. Charles Stelzle, D.D., of New York, said that the church finds itself in competition with other agencies and institutions that claim to represent God in the world, and that the church must convince men that it is the best medium through which God speaks. To do this work properly, the church must know its field, and this may require a survey, different communities requiring different treatment. Sometimes the open forum is a good way to find out what the people are thinking about and there the public often get erroneous ideas about the church, its doctrine, terms of admission, et cetera, corrected. Church publicity, he urged, is not a matter of one week or one year. It must be continuous. This is the plan of the big advertisers in other matters, and they so dominate the minds of the public in their particular field that when men think of certain articles that they need they instinctively think of those that are advertised.

WRITING of sermons and writing of advertisements for the newspapers are two very different things. The preacher puts his headlines into his climax, whereas the advertising man puts his into the text at the very beginning of the story. Church advertising should not only tell of the work of the church, but should make men understand its spirit. There is distinct value in paying for advertising space in a newspaper. Such advertising begets confidence in the church on the part of the public. We have no right to look upon a daily newspaper as a philanthropic enterprise. It is usually conducted upon a business basis. If the church receives direct benefit from newspaper advertising, it should be willing to pay for it, just as it pays for its coal and gas and general upkeep. A half page of newspaper advertising purchased every year by the church, and filled with convincing arguments, is sure to make an impression on people's minds.

Mr. Herbert H. Smith, assistant editor of the Continent, spoke of a class in the Presbyterian Training School of Chicago which is studying church publicity under his direction, learning how to write up different conditions of churches and different kinds of church activities. He believed that the time was coming when the theological seminaries would do something more than teach a man how to preach to a congregation of two hundred; they will teach him how to reach great multitudes through the press.

Rev. Dr. Christian F. Reisner, of Grace M. E. Church, New York, insisted that the church must first have something real to advertise; and that is the Gospel. If the church fails to give the Gospel after it succeeds in getting the attendance of the people through advertising, it fails utterly. Ministers and churches should be open-eyed to matters that interest the public, and if they can secure this interest, they will get publicity, however unfavorably they may otherwise be situated. Special methods sometimes can be used, such as a rousing reception for a company of evangelists visiting the cities; the getting up of street parades; a good deal of noise and display; the idea always being to get the attention of the public.

Continued on page 340



Our Responsibility for Souls

A SERMON BY BISHOP EDWIN H. HUGHES *

TEXT—I Kings 20 : 40. "And as thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone."

THESE words are taken from an Old Testament parable. The prophet who used them had disguised both himself and his purpose. He appeared before the monarch with a mask of ashes upon his face and with a mask of uncertainty upon his words. Thus he set a trap into which the unwary king at once walked. Indeed the prophet disguised himself so thoroughly that the world has never found out who he was; he also disguised his words so that their first import is by no means plain. But, lifting them out of their immediate connection, we shall quickly find some applications for ourselves and for our present work.

There are several things that appear at once on the surface of the story. A man had been made responsible for the keeping of another; this responsibility had been imposed by a higher authority; for a reason plainly stated he had failed of his trust; when he came to himself he looked about and found that his prisoner had fled; certain disasters and penalties followed upon his negligence. All these points, which do no violence to the ancient meaning, may well be fitted into a parable of the Christian life. Without further explanation we shall seek for the lessons of the simple world.

FIRST, then, we have been made responsible for the reaching and keeping of the souls of men for a higher authority—God himself. It is difficult for us to realize the full import of such a suggestion. Perhaps at times we have wished that God had put us in a world of relations and had still left us without responsibility for others. But in our better moments we feel the goodness of the ties that bind us to men, and we glory in the divine partnership that our human help fairly implies. In all ways God has put us in each other's keeping. We take that divine law and work it into the statutes of the country. To the city we say: "If on any of your accepted highways a man meets with accident because of your negligence, we shall hold you responsible." To the engineer we say: "If while under your care men are hurt because you fail to heed your orders, we shall send you to prison as surely as if you had been a robber." The apothecary is held to account for the way in which he mixes his medicines; the physician for the results of his malpractice. The sentry dies, not for going over to the enemy, but for sleeping at his post.

So we have discovered that God has placed us in each other's charge. A failure to be careful for other men is followed by dire effects. A careless remark, spoken jokingly, and scores of poor people who have put their money in a savings bank rush to its doors and in the end lose interest that they sorely need. An upset lamp, and ere long Chicago is burning. While men are living in a world of relationships, they would better be careful how they handle their lamps! God has put us in each other's charge. In the presence of this assured law, it is only the successors of Cain who think of asking whether they are their brothers' keepers.

It is not at all needful to offer further proofs or illustrations. The law is here and we must live in its light. In no sense does it work more eminently and effectively than in the Christian life. There is an amazing word in Paul's writings about our being "stewards of the mysteries of God"; another startling word in Peter's Epistle about our being "stewards of the manifold grace." It is the duty of a steward not to hoard, but to invest and dispense. It may not always be easy to say just where human influence ends and the divine calling comes in; not possible to say just where the free will of the other man takes up our work and completes it by his own loving surrender; but that God gives us the fearful privilege of bringing men to him there can be no doubt. In the Christian view, every man must appear to us as a candidate for the divine grace; nor do we dare to set limits to that responsibility.

VAST as is the task of bringing about a universal discipleship, it is just this duty that the Lord has set before us. The rest of the world is in our charge. The man most distantly removed from your life, under the Gospel responsibility begins to tug at your heart. A portion of some community has been put under the special care of our evangelism; our place in a church is a recognition of this fact; our very excuse for being lies in this—that we are to call men into the ways of the Lord, to seize them and hold them as captives of the divine grace. What can the Master say if we fail of our very reason for being and come home at the end of our season of harvesting without any sheaves for the heavenly garner?

When the case is stated in this plain way, we at once see its correctness. In addition to this, we feel even a longing that we may in some way claim and keep the souls of men for Christ. Yet when we put our doing beside our longing, the contrast is only too evident and too painful. We begin to inquire immediately as to our spiritual unfruitfulness. At first, it may be, we load our souls with the harshest indictments. We accuse ourselves of having been heartless. The shame of our uselessness settles down upon us like a cloud. We see that the Kingdom, for whose coming we pray daily, moves slowly in the gaining of its subjects. Perhaps we are not able to point to a soul that has certainly been led into the way of Christ by our hand. It may be ventured in charity at this point that the reason of it all is given in the text: we have not been heartless, nor have we been asleep; we have simply been "busy here and there." Life has seemed so full that we have allowed our care for the souls placed in our keeping to lag.

This is the explanation of it all. When we have realized that souls were put in our care to gain and hold for Christ, we have not pushed them from us, each saying, "Leave me; I do not wish to be bothered with any responsibility for you; find some other leader; go and talk with the preacher." That has not been our mood at all; there has been nothing of deliberateness in it; there has been nothing of savage impatience; our carelessness has come through the crowding in of other things—through busyness. Some day we look for the object of our responsibility. Then we each turn a face and heart toward the Lord and speak the plaint of pathetic helplessness: "As thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone." We do not cut the ropes and push the vessel on the rocks; we are only occupied with some little matters on the shore; the vessel herself slips from her moorings, drifts away, and, having no pilot, becomes a wreck.

THE truth is that we do not want any person to be lost. We do not deliberately allow men to be lost. The greatest thing is simply crowded out. We are "busy here and there." Our carelessness in reference to souls grows out of our busyness in reference to things. It is this matter of commerce; it is that party; it is the reading of this book; it is that lecture; it is this social call; it is that committee meeting. Life is so complex. We are so busy—God help us!—that ere we know it our spiritual chance is gone.

Is not all this the transcript of your feelings? You are not heartless; you are merely busy. Some day the King of the Kingdom Eternal stands before you and asks: "Where is that one that was your special charge?" Your poor answer comes up to him, the best and only answer you can give, and yet a shameful answer: "As thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone."

And this brings us to the thought that the result of carelessness through busyness is the same as that of deliberate neglect. The prisoner has gone, just as surely as if the guard had broken the chains, pointed the path of escape, and said: "Go; I will not molest you." The result is one: the man is gone in either case.

> Evil is wrought for want of thought
> As well as want of heart.

True enough! But the evil "is wrought"! The engineer was "busy here and there" about his great engine; but the result is the same as if he had deliberately crashed into the rear of the advance train; the mangled moan just as loudly; the dying cry just as piteously; the mourners weep just as bitterly. The person is so busy that he does not see the upset lamp until the cottage is ablaze; but the result is as terrible as if an incendiary had applied the torch and, cursing out his vengeance, had given the deliberate command that the flames should take up their march. Just as many people are homeless; just as many firemen are burned; just as much money is lost; just as much of the city lies at last like a desert of cinders. Even the carelessness that arises through busyness is frightfully effectual; its victims walk the Via Dolorosa of pain and penalty. Men have never yet found out how to escap he fatal consequences of thoughtlessness. You di ot mean to do it; and yet you did it!

ALL this applies in the most serious way t he direct work of the church. Our business to take men and hold them for the King of king It would be a great mistake for any one to minif he place of the church as an educating force i he moral life of the community. It would be bad o, if one were to ridicule the province of the church it leads people in the deeper things of the spiritua fe. Yet is it too much to say that there is some ng wrong with the church when it becomes so busy ith other lines of activity that it fails to capture m for the King? Very often we hear the report: "We ve had a very good year indeed; we have builded so ly; our people have been greatly quickened." All at is good. But it should never be allowed to hid he saving function of the Church of Christ. We ay be so "busy here and there" in cultivating our wn spiritual lives, that while we are doing that, en slip away. Some one has said that "the best ay to edify a saint is to convert a sinner." The re rk is divinely true. A church in which men are lly being taken and held for the Lord, is a chur in which men cannot help growing in grace and i he knowledge of the Lord. We should not allow to come to pass that the church should at length ve to confess: "As thy servant was busy here and t re, he was gone."

The principle likewise applies to the home. Pa nts—especially fathers—become exceedingly busy. We have real longings that our children may be hel for the King. Even if we be not ourselves profe ng Christians, we turn them over to the church nd the Sunday school; we try to teach them to pra we are really anxious to have them grow up into C istian character. But we become occupied with eir other interests, with their social and school life nd we neglect their real selves. Some day we wal up to find that, in a deep sense, they have gone ay from us. When God asks us about each of then he reply is: "As thy servant was busy here and the he was gone."

Mr. Moody used to tell of a man who was nverted late in life. He seemed to be very happ for a day or two. Then he was seen in the mee ngs with the saddest of faces. When the chance ne, Mr. Moody asked him what was the matter. he man replied that he had gone out into the city nd had talked with all his children, now grown up, out the Christian life. He said that they all mocked m, and that he could make no impression upon m. Yet it is safe to say that that man had early ad anxiety for the spiritual welfare of his chil en. But he himself was "busy here and there," and en at last he woke up to his responsibility as a f er, and looked about for the charges committed t im by God, he found that they were gone!

THE lesson may be applied also to each indivi al. God has put into your charge one person om he requires that you shall hold for himself. at person is you. It may be well to ask if you are not escaping from yourself, if the fine, sweet n re that loved God in childhood, prayed to him each y, believed in him, and rejoiced in the story of his ve, is not slipping away from yourself. You ld better be careful lest that divine self get so far ay that you cannot get it back. Paul Lawrence Du ar, the negro poet, has a suggestive little poem en led "Conscience and Remorse." It describes how a n, sending his conscience away, really allowed his ue self to escape:

> "Good-by," I said to my conscience—
> "Good-by for aye and aye."
> And I put her hands off harshly,
> And turned my face away;
> And conscience, smitten sorely,
> Returned not from that day.
>
> But time came when my spirit
> Grew weary of its pace;
> And I cried, "Come back, my conscience;
> I long to see thy face."
> But conscience cried: "I cannot;
> Remorse sits in my place."

It is possible then for a man to be so busy "here nd there" that his very best self shall escape and g off into the far country. Call back that best self w! It is a trust from God. Let it not be that in the nd you shall have to say of yourself: "As I was sy here and there, he was gone."

---

* Bishop Hughes is one of the most eloquent spiritual leaders in American Methodism.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

More Man

SUNDAY, March 19. I Cor. 16:13. "Quit you like men!" We have used four English words to express the one original word. No one English word can carry the wealth and energy of e apostle's word. Perhaps we come nearest to it our vigorous phrase, "Play the man!" The ma in men is to be heroically displayed on the difficult fiel of the Kingdom. The manly is to bo one of th okens of the Christly. A big manliness is to be e sign and witness of a big faith, and is to bear its stimony to the dynamic of God's grace.

r what is our religion worth if it does not reinfor our stock of "man"? Unless our religion gives a an "more man," what part does it play? A str g and yet delicate manliness, delicate in its chi lry as well as athletic in its prowess, is one of th most impressive presences which go along the str ts of time. Everybody is arrested by it. It is no nly arresting but commanding. It is not merely an ject of interest, it is a fountain of power. Virtue go out of it. It shapes the crude stuff of circumsta es to the pattern of its own fine visions. It inf ms all its issues with its own essence. Its speech is anly, but so is its silence. Its aggression is ma y, but so are its restraints.

w, this is one of our supreme needs today. More ma! More of that inner mystic dynamic which ma es everything in one's life a well-equipped soldier of e Lord. And how are we to get "more man"? N by shouting, either in the roar of the lion or th cream of the eagle. No; not by striving, or crying or lifting up our voice in tho street. We shall ge more "man" from the Son of Man. All our sp gs are in him. He is "the very fount of our new da ' And the gift will come to us on invisible roads, in oly commerce, through reverent communion, an in humble and thoughtful worship at the springs. It born from above. What other way is there? I ow of none. What is born of the Son of Man is of e Son of Man sustained. The Redeemer provi means for his own creation. In his provision we ecome partakers of his nature, and the Son of M reincarnates himself in the manliness of the man wh n he redeemed. J. H. J.

God the Christian's Co-Worker

MONDAY, March 20. Isa. 62:1-12. "I will not rest" . . . "Take ye no rest." . . . "Give hi no rest." The speaker here is clearly He who in th previous chapter said, "The Spirit of the Lord is up me," and who he is was taught in the synagogue at azareth, when there was handed to Jesus of Na reth the roll of the prophet Isaiah, and he opened to his passage and said, "This day is this Scripture fu led in your ears." He does not hold his peace du ng these centuries that intervene between his fir and second Advent, because he ever liveth to in cede, pleading the cause of his church and asking th the heathen may be given him for his inheritance an the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. H does not rest, working out his eternal purposes th ugh those whom he has graciously called into fel wship with himself. The Lord also working wi them is the description of all the labors and activiti of the church which are of real value.

t his servants on earth in union with him are eq lly intent on the same object. They are bidden to ke no rest. There are two branches of service m tioned here. They are watchmen and they are al God's remembrancers. We are to warn the wi ed to turn from sin, to blow the trumpet when th foe is stealing up against the church, to lift up ou voice with the midnight cry, "Behold, the Bridegr m cometh!" and to cry also, "Behold the Lamb of od, who taketh away the sin of tho world." It is r duty to stand before God as his remembrancers, re nding him of his promises. Such is the true sc e of prayer. And God will not rest. If ever th work of salvation stays in a country or church, th ault is not in God; it is we who have not opened th sluice-gates, through which he may pour his fu ess on the world. F. B. M.

Reviewing the Day

TUESDAY, March 21. Ps. 19:2. "Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth kn vledge." This word of the psalmist may bo taken not merely as a description of the day and night of nature; it is also an epitome of the experience of the man of wisdom, the man of God. In a very real sense, every day and every night make a completed whole; tho day for deeds, for action, and the nights for thoughts and knowledge. The text is often given to us by thoso who would warn us against useless worries of the morrow. "Live today!" Not so frequently do we hear the injunction "Think tonight!" We are incited to keep the morning watch; we should be also incited to keep an evening watch, and in the time of quiet and retrospect analyze our day, record the good, and condemn the evil. A thoughtful hour or even a tranquil fifteen minutes set aside before sleep closes our eyes, in which to examine our inmost hearts in the light of our motives and acts in the day just passed, would make many a tomorrow more truly divine; it would save repeating mistakes, it would tighten our hold upon the best that is in us. If in these moments we are perfectly honest, making a clean breast of our faults to ourselves and to God, resolving that these mistakes of the past day shall not mar our tomorrow, we would certainly fulfil the psalmist's words that "night unto night showeth knowledge."

Let not soft slumber close your eyes,
Before you've recollected thrice
The train of action through the day!
Where have my feet found out their way?
What have I learnt, where'er I've been,
From all I've heard, from all I've seen?
What have I more that's worth the knowing?
What have I done that's worth the doing?
What have I sought that I should shun?
What duty have I left undone,
Or into what new follies run?
These self-reflections are the road
That leads to virtue and to God.

C. S. C.

Our Lives Guided by a Beneficent Will

WEDNESDAY, March 22. John 21 : 20-25. "If I will that he tarry till I come." What royalty there is in these words! If our Lord were less than divine, they would be blasphemous; but being what he is, it is natural that he should speak thus. The ancients thought of their lives as woven on the loom of spiteful fates. The materialist thinks of his life as flotsam on the waves. The Christian believes that his life is being modeled and guided by the will of his Lord.

Peter was to be the apostle of sufferers and write a letter that would be the balm of the sorely tried and wounded, but he would never have penned it apart from the fiery trials through which ho learned humility, meekness, and patience. He must have often pondered these words which foreshadowed a martyrdom, and his soul became refined and purified and skilled to administer comfort. John's work was to declare that Jesus is the Living One, unchanged and unchanging, and how could he have arrived at his great visions if he had not lingered on till the earthly Jerusalem had fallen before the Romans, and the Jews were scattered to every nation under heaven?

When wo pass over, wo shall see clearly that our life and ministry were ruled by the wise and loving will of our Lord. F. B. M.

Seeing Things Unseen

THURSDAY, March 23. Heb. 11:7. "By faith Noah, being warned of God concerning things not seen as yet, moved with godly fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house." David Livingstone at one time came back from the depths of the Dark Continent and had an interview with Lord Salisbury, telling him of the sad condition of slavery and misery existing among the black men of central Africa. Salisbury asked the great missionary what he would suggest as a remedy. Livingstone replied, "A railroad that will open the dark heart of the continent to the coast civilization." The road was built, an almost herculean task, five hundred miles through the tangled wilderness, a road that today is a fine economic investment, as well as a pathway of light into the wastes of African darkness. Some years later Lord Salisbury was asked how ho ever dared to enter upon such a perilous and uncertain project. He answered, "It was because of something I saw in Livingstone's eyes."

The Christian in his spiritual progress is driven ahead not by trust in a blind chance, but like Noah he is "moved with godly fear"; he sets his helm toward an unseen harbor; the winds and the waves are songs to him; they give wings to his voyage; they remind him that he is crossing a vast life sea, not tied motionless to a shore of doubt. His goal may remain for a long time unseen, but he knows, like the good seaman, that his compass is true; he may enter the voyage with unsealed orders, like Noah, but he knows from whence his orders come and he keeps his rudder straight. The main thing is to keep sailing toward God's land, "not seen as yet." Moreover, we cannot tell whether some one may not see in our eyes the reflection of our faith, and begin to believe in the unseen but real world. C. S. C.

Christ's Sacrifice Pleading for Us

FRIDAY, March 24. Genesis 4 : 1-10. "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground." All blood has a cry, and it cries to God. He may seem indifferent and forgetful, but it is not really so. The cry never ceases until it is answered, and when requisition is made it is exacted to the last jot and tittle. The blood of Abel was innocent blood, was peace-loving and gentle blood, was pure and holy blood. His simple unoffending life was reflected in his avocation as the keeper of sheep. It cried to God in protestation of innocence; it protested that the one who ought to have kept the pact of brotherhood had broken it; it demanded that the righteous Judge should avenge its spilling on the bosom of mother earth. "Cain was of the evil one and slew his brother, because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous."

Heb. 12:22-29. "Ye are come . . . to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than the blood of Abel." The blood of Jesus also cries through earth and heaven. Through the earth, proclaiming a finished atonement, propitiation, and satisfaction for the sin of the world; through the heavens, pleading not against us but for us, not for vengeance but for forgiveness, not for our banishment from the presence of the Lord, but for us to be made nigh. Even in the life of the glorified, it would seem that tho blood of our Lord, denoting his sacrificial death, is in evidence.

If ever, in the heavenly city when surrounded by the spirits of the just made perfect and innumerable companies of angels, we should suddenly remember our sinful origin and experiences, the wounds of the Lamb, as it had been slain, will reassure and comfort us. It will give us boldness to enter into the Holiest. F. B. M.

How Christ Makes Us Free

SATURDAY, March 25. Philemon 1. "Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ." Philemon, perhaps you thought I was a Roman prisoner, or Nero's prisoner; that I was delivered over into the hands of my enemies, and that it would have been better if I had never seen Rome. Oh, no, Philemon, I am the prisoner of Christ. He knew, when he said that I must preach the Gospel at Rome also, that I would have a prison for a pulpit; just as Joseph and Jeremiah and John the Baptist and Peter and John had—they were all prisoners of Jesus Christ.

Philemon, don't forsake me because I am persecuted. It is Jesus' hands that hold me, in love—not the manacles.

Prisons are palaces when Jesus abides with me.

My Mamertine prison may become a spiritual power-house for all the centuries. Philemon, you remember when I was in the Cæsarean prison and the Philippian jail, how kings heard the Gospel and the jailor's family were converted. My whole Christian life is much like a prison to me; but when I am weak, then am I strong; when I have nothing, I possess all things. When I die it is gain, and to live is Christ; for he is with me everywhere.

Philemon, when I am chained, the message is liberated, for my soul is unfettered in its daily flight heavenward. You remember Joseph graduated from a pit to a prison and thence to a throne. I am on the same road, soon to finish my course and receive a crown that fadeth not away.

No, Philomon, Nero is the prisoner, for he is bound by chains of gold, thongs of habit, shut in by bars of passion, lust and crime. He cannot unclasp the chains of appetite, nor break through the iron doors that hold him. E. W. C.

A Week in the World's News

THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS. On February 29 the whole question of the attitude of Congress toward the foreign policy of the United States was again brought to the fore by a letter from the President to Representative Edward Pou of the House Committee on Rules in which he said that the report abroad that there were divided counsels in Congress was being made industrious use of in foreign capitals, and he therefore felt justified in urging upon Congress an early vote upon pending resolutions on the subject of armed merchantmen, and a full public discussion upon them, in order that all doubts and conjectures might be swept away and our foreign relations cleared of damaging misunderstandings.

The letter took the leaders of Congress entirely by surprise. The President let it be known that he would not be satisfied with a compromise, but that he wished a record vote on the resolutions as introduced, viz.: The McLemore resolution in the House, and the Gore resolution in the Senate, both proposing to warn Americans off armed merchantmen. It was even suggested that, lacking the complete support of his party, the President might refuse to stand for reelection. The Senate at first showed a tendency to await the action of the House. With the situation in the House on the first of March still very much muddled, discussion in the Senate was begun. On March 2 the Senate discussed the Gore resolution, the most sensational episode of the day being a statement by Senator Gore that he understood from the senators who had talked with the President that the President had expressed himself as being not averse to war with Germany, inasmuch (he was reported to have said) as that might end the war by midsummer. Both Senator Stone and Senator Kern denied that any such statement had been made to them by the President, and an authoritative denial of any such statement of feeling was promptly issued at the White House. When the Senate adjourned on the 2d, it was generally understood that the Gore resolution would be put to a vote the next morning. The Gore resolution was laid before the Senate early on the morning of March 3. Senator James of Kentucky immediately moved to lay the resolution and all substitutes or amendments on the table. Mr. Gore rose in his place on a question of personal privilege and demanded the right to perfect his own measure. He withdrew the original resolution, stating it was the sense of Congress that persons owing allegiance to the United States should forbear to exercise the right to travel on armed vessels, and, without changing the preamble, added a new resolution to the effect that the sinking by a submarine without notice or warning of an armed merchant vessel resulting in the death of a citizen of the United States would constitute a just and sufficient ca of war. The laying on the table of the resoluti as originally drawn would have been in effect a v in support of the President. The laying on the ble of the amended resolution by a vote of 68 14 was rather in the nature of a vote n to sustain the Executive. The discussion tha followed the vote in the Senate showed that any senators were uncertain as to what they vere voting for, and that the vote really di not represent a fair test of the sense of the S ate, in the matters at issue. The Foreign airs Committee of the House on March 3 vot to report the McLemore resolution, which in feet practically states that it is none of our bu ness or of our concern how the warring count s of Europe prosecute their difficulties, and hat therefore American citizens would trav on armed belligerent ships at their own risk. The committee voted to report the resolutior vith the recommendation that it be tabled, bu vith the statement that under the practice an precedents of the country the conduct of plomatic relations has been left with the Pres ent, and that the committee acknowledged t t if the President reached a point in any negoti ons with foreign governments in which he be ved he had exhausted his power in the premis he would in the usual way report all facts and ci umstances to Congress. Following the acti of the Foreign Affairs Committee, the Com ttee on Rules planned to meet and agree pon a rule for the immediate consideration the McLemore resolution on the morning of rch 4, but action was postponed until Tu lay, March 7.

© International Film Service Inc.

Ambassador Morgenthau and Mrs. Morgenthau Home on Vacation

AMERICAN CAN A "GOOD" TRUST. dge Rose of the United States District Court in ltimore on February 23 refused to dissolve the erican Can Company under the Sherman Anti- ust Law. The judge found that the company was ac-

Continued on next page

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

ON Sunday February 27, the battle north and east of Verdun continued to rage with even more violence than before. All day long both sides continually hurled fresh troops for the attack or defense. The French began moving, according to information received from Ottawa, troops from other portions of the western line to strengthen the defense, the places of these withdrawn troops being taken by the British whose line was considerably extended as a result. In the morning, the Germans ca ured the village of Champneuville and forced their line forward to the hamlet of Nave to the northeast of Bras and the south of Louvemont, on the north front, and thereafter expelled the French from the Cote de Talou, an important strategic position, but were unable to occupy it themselves owing to the fierce fire the French artillery.

Around Fort Douaumont the battle raged most fiercely. Five times the French advanced to wrest the fort from their enemies, but were each time thrown back. Nevertheless. the French did succeed in recapturing the ground to the east of the fort which with their possession of the ground to the west and of the village of Douaumont to the northwest, made the position of the Germans holding the fort a dangerous one, as they were nearly surrounded.

On the eastern side of Verdun from Etain south, the fighting both of artillery and infantry was severe the whole day and resulted in very slight German gains.

All day Monday intense activity continued on both fronts. Northwest of the fortress the Germans succeeded in pushing forward towards Bras and Vacheranville and in very nearly clearing the big bend of the Meuse to the north of Bras, of their enemies.

To the east the activity was extraordinary all the way from Etain to St. Mihiel. Around Braquis a little southwest of Etain the Germans gained ground, while further south at Fresnes two determined attacks by them were repulsed. Only infantry fighting is specifically mentioned as the artillery fighting on this day was uninterrupted and most intense over the whole of both fronts, northern and eastern. Observers report it far more intense than any artillery fighting heretofore known in any war, and it is computed that more ammunition was used on this day and more projectiles fired than were used in the whole Russo-Turkish war.

The night brought no cessation of the activity, and all through it the opposing artilleries hammered away, though there were no important infantry attacks. The day was remarkable for a transference of the greatest activity from the northern to the eastern front, though the battle raged fiercely on the northern front as well.

On this northern front there were, however, but few changes in position, but on the eastern the Germans had the advantage, capturing the villages of Manheulles and Champlon and finally succeeding in driving the French out of the village of Fresnes and some distance beyond. The French, however, by counterattack succeeded in retaking the territory lost as far as the outlying houses to the west of Fresnes. The Germans re-attacked and the conflict terminated in the French being driven back a couple of hundred yards or so from the last houses.

The next day, Thursday, was somewhat calmer as far as infantry fighting goes, though around Fresnes, infantry combats continued.

On the north front the rival artilleries fought over the Cote de Poivre, to the south of Bras, and made it untenable for the infantry of both. Further east on this northern front the territory around Fort Donaumont was the scene of considerable activity, but resulted in little modification of the respective positions. On the eastern end of this front the German artillery got the upper hand of the French and as a result the hamlets of Dieppe and Damloup and Vaux, close to Fort Vaux, fell into German hands.

On the eastern front Eix also was taken by the Germans, as a result of the same artillery superiority.

Friday, the activity became general again. On the north the Germans made a very strong attack on the village of Douaumont whose possession by the French had all the week hampered and hindered the harmonious development of their movements, and after several hours' bayonet fighting carried the village and drove the French to the south.

On the eastern front heavy artillery fighting continued, particularly on the northern part of this front towards Fort de Vaus and de Tavannes, against which the Germans now seem about to direct a strong effort.

A new attack on Verdun from the west also began on Friday but it consisted on that day only of heavy artillery preparation, a preliminary to infantry attacks later on.

As a summary of the week's fighting it may be said that though the Germans have made considerable progress and advanced their lines towards Verdun on both the northern and eastern fronts, and have taken in this offensive a very considerable number of prisoners, some 18,000 at the present hour, besides a great deal of booty, the critical stage of the battle has not yet been reached and it is impossible to foresee the result.

The French are defending themselves with desperate gallantry and using great military science in this defense, without which that gallantry would be useless, both sides in fact, bearing eloquent testimony to the courage of their opponents. Each side has lost heavily but at the present time how heavily cannot be said, the published estimates being mere guesses, somewhat tinged with the guesser's personal partisanship.

The rest of the western line was very active the whole of the week, but space prevents more than a cursory mention of the principal incidents. On the western end of the line, near Ypres, the British recaptured, late in the week, the trenches taken from them by Germans on February 14th, and also took a couple of hundred yards of additional trenches. In Champagne, in the middle of the week, the Germans in a surprise attack recaptured from the French the Navarin farm, directly north of Sioppes which the French took from them last autumn, and also took a thousanc risoners in so doing.

In Alsace, there was hard fighti all the week near Seppois, in whic the French scored several minor advan ges. The Russian front presented noth of any great interest during the weel

The latest news on Monday, Ma 16, showed the French still holdin the approaches to the village of Douau ont. Intense artillery activity continu on both sides throughout the whole ent of the front, north and east of Ve un, the Germans bombarding with es cial ferocity the French position near F nes and Haudiomont, southeast of Ve un. It was announced from Berlin on M rch 5 on the authority of the Naval G ral Staff, that the German com ree raider, Moewe, had returned to a erman port with 166 prisoners and old bars to the value of $250,000. he Moewe was said to have sunk or se as prizes to neutral ports, 16 steamer ith a total tonnage of more than 5 00. The most famous exploit of the M ewe was the capture of the Appam wh is now at Norfolk.

DURAZZO, the most importan ity and port in Albania, was occ ied by the Austrians on Monday, Feb ry 27, which occupation gives the C ral Powers undisputed control of nor ern and Central Albania.

On the northern frontier of G ece all has been quiet.

The French had the misfortune out the middle of the week to lose eir second largest mercantile steame La Provence. This vessel, it is believed, was torpedoed by a h tile submarine at some unknown int between Malta and the Greek ast while being used as a transport. A the time of her being sunk she had on b rd, crew and troops, about 4,000 sou of whom it appears certain that over ree thousand, have perished.

In their westward advance om Erzerum in the direction of Treb nd the Russians have been unable to ake any advance.

Very little news has reached us om ti lly illegal from the standpoint of the Sherman L, but he would not destroy so finely adjusted an in strial machine. He did, however, retain juris- di ion. In an interview on the following day George W Perkins cited this opinion as an evidence that the Sl rman Anti-Trust Act was obsolete, and in support of he proposal for the Federal incorporation of great co binations for interstate and foreign trade.

Continued on page 335

ATIONAL SAFETY FIRST EXHIBIT. In tl week of February 20 the various departments of e government placed on exhibition devices which tl have adopted for the safety of the public. Among tl most interesting charts was one showing the de h hazards in the cotton industry. According to tl department, every death under 45 years, with the ex ption of an occasional fatality from inborn de- fe s, whether accidental or unaccidental, was funda- m tally avoidable. According to the chart, the sp ning-room takes the greatest toll of death, cl ning three and one-half men and four and one- q rter women per thousand by tuberculosis, and fo men and five women by other causes. According to he investigation of the department, the Irish race a the most sensitive to their surroundings; the P tuguese appear the most immune. American- b n workers stand next to the Irish in the rate of fa lity. Among the safety devices on exhi- bi n were life-boats, breeches buoys, life-belts, st tchers, surgeons' instruments, radio-apparatus a first-aid kits. According to John Mitchell, tl industries of the United States kill about 1(persons a day, and the number of accidents ex eds 2,000,000 a year. Many of these deaths a accidents could be prevented by safety de- vi s and a little caution.

EWFOUNDLAND TO BE AN IDEAL I AND. A canvas of the recent election in N foundland and Labrador showed that the p hibition law had carried by between 500 and 6(votes. The new law makes it a crime to in ort or manufacture liquor except under g ernment supervision, and then only for st tly medicinal purposes; the law becomes ef tive January 1, 1917. The law is said to be tl most drastic prohibition law ever enacted. It ill make Newfoundland an absolutely "dry b y of land surrounded by water."

NTERNATIONAL SWINDLER UNDER A REST. Dr. J. Grant Lyman, a fugitive from ju ice in California, where a fifteen months' sen- te e for using the mails to defraud is awaiting hi , made use of the time pending his appre- h sion by operating in New York as a broker u er the style of John H. Putnam & Co. He is ow under indictment in New York, charged b he post office inspectors with having obtained b ween four hundred and seven hundred thou- sa l dollars by fraudulent use of the mails (the q kest medium swindlers have to reach the p lic). Dr. Lyman was captured at St. Peters- b g, Fla.

ATTLESHIP PENNSYLVANIA SPEEDY. T new battleship Pennsylvania, now under b ders' trials, reached a speed of 21.75 knots an h r on one run, and averaged 21.38 knots on fi high-speed runs. The Pennsylvania is said b American naval officers to be the most powerful fi ter afloat. Her displacement is 31,750 tons and h maximum horse power 32,000. May she never h e to show her heels or fire her guns!

OMMISSION PLAN OF CITY GOVERN- M NT. The Bureau of Census, Department of C nmerce, has made an investigation covering cities u er the council form of government, cities under tl commission form of government, and cities which h changed during the year to the commission form, e t cities in each class being taken. At present 85 c es of over 30,000 population are governed by c mission, Boisé, Idaho, being the smallest with 3 00, and Buffalo with 465,000 being the largest. A ording to the investigation of the department, tl per capita expenditure for all expenses of govern- m t increased during the two-year period in the c ncil cities from $23.70 to $28.33; in the commission c es from $19.92 to $22.20; and in the cities which c nged from council to commission government from $ .44 to $18.76. Levies of property taxes in the c ncil cities increased from $14.73 per capita to $ .36; from $11.11 to $12.31 in the commission c es; and in the other cities from $10.08 to $11.24.

RECORD BANKING BUSINESS. A summary of t returns made by the national banks i response to the call of December 31 w given out by the Treasury Depart- m t February 22. The resources of the n ional banks of the nation were given a 13,467,000,000, a gain for the year of $110,000,000. Increase in deposits for t twelve months was $2,163,000,000, t l deposits being $10,379,000,000. l ns and discounts increased during t year $1,010,000,000.

IUST NOT FILL OUR STOM- HS WITH PLASTER OF PARIS. A bill has been introduced into the Assembly of New York state requiring that every loaf of bread shall bear a label setting forth the exact materials of which the loaf is made. The bill is aimed at the use of calcium sulphate and ammonium chloride, which are used to hasten the rising and to whiten the bread when inferior flour is used. It is charged that the use of calcium sulphate causes the formation of plaster of Paris in the loaf.

SENATE RATIFIES TREATY WITH HAITI. On February 28, the Senate ratified the treaty with Haiti, which establishes a United States financial and police protectorate over the republic. The convention provides that the President of the United States shall nominate and the president of Haiti shall appoint an American as general receiver to take in all export and import duties; and also an American financial adviser. Haiti is to create a constabulary to be officered by Americans until natives can be trained to take command. The expenses of the receivership are not to exceed 5 per cent. of the collections in receipts for customs duties, which receipts are to be applied, first, to the expenses of the receivership; second, to the interest and sinking fund of the public debt; third, to the maintenance of the constabulary; and the remainder to the Haitian government for current expenses. The convention runs for a term of ten years from the exchange of ratifications, and for another term of ten years if the purposes of the treaty have not been fully accomplished.

© Underwood & Underwood

French Auxiliary Cruiser Provence II, Formerly the Liner "La Provence," Which Sank in the Mediterranean February 26, about 3,100 Perishing

TO LIMIT PARCEL POST. On February 28 the House of Representatives at Washington approved an amendment to the Post Office Appropriation Bill forbidding the transportation by parcel post of packages weighing more than fifty pounds. Representative Lewis of Maryland declared that the provision was intended to cripple the parcel post in the interest of the express companies and the railroads. Postmaster General Burleson is reported to be opposed to a limitation on the weight of parcel post packages.

TRAINING BANKERS FOR SOUTH AMERICA. The National City Bank of New York has recently announced a plan by which it will take young college men and fit them for foreign service in the interests of American commerce. One hundred undergraduates will spend their sophomore and junior vacations in various departments of the bank. After their graduation they will spend a year in training, and those who qualify will be sent abroad. The action of the National City Bank is along lines which have been followed by England and Germany in the development of their foreign commerce. The bank now has several branches in South America which are doing a general commercial business as well as handling international transactions. In a recent compilation by the bank, it is shown that the imports into the United States from South American countries in 1915 totaled a little over $322,000,000, as against about $229,500,000 in 1914 and a little over $198,000,000 in 1913. Exports from the United States to South American countries reached a total in 1915 of $145,338,862; in 1914 our exports to the same countries were $91,013,339, and in 1913, $146,514,635.

ALL IS NOT SILK THAT SHIMMERS. The American Silk Association has filed a complaint with the Federal Trade Commission against manufacturers who are selling mercerized cotton goods and goods made of chemically treated wood fibre as real silk. Some manufacturers label their goods properly, but in many cases the labels are so worded as to leave the impression that the goods are really silk unwound from the cocoon of a humble worm. The Eastern markets have been pretty well filled with all-silk neckties and hose, on sale at very low prices, sold largely by pedlars and "fly-by-night" stores, the silk being a wood-pulp product.

AUTOMOBILE REGISTRATION. Reports from all of the states regarding registration of automobiles are now available. The grand total of cars registered in 1915, including motor trucks, was 2,423,788, a gain over 1914 of 686,998, the year 1914 having shown an increase over 1913 of 482,915. The total registration of the whole country in 1911 was only 677,000. Twenty-eight states now register more than 20,000 cars, New York heading the list with 212,844 cars, Illinois being a close second with 182,290. Nevada is at the bottom of the list with 2,177 cars.

JAPAN AT SEA. According to a prominent Japanese steamship authority quoted by the New York Evening Mail, Japan expects to double her merchant fleet in the next few years, and is bending every energy to gain and to hold the trade mastery of the Pacific. On the other hand, having in mind recent statements before the American Congress as to the Japanese menace on our Western coast, a discussion by Admiral Kato of the Japanese navy in the January issue of the Japan Magazine of Tokyo is interesting. According to Admiral Kato, at the time of the Russian War Japan was ready to meet any power that might have appeared in Eastern waters, but owing to "straitened circumstances" the Japanese building program has not been able to keep pace with that of other countries, once considered somewhat in the same class. The Admiral stated that Japan must have at least twelve battleships of the class of the Fuso, a battleship of 31,500 tons, and even then her fleet will be inferior to some others. The admiral stated that, left as it now is, the Japanese navy would be worthless in case of war. The present building program of Japan is stated to contemplate four ships of the Fuso type and four new battle cruisers of the Kongo class (27,000 tons). The admiral stated that at best Japan could only hope to have a naval force equal to any that an enemy might send to Japanese waters.

CONFLICT OF TONGUES. Special reports to the New York Times from Ottawa, Ont., under date of February 26 disclose a threatening situation between the English and French speaking populations of the Dominion. The French of Canada are guaranteed by the constitution and by treaty the right of retaining their language, customs and religion, but so persistent were the French people of Ontario in establishing French teachers in the schools of the province that the province suddenly realized, about 1885, that the proper teaching of English was being neglected. A new regulation was then passed providing that English be taught in the bilingual schools, and that it be the language of communication and instruction after the first two years. Inspectors were permitted to extend the time for the teaching of French. Lately the agitation has broken out afresh, and inspectors have been met at schools by mobs and have been roughly handled in several instances. The courts have upheld the regulation for the teaching of English, and the French Canadians are reported to be almost on the verge of rebellion. There are about 2,000,000 French Canadians throughout Canada, 75 per cent. of them in Quebec. The province of Ontario, with a population of 2,500,000, has about 200,000 French, who are centered chiefly in Ottawa.

SUN YAT SEN TAKES NEW ALLEGIANCE. The marriage of Dr. Sun Yat Sen to Miss Huiliu is announced. Dr. Sun has been living in Japan. The sign over his office door, "Headquarters of Chinese Revolutionary Publicists," is reported to have been removed.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

Prerogative and the Constitution

JAMES MONTGOMERY BECK, who was in the Attorney-General's Department under Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt, and is today a warm defender of the Allies, in a remarkable article in the New York Times of February 27, deals with the question of presidential prerogative. He makes the plain and unequivocal assertion that the present Administration, in some of the important details of its foreign policy, has been in violation of the Constitution, adding by way of comment that the apparent indifference of the people suggests the possibility that it may yet come to pass that the form of our great compact "will survive the substance of the faith," and become a mere "scrap of paper."

To the framers of the Constitution, as Mr. Beck points out, "there was no provision of greater importance than those which required joint action by the Executive and the Senate in determining the foreign policy of the republic." This marked the chief distinction between a monarchy and a republic. The Constitution, he asserts, would never have been ratified by the states "if the final power over foreign relations had not been practically vested in the Senate, with a reservation leaving the determination of the issue of peace or war to both Houses." Now, however, he finds that the President has become not merely the primary and initiative, but the most potential power in foreign affairs, and the prerogative of the Senate has been reduced to the minimum of influence during the present Administration. We quote from Mr. Beck's article this significant paragraph:

> We have seen that while the President may not declare war, he can take steps which make war inevitable. While he cannot appoint ministers and ambassadors without the advice and consent of the Senate, he can wait until the Senate adjourns and then make ad interim appointments. He cannot negotiate a binding treaty with any foreign power, but he can arrange, pending the action of the Senate, for a modus vivendi. While the issues of war and peace are not for his determination, he can take steps either to prevent or to precipitate war, and the action that he may take without the concurrence of either branch of Congress may virtually commit this nation to a given policy without its consent.

Proceeding to details, Mr. Beck enumerates as acts which were an expansion of the executive power, (1) the Administration's determination to destroy the (then) existing de facto government in Mexico by preventing recognition; (2) the appointment of John Lind and his instructions concerning Huerta, which, Mr. Beck declares, was the equivalent of war, waged without congressional sanction; (3) William Bayard Hale's mission to Carranza and Villa; (4) the appointment of Colonel E. M. House "as ambassador plenipotentiary and extraordinary to all Europe"—a position never created by law and wholly independent of congressional sanction. That any or all of these could have been done through the regular channels and with congressional sanction, Mr. Beck seriously questions.

Just how the Senate regards these matters—whether as an invasion of its prerogative or not—cannot be known and has not been discussed. It is, however, a question for thoughtful American citizens to consider just how far the Constitution may be strained, and whether, as Mr. Beck has suggested, it is destined to changes and modifications which, while they may not materially affect the letter, will change the spirit of the "great compact" in the near future.

A Union of Temperance Forces

IT would seem that the numerous organizations now in the field doing temperance work have yet to learn the vital importance of cooperation. There are in all nineteen national temperance organizations in the United States, some of them denominational and others undenominational. There are, besides, some sixty state organizations, a majority of them affiliated with the national bodies, and others, such as civic and law enforcement leagues, being independent. A census of the temperance bodies taken by the Federal Council of Churches shows that a grand total of $1,693,125.49 is contributed annually for the advancement of the temperance cause. The total for the Anti-saloon League is given as $871,771; for the Women's Christian Temperance Union, $415,833.15; for other organizations, $405,521.34. A number of state organizations, however, have failed to report, and there are no means of ascertaining the actual grand total, although the Federal Council believes that $2,000,000 would be a conservative estimate and may be even considerably below the mark. It is unfortunate that there should not be some practical method, among the national organizations at least, for working on cooperative lines. The scattered temperance forces, if united, would constitute an army far more effective than it is at present. In the states where there has been a temporary union of forces, results have been most satisfactory. Where all are working with the same end in view, surely a way ought to be found for such a union on the great national issue of prohibition as would assure the full, undivided strength of all the organizations. It is the only way to victory.

"Is Social Service Christian?"

THIS question, which Mr. Charles Stelzle, the well-known author and speaker on sociology, propounds through the Christian Herald, is an unusual one. Yet it must be admitted that a very considerable number of persons have the inbred conviction that a church which believes in social service must, of necessity, have thrown over all faith in the saving power of the Gospel to redeem men from sin.

It is pathetic to hear churchmen speak disparagingly of the social worker who, according to their view of the matter, has placed his faith in "soup-kitchens and baths" instead of in the simple Gospel. And when that social worker happens to be a minister, he is all the more keenly criticized by those who hold that such innovations are out of place in ministerial work.

When a situation is so perfectly obvious that one never doubts its existence or its reasonableness, it becomes extremely difficult to argue for it. It is like trying to prove that one loves one's own child.

What is "social service"? The definition here must also vary, according to one's training and opportunity for service and the social need to be supplied. In general, however, it may be said that social service means that kind of service which removes social evils of any kind, or which increases social opportunities, either for individuals or for society as a whole. To remove bad tenements that breed disease is social service. So is the cleaning up of alleys, the removal of "red-light" districts, the furnishing of food, coal, or clothing to the needy. To secure better sanitary conditions in factories, to help secure a fair wage, to see to it that little children are not deliberately crushed in body and soul by greedy employers, to protest against the exploitation of women—all these are social service. To furnish playgrounds for children, clubrooms for boys and girls, saloon substitutes for men, jobs for the unemployed, is social service.

It is a pity that those who can see only the theological aspects of Christianity are blind to the great, big, inclusive message of the Master, for such men stand as a barrier between the church and the masses of the people. Why can they not believe that the men whose souls have been stirred by the physical needs of the people may also be trying to do what they can to supply spiritual needs, even though they may not always use the terminology of the theologian?

Social service and the Gospel are both essential and should go hand in hand. That church which first attacks all the problems of the people in the most intelligent fashion will be the church that shall have the strongest grip on their hearts, bringing them captive to Jesus.

Shall We Let These Babies Die?

JUDGE BEN B. LINDSAY recently addressed a meeting held at New York under the auspices of the Citizens Committee for Food Shipment, on the question of sending shipments of milk to save the lives of the starving babies of Germany. Judge Lindsay said:

> One of the most gripping scenes I ever witnessed and one that I shall carry with me to my dying day was the sight of a long line of mothers with tiny babies in their arms, waiting to be supplied with milk. I saw the splendid sanitary equipment and other arrangements for handling the milk bottles and caring for the milk, but I saw no milk. The supply for the day had given out and still there were hundreds of mothers left in line who must pray for milk on the morrow, for milk to keep their babies alive. I saw the tear-stained faces of those mothers as they turned away, not knowing whether the little bit of life in their babies could be sustained until to-morrow.
>
> In many cities of 30,000 or 40,000 in Poland there is not a baby alive under three years, and in many places not a child under ten years, so terrible has been the demand for milk.

There seems to be plenty of other sorts of food in Germany, but the one thing that the babies can not live without, the country is short of. Germany has never been a grazing country. Much of the food for its cows has been imported. Now these imports are cut off, and the babies are dying.

England and France say the United States must not allow the shipment of condensed milk to Germany to save the lives of these babies. What do the United States think about it?

One plan suggested by the committee is to a nge for shipments of milk to the Netherlands to be onsigned to Germany.

The Christian Herald would stop, if we coul the air raids on England, in which babies have een killed. We would stop, if we could, the subr rine warfare in which children have perished. B the fact that these dozens of babies have been s n is no reason why America should acquiesce in th killing of millions of babies in Germany by taking vay the milk they can not live without.

You know the cry of a hungry child. You ear your own baby cry in the night. You know the eet little sounds of content, as it finds the milk ure demands for it. Can you hear these other crie hat do not cease, night or day? Can you see the ttle forms wasting, the cries growing fainter, the ttle eyes, their brightness long since gone, being d ned at length of their tears, growing more and mor im, and closing at last to open no more? Not d ens, nor scores, nor hundreds, but many thousands ing like this!

We send shells to kill men. May we not sen nilk to save babies?

Henry James

THERE are many who will remember th appearance of a book entitled "Daisy M er," something less than forty years ag the author of which was almost instantl acclaimed as the originator of the international vel. This was the first brilliant piece of work from th pen of Henry James which attracted serious atte on, although he had written the "Story of a Year" hile a student at Harvard, ten years earlier, maki his literary début in the Atlantic Monthly. Wha ver may have been the reason, the young writer fe out of key with our literary atmosphere, and in 18 he transferred his ambitions to England and mad hat country his field of action thereafter, except f an occasional flying visit to the United States. H was a strange mixture, in which psychology, myst sm, impressionism and other kindred intellectual p ses strove for dominance. The passion for being u que was marked in all of his books increasingly as the ears progressed. Many of his stories were intricat sychological studies, and to understand the au or's purpose became something of a popular cult He himself declared that he loved "to tell the stor hat cannot be told." Vulgarities of diction he abh red, and he was a rigid purist in expression. In a nse, he created his own literary atmosphere and mo l in it, a brilliant solitary. "Only those who had l own him long and well," writes Lawrence Godkin, " uld properly value the fineness of his heart and char ter, or adequately express it." America has a rig to claim this brilliant son who blossomed on a f ign soil, and it was rather disappointing to his f nds that he should have thought so little of the la l of his birth as to renounce his citizenship on the g und that we had failed to attain to his ideal f a true civilization. Still, Mr. James had many erican admirers, who sincerely regret the passing vay of the brilliant novelist who died in Lond on February 28.

Aeroplane Development

THE war has revolutionized the aeroplane. We no ger hear about the dangers of mere flying: mechanica genuity has apparently overcome them. In almost any l of weather except the severest gales, the fliers now sweep ong at over a hundred miles an hour, under 150 horse ver. Waldemar Kampffert, in a recent article, writes that th are over 5,000 planes of various models in use in the di rent armies, and that the perils from armed aerial enemi and from aeroplane guns on the field below are such that th verage flying life of a plane is not longer than two weeks! V few of the machines used at the beginning of the war are y in service, and to repair the waste it may be necessary t uild 50,000 aeroplanes a year while the war lasts. There hav een no radical departures from the early models of Orvil and Wilbur Wright, although there are many varied arrang nts of the wings. Types may vary, but the original pr iple persists. No longer is the aeroplane the toy of spo and adventure; it has become a surprisingly dependable ma ine.

Our Cover Picture

THE second painting in Mr. H. Willard Ortlip's ries of Lenten covers appears this week. Last week picture was one of joy. Today the sorrows of Passion eek begin. Isaiah sees the agony of the Messiah, and ann ces that he is to be "a Man of sorrows, and acquainted with ef." In the vision picture Jesus kneels in anguish among th live trees of Gethsemane. The border of the painting is dec ted with passion flowers, symbolizing the Saviour's grief.

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

urvives Unique Disaster

FRANCIS DRIVER, Michael McCarthy and Marshall Mabey were at work in the new subway under the East River when they saw the soft clay in front of them moving and then an airhole burst through. The men were caught in the tremendous compressed-air pressure, were forced to the hole and through it and were carried in a waterspout high up out of the river at the Brooklyn Bridge. The terrific air and sand pressure and the long fall from the fatal fountain killed two of the men. Marshall Mabey only survived. He gave the reporters at his home in Long Island City a description of the accident and of his feelings in being shot up through the East River high in the air and seeing the big bridge as he was being whirled by the waterspout, of his hard fall and plunge, of his difficulty in reaching the surface of the river again with his heavy rubber boots and injured limb, of the rope thrown to him and the insensibility following. Human life in his country is entirely too cheap. Much as science has done to better conditions, the average workingmen are not adequately protected against dangers. It is a shame, little short of a crime, to send men into the tasks that are in themselves extra hazardous without giving them every possible safeguard. If there was a weak spot in the river at the place, as is believed, it was the duty of those having the matter in hand to guarantee safety before sending a precious life in the risk. After all the safety appliances and the exercise of all human prudence, this earthly life is a very frail thing. The apostle thus describes it: "Ye know not what shall be on the morrow. For what is your life? It is even a vapor, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." (James 4 : 14.)

Refuses Tainted Money

A WOMAN aged forty the other day refused $40,000 in cash left to her by a rich uncle in Brooklyn, who died in November. The niece, who has given up her life to the blessed charity of educating the working people, has a scant income of $300 a year and is engaged in writing a book. She refuses to accept the money because she says it is "tainted." She says he was a miser of the meanest sort, that he never loaned any one nor gave anything away, and made his money on mortgages, grinding the faces of the poor. The facts scarcely justify the harsh estimate of the uncle, or the bitter abuse of him. He was forty years a clerk in a bank in Brooklyn, which was a guarantee of his integrity, constancy, and competency. Among his charitable bequests are $20,000 to the Long Island Hospital, $13,000 to the Wayside Home, $10,000 to the House of St. Gilles, $12,000 to the Brooklyn Hospital, $10,000 to the Children's Aid Society. It is possible he left the $40,000 to his niece expecting she would use it in the beautiful work to which she had dedicated her life, improving the mental condition of the working classes, or he may have thought she had no one to take care of her and that she might need it for a rainy day. While there can be no apology for money gotten by fraud or oppression, nor for a life devoted to money-getting solely, which God so severely condemns, yet we think the niece made a mistake in refusing the money which she could use to such advantage in her benevolent work, and that the highest charity "suffereth long, and is kind; . . . is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil." (I Cor. 13 : 4, 5.)

Nature's Wealth

MILLIONS of dollars' worth of seal and sealion bone deposits on the shores of the Pribilof Islands, a vast store of government-owned fertilizer available for practical use, was called to the attention of the House Merchant Marine Committee the other day by Secretary Redfield. With a letter to Representative Alexander of Missouri, Chairman of the Committee, the secretary transmitted a report of the Bureau of Fisheries telling of the Pribilof deposits, representing the accumulations of a century or more, and constituting perhaps the largest deposit of bone in the world. The report says one of the deposits is a mile long by half a mile wide, and fully six feet deep. According to the economy of nature, the bones of the dead are ground to make bread for the living. Out of death there comes life, which is the law of the universe. The Hebrew farmer used the fertilizer to improve his crops. Christ thus refers to it in the parable: "And he answering said unto him, Lord, let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it; and if it bear fruit, well: and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down." (Luke 13 : 8, 9.)

One Letter Made Difference

IT is estimated that the government will be deprived of several hundred thousand dollars in duty annually owing to the fact that at the last revision of the tariff the letter "s" was added to the word "tulip" as appearing in the corresponding paragraph of the Act of 1909. Paragraph 210 of the present law specifies among other things "the lily of the valley, tulips, narcissus, begonia, and gloxina bulbs," whereas paragraph 263 of the former law was identical except that the word "tulip" appeared instead of tulips. Both provisions specified the rate of duty as $1 per thousand. A large bulb-importing firm brought a test case before the General Appraisers and the Customs Court. The contention was made that the changing of the phraseology had made a noun of the word "tulips," thereby taking away its character as an adjective, and that as a consequence the word no longer referred to tulip bulbs. This led to the claim that the proper duty on the bulbs themselves was fifty cents per thousand, as on "all other bulbs which are cultivated for their flowers or foliage." The decision of the lower court was overruled by the United States Customs Court of Appeals and the duty was fixed on tulip bulbs at fifty cents instead of one dollar per thousand, and one half of the revenue to the government from that source was cut off. The people of Palestine paid heavy local taxes and a grievous tribute to Rome. Christ pressed a custom-house officer into his service at the beginning of his ministry. "And as Jesus passed forth from thence, he saw a man named Matthew, sitting at the receipt of custom, and he said unto him, Follow me, And he arose and followed him." (Matt. 9 : 9.)

Sheriff and Prisoners Saved

FOR many weeks Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and Mr. Charles M. Alexander labored in Springfield, Ill. The meetings were of great interest. A striking figure among the large number of converts was Sheriff John A. Wheeler. A number of his deputies and several of the officers of the jail were also converted. The sheriff had permitted the inmates of the jail to attend the services, special deputies being sworn in to accompany them. Numbers of these prisoners were converted, seven of them being baptized in one of the churches before entering upon their penitentiary sentences. The sheriff himself came boldly to the front one evening and announced his determination to turn to Christ after twenty-five years of unbelief. His first official act after his conversion was to issue a statement that gambling, big and small, must cease, and that no favoritism would be shown. His second official statement was to the effect that all men found in immoral houses would be prosecuted under the criminal laws, and their names published. His conversion created a profound sensation. The conversion of a sheriff which results in a practical reform in enforcing all laws without halt or fear or favor is a significant fact. Sheriffs of counties as a general rule are men of intelligence and courage, many of whom enforce the law as a sworn duty. There are others who are moral cowards, who shiver in the presence of rich malefactors, especially if they represent the liquor interests. The revival incident at Springfield calls to mind the conviction and conversion of the jailer at Philippi, thus described: "Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house." (Acts 16: 30, 31.)

Prosper in Prohibition Kansas

DESPITE the expressions of deep distress upon the part of the liquor dealers at the failure of prohibition in Kansas to prohibit, it does prohibit marvelously well, according to the most reliable testimony. The attention of the whole nation was attracted by the report for 1915 of a mortality of only 9.8 to the 1,000 of population, being the lowest of any state in the union. Samuel L. Rogers, director of the United States Bureau of the Census, wrote to W. J. Deacon, Registrar of Kansas Vital Statistics, asking why the death rate was so low. Mr. Deacon in his reply gave prohibition credit for a full share of the public health in these words: "Kansas is a prohibition state, and in Kansas prohibition really prohibits." He said also that there was general education, the people had money enough to make them comfortable, and were wise enough to avoid the things that impair health and shorten life. Kansas began the new year without a dollar of indebtedness, having burned up the last mortgage for $159,000 and claiming the enviable notoriety of being about the only state in the union free of debt. Prohibition Kansas holds in one hand the cleanest bill of health, in the other the completest financial exhibit, while in the mind it has truth and in its heart love. The violent denunciations of the failure of prohibition in Kansas by those whose pockets have been affected by it, and by those who have been deceived by their false statements concerning it, do not change the fact that prohibition in that state does prohibit, bringing with it the reward of health, intelligence, thrift and virtue. Kansas with eighteen sister states is by its law saying: "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." (Prov. 23 : 31, 32.)

Asks Mayor to Find "Papa"

A LITTLE girl of Freeport, Pa., wrote the following letter to the mayor of New York: "Will you try and find my papa? He left me over a year ago and I miss him so much, for I only had papa to love, as mamma is in heaven. Papa called me 'Boots' and I know he loved me so much, but why does he not come to me? I have been sick so long, and all I want is papa. Please find him if he is in your city and send him home to me." Mayor Mitchel sent the letter to the Police Commissioner that a thorough search might be made for Marion's father. It is to be hoped that whatever motive or impulse led him to leave the child, he will return to his little sick pet and hush the cry of her orphaned heart. To good people whose boys and girls are worth more than all the money in the savings banks it seems incredible that parents should desert their children, but some of them do, and hundreds of thousands of precious ones are thus turned over to indescribable suffering of body and mind. The call of little Marion for papa is the echo of the universal heart crying out to "our Father, which art in heaven." (Matt. 6 : 9.)

Money in Family Bible

SOME time ago an old man in New Jersey found $5,000 scattered in bills of large denominations through the family Bible. In 1874 this man's aunt died, and a paragraph of her will read as follows: "To my beloved nephew I will and bequeath my family Bible and all it contains, with the residue of my estate after my funeral expenses and just lawful debts are paid." The estate amounted to only a few hundred dollars, which was soon spent, and her nephew, neglecting to read the Bible, did not find the treasure put there for him. He lived in poverty all that time, and it was while packing up his things to remove to his sons's home for the remainder of his days that he discovered the money. How many people miss the precious treasures that are placed in the Bible for them by a failure to read its pages! How many rejoice in having found Christ in the blessed Book worth more than all the money of all the banks, the pearl of great price worth more than all the costly jewels of the earth! Christ thus bids us all to secure this wealth: "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." (John 5 : 39.)

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

CHAPTER IX Continued

MY guide spoke gently to me, "To you it is given to behold the sequel of the sad scene you have witnessed." Other pages of the great book turned, and I saw another group of buildings, more solid and spacious than those which had been destroyed. There were a larger chapel, larger schools, and a hospital far better equipped than the old one. Throngs of people were entering the chapel, and the schools were crowded. A delegation of officers of the city, the foreign city, once so hostile to missionary work, came to present gifts to the missionaries. A group of native converts scattered flowers over the graves of the martyrs. A child was kneeling at the grave of the girl whose death I had seen, making that little mound the altar of her prayers. A multitude of humble Christian homes surrounded the main compound. Then suddenly I heard the words of an old hymn, sung by voices that were once of earth. The leading voice was familiar. Was it not the deep, rich, sweet mezzo-soprano of dear B—, who left us but a little while ago?

"The sun may have scorched, and the winter wind blasted
The most of the seed that in springtime I've sown,
But He who has watched while my weary toil lasted
Will give me a harvest for what I have sown."

I could not help joining in the refrain:

"Over and over, yes, deeper and deeper,
My heart is pierced through with earth's sorrowing cry,
But the tears of the sower and the songs of the reaper
Will mingle together in joy by and by."

THE song ceased, the vision vanished, and I found myself again at the entrance of the Sanctuary of Explanation, within the gateway of myriad arches. There I beheld a group of towering angels, their faces turned from me, and their wings outstretched as if to take flight. My guide said, "They are God's couriers, soon to resume their ministry on your planet. Wherever his people are in danger or in need, there he sends his swiftest, strongest messengers."

CHAPTER X

FROM the Sanctuary of Explanation we journeyed to one of the many cities within the City. What I had seen elsewhere awakened in my heart a great yearning to see some of the mansions of the blest, some of the abiding-places of the Father's children. Within the Gate of Great Desire I had seen avenues of stately trees and a fourfold river. There was the House of Fulfilment which I was permitted to enter, with its chambers of Withheld Completions and Good Intentions. Not long did I tarry there. My journey then had only fairly begun. Evidently my guide knew the hunger of my heart to observe if not to taste the bliss of those who have reached their everlasting homes.

THE law of social gravitation is as inevitable as that of physical attraction. Judas "went to his own place." Here, moral compatibility and spiritual kinship determine one's ultimate abode. As on earth there are industrial cities and educational cities and cities in which music is cultivated more than any other art, so in heaven there are communities which organize themselves upon the principle of homogeneity. Of course there is a sense in which all the inhabitants of the City of God are equally responsive to the love which redeemed them out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation. There is a sense in which all alike belong to the royal priesthood, even as they did while yet they sojourned in the flesh. But diversities of gifts persist eternally, and as atom joins atom by chemical affinity, so kindred soul greets kindred soul in the immortal life, however separate they were on earth, in point of time or race.

JEWISH pilgrims on their way to Jerusalem at the time of a great feast used to break into song as they came to the summit of the hill from which they saw the roof-tops of the city of David, and the Temple gleaming like a colossal jewel under the cloudless sky. So I saw the mansions to which my guide was leading me, from a mountain over which we passed in our pilgrimage to that point. Was it not Mohammed who would not enter Damascus because, he said, "It is given to man to behold but one Paradise, and I prefer to wait for mine"? Not Jerusalem in the days of its superlative splendor, nor Damascus and the flashing waters of Abana and Pharpar, could have feasted the eye of the way-worn traveler as did the view before me. It was entrancing from a distance, and, like a rare piece of art, it was beautiful in detail. I shall ever think of it as the "Morning Land," for all around the rim of the blue sky hovered the perpetual "rose of dawn."

WE passed along avenues of oaks and beeches like those under whose shadow in the other world I have passed many a happy hour in childhood. Far back from the smooth white highway were buildings as various in size as those of any residence street in an American or European capital. Paths led through bowers and gardens to houses which, whether large or small, were so constructed and ornamented as to create the immediate sense of perfect congruity with environment. If it be the mark of an illogical mind to fix the attention upon some inconsequent detail, then, I suppose, I am illogical. At any rate, the thing that struck me as most attractive about all the houses that I saw was something which suggested to my mind the hospitality of every home—the liberal width of all the entrances. Porches were spacious, too, and from many an open window I heard singing. It was not the singing of choirs, not anthem singing, not sacred music as we are wont to call it, but social music, full of sentiment, of love and memory and friendship. The voices of children were not absent from the multitudinous sounds that came to me as we proceeded along the street. Groups of radiant spirits passed us from time to time engaged in conversation. Chariots moved along the avenue, propelled by mystic power, as those had been which I had seen on the radial highways leading to the Arch of Victory. So, this was not a place of inactivity, even though it was a place of peace. I heard no discordant noises. I observed no unseemly haste, so characteristic of the crowded streets of earth. These people were conscious of no limitation of time.

"WHO are the inhabitants of this delightful place?" I asked. My guide answered, "These are they who loved moral perfection more than all things else. They obeyed the commandment given by the Spirit through that great apostle who, next to the Lord Christ, has been the spiritual teacher of your race: 'Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are venerable, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovable, whatsoever things are gracious, think on these things'."

I COVETED an opportunity to converse with some one of the residents of this realm, and instantly there approached, as if in answer to the voiceless bidding of my companion, a spirit on whose face were mingled benevolence and intellectuality. There was no formal word of greeting on his part. Apparently he knew my errand here, and knew that I was destined to return to the mortal life. As he spoke, something in the form of his expression, in the felicitous yet intense phrasing of his words, identified him to my knowledge. He was an English essayist and philosopher, a man of lucid and logical intellect and exalted spirituality. I had read several of his books and had been helped by them. He had been dead a score of years. (Dead? Is it right to speak of one as dead whom one has seen face to face, young, vital, immortal?)

THEN he who had taught me through the printed page in other years became my interpreter. He said: "The relation between the mortal and the immortal life is not only much more intimate than we knew on earth, but it includes the possibility of much more practical cooperation of immortals with mortals. Thought is a force as real as any cosmic energy, and it has power in all worlds. It is by thought, while earth-bound, that we lay up treasures of the mind in this world where intellect, untrammeled by the flesh, acquires power undreamed of in the land of time and sense. Pure thoughts, high, noble thoughts, born of the human mind, rise from earth and find response among the 'morning stars and sons of God.' The truths, discovered or revealed, to which mortals give assent, the truths they welcome and cherish, have their heavenly counterparts. The mansions you have seen, with domes of gold and white beneath this sky of liquid blue, have been created by the earthly thoughts of their occupants. Only ample souls find spacious mansions here." Answering some unuttered feeling of pity in my heart for those who in our world are condemned to narrow culture or to none, the great teacher resumed, "Think not that only the learned in the world of men have hospitable dwelling-places here; culture consists of graces of the spirit rather than gifts of the mind. God has a multitude of 'peasant saints.' My worthiest master here, except of course the Master of all truth, is one who, long ago, was an unlettered slave; another was a humble cobbler." As he spoke I remembered the lame slave in old Rome whose philosophy is still the delight of scholars, and I recalled the royal thoughts of a peasant who grew immortal "as he stood behind his plow." So, it would seem, the istocracy of heaven is founded upon intrinsic greatness of mind and spirit.

As we moved on, I said to my long-time guide, my celestial companion, "I observe that heaven is not unlike earth except that everything beautiful there is perfect here." He replied, "All that is worthy of admiration in lesser worlds is but a dim reflection of the loveliness of the City of God. Even the kingdom which Christ established among men is to this kingdom as a branch to a vine. The priestly jewels of the Old Testament church were meant to be symbolic of the precious stones so abundant in the church of the first-born. The fairest of all worlds where mortals dwell mirrors back only a wavering, distorted image of the place where the spirits of the just are made perfect."

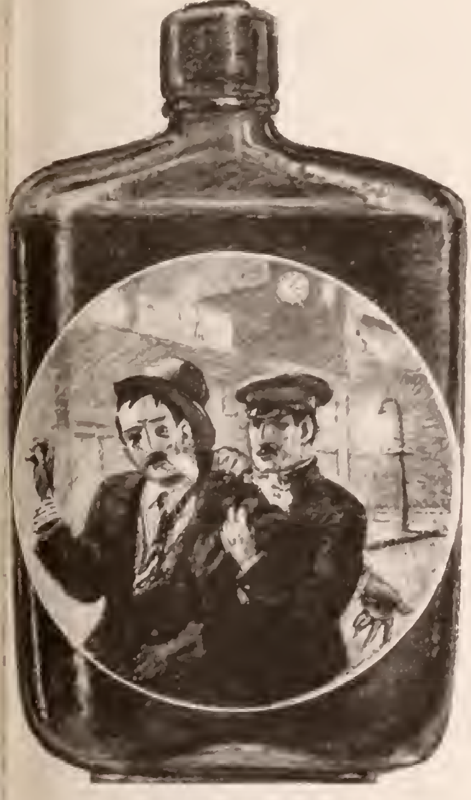
"I HAVE been much amazed," I said, "to hear that the thoughts of mortals have anything to do in the material furnishing of the immortal dwelling-places. Tell me if our thoughts on earth still bind us to our friends in heaven." "They do," he affirmed with great directness and with emphatic force. "Gratitude and love follow many a spirit within the Gates of Pearl; affectionate solicitude is not without its earth-transcending power, and yet, God does not permit his heaven-born children, who were cheated out of their earthly inheritance of tender care, to suffer eternal loss. Heirs of salvation enter into as well as upon infinite ministries here. Think you that John the gentle and Paul the bold have found in heaven no sphere for their apostolic zeal, their shepherdly love? Myriads are admitted here from every nation of your earth and from other earths who saw the truth but dimly. That which was denied them while pilgrims of the night is furnished in abounding measure here."

I WAS anxious to know, if I might, whether the redeemed who have entered into the inheritance of the saints in light still think of earth and of those they leave behind them, wrestling with the problems of time and bearing the burdens of toil and grief. I had learned that the loving thoughts of earth follow the departed into the sky and I reasoned with myself, "Surely if the thoughts of mortals follow their friends into the immortal world, the hearts of the redeemed must still cherish the memory of earthly friendships and desire the spiritual good of those they once loved." My mental inquiry was immediately satisfied. My guide said: "The ladder Jacob saw as he lay sleeping on his stony bed connected earth and heaven. Is it not written that he beheld angels ascending and descending? The descending angels of his dream signified the unseen benedictions heaven showers on earth. How few there are who stop to ask, when an inspiring thought visits the mind, when a noble impulse seizes the heart, when a spiritual yearning fills the soul, 'Whence came this thought, this impulse, this yearning?' The Holy Spirit touches human life directly, but God also uses ministering angels as his agents in dealing with human life. Your poet who spoke of heaven lying all about, encompassing the weakness of infancy, was short-sighted; supernatural forces literally besiege human life on every side. Israel's prophet saw the angels of the Lord encamped upon the mountain. His servant also saw the army when his eyes were open, but the army was there before the young man saw it. The human body, with its wall of flesh, is like a prison in which the spirit dwells. Only the spiritual, those who subdue the walls of flesh, see through the walls of flesh how real and near are the supersensuous allies of the soul."

As if to illustrate the meaning of these words, it was given to me to see a dream within my dream, a vision within my vision. At my guide's bidding, I closed my eyes. Then I felt his fingers laid upon them, as Jesus must have touched the sightless eyes of the blind He healed. Palaces and mansions faded from my view, and in their stead I saw, for a moment, an earthly city. Along a street at night there walked a youth. His steps were hesitant, as if he were tempted to turn and retrace his course. Within his heart a battle raged. His mind was evidently burdened and uneasy. I looked closer, and observed that he wore a mourning-band upon one sleeve. Dim dark shapes dogged his footsteps. He was evidently tempted to do some unaccustomed thing, some unworthy thing. As I watched him, I thought of the battle the apostle writes about in the seventh chapter of Romans. He was on the point of yielding, when I saw, in the midst of the cloud that kept pace with him, a luminous shape. It glided in between him and the sinister shadows. It assumed the form of an angel with a woman's face. But it was a human face, after all, and a face that much resembled that of the youth. Was it not his mother? If it was not she, it was "her angel," and it was a guardian angel. He started as with surprise. His face was like one to whom unlooked-for rescue comes in the moment of deadly peril. He had heard a voice out of the dear past. He paused for a moment and then resumed his walk. Again he paused, and a look of sudden stern resolve shone in his eyes, as he turned and walked in the direction from which he had come.

To be continued

"THE BOTTLE"--IV.



PROPELLED

Dear John:

It's true. I have been dodging you since I lost my fourth job. I'm a bit ashamed.

You see, my Boss let the first two breaks go; though it cost us two large orders. Those customers stood up against the drinks better than I could. Before I could get them to sign an order, I was drunk. You understand; all in the line of business.

Then you see I was injured in that railroad accident. I was laid up so long, they got a new salesman in my place.

I've just landed a new job. Small salary, but I'll hustle and be on top again soon.

From now on I'm going to quit when I reach my limit, even if I don't get the order. I know my limit, and I'm still master of myself.

Good-by, good old John. Yours,

BILL.

Dear Bill:

Old fellow, I'm glad you are alive.

That accident must have made you see things in the right light.

An acquaintance of mine was on the same train. I hate to believe what he tells me. He says that the only ones killed or injured in his car were some salesmen who had been drinking rather heavily the night before. They were too stupefied to rouse up when the warning came. Everybody else had time to run back into the next car. But we're thankful you were not killed. Did you know that the inquest proved the engineer had been drinking? He ran past three signals. That railroad's new order reads," Trainmen must not drink or enter saloons even when off duty."

Old man, can't you see how the world's changing? Every avenue of opportunity is being shut in the face of the man who drinks.

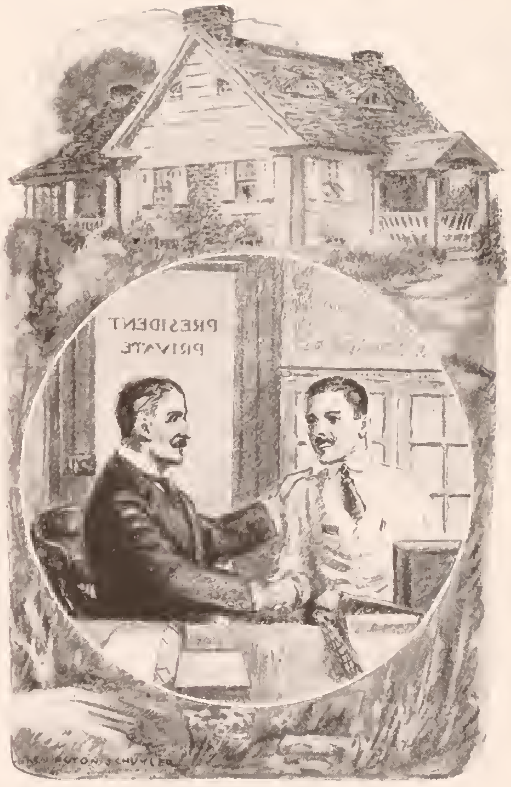
If you won't think enough of yourself to let your old friends know when you need help, you must do it for the children's sake. Bill, Jr., is not any too strong.

I've been made Sales Manager, and am in a position to help you, if you'll just wake up.

You've got it in you. Drop in some day to see me.

Your real friend,

JOHN.



PROMOTED

No. I

No. II

No. III

No. I

No. II

No. III

Portals of the Past

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

SOME years ago a blasting fire swept over a great city. It ate its demon way, without fear or pity or respect, through narrow by-paths and up broad avenues; its ravages spread through park and boulevard, through business section and fashionable district, through very foreign quarters and very American streets. It spared neither mansion nor hovel, tenement or office building, bank or library or church.

Like a flock of frightened birds hurrying south before the fury of the winter, the people of the city fled before the wrath of the fire, taking nothing but their nearest and dearest possessions with them. It was only after long hours, many long hours, that the most venturesome dared to creep back to their shattered homes.

Through one section of the city the fire had swept everything away. Folk, gazing at the crumpled framework of their homes, knew that they had not builded of the best material, the safest brick, the most indestructible plaster. But one man, coming sadly back, found the beautiful marble doorway of his house standing triumphantly among the ruins.

The city was San Francisco. When it was rebuilt, the doorway was taken up from its bed of ashes and carried reverently to Golden Gate Park. It stands on the wooded shore of a tiny lake; and its columns, reflected in the clear water, make it look like an ancient Greek temple. Some artist has named it "Portals of the Past."

WHILE I was in school I had two friends. They went to classes together, did their homework together, exchanged confidences together. They were rather young, too young to worry about anything but the unfinished arithmetic lesson and the long composition at the end of each week.

They grew older, still together. And as they grew older, different interests came into their lives. They began to glance shyly at the boys in chapel; they began to go to basket-ball games; they began to polish their finger-nails and do their hair up. And then the change came.

Gradually, oh, very gradually, they drifted apart. Soon they no longer walked home from school together or studied together. Young boys, embarrassed, conscious of their hands and feet but proud of their first long trousers, escorted them to their little parties.

One of the girls went in for the rather infantile society very strenuously. She gave up working hard over her lessons; she failed regularly in her recitations; she had a "date" every evening, and the homework went begging. The other girl, when her friend began to desert her, settled down again to her lessons. She studied more seriously, recited more correctly, and improved her faults in a more painstaking manner.

"Why," I asked her one day, "don't you go out as much as Anne does? I know you are invited just as often as she. Why don't you?"

The girl looked at me soberly as she spoke, and her words held a wisdom beyond her years. "You see," she told me, "I'll have all my life to go out and meet people, to dance and laugh and sing. I'll be invited to other parties and to meet other men and to see other plays. But I'll never be going to school again, and the school work I'm doing now will be the foundation for the rest of my life to be built on."

"It stands on the shore of a tiny lake"

I moved far away, soon after that little conversation, and to a certain extent lost track of my two friends. Of course there were occasional letters; but they were impersonal. I did not see the girls together until a year ago. It was at a reception that I met them. The little girl who had been f d of parties was pouring tea at one table, my st ious friend was serving chocolate at another.

The difference in the two young women wa startling. As they talked easily to the small grou that clustered around their respective places, i was especially noticeable. For the butterfly girl lked gossip, little—rather mean—gossip; and the ther girl had a mind well stocked with current ever and new ideas on vital subjects. As I drank my ocolate and ate my tiny cakes I noticed th the group surrounding the butterfly girl was gra ally drifting over to the table where the oth girl was serving. Absolutely without affectati she chatted, and at the magnetism of her ee I too drifted over in her direction. I stay for a long time near her table, and when vent away my mind was full of many thoughts

I ONCE lived in a town where house were built almost by the wholesale. When a one ordered a house it seemed to spring u over night. When the houses were finished they were pretty and artistic and apparentl well built. The decorations were tasteful, a the woodwork was fine, and the lighting f ures were all that they should be. Folk ally move in the springtime.

During the summer the houses were cha ning as they peeped from the midst of sunn ittle flower gardens. During the autumn the were cozy and cheery and homelike, with merr ittle log fires and half-drawn curtains. But ally the winter came. The winter always nes! And there was snow and hail and rain here was wind and sleet and ice; there was a t e of thawing and another time of freezing. The houses were not very comfortable, or hor like, or cozy, during the winter. They wer only bleakly artistic. The wind sifted through acks and the water from melted snow made reat blotches on the pretty decorations. B s of plaster and fragments of stucco slipped and left scars; flimsy partitions groaned and embled. Occasionally a ceiling fell. You s the framework had been fragile, and the pla ring had been hurried, and the workmen had been ca less.

CHARACTER building is not unlike house uilding. It's rather a mistake to go at it listless and hurriedly and—lightly. For character buil g is much more important than house buildin A house is only something with four walls and roof for your body to live in. A character is a wor rful and luminous home for your soul and your mir and your heart to live in.

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

CHAPTER XVII—Continued

MARGARET looked happily from one of her invited guests to the other, and Gardley forgot to answer for himself in watching the brightness of her face, and wondering why it was so different from the faces of all other girls he knew anywhere.

But Mom Wallis was overwhelmed. A wave of red rolled dully up from her withered neck in its gala collar, over her leathery face to the roots of her thin gray hair.

"Me! Stay to dinner! Oh, I couldn't do that nohow! Not in these here clothes. Course I got that pretty collar you give me, but I couldn't never go out to dinner in this old dress and these shoes. I know what folks ought to look like and I ain't goin' to shame you."

"Shame me? Nonsense! Your dress is all right, and who is going to see your shoes? Besides, I've just set my heart on it. I want to take you up to my room and show you the pictures of my father and mother and home and the church where I was christened, and everything!"

Mom Wallis looked at her with wistful eyes, but still shook her head.

"Oh, I'd like to mighty well. It's good of you to ast me. But I couldn't. I just couldn't. 'Sides, I gotta go home an' git the men's grub ready."

"Oh, can't she stay this time, Mr. Gardley?" appealed Margaret. "The men won't mind for once, will they?"

Gardley looked into her true eyes and saw she really meant the invitation. He turned to the withered old woman by his side.

"Mom, we're going to stay," he declared joyously. "She wants us, and we have to do whatever she says. The men will rub along. They all know how to cook. Mom, we're going to stay."

"That's beautiful!" declared Margaret. "It's so nice to have some company of my own." Then her face suddenly sobered. "Mr. Wallis won't mind, will he?" and she looked with troubled eyes from one of her guests to the other. She did not want to prepare trouble for the poor woman when she went back.

Mom Wallis turned startled eyes toward her. There was contempt in her face, and outraged womanhood.

"Pop's gone off," she said significantly. "He went yist'day. But he ain't got no call t'mind. I ben waitin' on Pop nigh onto twenty year an' I guess I'm goin' to a dinner party now't I'm invited. Pop'd better not mind, I guess!"

And Margaret suddenly saw how much, how very much, her invitation had been to the starved old soul.

MARGARET took her guests into the stiff little parlor and slipped out to interview her landlady. She found Mrs. Tanner, as she had expected, a large-minded woman, who was quite pleased to have more guests to sit down to her generous dinner, particularly as her delightful boarder had hinted of ample recompense; and she fluttered about, sending Tanner after another jar of pickles and some more apple butter, and added another pie to the menu.

Well pleased, Margaret left Mrs. Tanner and slipped back to her guests. She found Gardley making arrangements with Bud to run back to the church and tell the men to leave the buckboard for them and that they would not be home to dinner. While this was going on she took Mom Wallis up to her room to remove her bonnet and smooth her hair.

It is doubtful whether Mom Wallis ever did see such a room in her life; for when Margaret swung open the door the poor little woman stopped short on the threshold abashed and caught her breath, looking around with wondering eyes and putting out a trembling hand to steady herself against the door frame. She wasn't quite sure whether things in that room were real, or whether she might not by chance have caught a glimpse into heaven, so beautiful did it seem to her. It was not till her eyes in their roving suddenly rested on the great mountain framed in the open window that she felt anchored and sure that this was a tangible place. Then she ventured to step her heavy shoe inside the door. Even then she drew her ugly calico back apologetically as if it were a desecration to the lovely room.

But Margaret seized her and drew her in, placing her gently in the rose-ruffled rocking chair as if it were a throne and she a queen, and the poor little woman sat entranced wit ears springing to her eyes and tricklin own her cheeks.

'Perhaps it was an impossibili for Margaret to conceive what the sion of that room meant to Mom allis. The realization of all the dream of a starved soul concentrated into a mall space; the actual tangible proo that there might be a heaven some da

Margaret brought the picture her father and mother, of her home a the dear old church, then took her out the room and showed her the v ious pictures and reminders of her lege days, and, when she saw that th poor creature was overwhelmed and s echless, she turned her about and s wed her the great mountain again, l e an anchorage for her soul.

Mom Wallis looked at ever hing speechlessly, gasping as her att tion was turned from one object to a her. as if she were unable to rise beyo her excitement; but when she saw the ountain again her tongue was loose and she turned and looked back at t girl wonderingly:

"Now, ain't it strange? Eve that old mounting looks dif'rent—it d look dif'rent—from a room like this. V y, i looks like it got its hair combed, its best collar on!" And Mom allis looked down with pride and patt the simple net ruffle about her wi ered throat. "Why, it looks like a eter painted and hung up on this ver vall, that's what that mounting look like' It kinda ain't no mounting any ore; it's jest a picter in your room!"

Margaret smiled.

"It is a picture, isn't it? Just look at that silver light over the purple place. Isn't it wonderful? I like to think it's mine—my mountain. And yet the beautiful thing about it is that it's just as much yours too. It will make a picture of itself framed in your bunk-house window if you let it. Try it. You just need to let it."

Mom Wallis looked at her wonderingly.

"Do you mean," she said studying the girl's lovely face, "that ef I should wash them there bunk-house winders, an' string up some posy caliker, an' stuff a chair and have a pincushion, I could make that there mounting come in an' set for me like a picter the way it does here fer you?"

"Yes, that's what I mean," said Margaret softly, marveling how the uncouth woman had caught the thought. "That's exactly what I mean. God's gifts will be as much to us as we will let them, always. Try it and see."

Mom Wallis stood for some minutes looking out reflectively at the mountain.

"Wal, mebbe I'll try it!" she said and turned back to survey the room again. And now the mirror caught her eye, and she saw herself, a strange self in a soft white collar, and went up to get a near view, laying a toil-worn finger on the lace and looking half embarrassed at sight of her own face.

"It's a real purty collar," she said softly with a choke in her voice. "It's too purty fer me. I told him so, but he said as how you wanted I should dress up every night fer supper in it. It's most as strange as havin' a mountain come an' live with you, to wear a collar like that—me!"

Margaret's eyes were suddenly bright with tears.

Then as if her thoughts anticipated the question in Margaret's mind, Mom Wallis went on:

"He brung me your little book," she said. "I ain't goin' to say thank yeh, that's a big 'nuf word. An' he read me them poetry words it says. I got it wrapped in a hankercher on the top o' the beam over my bed. I'm goin' to have it buried with me when I die. Oh, I read it. I couldn't make much out of it, but I read the words through. An' then he read 'em—the Kid did. He reads just beautiful. He's got education, he has. He read it, and he talked to me about it. Was this what you mean? Was't that we ain't really growin' old at all, we're jest goin' on, gettin' there, if we go right? Did you mean you think Him as planned it all wanted some old woman right thar in the bunk house, that's me? Did you mean there was goin' to be a chanct fer me to be young and beautiful somewheres 'fore I git through?"

THE old woman had turned around from looking into the mirror and was facing her hostess. Her eyes were very bright; her cheeks had taken on an excited flush, and her knotted hands were clutching the bureau. She looked into Margaret's eyes earnestly as though her very life depended upon the answer; and Margaret with a great leap of her heart smiled and answered:

"Yes, Mrs. Wallis, yes, that is just what I meant. Listen. These are God's own words about it: 'For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us.'"

A kind of glory shone in the withered old face now.

"Did you say them was God's own?" she asked in an awed voice.

"Yes," said Margaret, "they are in the Bible."

"But you couldn't be sure it meant me," she asked eagerly. "They wouldn't go to put me in the Bible, o' course."

"Oh, yes, you could be quite sure, Mrs. Wallis," said Margaret gently, "because if God was making you and had a plan for you, as the poem says, he would be sure to put down something in his book about it, don't you think? He would want you to know."

"It does sound reasonable like, now, don't it?" said the woman wistfully. "Say them glory words again, won't you?"

Margaret repeated the text slowly and distinctly.

"Glory!" repeated Mom Wallis wonderingly. "Glory! Me!" and turned incredulously toward the glass. She looked a long time wistfully at herself as if she could not believe it, and pulled reproachfully at the tight hair drawn away from her weatherbeaten face.

"I useta have purty hair onct," she said sadly.

"Why, you have pretty hair now," said Margaret eagerly. "It just wants a chance to show its beauty. Here, let me fix it for dinner, will you?"

She whisked the bewildered old woman into a chair and began unwinding the hard tight knot of hair at the back of her head, and shaking it out. The hair was thin and gray now, but it showed signs of having been fine and thick once.

"It's easy to keep your hair looking pretty," said the girl as she worked. "I'm going to give you a little box of my nice sweet-smelling soap-powder that I use to shampoo my hair. You take it home and wash your hair with it every two or three weeks, and you'll see it will make a difference in a little while. You just haven't taken time to take care of it, that's all. Do you mind if I wave the front here a little? I'd like to fix your hair the way my mother wears hers."

Now no two beings could have been farther apart than this little weatherbeaten old woman and Margaret's gentle dove-like mother with her abundant soft gray hair, her cameo features, and her pretty gray dresses; but Margaret had a vision of what glory might bring to Mom Wallis, and she wanted to help it come. She believed that heavenly glory can be hastened a good deal on earth if one only tries, and so she set to work. Glancing out the window she saw with relief that Gardley was talking interestedly with Mr. Tanner.

Mom Wallis hadn't an idea what "waving" her hair meant, but she readily consented to anything this wonderful girl proposed, and she sat entranced, looking at her mountain and thrilling with every touch of Margaret's satin fingers against her leathery old temples.

"Now look!" said Margaret, and turned her about to the mirror. "If there's anything at all you don't like about it I can change it, you know. You don't have to wear it so if you don't like it."

THE old woman looked, and then looked back at Margaret with frightened eyes, and back to the vision in the mirror again.

"My soul!" she exclaimed in an awed voice. "My soul! It's come a'ready! Glory! I didn't think I could look like that! I wonder what Tanner'd say! My land! Would you mind ef I kep' it like that a while an' wore it back to camp this way? Wallis might of come home, an' I'd like to see ef he'd take notice to it. I used to be purty onct, but I never expected no sech thing like this again on earth. Glory! Mebbe I could get some glory, too."

"'The glory that shall be revealed' is a great deal more wonderful than this," said Margaret gently. "This was here all the time, only you didn't let it come out. Wear it home that way, of course, and wear it so all the time. It's very little trouble, and you'll find your family will like it. Men always like to see a woman looking her best, even when she's working. It helps to make them good. Before you go home I'll show you how to fix it. It's quite simple. Come, now, shall we go down stairs? We don't want to leave Mr. Gardley alone too long, and besides I smell the dinner. I think they'll be waiting for us pretty soon. I'm going to take a few of these pictures down to show Mr. Gardley."

She hastily gathered a few photographs together and led the bewildered little woman down stairs again, and out in the yard where Gardley was walking up and down now looking off at the mountain. It came to Margaret suddenly that the minister would be returning to the house soon, and she wished he wouldn't come. He would be a false note in the pleasant harmony of the little company. Perhaps he had already come. She looked furtively around as she came out the door, but he was not in sight, and then she forgot him utterly in the look of bewildered astonishment with which Gardley was regarding Mom Wallis.

He had stopped short in his walk across the little yard, and was staring at Mom Wallis, recognition gradually growing in his gaze. Then when he was fully convinced he turned his eyes to Margaret as if to ask, "How did you do it? Wonderful woman!" and a look of deep reverence for her came over his face.

Then suddenly he noticed the shy embarrassment on the old woman's face and swiftly came toward her, his hands outstretched, and taking her bony hands in his bowed low over them as a courtier might do.

"Mom Wallis, you are beautiful; did you know it?" he said gently, and led her to a little stumpy rocking chair with a gay red and blue rag cushion that Mrs. Tanner always kept near the front door in pleasant weather.

Then he stood off and surveyed her, while the red stole into her cheeks becomingly.

"What has Miss Earle been doing to glorify you?" he asked again, looking at her earnestly.

The old woman looked at him in awed silence. There was that word again—Glory! He had said the girl had glorified her. There was then some glory in her, and it had been brought out by so simple a thing as the arrangement of her hair. It frightened her, and the first tears of years came and stood in her tired old eyes.

IT was well for Mom Wallis's equilibrium that Mr. Tanner came out just then with the paper he had gone after, for the stolidity of her lifetime was about breaking up. But, as he turned, Gardley gave her a rare smile of sympathy and understanding; and Margaret, watching, loved him for it. It seemed to her one of the most beautiful things a young man had ever done.

They had discussed the article in the paper thoroughly and had looked at the photographs that Margaret had brought down; and Mrs. Tanner had come to the door numberless times, looking out in a troubled way down the road, only to trot back again, look into the oven, peep into the kettle, sigh, and trot out to the door again. At last she came and stood, arms akimbo, and looked down the road once more.

"Pa, I don't just see how I can keep that dinner waitin' a minute longer. The potatoes'll be spiled. I don't see what's keepin' that preacher man. He musta been invited out, though I don't see why he didn't send me word."

"That's it, likely, Ma," said Tanner. He was growing hungry. "I saw Mis' Bacon talkin' to him. She's likely invited him there. She's always tryin' to get ahead o' you, ma, you know, cause you got the prize fer your marble cake."

Mrs. Tanner blushed and looked down apologetically at her guests. "Well, then, ef you'll just come in and set down I'll dish up. My land! Ain't that Bud comin' down the road, pa? He's likely sent word by Bud. I'll hurry in an' dish up."

Bud slid into his seat hurriedly after a brief ablution in the kitchen, and his mother questioned him sharply.

"Bud, where you ben? Did the minister get invited out?"

The boy grinned and slowly winked one eye at Gardley.

"Yes, he's invited out all right," he said meaningly. "You don't need to wait fer him. He won't be home fer some time, I don't reckon."

Gardley looked keenly, steadily at the boy's dancing eyes, and resolved to have a fuller understanding later, and his own eyes met the boy's in a gleam of mischief and sympathy.

It was the first time in twenty years that Mom Wallis had eaten anything which she had not prepared herself, and now with fried chicken and company preserves before her she could scarcely swallow a mouthful. To be seated beside Gardley and waited on like a queen! To be smiled at by the beautiful young girl across the table, and deferred to by Mr. and Mrs. Tanner as "Mrs. Wallis" and asked to have more pickles and another helping of jelly, and did she take cream and sugar in her coffee? It was too much, and Mom Wallis was struggling with the tears. Even Bud's round blue eyes regarded her with approval and interest. She couldn't help thinking what if her own baby boy had lived, would he ever have been like Bud? and once she smiled at him and Bud smiled back a real boylike, frank, hearty grin. It was all like taking dinner in the kingdom of heaven to Mom Wallis, and getting her glory aforetime.

It was a wonderful afternoon and seemed to go on swift wings. Gardley went back to the schoolhouse where the buckboard had been left, and Bud went with him to give further particulars about that wink at the dinner table. Mom Wallis went up to the rose-garlanded room and learned how to wash her hair, and received a roll of flowered scrim wherewith to make curtains for the bunk-house. Margaret had originally intended it for the schoolhouse windows in case it proved necessary to make that place habitable, but the schoolroom could wait.

And there in the rose room, with the new curtains in her trembling hands and the great old mountain in full view, Mom Wallis knelt beside the little gay rocking chair while Margaret knelt beside her and prayed that the heavenly Father would show Mom Wallis how to let the glory be revealed in her now on the earth.

Then Mom Wallis wiped the furtive tears away with her calico sleeve, tied on her funny old bonnet that had seen ten years' service, and went down and rode away with her handsome young escort into the silence of the desert, with the glory beginning to be revealed already in her countenance.

Quite late that evening the minister returned.

He came in slowly and wearily as if every step were a pain to him, and he avoided the light. His coat was torn and his garments were mud-covered. He murmured of a "slight accident" to Mrs. Tanner, who met him solicitously in a flowered dressing-gown with a candle in her hand. He accepted greedily the half a pie, with cheese and cold chicken and other articles she proffered on a plate at his door, and in reply to her query as to where he had been for dinner and if he had a pleasant time he said: "Very pleasant indeed, thank you! The name? Um, ah! I don't happen to remember I really didn't ask, that is——"

THE minister did not get up to breakfast. In fact, he remained in bed for several days, professing to be suffering with an attack of rheumatism. He was solicitously watched over and fed by the anxious Mrs. Tanner, who was much disconcerted at the state of affairs, and couldn't understand why she could not get the school teacher more interested in the invalid.

On the fourth day, however, the Rev. Frederick crept forth, white and shaken, with his sleek hair elaborately combed to cover a long scratch on his forehead, and announced his intention of departing from the state of Arizona that evening.

He crept forth cautiously to the station as the shades of evening drew on, but found Long Bill awaiting him, and Jasper Kemp not far away. He had the two letters ready in his pocket with the gold piece, though he had entertained hopes of escaping without forfeiting them, but he was obliged to wait patiently until Jasper Kemp had read both letters through twice, with the train in momentary danger of departing without him, before he was finally allowed to get on board. Jasper Kemp's parting word to him was:

"Watch your steps spry, parson. I'm a-goin' to see that you're shadowed wherever you go. You needn't think you can get shy on the Bible again. It won't pay."

There was menace in the dry remark, and the Rev. Frederick's professional egotism withered before it. He bowed his head, climbed on board the train, and vanished from the scene of his recent discomfiture. But the bitterest thing about it all was that he had gone without capturing the heart or even the attention of that haughty little school teacher. "And she was such a pretty girl," he said regretfully to himself. "Such a very pretty girl!"

To be continued

The New REO "SIX"

$1250 f.o.b. Lansing-Mich.

STRENGTH and POWER

IN THIS BIG, BEAUTIFUL CAR, and at a price that is well within the reach of the prudent buyer, you obtain all those essentials—and to a degree you have learned to expect only in cars made and guaranteed by the Reo Folk.

STRENGTH WITHOUT SUBSTANCE is unattainable—impossible. Power without strength in the chassis to hold that power is—useless as well as mischievous. Speed in a car that lacks strength inevitably spells high maintenance cost.

AND STABILITY, LONGEVITY, can only be obtained by a nice relation of power in the motor and strength in the chassis.

WE REO FOLK have been an exception to the rule in that we have never made of Extreme Lightness a fetish—have never followed it to the danger point.

REO CARS ARE LIGHT, BUT not light t the of flimsiness. (Note that important distinction.)

IN OUR LONG EXPERIENCE we have fou ext lightness to be incompatible with longevity—lasti qua and low maintenance cost.

OF COURSE there's always a temptation to achiev a se efficiency by the simple expedient of lessening e w of the chassis and body the motor must pull. B we never succumbed to the lure.

REO MOTOR CAR CO

SPEED and STABILITY!

IANTAIN that no car of equal power to this Reo ut made lighter, can possibly endure for as many years ost is little from year to year to operate and to maintain.

'ERSIZE IN ALL VITAL PARTS"—the Reo r Safety—necessarily calls for a few ounces more in pa s and a few (and only a few) pounds more in the total t the car. But—

IFERENCE IN STABILITY, in dependability, in ili, and above all in cost of upkeep and repairs, is out of oprtion to the slight difference in weight between Reo n others.

IANSING, MICHIGAN

THOSE BUYERS WHO ARE attracted by spectacular performances over brief periods do not select Reos. Those who desire dependability, and consider cost of upkeep, constitute the great and ever increasing Reo clientele.

REO STANDARDS HAVE PROVEN to be best for the buyer. And the more prudent class of buyers have come to appreciate that fact thoroughly—as is evidenced by the tremendous demand for Reos.

ALL WINTER the factory has been unable to get even one car ahead of the day-to-day demand. So if you'd have a Reo and have it when you'll want it, your order must be placed well in advance of that date. Today won't be a minute too soon.

The Capital of Alaska

CONTINUING
FRANK G. CARPENTER'S NARRATIVE

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

I AM in Juneau, the capital of Alaska. It is the biggest city of the territory, and its political, financial and commercial center. It has the residences of the governor and the chief officials. Their offices are in an old frame structure not far from the governor's mansion. It has a pretentious frame courthouse of two stories with a little dome on the top, and a city hall with a cupola that reminds one of the head of a pearl diver in his diving suit, ready to drop into the deep.

The most of the houses of Juneau are of wood. The country about is covered with timber, and there are great sawmills at the wharves that supply the building materials. Of late they have been putting up some concrete structures, and the era of stone has begun.

The Juneau of today has only 5,000 inhabitants, but its streets are as lively as those of a city of four times that number in the United States proper. Every man in the town is a hustler and the place hums with politicians, lawyers, tourists and miners. The crowd is of all classes and of all sorts of dress. Many of the men wear clothes of the latest cut of Broadway, and others have slouch hats, mackinaws and trousers of khaki. Some have on boots that reach to the knees, and now and then you meet one in white rubber pantaloons to the waist.

Drays, automobiles and carriages move about through the city. Juneau has thirty motor cars, and a motor stage runs from it to the mining town of Thane, three miles down the channel. At that place are the mills and reduction plant of the Alaska Gastineau gold properties. Nearby are the Juneau gold mills, and on the other side of the channel, in plain view, are the Treadwell mines, with the towns of Treadwell and Douglas, of two or three thousand each. Altogether there are at least 15,000 people living within a radius of five miles of the courthouse, and the quartz mines alone are now giving employment to more than one-third of that number. The place is a great mining center, and a fishing center; it is the chief port of Alaska, and it does business with every part of the territory.

Juneau is in the heart of Southeastern Alaska. It is 900 miles north of Seattle and 1,800 miles from San Francisco. It is farther from Nome than from Salt Lake to New York, and its distance from Fairbanks is greater than that from Boston to Omaha. The town is beautifully situated. It lies on the mainland, at the head of the Gastineau Channel, a narrow strait which separates it from Douglas Island, just over the way. The channel connects Stephens Passage with the Lynn Canal, at the northern end of which Skagway is located. It is very deep and the harbor is so good that all of the ships that pass through Alaskan waters, excepting those that ply between Seattle and Nome, call at Juneau. During the summer there are boats north or south every day, and tens of thousands of tourists pass through at that time.

JUNEAU is right on the water, with wooden piers extending out into the Gastineau Channel. It lies in a nest in the mountains, which rise almost perpendicularly behind it to a height of perhaps 2,000 feet. I have seen cliffs of this height in other parts of the world, but they were mostly straight walls of gray, red and black rock, as bleak and bare as the Desert of Sahara. The walls of Juneau are covered with a vegetation as green as the valley of the Nile. They are so steep that it would seem as though the trees could not find rooting places. But they cling to the precipitous cliffs and are so imbedded in moss that they give the place a background of verdure.

The city is cut out of the rocks, or, rather, it is propped up by them. The most of the houses and streets stand upon stilts. The irregularities of the rocky foundation have been leveled by a trestlework of piles. The wharves are on piles, and from the channel as the tide falls they make you think of an army of centipedes tramping out to the ocean.

The Juneau Public School and Pupils

It is now planned to give the city a substantial foundation by filling in the space between the piles with the tailings from the mines in the mountains behind. These contain great masses of low-grade gold ore, and the waste rock dust from the gold mills will be run under the city to build up a foundation of rock. In Douglas, over the way, a beach of such tailings has been made along the edge of the channel, and the baseball grounds are laid out upon them. There is still some gold in the sand, but millions have come from that lying inside the diamond.

I wish I could show you the streets of Juneau. The town has about ten miles of planked roadways that run up hill and down. The roadways giv no spring to the feet, and your hips keep bobbing to your waist and tire you as do the board-walks o our seaside resorts. As I write this letter they are r iring the street in front of my hotel, and I can se ow the roadway is laid. The hotel is some distan up the side of the mountain, where a bed of eartl nd stone has taken the place of the piles. The str is about thirty feet wide. Upon the earth and one cross beams or rafters are laid, and three-inch p ks are nailed to them, running from one side of the eet to the other. They are fitted together almo as closely as flooring. Upon this foundation a s nd layer of planks is put down with the boards ru ng at an angle to the first layer, the whole form a substantial wood pavement six inches thick.

The street has also sidewalks of plank an he central roadway and sidewalks are so tipped at the water runs off into g ers of wood. Such streets are c ly. They need constant repair. he plan is to gradually elim ate them, and make macadam s ets of the tailings.

The business section of J au runs parallel with the cha el. Close to the docks are saw lls, lumber yards, sheet metal ks and machine shops, and fa her back are long streets devot to stores, banks and shops all kinds.

It may interest you to ow just what business is done. ere are twenty-four stores han ng groceries and four handling dware. There are four je ry stores, five drug stores, two oe stores and three devote to furniture. There are three de rtment stores, each of which ld be big for a city in the Sta of three times that size. Ther a music store, several cigar s es, three bakeries, three mill ry stores and a number of p tographic and curio stores.

The town has up-to-date b ber shops, cigar factories and s am laundries. It has a brewery nd bottling works. It has two ily newspapers and three job nting establishments. It has ee banks with resources of ut $2,000,000 and annual bank arings of something like $26,00 0. The bank deposits run int he millions, the payroll of two of the Juneau mines eraging more than $150,000 each month.

THE best residences of Juneau are on Ch en Ridge. This is the Nob Hill or aristocratic art of the city. I understand that the residents are n in love with the name, and that they talk of cha ng it to Bellevue or Bon Air, or some other less ple tan title. The Ridge is at the upper end of the city, ell back from the water. The houses are pretty two- ry structures, built on patches cut out of the rocks. he richest man in the town has a lawn about as b as three bed quilts, and tourists are taken to see th as one of the sights of the city. Other fine home re still higher up and some of them cling to the en wall of the mountains. I made a call last ev ng

Flooring a Street in Alaska's Capital

How the Business Section Looks

upo the editor of the Alaska Despatch. To t to his home I had to climb a pat ay several times as high as that whi leads to the Tea House of One Hu red Steps above Yokohama, Japan.

T se houses of Juneau have no dou e windows or other special arrangeme for winter protection. Neverthe-less he people tell me they have no trou e in keeping warm. The ther-mo ter seldom falls below zero, and the avier water pipes are laid on the top the ground. The chief complaint is t long nights and short days. In mid nter the electric lights have to be turr l on at two or three hours after noo and it is not daylight until 9 o'cl k in the morning. In midsummer ther are but few hours of real darkness. One an go anywhere until 10 P.M. wit t lights, and the dawn comes bet n two and three o'clock in the mor ng.

T winter climate of Juneau satisfies ever he negroes, who are supposed to be he ildren of the tropical sun. I had my oes shined this morning by a col-ore bootblack, whose stand is on the mai street. He charged me fifteen cent and told me that in the interior sl l have to pay not less than a quar r. As he worked I asked him if he nter did not chill his African blood. He plied no, adding that the winters here re quite as warm as those of Balt ore, where he was born, and that mos f the time he does not need even n o rcoat. He complains that Juneau s a or place for bootblacks, except in he mmer. The winters have so much ain at the people go about in oilskins nd ubbers, and no one wants a hin

I n living here at the New Cain Hote This is a concrete five-story buil g not far from the courthouse nd e governor's residence. It has om ooms with baths and an elevator hat ns now and then—usually then. Like ost of the Alaska hotels it has o ing-room, and one must go out or meals. I have to walk two or ree blocks to the restaurants, but all ra rs do likewise. The food is ee nt and comparatively cheap. hes Alaskans have big appetites, and e terers make their portions large iou to satisfy them. One order of op or steak is sufficient for two, and si e order of cracked crab is more an ne man can eat. The crabs sold ere e as big around as a dinner plate, d delicious as any served in Wash-gt city. At some of the restaurants up otatoes and one kind of dessert s ed with each order, so that a eal ally costs less than a similar one th States.

FORE I started to Alaska I was rned that the only fruit and ge bles I would be able to get were os hat "grow out West in cans." As re t I have brought with me a lot d stants of various kinds, includ-g nedies for ptomaine poisoning. I n need them. The provision stores S theastern Alaska have as great a ri of food as those of the States. is fternoon, for instance, I stopped fr t of a grocery and made a list of e vetables on sale. There were fresh rn s, lettuce, onions, celery and new ta es from the gardens adjoining e wn, and fresh cauliflower, green an and green peas that had come in t from Seattle. I saw ripe red m es, bleached asparagus, pale ce abbages, red beets, yellow carrots d en corn on the cob.

Th store had all sorts of fruit. There re raspberries, salmonberries and ek berries, fresh picked from the sh , and Alaska strawberries ranging si from an English walnut to the e hen's egg. There were ripe ae s and apricots, cherries, red, ac and white, and plums and logan-rri brought in from the South. er were cantaloupes and water-lo from California, and also the it of the tropics. Oranges were li at about the same prices that we y Boston, and there were also sh pe figs and even pineapples. The ge les were sprayed by a fountain ic rose in their midst, and they k as though they had just come m e garden.

T citizens here are enthusiastic n the food possibilities of the country. Said Grover C. Winn, one of the lawyers of Juneau:

"Alaska is the hardest of countries to make a fortune in and the easiest of countries to make a living in. As to the matter of good living, you can go into any grocery store at the beginning of winter and buy thirty dollars' worth of flour, bacon, and condiments. You can take them into the woods, and with the addition of the fish and game you can catch, you can come out in the spring as fat as a partridge. You can get fish anywhere by dropping a hook into the ocean or streams, and the shore will give you clams, and crabs fit for a king. Some of our clams are as big as a man's hand, and we have little butter clams that will melt in your mouth. We have all kinds of game, including deer and bear and mountain sheep. Our islands have grizzlies and the Kodiak bear is the biggest that grows."

Some of the other items of the cost of living in this part of Alaska are as follows: House rents range from $10 a month for a single unfurnished room to $25 a cabin, or a four-room flat. Four-room cottages may be had for $35 a month, and larger houses command higher prices. Living expenses per day are said to average from $1 to $1.50, exclusive of lodging, which may be obtained for about $20 per month. Household necessities, including groceries, cost from 5 to 10 per cent. more than in Puget Sound cities. The demand for labor about equals the supply, and the wages range from $3 for common labor to $5 or $6 a day for skilled mechanics.

I AM surprised at the sterling character of the people of Southeastern Alaska. They are as well educated and as well bred as those of any part of the States. More than half of the professional men are graduates of colleges, and Juneau has a university club of 150 members. The majority are from Western insitutions, but Yale, Harvard, Princeton and Cornell all have their representatives. The graduates of the University of Washington at Seattle came to dinner together the other day and thirty-five sat down to the table. The public schools are good, the high school having its business branches with courses in public speaking and mechanical drawing and of sewing and cooking as well. The high schools of Juneau give their graduates certificates admitting them to the University of California and other Western colleges.

I came here expecting to find a city of men. The sexes are almost equally divided. Many of the women have come as school teachers, or as clerks or stenographers, and have married. Some of the young men have gone back home for their wives, and the girls who are born here usually stay. The population is not transient, as is often supposed. I meet daily men who have been in Alaska from fifteen to thirty years, and find young men and women who expect to spend their lives here. Such people are even now buying homes and paying for them on the instalment plan through the building associations.

There is much civic spirit in Juneau and the town believes in municipal ownership. It owns and operates the principal wharf and it has its own fuel depot, where it supplies coal to the citizens at the rate of $10 per ton. Before the city went into the coal business coal was bringing $14 a ton, and at the same time gasoline was selling at 35 cents a gallon. The mayor began to sell in competition and the price of gasoline dropped to 21 cents. The city has also aided in the building of a cold storage plant with a freezing capacity of 18,000 pounds a day and storage rooms for 150,000 pounds of fish.

Juneau has electric lights and waterworks supplied by springs and streams in the mountains. It has a telephone system and a service of ferries which connect it with the several towns on the channel. All of the latter are run by private corporations.

* * *

CALLED HIGHER

MRS. A. R. JONES died at the Congregational parsonage in Creighton, Neb., on January 11, in the fifty-seventh year of her age. She was a loyal member of the Christian Herald Family and a faithful helper of her husband in his work in the ministry.

With Kirsch pilot, attached to end, rod slides through hem like magic. No danger of tearing.

These latest style curtain rods will make your draperies more effective

Because you spend a good many dollars for draperies, you surely are interested in these improved curtain rods that will set off your curtains and draperies to better advantage.

Kirsch Flat Rods
(Patented)

Guaranteed not to sag or tarnish

The beautiful effects you secure when your curtains are hung will be lasting if you use Kirsch Flat Rods. The curves permit graceful draping clear to casing.

They don't sag. They fit any window—make possible any draping effect from plain single curtains to the most elaborate overdrape and valance combinations.
Kirsch Flat Rods are easier to put up or take down, and never come down accidentally.

Kirsch Flat Rods are sold only in sealed packages—with complete instructions on the package and the Kirsch guarantee slipped into each rod. Kirsch Rods come in satin brass, Vernis Martin, oxidized copper, white and colors. See them at your dealer's.

For a high grade, ready-to-hang curtain at surprisingly moderate prices, ask for KirschKraft Novelty Curtains—Guaranteed to hang straight when new and after washing. Hems turned by the thread—mitering perfect—painstakingly made in every respect. Sold one pair to the package. You'll find a host of ideas in our new booklet "Rod and Drapery Style Book."

Illustrated book of home draping ideas Illustrates the newest ideas in drapings—tells the rod used—and the color scheme carried out. Plan your curtains and draperies with this book. It's free to you. When you write mention your dealer's name.

The Rod and Drapery Style Book

It's Free

The windows and doors pictured are draped with our single rod 1A. On the doors at the bottom the single rod with a pin bracket is used.

Kirsch Mfg. Co.
32 Prospect Ave., STURGIS, MICH., U.S.A.

EVINRUDING-is ROWBOAT MOTORING

STORED-UP miles of boat rides—long, healthful hours of water sport, are yours in the Evinrude. Where you will and when you will, in any rowboat or canoe, on ocean, lake or river. No more rowing—you're captain, not crew. Just a turn of the fly-wheel and you're off for a cruise, with no thought of a long row home again.

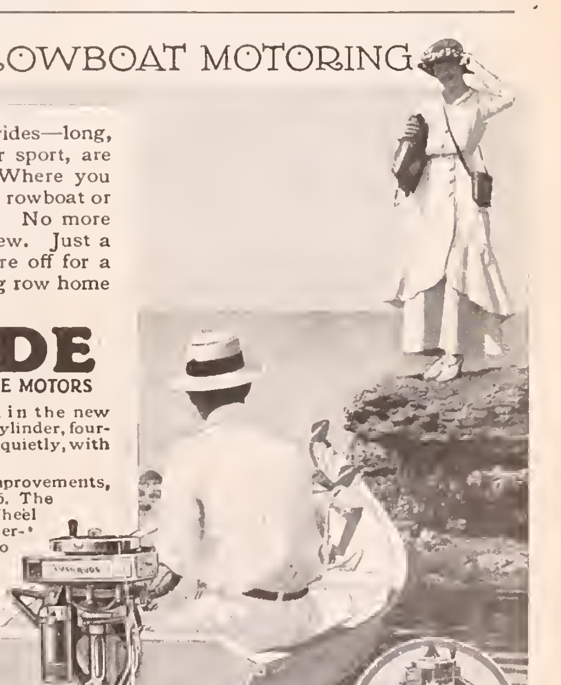
EVINRUDE
DETACHABLE ROWBOAT & CANOE MOTORS

There's more speed, more power, in the new Evinrude Four-Cycle Twin—a two-cylinder, four-cycle motor, that runs smoothly and quietly, with almost no vibration.

There's more speed, too, and other improvements, in the Single-Cylinder Models for 1916. The Evinrude Magneto—Built-In Fly-Wheel Type—is entirely insulated and waterproofed, furnishing perfect ignition, no matter how heavy the rain or how drenching the spray. Write for 1916 catalog—just off the press.

EVINRUDE MOTOR CO.
334 EVINRUDE BLOCK, MILWAUKEE, WIS

Distributing Branches:
69 Cortland St., New York, N. Y.
214 State St., Boston, Mass.
436 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.
Front & Morrison Sts., Portland, Ore.
Over 60,000 Sold



BEAUTIFY · YOUR · HOME · TO · YOUR HEART'S · DESIRE

Wouldn't that upstairs room be more homey and cosy if it were done over in old rose or ivory? And it's easy to transform a bathroom from a dingy, uninviting effect into a beautifully clean white and blue or any other color scheme your taste may decide.

You can secure the most artistic results by using Acme Quality Finishes as outlined in the two books described below—results that will help to stimulate the finer sensibilities of all the family.

ACME QUALITY

PAINTS & FINISHES

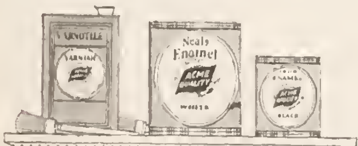
include a kind of paint for every household use. Acme Quality No-Lustre is an oil paint for walls that gives a flat, velvety, washable surface. Acme Quality Enamel, in either gloss or flat finish, will put new life into the woodwork. Acme Quality Varno-Lac varnishes and stains at the same time, reproducing the appearance of expensive woods.

Our two books, "Home Decorating" and "Acme Quality Painting Guide," tell all you want to know about how to paint and which paint to use. They are sent upon request—a post card with your name and address will bring them.

ACME WHITE LEAD AND COLOR WORKS

Dept. O Detroit, Michigan

Boston
Chicago
Minneapolis
St. Louis
Pittsburgh
Cincinnati
Toledo
Nashville
Birmingham
Fort Worth
Dallas
Topeka
Lincoln
Salt Lake City
Spokane
Portland
San Francisco
Los Angeles



HAVE AN "ACME QUALITY SHELF"

Keep always on hand at least a can each of ACME QUALITY VARNOTILE, a varnish for floors, woodwork and furniture; ACME QUALITY WHITE ENAMEL for iron bedsteads, furniture, woodwork and all similar surfaces; ACME QUALITY BLACK IRON ENAMEL for ranges, stovepipes and other metal or wood surface. These will cover many of the "touching-up" jobs.

A Papal Address That Stirred Europe

By Professor W. H. T. DAU

THE Deutsch-Evangelische Korrespondenz, a prominent church periodical of Germany, in its Number 52 of last year, reproduced from the well-known Osservatore Romano, the leading journal of the city of Rome, remarks of Pope Benedict XV which have created a most painful sensation in Germany. The sensation is spreading to other countries. The most influential Lutheran church paper of Germany, the Allgemeine Evangelisch-Lutherische Kirchenzeitung of Leipzig, in its issue for December 24 calls the Pope's remarks "a provoking address." Referring to them once more in the issue for January 7, the same paper notes the fact that an explanation regarding the matter has been made by the Curia to the Royal Prussian ambassador at the Vatican. A curious feature of the occurrence is that greater offense seems to have been given to Catholics than to Protestants by the Pope's remarks.

The remarks are said to have been made on November 22 during an address to the "Opera della Preservazione della Fede in Roma," an organization that has for its purpose the preservation of the Roman Catholic faith and institutions in the city of Rome. This society has always looked with extreme disfavor upon the Protestant missions in Rome. The Pope's remarks, after being reproduced for Protestant Germany by the Deutsch-Evangelische Korrespondenz, were transferred to the Bayrische Volksfreund, one of the most influential papers of Catholic Bavaria. The remarks, however, are not for local, or provincial, but for general consumption: they are directed against Protestantism at large, while they apply directly to local Protestant efforts in the Pope's home city.

THE remarks are as follows: "It is really superfluous to prove that a person who robs men of their faith truly deserves to be called a robber. But what are those emissaries of Satan doing who in the center of the Holy City erect temples in which God is denied his true worship; who set up pestilential pulpits for the purpose of disseminating erroneous teachings among the people; who with liberal hands scatter lies and calumnies against the Catholic Church and its servants? Such diabolical machinations are as many assaults upon the faith of the sons of Rome, and these assaults are the more dangerous because they are made so frequently. And they are all the more sinister because they are only too often accompanied by the allurement of temporal advantages. O ye poor heads of families, who for the price of your alienation from the church receive offers to have your children educated free of charge! Ye poor sons, who receive promises of aid for your aged parents during their days of illness, on condition that both you and your parents profess the faith of the evangelical sect! It is needless to expatiate on the dangers threatening the faith of the sons of Rome. One need but pass through the streets of this sublime city to observe in how many ways the Catholic faith is being persecuted, and what sinister attacks are made upon it at its very seat of power. And it is just as needless to waste many words in emphasizing the full meanness of these attacks, which is seen in the fact that they are directed against the center of the Catholic religion. Ah, there is no danger that the gates of hell shall prevail! Nevertheless, who would not deplore, first, the damage which this Holy City itself would have to suffer from these attacks, and secondly, the scandal that would be excited in the Catholic world, if Luther and Calvin were to permanently pitch their tents in the city of the Popes? . . It is now time to preserve the faith of our poor fellow citizens; it is now time to frustrate that abominable robbery which seeks their perdition. It does not seem, beloved sons, that the charge of exaggeration could be raised against our statements, when we designate all these attacks on the faith of the sons of Rome as 'a veritable robbers' deed.' But the conspiracy of these robbers must be destroyed by a strong organization of defenders of the faith. And this organization you possess in the 'Opera della Preservazione della Fede in Roma.'"

IN justice it must be noted that a faint hope has been expressed by the Bayrische Volksfreund that the Pope may not have said what the Osservatore Romano has ascribed to him. Up to January 7 the official publication containing the papal deliverances—the "Acta Apostolicæ Sedis"—had been silent on the matter. The Bavarian paper throws out the hint that the Osservatore Romano may have impersonated the Pope for the purpose of sowing the seeds of discord between German Protestants and German Catholics—in other words, that the publication in the Osservatore Romano is a piece of "yellow press" work. But the feeble questioning by the Bavarian paper of the authenticity of the papal utterances was accompanied by such vigorous and defiant remarks that the paper may be said to have fairly challenged the Vatican to declare itself. For the article in the Bavarian paper was inscribed: "Aufklärung tut Not," that is, "An Explanation Is Necessary." And while venturing the supposition aforementioned, this paper added significantly that, if its supposition was not correct—that is, if the Pope had actually said what the Osservatore Romano reported—the German Protestants and Catholics would defer to a more opportune time the settlement of the question what stand they will take on these remarks of Benedict XV. There is also a lot of meaning in a historical reminiscence which the Freie Deutsche Blätter (formerly Das Neue Jahrhundert) of Munich publishes just at this time. It recalls a letter written on February 10, 1844, by the then Crown Prince of Bavaria, later King Maximilian II, to his teacher, the philosopher Schelling, and in which the Prince expressed the hope that the harsh contrasts between Catholicism and Protestantism might be mitigated in every possible way, and that to that end a periodical might be started by Catholics.

On the other hand, it must be remarked that the excitement aroused in Germany by the utterances of the Pope has forced one of the greatest of the Catholic prelates of Germany, Cardinal Hartmann of Cologne, to come out in a public statement, in which he strives to allay the unrest that has seized many minds in Germany. His explanation, it will be seen, does not question the fact, but only seeks to explain the proper application of the Pope's remarks. The Cardinal says: "Possessing exact information, I gladly seize the opportunity to remove errors and to definitely fix the truth by publishing the following. In his address to the 'Opera della Preservazione della Fede in Roma' the Holy Father did not entertain the remotest thought of offending the German Protestants. Why, there was not the least reason for this. Against whom was the papal address directed? Anyone who is conversant with conditions prevailing at Rome will at once guess the truth. The address was directed against the two sects of Methodists, the one in the Via Nazionale, the other in the Piazza Cavour. Though alike in name, these two congregations differ in doctrine. For years these two Methodist congregations have been laboring—and that with the most questionable means—to alienate the Roman people from the church. Every one who attends their services receives from 10 to 20 centesimi. Parents sending their Catholic children to the Methodist schools are promised free tuition, and in most cases there is even a pension set aside for them. Homes for young people are being founded. The ministers of these societies are mostly renegade Catholic priests. When the war broke out, who was it that inaugurated public processions during which addresses were made against the sacrilegious Central Powers? The Methodists. When English and French ships were torpedoed, who was it that summoned conferences at Rome for the purpose of protesting against the 'German barbarians'? The Methodists. These conferences were held in the aforementioned churches in Rome. With the most improper means, by promising them material advantages, the Methodists, financially subsidized by the Freemasons, are trying to alienate the Catholic youth from the church. Also the mention of Luther's and Calvin's names has been misinterpreted. The Pope has merely expressed his displeasure at seeing the doctrines of Luther and Calvin rising to a dominating influence at Rome. Surely no one will blame the Pope when, as head of the Catholic Church, he seeks with all means in his power to preserve the Catholic faith inviolate in the city of the Popes. Accordingly, the German Protestants remain absolutely unaffected by the Pope's remarks. The declaration of the Pope is directed exclusively against the agitation of the Freemasons and Methodists at Rome."

This interpretation of the papal address on November 22 was published on December 27, in Number 1[illegible] of the Kölnische Volkszeitung. The Lutheran paper of Leipzig which we cited before remarks that it is a falsehood that the Methodist congregations at Rome pay Italians for attending their services. It also declares these Methodist congregations to be made up of Waldensians. This may be true as regards the descent of the members of the congregations. But from the visit of Vice-President Fairbanks and of ex-President Roosevelt at Rome some years ago, we remember that the Methodist Church maintains a mission at Rome.

CARDINAL HARTMANN, then, admits the facts, and endeavors, with much suasion, to make them palatable to German Protestants. The German international news agency, the "Wolfsche Bureau," reports the Cardinal's statement, and adds: "The explanations of Cardinal Hartmann are in essential agreement with the explanations which were sent from the Vatican to the Royal Prussian ambassador at the Papal See." It is readily understood why the Pope's address must appear extremely inopportune at a time when in half a dozen countries in Europe Protestants and Catholics are fighting side by side. To raise the religious issue at such a time is little short of criminal. Nor is the Cardinal's explanation, which he offers "on the basis of accurate information," very reassuring. True, if the Methodists at Rome have turned their sanctuaries into political arenas and caused the assemblies of the worshipers to resound with the hue and cry of warlike speeches, that is to be regretted. On these matters the world will wait to hear the other side. But the Pope and the Cardinal have a plain grievance against the Methodists that is independent of any casual impropriety of the latter, which may easily occur in times of national excitement. Luther's or Calvin's doctrines are hateful to the Curia for well-known reasons. It is the fact that Protestants have dared to invade the Holy City with their missions that rankles in the Pope's mind. Travelers at Rome have occasionally expressed their surprise that the papal régime is partly ignored, partly despised openly at Rome. The presence of Protestantism in "the most Catholic city of the world" must appear as a contamination and profanation of the Holy of Holies, an outrage and sacrilege, to the Curia. Hence these tears.

It remains to be seen what the authorities at the Vatican will say or do to allay the excitement and to dispel the fears that have been aroused in Protestant countries.

The War in Europe

Cantinued from page 322

Mepotamia during the week, the onl piece of importance being that the Tig is continuing to rise, which conditi will have a further deterrent effe on the military movements on its nks.

I would seem as though Portugal ma become involved in the war. The end f last week all the German and Aus ian merchant ships in the Tagus riv at Lisbon were seized by the naval com ander of the Lisbon district. A litt later, in the early part of this week, oth German ships in the island colonies of Ptugal were also seized by the local aut rities. To these seizures Germa is reported to have made reply by an timatum requiring their release wit forty-eight hours. To which Por gal is understood to have replied by refusal.

P bably Germany will formally declar war on Portugal as a result. The ent nce of Portugal into the war will not however, have any very marked effe one way or the other.

T long expected declaration of war by aly on Germany was not made dur the week, though Italy requisitio all the German merchant ships in e Italian ports. Italy, being a belligerent nation, has a right under international law to requisition neutral ships in her ports for urgent service. The Salandra ministry is in considerable political difficulties, and there are some who think that its tenure of office is gravely threatened. In nine months of warfare practically nothing has been achieved, and the Chamber of Deputies is stated to be extremely restive and hostile to the ministry.

On the Austro-Italian front, during the week, occasional and not very fierce artillery duels took place, most noticeable on the Isonzo, and rarely were there any infantry clashes.

Speaking in the House of Lords on Thursday, March 2d, Lord Derby admitted the practical failure of his recruiting plan in England and Scotland. The cause for this failure, he stated to be the ease with which exemptions from military service could be secured on the plea of being engaged in food production or the making of government supplies. As a result of his representations the Government has decided to materially reduce the causes for exemption.

The British total casualties have now increased to 568,000 to March 1st, the last month the casualties being comparatively light.

Gifts and Prayers for War Prisoners

WE have cheering news for those Christian Herald readers who have responded to our appeal for e War Prisoners Gospel Fund. Eve day adds to the number of those intested in this work, and all will be glac o learn that the first $1,000 is now on e way to the European workers, this urnal having anticipated contribution to make the advance remittance, in w of the urgency of the spiritual nee Aong those who are to be associated with the work of the War Prisoners Gosl Fund in the European prison cam at the outset are several of the best nown evangelical leaders, including Pastor Lohman of Freienwalde, Josh G. Lehmann, Secretary of the Chr ian Tract Society in Cassel, Pastor Rugitzsky of Berlin, who is most active n sionary work among the prisoners, and robably Pastor Shrenk, who is now eng ed in similar work. These, with oth Christians who are familiar with the piritual needs of the great prison cam s, and who can converse with the pris ers in their various languages, will be le to render valuable and efficient serve. The organization and working pla of the European Committee will be full explained later, and will doubtless be h as to meet the approval of the con butors to the fund.

Ftor Lehmann, writing from Cassel, und date of January 25, says that Bib, New Testaments, hymn-books and ther good Christian literature will be e chief working material of the Co ittee. To these will be added such lite ure as the American Committee ma devise. The booklets and tracts will e printed in several languages, as the uropean Committee may judge mos serviceable for the use of the different ationalities in the prison camps.

I ring the week many friends have wri n us most encouraging letters appro ng of the movement. Mrs. C. R. , eneva, Ohio, sends $1 and writes: 'I ay it may help in the conversion of at l st one prisoner. I think, as you say, this 'America's opportunity' to put n rk for God. This I send in the me ry of beloved children who have pas l over to the land above." Charles M., tlantic City, N. J., sends $1 and wri : "I pray that God's blessing may go th it. I was once a war prisoner my f, in our Civil War."

" have been reading in the Christian He d about those poor soldier prisone needing Bibles and Testaments," wri a lady in Milan, Mich., "and I eel ry anxious to help. This is a small um ($4). I am almost eighty-eight ea old. It will help to buy Bibles."

" y attention was called to the War Pri ners Gospel Fund," writes S. R. E., ers City, N. J. ($2), "and I believe it is a good way of getting our Bible in the hands of some who might never have known it if it had not been for the war. May God bless this contribution." J. S. D., Gouverneur, N. Y. ($5), writes: "I was prompted to give this after reading the February 16 number of the Christian Herald." "May God's blessing attend your efforts," is the fervent prayer of A. M. H., Dexter, Iowa, who sends $5 for the fund. G. A. R., Bound Brook, N. J., sends $3 and adds: "I hope you will be as successful in this, your latest good work, as you have been in your previous efforts."

J. N., Watertown, S. D., sends $2 and writes: "May the Lord richly bless all the good work you are doing through the Christian Herald." Mr. H. C. G., Camp Nelson, Ky., a business man, sends $10 for the Gospel Fund, and adds: "This strikes me as a good time to reach a lot of men who probably would not be reached otherwise."

"I wish I could make this $100," writes W. W. R., South Royalton, Vt., who sends $1. "My prayer is that, small as is the gift, it may furnish some poor prisoner with God's Word and lead him to trust in Jesus for salvation." Mrs. M. G. B., Biddeford, Me., sends $4 and writes: "I wish I were able to send many times as much."

Mrs. G. W., South Bend, Ind., sends $100 and writes: "I am much interested in the plan for work among the prisoners of war in Europe, and am glad to send a small contribution for its support."

A. C. E., Partridge, Kan. ($25), writes: "My heart was stirred by your urgent appeal in behalf of the war prisoners in your last issue, and I am enclosing a check for the Gospel Fund. I send it with a prayer for God's blessing and am trusting to you to use it in the way to give them the most spiritual help possible from it and would be glad to know in what way and where it is used."

Mrs. C. L. McD., Woodlawn, Me., sends $2, and in her letter explains that it is "The widow's mite." She adds: "I think it a good movement. May the Lord bless it to the salvation of souls."

Mr. F. W. H., of Cove, Ark., sends $665 "to carry on the Gospel Work among the war prisoners." Mrs. R. A. O., Brooklyn, N. Y. ($10); Mrs. J. W. C., Hartford, Conn. ($5); D. A. H., York, Pa. ($3); Mr. and Mrs. E. H. K., Atchison, Kan. ($1); Mrs. J. H. R., St. John, Wash. ($1); D. W. G. Hopkins, Mo. ($1); A. F. C., Woburn, Mass. ($1); Miss F. L. C., Watertown, Mass. ($5), and many others are among the latest contributors. Almost all the donors send their gifts with a prayer for blessing upon the work.

All contributions should be addressed: War Prisoners Gospel Fund, Christian Herald, Bible House, N. Y.

AFTER USE
LIQUID
LIQUID
SOLID MATTER

ORDINARY OIL AFTER USE   VEEDOL AFTER USE
Showing finely divided solid matter in suspension

New Lubricant Resists Heat

Intense heat in your automobile engine turns a large part of ordinary oil into black solid matter, a cause of rapid wear.

This new lubricant prevents rapid formation of solid matter in your crank case.

ORDINARY oil breaks down under the terrific heat of an automobile engine. Within a few hours black sediment is formed and part of the oil loses its lubricating value. This sediment is destroyed oil—all lubricating value in it has been killed by heat.

Sediment means friction. The sediment which has an inactive or negative effect partially crowds out the remaining liquid oil. This under-supply of oil causes friction—heat—wear—loss of power and expensive repairs.

Ordinary motor oils make trouble and increase maintenance cost in direct proportion to their rate of destruction when exposed to heat.

Relative Oil Destruction

The contents of the two bottles shown illustrate the relative durability of ordinary oil and of Veedol, the new lubricant that resists heat. Veedol deposits only a small fraction as much sediment as ordinary oils.

Ordinary oils are unstable and therefore unserviceable because of non-heat-resisting chemical structure.

Special processes of manufacture developed by this company and the use of Pennsylvania paraffine-base crude oil give Veedol, the new lubricant, its excellent chemical structure and its remarkable heat-resisting ability.

Make This Road Test

Clean out your crank case. Fill with kerosene. Run your motor about thirty seconds under its own power. Draw out all kerosene and refill with Veedol.

Then make a test run over a familiar road, including steep hills and straight level stretches.

You will find that your motor has acquired new pick-up and hill-climbing ability, due to the maximum mechanical efficiency made possible through Veedol.

What It Means in Actual Saving

The average mileage of all automobiles is conceded to be approximately 6000 miles per year and the annual expense of operating the typical or average car ($850 car), as figured by an expert statistician, is approximately $416 per year. Depreciation, repairs and gasoline come to about $268.

Friction and wear vary directly as the amount of solid matter formed within the oil. For this reason ordinary oil runs up your repair bills. Fully 50% to 75% of repairs and 50% of depreciation are due to improper lubrication.

Veedol prevents rapid sedimentation and saves you money on all three items. The records of taxicab companies and bus lines that use cost accounting show that Veedol should save you from $50 to $115 per year on gasoline, repairs and depreciation. Your lubrication bill itself will be smaller, since Veedol wears several times longer than ordinary oils.

If you are interested in saving money you will be interested in making your own tests of this remarkable new lubricant.

Get a five-gallon can of Veedol and make the road test described above.

Where You Can Buy Veedol

Progressive dealers everywhere have secured Veedol and can supply you. Look for the orange and black Veedol sign. If, for any reason, you cannot get Veedol at once, write direct to the Platt & Washburn Refining Co. By return mail you will receive a copy of the Veedol book, free, and name of dealer who can supply you.

PLATT & WASHBURN REFINING CO.
1804 BOWLING GREEN BLDG.,
NEW YORK

NEW 92-PAGE BOOK FREE

Write for the new Veedol book "The Lubrication of Internal Combustion Motors."

This book explains the A B C's of oil refining and finishing. It gives full information regarding the laboratory and practical service tests to which lubricants are subjected before final approval and shipment.

It describes and illustrates all types of lubricating systems used by automobiles, motorcycles, motorboats, tractors, etc. It contains a fund of useful information and scientific facts discussing lubricants and lubrication from its many angles.

This book also shows how the Veedol Engineering Department, which is at your service, is helping car owners.

92 pages, profusely illustrated in colors—
WRITE TODAY.

Veedol is supplied in one gallon and 5 gallon sealed cans, 15 gallon, 28 gallon and 53 gallon steel drums, and in 28 and 50 gallon white oak barrels. A special pouring device is supplied with each metal container.

VEEDOL
Most Lubrication-Least Carbon
PENNSYLVANIA
MEDIUM
MOTOR OIL
PLATT & WASHBURN REFINING CO
NEW YORK
VEEDOL

BLUE STREAKS

GOOD-YEAR
BLUE STREAK

MORE than 7,000 dealers regularly carry Blue Streak Single Tube Bicycle Tires in stock.

Blue Streaks, non-skid, sell everywhere for only $2.50 each. They carry the same guarantee as the tires for which you are asked to pay from $3 to $5 each.

They have a beautiful white thread with a Blue Streak on each side.

You can get Blue Streaks from any reliable bicycle or hardware dealer.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio

GOOD YEAR
AKRON
Bicycle Tires

What Paint shall I buy, is sometimes asked, to be sure that it contains

Dutch Boy White Lead

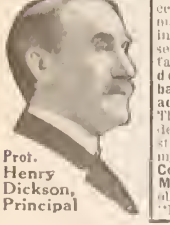
It can't be done. You buy Dutch Boy White Lead in a steel keg (as shown here). The painter makes paint of it by adding linseed oil and color.

That is the paint which wears.
Ask us for Paint Tips No. 153

NATIONAL LEAD COMPANY
New York Boston Cincinnati
Cleveland Buffalo Chicago
San Francisco St. Louis
(John T. Lewis & Bros. Co., Philadelphia)
(National Lead & Oil Co., Pittsburgh)

The Key To Success

Stop Forgetting



Prof. Henry Dickson, Principal

Increase Your Efficiency

The secret of business and social success is the ability to remember. I can make your mind an infallible classified index from which you can instantly select thoughts, facts, figures, names, faces. Enables you to concentrate, develop self-control, overcome bashfulness, think on your feet, address an audience. Easy. Simple. The result of 20 years' experience in developing memories of thousands of students. Write today for copy of my book "How to Remember" and Copyrighted Intensely Interesting Memory Test Free, also how to obtain FREE copy of my book "How to Speak in Public."

Dickson School of Memory, 701 Hearst Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League. All correspondents are specially requested to make their letters as brief as possible. Write requests and acknowledgments on separate sheets.

ONE of the best letters ever received by the Prayer League comes from a faithful Salvation Army soldier, eighty years old. He is Mr. Warren Martin, of Chatham, Ontario, and writes: "I have for over thirty years been a regular attendant of the Salvation Army knee drill at 7 A. M. Sundays. We are using for some years past a knee drill record, in which as secretary I enter all requests for prayer, with the names of those presenting them, whose duty it is to follow up the case presented, and report when the answers are received. We keep a regular debtor and creditor account and from time to time go over our Prayer accounts and 'count them one by one,' and it does surprise us, what the Lord has done. Herewith is our record for two years up to last September: Requests presented, 107; answered, 63; in process of answer, 19; not yet reported on, 14; doubtful, 11."

We suggest that all the local Christian Herald Prayer Leagues keep such a record as this, and forward monthly reports to the League headquarters.

A young prisoner writes from the penitentiary at Baltimore: "I have had the pleasure of receiving the Christian Herald for the past two years, and I assure you that it has been a great help and comfort to me in striving to live a clean Christian life within these walls. Mrs. Maud Ballington Booth, whom we call our 'Little Mother,' first came to this institution in 1912, and her appeal was heard in my heart, and I turned to the eternal Christ, and found forgiveness for the wrongs of the past, and since that time I have been striving to live as a child of God. In a silent way I have been a member of the Noon Hour Prayer League, and many of my silent prayers have been answered."

Mrs. G. E. writes from Marble Hill, Mo.: "Some time ago I asked prayer that my health might become better, as I was weak and scarcely able to do anything. Now I desire to thank the faithful ones who have held on to God for me, as I have been in better health the past few months than for years. I feel that it is all in answer to prayer." E. H. C. writes from Roanoke, Va.: "I want to acknowledge God's answer to prayer in restoring our child, who had been very sick." Mrs. S. C. T. writes from Dunlop, Kan.: "I sent a request for a prayer for my neighbor, who was so low her life was despaired of. She began at once to improve, and is now able to work. I believe it was in answer to our many prayers, and I am so thankful." Mrs. L. writes from Bellingham, Wash.: "Many months ago I came to you for help, and our prayers were answered in God's own wonderful way. Once more I ask prayers that a great burden may be lifted, that we may have increased faith in our heavenly Father's goodness."

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have also been received from:

Mr. and Mrs. R. B. G., Abingdon, Va.; Mr. and Mrs. A. C. W., Abingdon, Va.; O. D. C., Jordan, Ont.; A Reader, Goodes, Va.; Mrs. S. E. H., Iowa Falls, Iowa; E. B. C., Nottawa, Mich.; A Student, University, Va.; M. C., Tottenville, S. I.; A. D. B., North Vancouver, B. C.; A Christian Mother, Hartford, Conn.; R. J. A., Wakenda, Mo.; Mrs. L. M. Crofton, Pa.; Mrs. S. H., Glendall, W. Va.; Mrs. E. M. W., Veronia, Ore.; Mrs. W. H. McE., Forest Grove, Ore.; A Grateful Reader, West Manchester, Ohio; A. C. M., Garrison, N. Y.; Mrs. E. B. G., Hammondsport, N. Y.; Mrs. A. G. A., Moorhead, Minn.; N. W. A.; Mrs. A. A., Gaithersburg, Md.; Mrs. R. E., Little Rock, Ark.; M. G. W., Annapolis, Ill.; S. W. B., Wyandot; Mrs. F. P. S., Port Republic, Va.; Mrs. W. I. K., Pittsburg, Pa.

We must ask our readers to remember that it is altogether impossible to mention individually each request for prayer. A glance at the statements week by week of the number of requests received will show how impossible this is. The editors must use their best judgment in selecting two or three for special mention, but the Father in heaven sees every need and hears every plea.

A very sad letter comes from a lady who has been ill all her life and has not walked a step in forty-three years. For the past nine years she has been bedridden. She asks earnest prayers for healing in order that she may not be a care to others.

A sister writes to acknowledge answer to prayer that her brother might overcome the drug habit, and now asks special prayer that he may find work and be made strong in every way.

A wife writes to ask that her husband, who is over sixty years of age, may secure a position. She adds: "In November I requested the prayers of the League for an object, and within ten days the prayer was granted."

A Virginia mother writes, asking prayer for her oldest son, that he may be saved and cured of the drink habit.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Broad Top, Pa.; Marble Hill, Mo.; Blanco, Texas; Kibbie, Mich.; Santa Ana, Calif.; McCune, Kan.; Bowling Rock, N. C.; Cortez, Colo.; Hopkins, Mo.; Fox Lake, Wis.; Anna, Texas; St. Charles, Minn.; Dickinson, N. D.; Atlanta, Ind.; Ginghamsburg, Ohio.; Raymond, S. D.; Annapolis, Ill.; Franklin, Neb.; St. Louis, Mo.; Gypsum, Kan.; Hillsboro, N. Y.; Keller, Va.; Cedar Falls, Iowa; Roosevelt, Minn.; Los Angeles, Calif.; Jameson, Mo.; Crawfordsville, La.; Lewistown, Ill.; Wytheville, Va.; Callaway, Neb.; Nortonville, Kan.; Loganville, Wis.; Carman, Ill.; Cleveland, Ohio; Plainfield, N. J.; Murdocksville, Pa.; Lucas, Iowa; El Dorado, Ohio; Victoria, B. C.; Lexington, Ky. (in the First Presbyterian Church); A Reader, Chambersburg, Pa., asks prayer that a Sunday school class may give their hearts to Jesus during revival meetings; another, Libertyville, Ill., that the saloons may be closed and a revival come to this village; another, Sherrill, N. Y., that a revival wave which has been started may reach out and increase until every one in Oneida and surrounding places is saved, and liquor and all other forms of evil are abolished forever, also an outpouring of God's Spirit upon meetings to begin in Rome, N. Y.; another, Hanoverton, Ohio, that the saloons may not be voted back; another, Front Royal, Va., that five men may be saved. Mrs. E. S. M. asks prayer that a minister may receive a pastorate.

A Constant Reader of the Christian Herald asks prayer that mother's mind may be restored; S. E. I., E. C., their sons'; Mrs. L. J. M., G. J. E., C. H. G., M. F., their daughters'; Miss M. M. asks prayer that memory may be strengthened; A. B., that mind may be strengthened. Thirteen other friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for other relatives, friends or for themselves. Nineteen friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for relatives, friends or for themselves.

Ninety-seven friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing. Thirteen parents ask prayer that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit; five wives, their husbands. D. E. G. asks prayer that three brothers may be delivered from the liquor habit. Fifteen other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be delivered from this habit. Mrs. L. A. B. asks prayer that brother may be cured of the drug habit and restored to usefulness; Mrs. C. M. Y., that an old lady may be cured of the morphine habit; Mrs. J. M. M. asks prayer that husband may be cured of the drug habit.

Seventy-one parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; forty-one wives, their husbands. One hundred and eighteen other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be converted.

Twenty-two readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends.

One hundred and three ask prayer for healing of self. One hundred and sixty friends ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including R. B., that a child who has never spoken may have the power of speech; another, M. E. S., that a little girl may have the power of speech.

Twenty-five friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing for friends, relatives or themselves.

Sixty-six friends ask prayer for help and guidance in financial affairs.

One hundred and ten friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including Mrs. E. W., that a dear one may be vindicated of a wrong he is accused of and the guilty one be led to confess.

THE RIGHT OI
FO
RIG
OILI G
Handy Oil Can
THREE IN ONE OIL
PREVENTS RUST LUBRICATES
CLEANS AND POL
3 IN THREE IN ONE OI
NEW YORK
PRICE 25

3-in-One lubricates best because it works out dirt from fine bearings and spreads evenly over contact surfaces. Do 't gum or dry out. Contains no aci or grease. Has sufficient viscosity to ar long. Most satisfactory of all oils on ing machines and other fine mechani s.

3-in-One Oil is sold in drug, grocery, hardware and gene stores: 1 oz. bottle 10c; 3 oz. 25c; 8 oz. (½ p 50c. Also in Handy Oil Cans, 3½ oz. 25c.

If you do not find these with your deale we will send one by parcel post, full 3-in-One for 30c.

FREE— Write for a generous free sampl and the 3-in-One Dictionary.

THREE-IN-ONE OIL CO.
42 CR. Broadway
New York

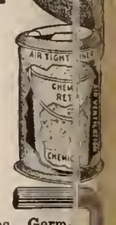
Comfort Indoor Clos

ODORLESS SANITARY
GERM-PROOF

Every home without sewerage needs one. Most convenient, meritorious home necessity in a century. A boon to sick people. Can be placed anywhere in house.

Makes Outdoor Privy Unnecessary

Put a warm Comfort Toilet in your home; a guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions. Germ killed by chemicals in retort. Emptied o a month—no more trouble than throwing coffee grounds. Needs no other attenti Boards of Health endorse it. Write now literature, prices, etc. Agents wante exclusive territory.



Comfort Chemical Closet Co.
543 Factories Bldg. Toledo, Ol

Factory
Pri es
Save $5 t $23

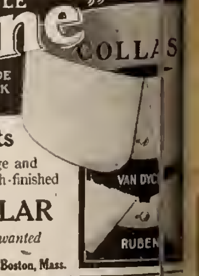
Freight Paid—A Year's al

Save from $5 to $23 by buying direct from fa . 55 years' reputation back of every stove. Ou experience and big output gives you a better or range at less cost.

Gold Coin Stoves and Ran s

Use one for a year—money refunded if it d 't prove absolutely satisfactory. We pay fr guarantee safe delivery and send every store to set up. BIG FREE CATALOG—Send for i See why improved features of Gold Coin Stove you save fuel and bake better. Write today.
GOLD COIN STOVE CO., 11 Oak St., Troy, Y.

REVERSIBLE
"Linene"
TRADE MARK
COLLA S



Send 2 Cents

in U. S. Stamps to pay postage and we will send you free a starch-finished

SAMPLE COLLAR

State size and which style wanted

REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

ACORN UNI-L E
FR E

Turns night into day. 300 candle power. Carry as a lantern; use anywhere as a lamp. W er proof. For house, barn, garage, and around the farm. Write for offer. Special opportunity to fa stockmen and motorists. Agents big money. Write tonight.
Acorn Brass Mfg. Co., 1117 Acorn Bldg., C

Don't Blame it All on the High Price of Gasoline

THE COST of running the average motor car is making even the careless man thik.

he average dollar spent for fu delivers less than 15 cents' wcth of ride—85 cents is burned upin friction, dead weight and coiplicated mechanism—35.9 pe cent. is wasted in cooling the mtor alone.

he radiator of the average ca weighs 75 lbs; the water, 48 lb; fan, piping, pump and the re of the 177 water-cooling pats add more weight.

his means more horse-power inthe engine to move the car. Mre horse-power means heavier enines and a heavier engine mans heavier weight throughout tocarry it.

he average water radiator cotains 5,000 cells and 6,00 to 10,000 soldered jots, to say nothing of th bladed fan, geared wter pump, hose, piing and pipe connections—all costing money for maintenance, for care and attention.

The automobile is a mechanism of which every part does some work. It may not rotate, but through jar and vibration over the roads there is friction loss.

The Franklin System of Direct-Air-Cooling does away with all these encumbrances, friction, dead weight and complication.

The Franklin Automobile, under practically all conditions of driving, delivers more mileage per gallon of gasoline than any other car of the same size.

This is a matter of current fact and every-day record.

Franklin Air-Cooling cools. It utilizes an ever-fresh cooling medium. The harder the engine works, the greater the volume of cooling air that is drawn over the cylinders.

Whether the car is standing still, moving slowly in low gear or going on high speed, the turbine fan flywheel is at all times drawing in sufficient air to cool the motor. It does not depend on the forward rush of the car.

Franklin Cars are in service in the coldest and hottest regions on the earth's surface—in Alaska, South Africa and the Indian Empire.

They are in daily use in every city of this country and delivering to their users more comfort and more economy than any other cars they ever owned.

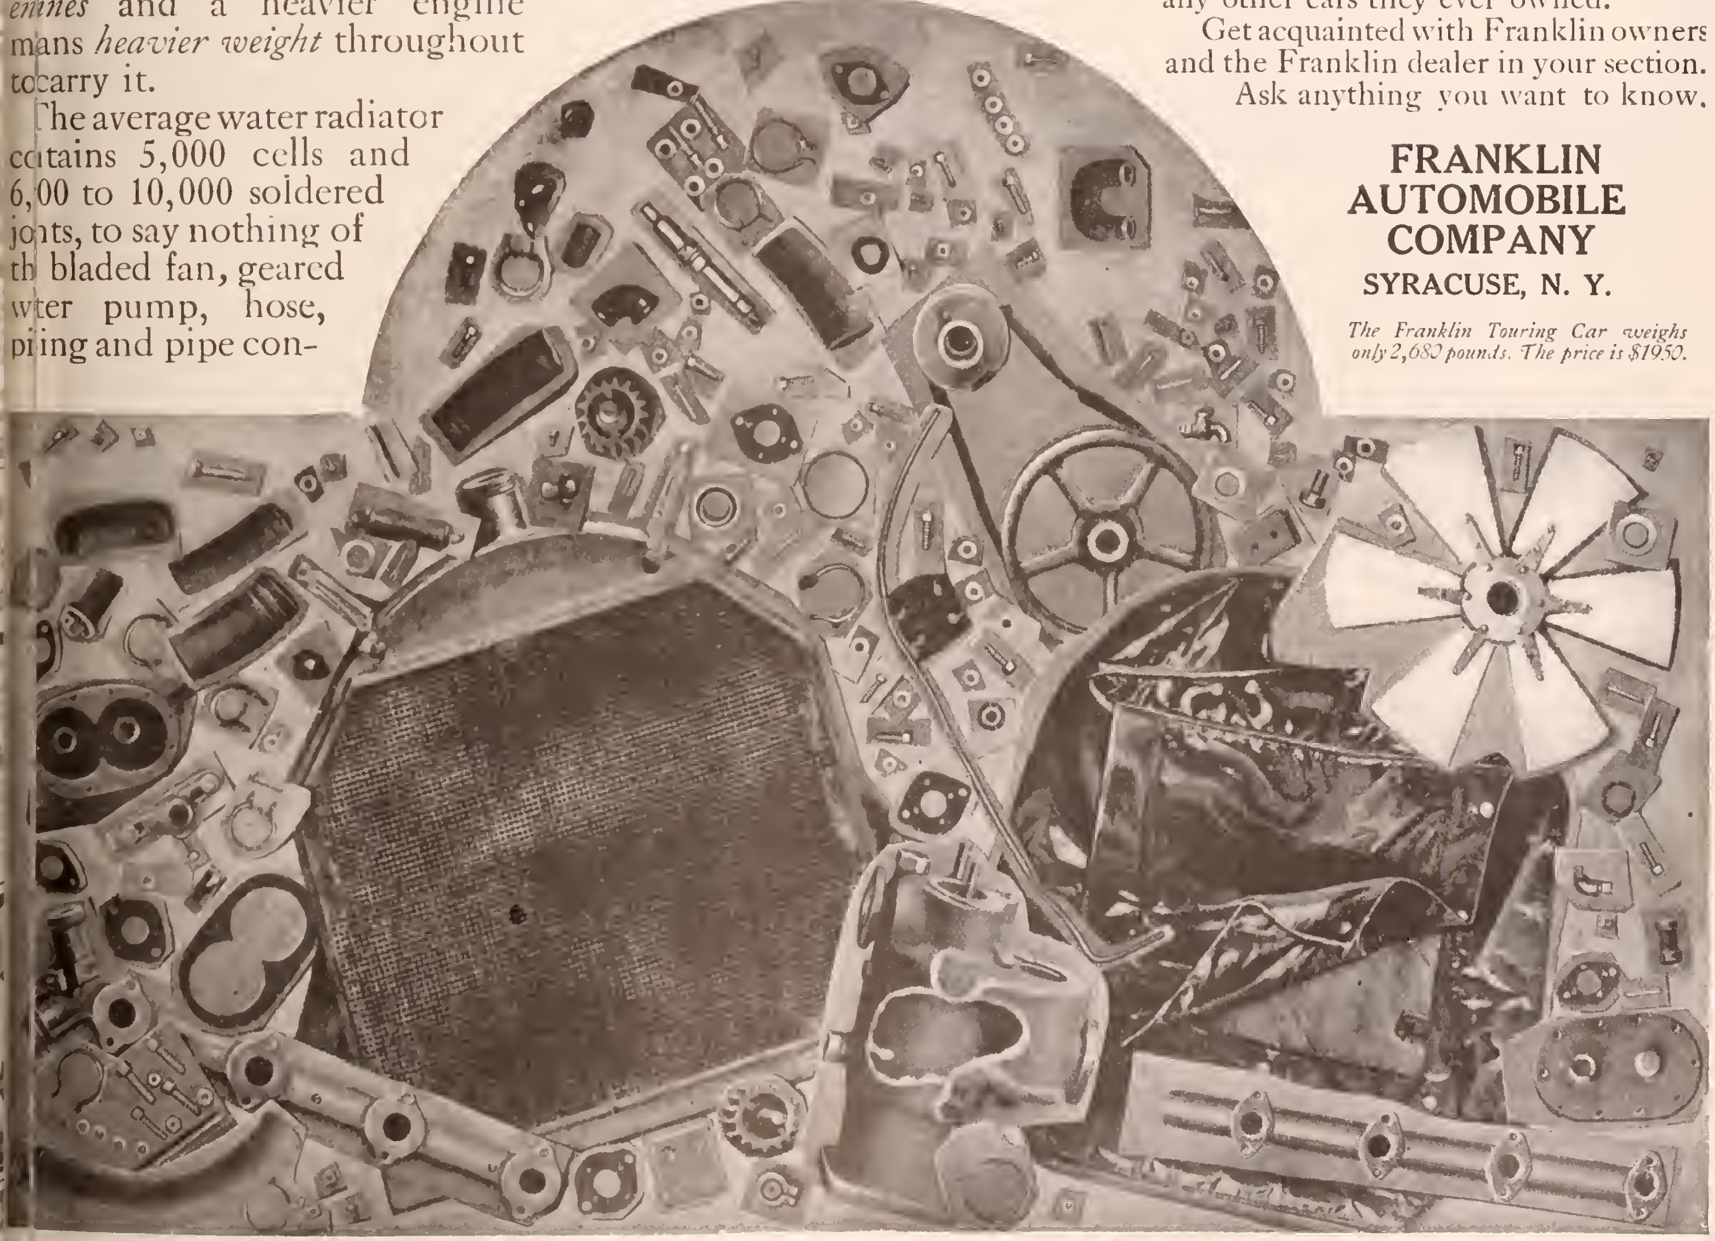
Get acquainted with Franklin owners and the Franklin dealer in your section. Ask anything you want to know.

FRANKLIN AUTOMOBILE COMPANY
SYRACUSE, N. Y.

The Franklin Touring Car weighs only 2,680 pounds. The price is $1950.



These are the 177 water-cooling parts eliminated by Franklin Direct-Air-Cooling. The Franklin System of Direct-Air-Cooling does away at once with all boiling, all freezing, all leaks, stoppages and failures to cool—all cooling troubles of every kind due to whatever cause. It does away with the dead weight of radiator, pump, hose, pipes, pipe connections and water, and with the excessive weight of frame needed to carry these parts. It gives the Franklin owner more useful power for his gasoline money than any other car of the same size. It makes possible the Franklin scientific light-weight, flexibility and balance, which give the Franklin Car its notable ease of control—about the one car which anyone can drive all day without undue fatigue.

For the "Never-Well —but Never-Sick"

Not well enough to enjoy living, yet not sick enough for the doctor—who does not know that dreary, depressing state of "semi-health!" Some of us get it occasionally—"the blues" we call it—others so often that they almost forget what it means to be normal and healthy.

With nerves on edge, digestion uncertain, the mind depressed, our efficiency is reduced day by day. Ambition becomes stunted, our interest in things grows half-hearted. The reason: Our ship of life carries too much cargo—we must unload or else get more power.

Have you ever considered what Sanatogen is able to do in just such cases? Know then that letter after letter from carefully observing physicians has told of the splendid effort of Sanatogen in giving fresh fuel to the overworked nerves, fresh building material to the fatigued cells, a fresh impetus to digestion and assimilation.

Sanatogen
THE FOOD-TONIC

And what trained physicians observe—no less than 21,000 physicians have in writing approved the use of Sanatogen—the actual users of Sanatogen joyfully confirm. Richard LeGallienne, for instance, writes: "Several times I have found myself wondering why I was feeling more fit and then remembered I was taking Sanatogen."

Sir Gilbert Parker, the famous author and statesman, tersely sums up the benefits of Sanatogen when he says: "Sanatogen is to my mind a true food tonic, feeding the nerves, increasing the energy, and giving fresh vigor to the overworked body and mind."

That fresh vigor can be yours too if only you will try Sanatogen.

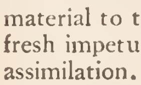
Sanatogen is sold by good druggists, everywhere, in sizes from $1.00 up

Grand Prize, International Congress of Medicine, London, 1913



Sanatogen
ENDORSED BY OVER 21,000 PHYSICIANS

Send for a free copy of "Nerve Health Regained." If you wish to learn more about Sanatogen before you use it, write for a copy of this booklet, beautifully illustrated and comprising facts and information of the greatest interest. Tear off this as a reminder to address

THE BAUER CHEMICAL COMPANY
26 F Irving Place New York

Review—The Great Multitude

International Sunday School Lesson for March 26
Rev. 7:9-17

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

"They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun strike upon them nor any heat; for the Lamb that is in the midst of the throne shall be their shepherd, and shall guide them unto fountains of waters of life; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes" Rev. 7: 16, 17.

Jesus leads us here, and will continue to do so there. Here, when he puts forth his own sheep, he goes before and they follow; there the Lamb guides them to fountains of waters of life, that they could not discover for themselves, and that lie always deeper into the landscape of heaven. In other words, the development of the mysterious content of our natures which begins in this life is carried forward without break or intermission in the other. Even there we shall follow on to apprehend that for which we were apprehended of Christ Jesus. The life on the other side of death is no dreamy existence, no fixed stagnation, no dead calm, but quick, alert, intense, ever moving toward the fuller understanding and appropriation of God, that we may comprehend, with our fellows, the length and breadth and height of a love which will always surpass our creatural understanding. The Creator will always be greater than his creations. His thoughts and ways will always elude our finding out. Our explorations and discoveries will fill us with amazed joy; but there will be no sense of strain, weariness, or pain. No hunger, no thirst! And Christ himself will be our Teacher. He will lead; and there will be no tears on our lesson-books.

A Pentecostal Drama

By Arthur H. Howland

THESE first eight chapters of Acts, if they could be staged and played, like the Passion Play at Oberammergau, would make a thrilling drama. It might not be a bad idea for some ambitious Sunday school to attempt to present such a play on Review Sunday. It would fix the events of the New Testament records firmly in the minds of those taking part, and would be a magnificent Gospel sermon to all attending.

Whether or not your Sunday school attempts to produce the play, it will help the class review to put it in this form. Make up the "dramatis personæ." It would run about as follows: Peter, Stephen, Philip, John, the Lame Man, the Ethiopian, Gamaliel, Saul, Ananias, Sapphira, Simon Magus, Apostles, Deacons, Widows, High Priest and other Members of the Sanhedrin, Young Men, Witnesses against Stephen, Multitudes of Christians, Multitudes of Non-believers.

The acts would be: I. The Healing of the Lame Man. In this the events of Pentecost, Peter's first sermon and its effect would be gathered up and stated in the form of conversations. II. Ananias and Sapphira and the Christian Brotherhood. III. The Appointment, Work, Arrest, Defense, and Death of Stephen. IV. Philip, Peter and John at Samaria, and Philip and the Ethiopian in the Desert.

In every drama, as the high school pupils have learned in their Shakespeare classes, there is a movement forward toward a desired end, and a force or group of forces working to defeat that end. If the forward movement fails the play is called a tragedy. If not, a comedy—for the word comedy does not connote at all the element of humor, as we see, for instance, from the title of Dante's great work, the Divine Comedy. But of late years the original meaning of comedy has almost been lost sight of, so it is hardly possible to use it seriously.

But ask the question whether this play would or would not be a tragedy. Does it turn out well or ill? Is the forward movement defeated or triumphant? As we see the Ethiopian going gleefully on his way back to Meroë, as we see the happy city of Samaria, as we see the scattered believers taking their faith and their joy to distant provinces and cities, we feel that these seven chapters do not end in tragedy but in triumph.

What is the forward movement of this drama? The movement toward God and toward fraternity. It is easy to pick out from the list of actors those who are helping and those who are hindering the movement. Peter, Stephen, Philip, John, leading and helping gloriously; the Lame Man and the Ethiopian first being helped, then helping; Gamaliel, helping from the outside by blocking the work of the hinderers; Saul, first passively among the hinderers, then becoming one of the chief leaders; Simon Magus, first being helped, then pretending to be a helper but becoming a hinderer; Ananias and Sapphira, first helping, or pretending to help, then trying to hinder, and receiving their bitter punishment. To make the drama itself a still greater triumph for the right, the ninth chapter should be included, showing the chief hinderer, Saul, letting the good disciple Ananias lay his hands upon his head in the house of Judas at Damascus, and yielding his will to the risen Christ, of whose cause he was to become the chief helper.

The same movements that made that drama of long ago are at work in the world today: the movement toward God, the movement to make men understand him better and love him more ardently and accept his love and his salvation and his help; the movement toward brotherhood, the movement to remove hates and strifes, to slay war, to develop cooperation, to make it possible for all to share in earth's abundance; then the sinister forces that are seeking to draw men away from God: forces of disbelief, disobedience, worldliness, sin, and the forces that are tearing the human race apart rather than seeking to weld it into a solid friendship; forces of greed and ambition and false patriotism; forces of cruelty and injustice and hate.

The glory and power of the risen Christ are in this drama. Even after his ascension his followers knew he was with them, that he was helping them lead the world toward God and toward brotherhood. And also, pulsating in every line, is the fiery, irresistible, energizing presence of the Holy Ghost.

How may we help?

How are we tempted to hinder?

When the present-day chapter of the great divine drama is written shall we be on the right side, and shall we be found to have done all that we could?

The How Column

Conducted by Frank L. Brown, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

How to Approach the Lesson in Class

A THING well begun is half done, applies with force to Sunday School teaching. Once the point of contact is obtained, there is fair assurance of a good lesson. The front door steps are vital to an entrance to the home. No matter how well the facts and teachings of the lesson may be mastered, they are valueless if the attention is not riveted. A law of good teaching is to start with the known and proceed to the unknown. The first five minutes ordinarily determine the fate of the lesson. How teachers have used these minutes is told here. It will be noted that the character of the approach naturally differs according to the age and sex of the class.

From a teacher of boys in the early teens: "The approach differs with each lesson. I try to have as many approaches as I have lessons, with always an extra one to fall back upon. Sometimes it is a question, sometimes a single word, sometimes an incident of last

Bible Stu
By Ma

Tw Prac al Cour es

By Prof. E. S. Young, B. A., B.

Join the Bible Students League and study Bible at home by correspondence under the person direction of Prof. Young, the eminent Bible cher.

Invaluable to Sunday School Teachers iper- intendents, Ministers, Church Officl and Christian Workers. By one year's study home under Prof. Young's direction you can w the Bible. Many churches have Home Study asses. Scores of Ministers and hundreds of Sunda chool Teachers are fitting themselves to do more icient work. The advanced course includes the dy of "The Acts of the Apostles" and is very b ful to Sunday School Teachers during 1916.

Write For FREE Book
"Home Bible Study by Mail" which gives full ticu- lars and testimonials from students all over t orld.

The Bible Students Leag
Claremont, Calif. El Ill.

Songs for Seri ce

Compiled and edited by Hom A. Rodeheaver and Charles H. Gabrie The song book that is used exclusively the great "Billy" Sunday campaigns.

Cloth, $25.00; limp, $18.00; n lla, $15.00 per hundred, not prepaid.

Single copies, cloth, 35c; limp 25c; manila, 20c, postpaid. Any quant at the 100 rate, not prepaid.

Send for a copy, for 15-day ex na- tion, stating binding desired.

RODEHEAVER CHORUS COLLEC ON

For fine chorus work this will be und an exceedingly useful collection. end for a copy for examination.

96 pages, full octavo size, finely p ted on good paper and substantially b nd.

50c per copy, postpaid; $4.50 per zen not prepaid; $35.00 per 100, not pr aid.

THE RODEHEAVER O.
1083 Monon Building • • CHI GO
633 Lippincott Building, PHILADE HIA

Money for East r

Over 800 Church organizations are ak- ing extra funds selling

Brewster Chocolat and Cocoa

Your society can do it.
No capital requ ed.
Write today for particulars.

Brewster Cocoa Mfg. Co., Jersey City . J.

AGENTS A Big S ler
Screen Door CHECK

Splendid summer seller. Stops the bang and saves the door. LOW-PR D Easy Sales. Profits Big demand. A sale in every home. Dozen can earned in pocket. Demonstrating sample free to worl .
THOMAS MFG. CO., 4324 East St., DAYT OHIO

Easter Post Cards and No lties

10 Post Cards for 10 cts. ....100 80 ct-
Novelties 5 cts. each ....45 cts. doze
Novelties 10 cts each ....$1.00 doze
Folding Cards (not Post Cards) 5 cts each. .6 25 ct-

MADISON ART COMPANY, Madison, n.

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

Buy Your Books of THE CH STIAN HE LD

No matter what book you want, if it is a book we can supply it, no matter who publishe . writ
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible Hou N. Y

LOOK! BABY CHICKS $8 a 00 up

Book your order now. Rocks, Reds, Leghor Orp tons, Minorcas, Anconas, Wyandottes, Campi Bu cups. Buff Orpington pound chicks from pri winne ready for delivery. Standard Brooder Stove $ C logue free. Stamps appreciated. NABOB CO., Ga er, O.

Tycos THERMOMETERS

Look For Tycos on our Fever Thermo ter.

It is never found on an infe instru ment. Insist on a Tycos. Ask r deal

Taylor Instrument Companies, Rochester, N. Y

TABLE GRACES For DAI USE SPECIA DAYS and OCC IONS

All Will Welcome This New Book of Graces. Postpaid. r, 25c Cloth, 50c. M. E. MUNSON, 77 Bible Hous , New k, N. Y.

GET IT

AMERICAN POULTRY JOURNAL

Tells everything about the fascinating and profitable poultry industry. Issued monthly; 10 cents. We want you to know how good it is and will send it 6 months for 25c. Order now.
A. P. J. 1825-542 S. Dearborn, Chicago, Ill.

25 CTS

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED Manu facturers want Owen Pat s. Se for 3 free books; inventio want etc. I help you market your invention witho charg
RICHARD B. OWEN, 63 Owen Bldg., Washing , D. C.

1 1 Wall Paper
S mples FREE

Send your name now. Write today for this big FREE book. Over 100 New 1916 Wall Paper Designs to choose from.

Every sample is cut from the paper itself and shows the exact colors and designs; pr on the back of each. Prices are very low—le han one-half of retail in most instances. From 3c 50c per double roll. Think of this—

6 Papers a Room 12x14x9 Ft.

Se for a copy today, study the designs and prices. Y will be surprised to see how much you can save bu g wall paper and paints from Montgomery Ward & Co.

Montgomery Ward & Co. Dept. A169

Ne ork Chicago Kansas City Ft. Worth Portland
Write house most convenient to you

4 TIMES THE LIGHT
Fr Same Oil—Using This
B S ELECTRIC MANTLE
M Your Home Bright and Cheerful

G ERNMENT tests show that by use of this onderful mantle, you get four times as much lig from a gallon of oil as in the ordinary way. T antle is made from the rare earths thorium an erium, best light giving substances known to sci e. By this process you can not only get more th twice the light from half the amount of the sa kind of oil you now use, but it will be a pure wh brilliant, steady light, which scientists at lea g Universities say is nearest in color to sunlig and better than electric. Lights whole room. N or, smoke or noise. No pumping up; no pressu no danger. Revolutionizing farm and small to home lighting. Saves the eyesight.

On each locality is wanted to show thi w way of getting better light. Be fir d get the opportunity of getting Yours Free

J sk for free book. Tells all about wonderful oil ving process of getting white light better than ele ic. You will also be given full particulars ab our liberal free offer. Agents wanted.

M LE LIGHT CO., 33 Aladdin Block, Chicago, Ill.

Indoor Closet

More Comfortable Healthful and Convenient than the Out-Door Privy

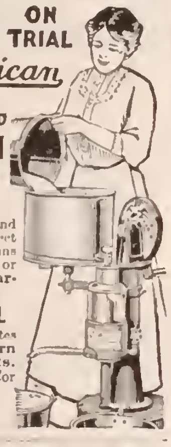
Eliminates the open vault and cesspool, breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to in ids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

A SOLUTELY ODORLESS
Put It Anywhere In The House

T germs are killed by a chemical process in wa in the container, which you empty once a m h. Absolutely no odor. No more trouble to mpty than dishwater. Closet absolutely gu nteed. Write for full description and price.

RO SANITARY MFG. CO. 330 ROWE BLDG., DETROIT, MICH.

As out the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing



15 95 Upward ON TRIAL
American
FULLY GUARANTEED CREAM
S PARATOR

A S D PROPOSITION to send ew, ll made, easy running, perfect kimi g separator for $15.95. Skims warm r cold milk; making heavy or light am. Bowl is a sanitary marvel; ily cleaned.

AB LUTELY ON APPROVAL

iffe from picture, which illustrates ur l capacity machines. Western orde filled from western points. Whet dairy is large or small write for and e free catalog. Address:

AMI CAN SEPARATOR CO.
Box 84 Bainbridge, N. Y.

Delivered TO YOU FREE

A sample 1916 model "Ranger" bicycle, on approval and 30 DAYS TRIAL.

Write at once for large illustrated catalog showing complete line of hicycles, tires and supplies, and particulars of most marvelous offer ever made on a bicycle. You will be astonished at our low prices and remarkable terms.

RIDER AGENTS Wanted—Boys, make money taking orders for Bicycles, Tires and Sundries from our big catalog. Do Business direct with the leading bicycle house in America. Do not buy until you know what we can do for you. WRITE TO US.

EAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. L-71. CHICAGO

R ISE GUINEA PIGS

e nish stock—show you how and buy all you raise. ig nand—thousands needed yearly. Easy and inexpens to raise—very prolific—more profitable and less rou than poultry or squabs. Particulars FREE. avle istributing Co., 743 West 71th St., Kansas City, Mo.

POULTRY PAPER 44-124 PAGE periodical, up-to-date; tells all you want to know about care and management of poultry for pleasure or profit. Four months for 10 cents.
POULTRY ADVOCATE, Dept. 29, Syracuse, N. Y.

Fi Bright, Capable Ladies to travel, demonstra and sell dealers. Good pay. Railroad fare paid week. And again I give the boys themselves a chance to make their own approach to the lesson, not saying anything till they have started the discussion."
GO RICH DRUG CO., Dept. 71, Omaha, Nebr.

A teacher of Junior boys says: "Sometimes I review, to make a connecting link. Sometimes a story of everyday life. Sometimes questions of related subjects, with answers from pupils about some experience of which they know."

The teacher of a young ladies' class begins "by a short description of intervening events, trying to keep a connected story and a view of one character or the history as a whole."

A Kansas teacher of boys, of course—during the baseball season works to the lesson from the point of absorbing interest, allowing the boys first to work off what is in their minds. His approach is to talk about baseball.

A choice method is suggested by a teacher of Juniors: "We open our lesson period with short sentence prayers from each one."

A friend of mine went to a class of boys as a substitute. He was about to begin the lesson when one of the boys said, "Mister, our teacher always prays before the lesson." This word of prayer is like the rain, preparing the earth for fruitage.

A girls' teacher of Intermediate pupils: "I review last week's lesson hastily, keeping main characters in view."

Another Junior teacher says: "I always endeavor to find something outside of the Bible story in which the pupil is interested."

A teacher of a Baraca class of men says tersely as to his approach: "Plunge right in."

A teacher of Junior boys: "Different ways. Often a story, an experience I have met with, or something mentioned by our superintendent."

Live Junior boys are thus approached by another teacher: "We have something in current history or sport."

From a teacher of a class of young ladies: "Some foreign remark personal or vital to the times, war or newspaper item—but always with a motive planned."

How to Interest the Inattentive Scholar

A Colorado teacher believes in only one at a time for her young men. "I simply stop talking whenever scholars talk, and remind them that they are in God's house and must try to get the most out of each lesson."

A girls' teacher writes frankly: "I don't always hold the attention, but I generally ask a direct question, such as 'Mary, if you should go as a foreign missionary, to what country would you prefer to go, and why?'"

A boys' teacher thus solves the question: "By saying something in an unexpected way or driving an illustration home personally, maybe using the boy's name in connection with it."

Another boys' teacher gets after the inattentive scholar thus to insure his interest: "I give him something to prepare and bring to the class. If any boy is absent the previous Sunday, I usually get this inattentive scholar to see him through the week and tell me the next Sunday the reason for the boy's absence."

Two Useful Books

"HOW to Conduct a Sunday School," by Marion Lawrance. Full of practical hints and directions for successful Sunday school work. This is a book every Sunday school teacher and officer should own. We may not all become as eminent and efficient Sunday school workers as Marion Lawrance, but we can all be benefited by his practical suggestions, which grow out of his many years of supremely successful Sunday school work. The price of the book is $1.25; for sale by the Christian Herald.

DR. CHARLES F. SITTERLY, of the faculty of the Drew Theological Seminary, has brought out a timely work on the Acts of the Apostles, entitled "Jerusalem to Rome." Sunday school teachers are finding it of great assistance in their work this year with the International lessons, which are based on the book of Acts. Dr. Sitterly gives us a new and illuminating translation of the book, with valuable notes and comments. His spiritual insight and literary skill make the scenes and events of these ancient times live again. The book contains beautiful illustrations and helpful charts and maps. It is a valuable companion for Sunday school workers during this particular year, and will be valuable after the year is done. Price $1.50; for sale by the Christian Herald.

* * *

Young People's Topics for March 26

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR. Great Home Missionaries. Luke 1: 1-20.

EPWORTH LEAGUE. What New Work Ought Our League to Undertake? Isa. 43 : 18-19; Rom. 15 : 20; John 4 : 31-35.

B. Y. P. U. (Conquest Meeting). Christian Character and Christian Conquest. Ps. 15 : 1-5.

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY

SIX MONTHS WEAR IS GUARANTEED

Holeproof Hose have been bought by millions of people for many years. That fact alone is proof enough of extraordinary value.

Have you ever thought what you may be missing by going without this brand?

Here is practically absolute freedom from darning—and you have the choice of pure silk, silk-faced and fine lisle.

Six pairs of the cotton hose are guaranteed to wear without holes for six months. Three pairs of silk are guaranteed three months. If any pairs fail within the specified time you are given new hose free.

Have you heard of a better hose?

The thing to do is to try it. But see that it's genuine Holeproof Hose with the "Holeproof" trademark on the box.

Holeproof Hosiery
FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN

The genuine is sold in your town. Ask us for dealers' names. Prices: Men's, 25c per pair and up. Women's and Children's, 35c per pair and up. Write for free book that tells all about Holeproof.

Holeproof Trade Mark Hosiery
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. 1906

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY COMPANY, Milwaukee, Wisconsin
Holeproof Hosiery Company of Canada, Ltd., London, Canada
Holeproof Hosiery Company, 10 Church Alley, Liverpool, England

We ship direct where no dealer is near, charges prepaid on receipt of remittance

GET MY 1916 BUGGY BOOK FREE

The greatest vehicle catalog ever printed — a postal brings it—postpaid. (7)

SPLIT HICKORY

Famous for beauty, comfort and quality. Nearly a quarter of a million now in use. My new catalog tells how I have split the price—now only $39.25 and up. 150 styles to choose from. Write today. H. C. Phelps, Pres.
THE OHIO CARRIAGE MFG. CO.
Station 219
Columbus, Ohio

I Give 30 Days Free Road Test — Two Years Guarantee.

The Most Brilliant Flower in your Garden this Year

CANNA FIREBIRD

This grand Canna introduced by us three years ago is now universally recognized as the Best Scarlet Green-leaved Variety in existence.

You won't have to go out to your nearest public park to admire it when you have it in your own garden. Price, 3 for $1; Each 35c. Prepaid with Catalog.

Gladiolus Bulblets "Kenwood" Mixture 25 prepaid for 20c. with 160 page catalog. Bulbs, Seeds, Plants. "Special Gladiolus List" Mailed FREE.

CHICAGO VAUGHAN'S SEED STORE NEW YORK
31-33 W. Randolph St. 43 Barclay St.

Burpee's Seeds Grow

Five of the Finest Fordhook Vegetables

For 25c we will mail one packet each of the following famous Fordhook Vegetables: BURPEE'S GOLDEN BANTAM SWEET CORN, the earliest and best first early; BURPEE'S BLACK-RED BALL BEET, deeply colored flesh and fine sweet flavor; BURPEE'S EARLIEST WAYAHEAD LETTUCE, the earliest butterhead variety; CHALK'S EARLY JEWEL TOMATO, earliest first class tomato in the family garden; BURPEE IMPROVED BUSH LIMA BEAN, pods are enormous and well filled with delicious beans. 25c buys all the above. Five collections for $1.00, mailed to different addresses if ordered. AS A COMPLIMENT TO THE LADIES we include with each collection a regular 10c packet of the Fordhook Favorite Asters.

Burpee's Annual for 1916
The Fortieth Anniversary Edition, is brighter and better than ever before. It is mailed free. Write for it today and kindly mention this publication.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO.
Burpee Buildings Philadelphia

Red Comb
Fine Chick Feed
Develops Early Layers

"EARLY gains are quick gains. Quick gains are cheap gains." Leading poultry experts have shown conclusively that first layers are the heavy layers—and the biggest payers.

Now as your chicks begin coming on, develop them for early laying. Red Comb Fine Chick Feed is specially prepared not only to give chicks a healthy start, but to aid in bringing them to early maturity.

"Feeding Poultry for Profit" FREE

Write for this valuable book, written by six of America's leading poultry experts. A postal brings it.

Edwards & Loomis Co.
Mfrs. of Famous Line of Red Horn Dairy Feeds
343-P N. Elizabeth Street
Chicago, Illinois

FEEDING POULTRY FOR PROFIT
RED COMB POULTRY FEED

"Red Comb Means Health"

The Church and Publicity

Continued from page 319

One of the best methods is to get news of the church into the newspapers, but this requires experts. It is illustrated by the success of such evangelists as Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and "Billy" Sunday, both of whom are wise in their use of the daily papers. The great thing is to get the people thinking. Attention is absolutely necessary to the success of a church. Gipsy Smith, Mr. Reisner said, was once preaching in a certain town to two or three hundred people. He hired a band and drew attention and never, after this, had less than 5,000 at a meeting. William Booth could never get a crowd to hear him until he marched through the streets carrying a banner on which he said: "Come and hear an ex-convict preach, and an ex-saloon keeper tell how he was converted." Christian Science is even buying space on the bill-boards and is publishing a daily paper of its own, and succeeds in getting a vast amount of good things into the newspapers. It is time the church of Christ should wake up to the fact that we can use church publicity for the spread of the Gospel, as certainly as it can be used for every other legitimate thing.

In answer to questions from the floor Dr. Reisner said that he wrote a great deal for the daily papers, but never took any pay, and sometimes they did him a favor. He did a great deal of circularizing; it was done four times a year, but he would prefer to do it once a month. In the case of apartment houses, he always secured the permission of the agent to visit the various apartments. He did not think it undignified to put a banner on an automobile. He never allows the moving pictures that he uses in his meetings to interfere with the Gospel message; he uses one reel, fifteen minutes, the first part of the service, and gives himself thirty minutes to drive the message home.

Rev. A. F. McGarrah, lecturer on church efficiency in McCormick Theological Seminary, and author of "A Modern Church Program," said that the church in its advertising must always be honest. Some ministers advertise a lot of things that are not so. If a cordial welcome is promised, give it; a church that does not do this, is assigned to the Ananias class. The church must be genuinely unselfish; the people must not be made to believe that they are sought in order to help pay expenses; the more people come to the church, the greater should be the drain on the pocketbooks of the church members. In church advertising, first secure the members of the church, otherwise outside advertising will not mean anything. Church advertising often fails because there is not enough preparation for follow-up work. Always give plenty of time. Everything should be planned weeks ahead. A church should not ask, "What shall we do next week?" This should be known long before the week arrives. The "Go-to-Church Sunday" should be in the fall, say about the middle of September. The new people that are secured in attendance on the "Go-to-Church Sunday" should be immediately followed up. This is good publicity. A church slogan is a good thing, the locality and the constituency of the community largely determining what it should be.

Make your church publicity budget large, he advised strongly. In some of the city churches it ought to be $2,500 a year. It is a sin and a shame, when a church is not succeeding, to cut down that budget. In a business house they say: "Let's increase our advertising expenditure." We have got to bring the same common-sense into the church. It is a different proposition from business; but after all, there is the same principle, you must spend money to get success. Get a church secretary if you can. A good many ministers have too many things to do and have failed to give good sermons after the people got there. Persuade officers to make the budget large, and out of the results, with new members, pay back any debts you may incur. Don't do it unless you have a preacher who can preach sermons, and unless you have people who will stand by you.

There were many excellent su es-tions from the floor of the Confer ce, including the following:

"The difference between general ad tis-ing and church advertising is this: A man oks at general advertising and asks: 'Wha an I get out of this?' and he looks at c rch advertising and asks: 'What is the c rch trying to get out of me?'"

"It is possible to build up almost an ind of a church with the right kind of adverti g."

"Ministers should study what the ws-papers want."

"A successful community school was ilt up through advertising."

"We are not able to decide wheth our best advertising was through the newsp rs, or through circulars that were distribut ."

"Publicity has increased our financial r ults very materially and our attendance has een very greatly increased."

"The church is not in the entertai ent business, but it should let the world know hat it is for."

"Church advertising must be in the ids of advertising men or men who know h to write advertisements."

"A church that had only twenty in the en-ing congregation now has regularly tw n-dred or more, and this was accomplish by advertising."

"The church owes it to the commun to give publicity to its work."

"The church must not be a close co ra-tion; the community is entitled to know hat it is doing."

"The newspapers know that they get si-ness out of the churches, and they will vor church advertising if it is put in the ght form."

"Some card system of keeping trace ew members and visitors is very useful."

"Follow-up systems with reference t ew members or visitors should be adopted. One church has found it to be of advantage t ave its own printing-press."

"A special church page in the newspa r is a good idea."

"A man who gave money in order th th church might have greater publicity a single month, gladly offered the same a unt for a second month."

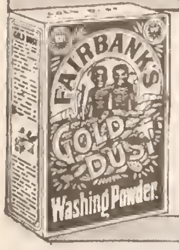
A SIMILAR conference is to be eld in New York in the near fu re, and it is also planned that church ib-licity is to be discussed at the Co en-tion of The World's Advertisers, ext June, in Philadelphia. There is he a permanent organization in Chi go, looking to future conferences bet een the advertising men and the chu es.

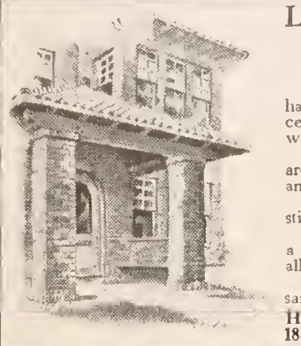
Dish-washing ceases to be a task when Gold Dust is used. The Busy Cleaner does the hard part of the work, without waiting for help.

Dissolve a teaspoonful of Gold Dust in a dishpan full of hot water. The solution thus formed cleans dishes, glassware and silver quickly and easily. Five-cent and larger packages for sale everywhere.

Gold Dust meets your fondest wishes
When it's used for washing dishes.

THE N.K FAIRBANK COMPANY
The Busy Cleaner
GOLD DUST





Like Beautiful Houses of the Old World
Houses built of Greendale Rug Brick

have the mellow charm of Old World buildings which the long centuries bestow—wonderful effects of light and shade and colorful warm tones.

If you are planning to build, don't do so until you have asked your architect about Greendale Rug Brick. They are indestructible and moisture-proof, and are made in many beautiful fadeless colors.

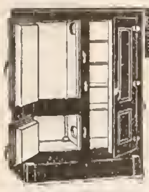
The perfect building material for houses, churches, hospitals, institutions and office buildings.

Avoid inferior texture bricks. Insist on Greendales. They have a quality and beauty far superior to all imitations.

May we send you color plates, samples and full descriptions?

Hocking Valley Products Co.
186 S. High St., Columbus, Ohio

The only patented face brick in America



CLEANABLE REFRIGERATORS

Is your old Refrigerator satisfactory? Smell inside and see. A bad smell is a danger sign. Better get the LEONARD CLEANABLE One-Piece Porcelain Lined and be safe. It can be cleaned in five minutes, has ten walls and air tight locks to save your ice and food. Sold by best dealers or direct from factory $16.50 up. Freight paid. Write today for catalog and free sample of our porcelain lining and insulation. For your health's sake don't delay.

GRAND RAPIDS REFRIGERATOR CO.
117 Clyde Park Ave. Grand Rapids, Mich.

TYPEWRITERS ALL MAKES ALL PRICES

Look at these bargains! Typewriters Rebuilt in our own Factories. Guaranteed for one year.

Remingtons $15 to $65 Smiths $18 to $50
Underwoods $25 to $65 Royals $30 to $65
L. C. Smiths $28 to $60 Olivers $23 to $45

Brand new No. 2 Smith Premiers $45

We have others. Send for catalog describing them. Branch offices in principal cities.

AMERICAN WRITING MACHINE Co., Inc., 345 Broadway, N. Y.

Valuable Book on Cats Free

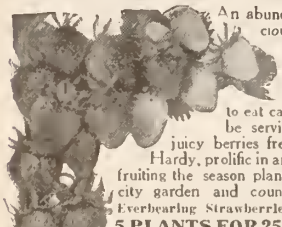
Every Lover of Cats

Should have this book giving valuable information on the care of the great household pet and methods of treatment when ill.

Also book on the dog, mailed free.

Address Dept. D.
DR. A. C. DANIELS, Inc.
172 Milk St., Boston, Mass.

Ripe Fruit Till Snow Flies



An abundance of ripe, luscious Strawberries and Raspberries from early summer to late fall. When others have begun to eat canned fruit you can be serving fine flavored, juicy berries fresh from the vines. Hardy, prolific in any soil and climate, fruiting the season planted; unrivalled for city garden and country berry patch.

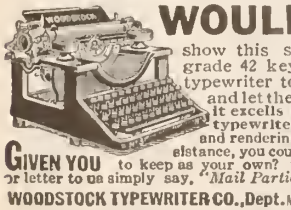
Everbearing Strawberries and Raspberries

5 PLANTS FOR 25c. POSTPAID

We guarantee absolutely every plant that leaves our nurseries. Send 25c. today telling us whether you want Strawberries or Raspberries—plants by return mail. Be sure to specify which plants you want.

Write for FREE catalog of fruit trees, roses, shrubs. Long list of attractive offers.

F. W. BROW NURSERY CO., INC., Box 11, Rose Hill, N. Y.



WOULD YOU

show this standard high grade 42 key fully visible typewriter to your friends and let them see wherein it excells any other $100 typewriter, if by doing this and rendering other small assistance, you could easily have one GIVEN YOU to keep as your own? Then by post card or letter to us simply say, "Mail Particulars."

WOODSTOCK TYPEWRITER CO., Dept. M 176, Chicago, Ill.

SMELLS GOOD

JAPANESE WATER LILY INCENSE

A delightful deodorizer for the home and sick-room, 10c, 25c, 50c boxes. Sold by John Wanamaker, Marshall Field & Co., and many department, drug, and Oriental stores. If not for sale in your city, sent by mail on receipt of price by the MIYAMOTO INCENSE CO., Manufacturers, Saratoga Springs, N.Y. Sample box mailed free.

POMPEIAN OLIVE OIL
ALWAYS FRESH
THE STANDARD IMPORTED OLIVE OIL

Grow your own Vegetables

Cut down living expenses. Easy to save time, labor, and money by using

Planet Jr Garden Tools

This No. 16 Planet Jr will do all the cultivation in your garden in the easiest, quickest and best way. Light but strong. Can be used by man, woman or boy.

New 72-page catalog free. Write
S L Allen & Co
Box 1202D Philadelphia

SANITAS
MODERN
WALL COVERING

CANNOT collect dust or germs and you can wipe it clean with a damp cloth.

Made in every style and design to harmonize with the furnishings of every room. Your decorator will show you latest patterns.

We have helpful booklet and assortment of samples ready for you.

Write for it today.

THE STANDARD OIL CLOTH CO., Inc.
320 Broadway, N.Y.C.
Dept. 3

UNDERWOOI S At Less Than ½ Pr e

10 Days' Free Trial 5-Year Guar ee

RENTED
APPLYING RENTAL on P
SOLD
for CASH or on EASY PAY TS
A typewriter is almost as h a necessity in the home as in ffice. Let us send you one on 10 d fr trial. Get a world fame der wood. Ask for circula Write for agency pro ion
TYPEWRITER EMPORIUM, Chicago (E 892)

AGENTS DEALERS WANTED
DON'T DO THIS

START YOUR FO FROM THE SE

Throw away your crank. art from the seat with a SANDBO 2-Compre on START
92,000 sold. Differs from all rs. Sold on 30 days trial; positively guaranteed. New improve 1916 model—price $14. Wri

SANDBO STARTER CO., 99 Sandbo Bldg., Rock Isla Ill.

6% NET

For 36 years we have been paying our tomers the highest returns consistent with c rvative methods. First mortgage loans of $200 an which we can recommend after the most thoroug rsonal investigation. Please ask for Loan Lis o. 710

$25 Certificates of Deposit also for saving estors

PERKINS & CO. Lawrenc Kans

STAMMERING MECHANICALLY STOPPED!

Invention fits outh —simple as fals eet. Controls muscles art culation. Stamme g impossible minute controller ted. Soon talk correctly with con troller. Special low rates this mont Write Peate & Beattie, Box 81, Spencerp N. Y.

HAIR by MAIL ON APPROVAL
AMAZINGLY LOW PRICES

Write for FREE rated Catalog. Save mon ying guaranteed, hum hair, newest style curls, ches, transformations, et here to you from the l ers

FRANCES ROBERTS CO., Dept. 54, 100 Fifth Ave., York

WANTED AN IDEA!

THINK OF UMI SIMPLE ING TO PATEN Protect your ide they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inve ns." and "How to Get Your Patent."

RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D

STOPPED SHORT

king Tonics, and Built Up on Right Food

Th mistake is frequently made of trying o bu l up a worn-out nervous system on o-ca l tonics.

Ne material from which to rebuild used p ti e cells is what should be supplied, nd t s can be obtained only from proper ood.

"I und myself on the verge of a nervous ollap , due to overwork and study, and to llnes n the family," writes a Wisconsin oma

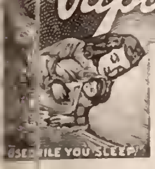
"M friends became alarmed because gre pale and thin and could not sleep ight I took various tonics, but their ffect wore off shortly after I stopped akin them. My food did not seem to ouri me.

"R ding of Grape-Nuts, I determined o st the tonics and see what a change f die would do. I ate Grape-Nuts four imes day with cream, and drank milk lso, ent to bed early after eating a dish f Gr e-Nuts.

"I about two weeks I was sleeping ound. In a short time gained weight nd t like a different woman. Grape-Nuts d fresh air were the only agents used o ac nplish the happy results." "There's Re on." Name given by Postum Co., Battl Creek, Mich.

Ev read the above letter? A new ne pears from time to time. They re uine, true, and full of human nte t.

Vapo Cresolene



for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Catarrh.

lished 1879.

Do ail to use Cresolene for the distressing, and often atal, ctions for which it is recommended.

It a simple, safe, effective and drugless treatment.

Va zed Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough d relieves Spasmodic Croup at once.

It i boon to sufferers from asthma.

Th r carrying the antiseptic vapor, inspired with every breath akes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat, and stops cough, assuring restful nights.

Cre ene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Dipht a.

Cre ne's best recommendation is its 36 years of successfu e. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by Druggists

Try olene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, compose f slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't b you. Of your druggist or from us 10c. in stamps.

HE PO-CRESOLENE CO., 62 Cortlandt St., New York
o eming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

HOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

try your own home 30 days free, no matter where u li Show your friends. Send it back at our expense ou do not want to keep it. Hundreds of thousands aily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, made hig rade material, beautifully finished, smooth design, guaranteed for years by our Two Million Dollar Bond.

Ask your dealers to show you Hoosier Stoves. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today. Write your name and address plainly. No obligations.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

ng Comfort for Tired Feet

In a er's
Arc c o ks
g. in S.
t. Of

Warm, restful, healthful, for bed-chamber, bath, sickroom. Easier than stiff-sole slippers. Worn in rubber boots absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric lined with soft white wool fleece. Washable, unshrinkable. Parker's name in every pair. In all es at dealers or sent post paid for 25c a pair.

M. IKER CO., DEPT. C, 25 JAMES ST., MALDEN, MASS

New Book on Poultry – Free

ow Wo n Meet Ho sehold E enses

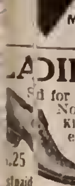
Written by recognized poultry authority. Brimful brand new facts on how to save young chicks -- raise exceptionally strong birds -- get 100 per cent. hatches, and highest market prices.

Tells how to avoid beginner's costly errors -- gives detailed experience successful breeders. You can't go wrong -- explicit instructions, written particularly for women and men starting poultry as side-line.

Also tells how to save money on guaranteed incubators, brooders. Write today -- edition limited.

Model Incubator Co., 28 Henry St., Buffalo, N.Y.
Also 39 Barclay Street, New York City

A DIES! EASE YOUR FEET



S d for free catalogue telling all about our Neat, Noiseless, Flexible, Comfortable, unlined Vici Kid O'Sullivanized PILLOW SHOE. New shoes easy as old ones. No breaking in required. Fit and feel like a kid glove. O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on all styles.

.25
stpaid

PILLOW SHOE CO., Dept. 3
184 Summer Street BOSTON, MASS.

Answers to Bible Contest Inquiries

Question: I note that verses from two different books of the Bible (say Matthew and Mark) are worded almost the same, and what is to govern in such cases? The Gospels frequently have the same idea, only couched in phrases that vary a bit.—Homer A. S., Ogden, Utah.

Answer: In case you find verses so similar in idea and in application to a picture that you don't know which to submit, then why not submit both? This is only by way of general advice, but why not put yourself in the place of the Judges? If you think the verses are so similar, even as to wording, then may not the Judges think so too, and so designate both verses as best for the picture?

Question: In case there are two or more answers given for one picture, would the second, third or fourth answers, if correct, be given the same rating as if the correct answer were stated first? If not, how are the correct answers for verses from two to five to be rated? I ask this because for picture No. 4 there are three verses which it seems to me might apply equally, and in such case I am wondering what will be the rule.—H. A. S., Odgen, Utah.

Answer: Always remember that the prizes will be awarded to those submitting the largest number of best verses for the pictures. If you submit the largest number of best answers, you will be awarded first prize, and no attention will be paid to whether your best verses were in first or fifth place under the pictures. But in case of a tie the relative position of your best verses would possibly be taken into account. If you will read the Rules you will see that the first test given sets which contain the same number of best answers will be to determine which has the smallest number of incorrect answers. If there is a tie upon that point, the relative position of the best verses will then be taken into account, and the set which has its best verses nearest the top of the answer space in each instance will be given precedence.

Question: Pardon me for suggestion, but it seems to me the best plan would be $500.00 for first prize, then twelve prizes of $100.00 each, for there are going to be a great many take part in that Contest, that $100.00 would be a real help and blessing. That would help ten people, whereas one would only be helped by $1250.00 for first prize.—B. L. W.,

Answer: As the amount and the number of prizes have been decided on and announced, it would be impossible to make a change at this time. We thank you, nevertheless.

Question: If my set of answers are not as neatly written as another set, will the latter be given preference by the Judges when awarding prizes?—B. K L. Philadelphia Pa.

Answer: Neatness will not count in the Bible Picture Contest. Neither will an ornamented set of answers be given any preference in any contingency. We expect you to write as clearly as possible. But those whose writing is not so good as others, or those who have crossed out words, or pasted strips of paper over them, etc., will not be discriminated against in any way.

◆

Personality in Smile and Hand Grasp

TO discuss personality without mentioning a pleasant smile and a genial handshake would be as incomplete as discussing good health without mentioning exercise. A natural smile is readily obtained after one has acquired a musical laugh, wholesome thoughts and a pleasant voice. A forced smile is easily detected and usually arouses suspicion, as it is considered a mask. It is the forced smile that usually results in facial contortion. The genuine smile prompted by cheerfulness is accomplished by slightly parting the lips, gently raising the corners of the mouth, and is completed by a happy expression in the eyes. Stand before your mirror and see how easily you can be convinced that this is true, also how well it will pay you to wear a genuine smile. The handshake needs no practice, only remember that a firm grip and a hearty shake inspire confidence and is a token of frankness and are in accord with spontaneous laughter and a well-placed musical voice.

To prove conclusively that personality can be acquired by any one, I have even seen invalids change an irritable and unattractive personality to one of cheer and sunshine, winning all who came in contact with them and accomplishing for themselves many more hours of happiness and many less hours of pain. If you will but conscientiously carry out my instructions you will soon have a personality which attracts, giving pleasure to your friends and great satisfaction to yourself.

THEODORA CARTER,
President, Society of Good Cheer.

The Outward Sign of Inward Service

IN the new Firestone Tire with trade-mark, Red Side Wall and Black Tread, the tire is given an appearance in keeping with the excellence of its inner building.

Perfection in all service-essentials have been matched with outward elegance: the result is an attractive combination of looks with a working record that insures Most Miles per Dollar.

Red Side Wall and Black Tread

The Firestone reputation as Colossus of the tire world is associated in the public mind with giant endurance for the demands of heaviest service. But whatever the size or type you need—for light or heavy car or motorcycle—there is the exact answer in a Red and Black Firestone.

Firestone Tire and Rubber Co.
"America's Largest Exclusive Tire and Rim Makers"
Akron, Ohio
Branches and Dealers Everywhere

FIRESTONE NON SKID

Firestone
The Red Side Wall and Black Tread

SAVE HALF Your Paint Bills

By using GOOD PAINT which will give LASTING SERVICE and SAVE YOU cost of frequent repainting.

Ingersoll Paint

has proved itself the MOST DURABLE by 74 years' use and is the ONLY PAINT Endorsed by the "GRANGE" 42 years. Made in all colors—for all purposes.

Get my FREE DELIVERY offer.

It is to your advantage to use the BEST PAINT. You can buy it "Direct from our Factory" at WHOLESALE PRICES, and

SAVE MIDDLEMEN'S PROFITS

This means a big saving to you, both in first cost and satisfactory results.

Ingersoll Paint Book
All about Paint and Painting

Tells all about Paint and Painting for Durability. How to avoid trouble and expense caused by Paints fading, chalking and peeling. Information WORTH MANY DOLLARS TO YOU —FREE with Sample Color Cards. Write me.

Do it Now—I will Save you Money

O. W. INGERSOLL
253 Plymouth Street
Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Oldest Ready Mixed Paint House in America
Estab. 1842.

HARRIS HOME No. 61

$583 BUYS THE MATERIAL TO BUILD THIS HOUSE

Clear and knotless lumber and millwork in all exposed places. Creosoted foundation wall plates, galvanized guttering and down spouting; exquisite hardware. All materials in perfect harmony with the design. Complete building plans and expert architectural service included.

Sensibly Cut-To-Fit THE HARRIS WAY

The Harris Way is the most economical and perfect of all cut-to-fit building methods. It is original with us. Better, simpler and different from others. It saves you hundreds of dollars on the cost of your home. See convincing proof of these claims in our free Book of Plans.

No Money Down

Materials are shipped all at once from Chicago. Quick shipments. You risk nothing. All our liberal terms and guarantees are explained in our Book of Plans

Free Book of Plans

Send for our Book of Plans No. AB 202 today. It shows over a hundred Harris homes, barns, garages, etc., in beautiful halftone engravings. Explains everything in detail, gives prices, floor plans, etc. Mailed FREE.

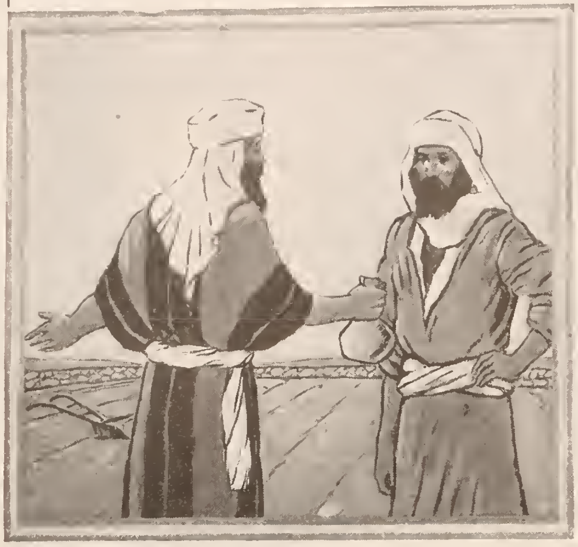
HARRIS BROTHERS COMPANY
35th and Iron Sts CHICAGO

INCREASING ENTHUSIASM

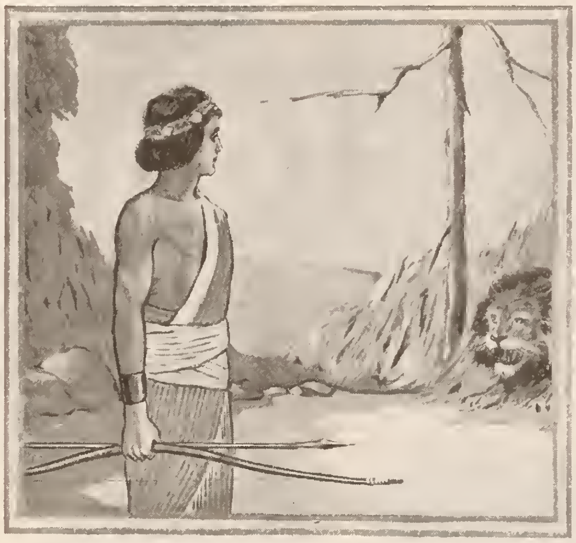
EXTRAORDINARY INTEREST AWAKENED IN THE

Christian Herald Bible Picture Contes

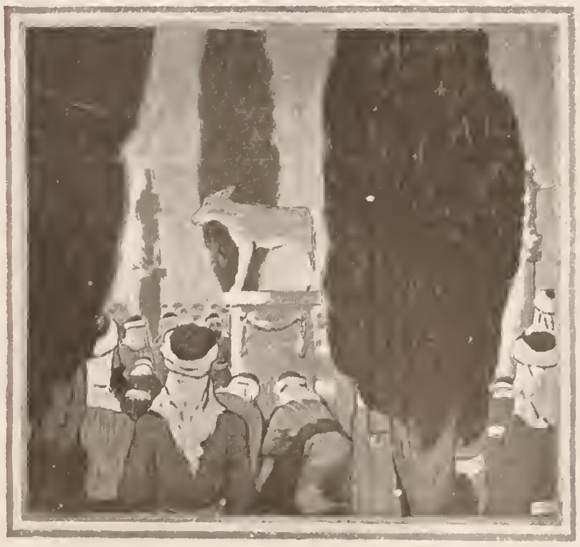
Picture No. 37



Picture No. 38



Picture No. 39



ENTHUSIASM! Yes, that's the word for it. Readers of The Christian Herald awakening to the delightfully fascinating pastime of fitting Bible verses to pictures.

WIDESPREAD INTEREST. Judging from what is said in the letters that reach whole families—probably neighborhoods, too—are keenly interested.

PROFIT AND ENJOYMENT. The pleasure of working out, evolving, solving discovering the verses that fit the pictures is certainly an excellent reward in itself. Th are, however, sums in cash, totaling three thousand five hundred dollars ($3500.00) to paid in 419 rewards to participants who send in the best sets of verses.

SUPER-REWARDS OF LASTING VALUE. Beyond question, those who part pate in this unique contest will improve themselves in one or more respects which sho prove exceptionally helpful to them throughout their entire lives. If you wish to tr your memory and have recreation while doing it, you should enter this contest. If y would like to improve your ability to think—to concentrate your mind—to become ment alert—then enter this contest.

A DELIGHTFUL ACCOMPLISHMENT. You will be proud, indeed, if in the cou of a conversation or argument you can, without hesitation, quote a verse from the Bi that will be distinctly apropos and which will verify your view. After you have beco a participant in our Bible Picture Contest it should be comparatively easy for you to att this admirable accomplishment.

BEGIN RIGHT NOW. This Contest will continue. All the pictures hithe published, also the rules and other requisites are obtainable. The simple way to particulars is to write at once (a post card will do) asking for FULL INFORMATI ABOUT THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BIBLE PICTURE CONTEST.

How to Obtain "Gems from the Bible," Reply Book and Contest Pictur

If You Are Not Now a Christian Herald Subscriber

1. We shall enter your subscription to The Christian Herald for one year (52 weeks), commence as soon as we hear from you; and we shall at once send you the Bible Picture Cont OUTFIT, on receipt of two dollars, which pa for everything.

If You Are Now a Christian Herald Subscriber and Wish to Renew or Extend Your Subscript

2. Supposing your subscription is about to expire, we shall renew your subscription to The Christian Herald for one year, beginning from the date of expiration of your present subscription; and we shall at once send you the Bible Picture Contest OUTFIT, on receipt of two dollars, which pays for everything.

3. Supposing your subscription has been renewed recently, or is already entered for a l term, then we shall extend your subscription The Christian Herald for one year, beginn from the date (whatever it may be) when y present subscription would expire; and we sh at once send you the Bible Picture Cont OUTFIT, on receipt of two dollars, which pa for everything.

If You Are Now a Christian Herald Subscriber Send Us a New Subscription for Another Pers

4. Assuming you do not care at this time to renew or extend your own subscription, we shall send you the Bible Picture Contest OUTFIT absolutely free, provided you send $1.50 with name and address of a new subscriber, to whom The Christian Herald is to be sent for one year—you may be presenting the subscription as a gift to that person or you may collect the price from him (or her).

5. The other person for whom the subscription to The Christian Herald entered may also have a Bible Picture Cont OUTFIT, if, instead of sending us $1. you forward the combination price of dollars; and you will of course then, t receive your OUTFIT free. Two Outfits thus be sent.

Whether or Not You Are Now a Christian Herald Subscriber

6. We shall send you the Bible Picture Contest OUTFIT on receipt of your subscription order for one year of The Christian Herald and one year of the Modern Priscilla (a monthly magazine for the home), with $2.50, which pays for everything.

7. We shall send you the Bible Picture Contest OUTFIT on receipt of your subscription order for one year of The Christian Herald and one year of the Orange Judd American Agriculturist (a first-class weekly farm paper which will come to you edited for your own section of the country), with $2.50, which pays everything.

8. We shall send you the Bible Picture Cont OUTFIT with any book offer we make connection with The Christian Herald when sending in money for the offer you a fifty cents to its total price.

9. We shall send you Bible Picture Cont OUTFIT on receipt of your subscription or for one year of The Christian Herald and o year of the American Messenger, with $2. which pays for everything.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York Cit

MAKE OTHERS HAPPY Tell them about this BIBLE PICTURE CONTEST. Sh them how they may combine pleasure with profit. All m enter—from children to grandparents. Now is the time to obtain information and make the sta

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

T E editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer ny question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of gen l interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must con n name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de me. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

H. C. R. Please define social service. In our Young People's Society such work as carrying flowers to the sick and other things of this sort are spoken of as social service, but it seems to me that the term implies much more. To me it means associating with the ommon people and lifting them up to the highest standrds of Christ; not only associating with the rich, but he poor as well; in other words, a social equality. Vhat is your own definition?

ial service is an exceedingly broad term. It rea includes every form of service and activity for oth s, but you are right in thinking that much of the soc service recommended nowadays is superficial. Of urse these things ought to be done—the taking of wers to the sick, visiting the poor and the prisone giving food and drink and clothing to the needy. Jes emphasized these matters and commanded all his llowers to perform this kind of service. But you are ght in saying there should be back of the service a r friendliness; and this of course Jesus demands. Lo ll wrote, "The gift without the giver is bare." Pa praised the Macedonian Christians because in the charity they "first gave their own selves to the Lo and unto us." But social service includes even mo than this. It means not only to give and to serve, but lso to reconstruct, to remake society so that it sha conform more nearly to the program of Jesus, so tha ove shall rule instead of greed, and justice be done to

T. H., Lucy, N. M. By the Treaty of Paris, De nber 10, 1898, Spain ceded the Philippine Islands to e United States, which paid $20,000,000 for the

s. D. W B., Muncy, Pa., writes "In your issue of uary 19 in the Mail-Bag there appeared an artiele hich attracted my attention and brought to mind a v y pleasant occasion. In May, 1898, on returning fro the Pacific Coast with my sister, Mrs. F. B., of Ru Ranch, Nevada, I spent some time with her, and while there we visited a neighbor ranchman na d Rowland, of Warm Creek, Nev. Mrs. Rowland sho d us a worn and tattered Union flag, which she sai vas the dying gift to her from her father, Captain Wi m Driver, of Nashville, Tenn. She said he had sai twice around the world with that flag. On one of home trips during the rebellion, he hoisted this flag n the state capitol and named it 'Old Glory,' and efore the Union men marched into Nashville he to this same flag and hoisted it from his own house, an old his wife and children that he would shoot any on aring to molest or tear down the flag. Captain Dr r was a native of Massachusetts and true to the Un n. His wife was a Tennesseean. All their childre were born in Nashville, and naturally were in sy athy with their homeland. During the rebellion th ag was preserved by sewing it in a quilt which wa always in the possession of its owner. Captain Dr r is buried in Tennessee. His daughter, Mrs. Ro and, showed us a photograph of her father's mo ument on which there is a cut of the flag and its his y. We are proud to be among those who have se and handled the original 'Old Glory' flag."

R. S., Gainesville Ga 1. Why does our Secretary of State, in his letters to foreign powers, sign his name simply "Lansing" without giving his first name or initials? 2. What is meant by "hyphenated American"? 3. What does "persona non grata" mean? 4. Soixante-quinze, Boche, piou-piou, Italia irredenta? 5. An envoy extraordinary? 6. What is the difference between an emperor and a king?

It is a diplomatic custom, sanctioned by interna nal usage. 2. A hyphenated American is an America citizen of foreign birth, the name of whose country he refixes to that of his adopted country, the two be united by a hyphen. 3. "Persona non grata" is tin for "a person not agreeable" or "an unwelcome pe on," and is applied to the diplomatic representati of a government who has in some way offended the go rnment to which he is accredited. 4. "Soixante-qu ze" is French for seventy-five. "Soixante" m s sixty; "quinze" means fifteen; total, seventy-five. "B he" is the current French slang name for a German so er. "Piou-piou" is a French slang term for soldier. " lia irredenta" means "unredeemed Italy" and refers to th talian-speaking countries now under the yoke of Austria. 5. nvoy extraordinary" has in the dictionary two meanings: (a diplomatic representative ranking below an ambassador; re ent minister; and (b) a diplomat dispatched on a special mi on. 6. The title of emperor is considered to express m dignity than that of king. Originally, among the Romans, it denoted simply military command, acquiring a new m ning when it was conferred on Julius Cæsar and his succe rs as rulers of the Roman Empire. It is sometimes used to esignate the ruler of a federation of kingdoms, as in the ca of Germany; but this usage is by no means universal, as seen in the case of Brazil, China, and even Haiti, whose ru at one time called himself emperor.

F. P., New York City. What is the attitude in general of the Protestant churches (1) toward the labor problem in the United States? (2) toward the labor unions? (3) Is it possible for a good Protestant to be a member of a labor union?

1. The attitude of most of the Protestant churches toward the labor problem is growing constantly more satisfactory. The report of the commission on this problem appointed by the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America takes advanced ground, decrying the injustice suffered by the laborer and urging measures for his relief. The special report of this commission on the strike in Colorado was very strongly on the side of the working man and altogether fearless in its denunciations of the wrongs he had suffered. 2. You will find also that the attitude of the Protestant churches toward labor unions is growing constantly more friendly and encouraging. Of course individual bodies, pastors, church leaders and congregations may assume a reactionary attitude, but the number of those whose sympathies are strongly with the workers is constantly growing greater. 3. It is certainly possible in our estimation for a good Protestant to be a member of the labor union, and very many of them are.

The HORSE SPEAKS

Margaret E. Sangster Jr.

HE sleeps alone on the frosty ground,
The air is still and the battle sound
Roars far away—they have let him lie,
All cold and pale 'neath the winter sky.
He sleeps—and I on my guard will stand,
A friendless horse in a stranger land.

He sleeps alone, in a tired sleep,
I know the watch he has had to keep,
I know the tears and the pain and loss. . . .
And yet he sleeps near the wooden cross!
When the troop returns he will mount and ride.
How dare they say that my master died?

He sleeps alone and his shining blade
Is by his side . . . I am not afraid—
What though the rent in his coat drips red,
My master lives—he is never dead!
Yet his eyes are closed and he did not glance,
Ahead of him when they called, "Advance!"

He sleeps alone on the frosty ground,
And I—I fear as I glance around;
The night draws on, and the wind is shrill—
Yet on he sleeps—ah, I fear he will Awake no more at the bugle's call . . .
Oh, why did God let my master fall?

A Subscriber, Vancouver, B. C. 1. What was the origin of the High German, the Low German or Saxon, the Prussian, the Syrian? 2. Are the twelve tribes the only descendants of Abraham?

1. The Germans belong to the Teutonic branch of the Aryan race, as to whose origin there are two theories. One, first propounded by Max Müller, is that the Aryans originated in Central Asia, north of India; the other, now generally held, is that they are the descendants of the primitive inhabitants of Central Europe. The High German and the Low German are variations of a common Teutonic language, the name "Low" meaning "belonging to the lowlands," as distinguished from the dialect spoken in the highlands farther south. The Prussians are of the same general origin as other Germans, though their name is derived from that of a Lithuanian (non-Teutonic) tribe who lived in what is now the province of East Prussia. The Syrians are Semites, or descendants of Shem, the son of Noah. The Syriac is a Semitic language, similar to Hebrew. 2. No. Among the descendants of Abraham are the Ishmaelites, or Arabs, who not only filled the Arabian peninsula, but have planted colonies in India, northern Africa, and Spain; and the Edomites, or descendants of Esau, who were a numerous and powerful people of antiquity.

C. K., Covington, Pa. In speaking of another state, we use the phrase "sister state." Why not say "brother state"? In speaking of a ship or a locomotive, we use the word "she." Why not use the word "he" at times?

This is one of the phenomena of language which it is difficult to explain logically. It is sometimes necessary to speak of a state or nation as a person, as when we say "Turkey declared a holy war," "Rome dreamed of world-wide empire." It would sound strangely if we were to say "it" concerning a country when it was thought of as doing what only a person can do. Also a ship or locomotive, as it seems to move like a living thing, is often personified. Names of countries and states are usually feminine in grammar and even sometimes are personal names as well; as, for instance, Virginia, Georgia and Carolina, hence she. It would sound strange to say "he" for Carolina or Virginia. Besides these, the names that end in "a" are mostly Latin nouns of the feminine gender. The same may be said of those ending in "y," as Germany, Italy, etc., which were originally written Germania, Italia. We follow the Latin usage in this matter, as well as in calling a ship feminine, the sun masculine and the moon feminine, although our German ancestors made the sun feminine and the moon masculine, as our kinsmen in Germany do today.

Reader, Morgantown, W. Va. Kindly state who have been and who are now considered religious leaders of America.

Opinions would probably differ widely as to what men have been the religious leaders of America and what Christian workers could be considered as holding that rank today. In any list of past leaders of America's religious life should be included the names of Jonathan Edwards, Francis Asbury, Charles G. Finney and D. L. Moody. Many other names present themselves as those of men who had wide influence: Phillips Brooks, A. J. Gordon, Timothy Dwight, William Ellery Channing, Mark Hopkins, Horace Bushnell, Bishop Matthew Simpson, Henry Ward Beecher, Howard Crosby, Bishop William Taylor, John Hall, Theodore L. Cuyler, A. T. Pierson, J. R. Miller, S. H. Hadley. In any lists of forceful leaders of the present the following names at least should be included, though there are many other men who are having a large and splendid influence upon present-day Christians: John R. Mott, Robert E. Speer, J. H. Jowett, W. A. Sunday, C. M. Sheldon, Francis E. Clark, Bishop J. H. Vincent, F. L. Patton, Josiah Strong, J. Wilbur Chapman, R. A. Torrey, S. D. Gordon.

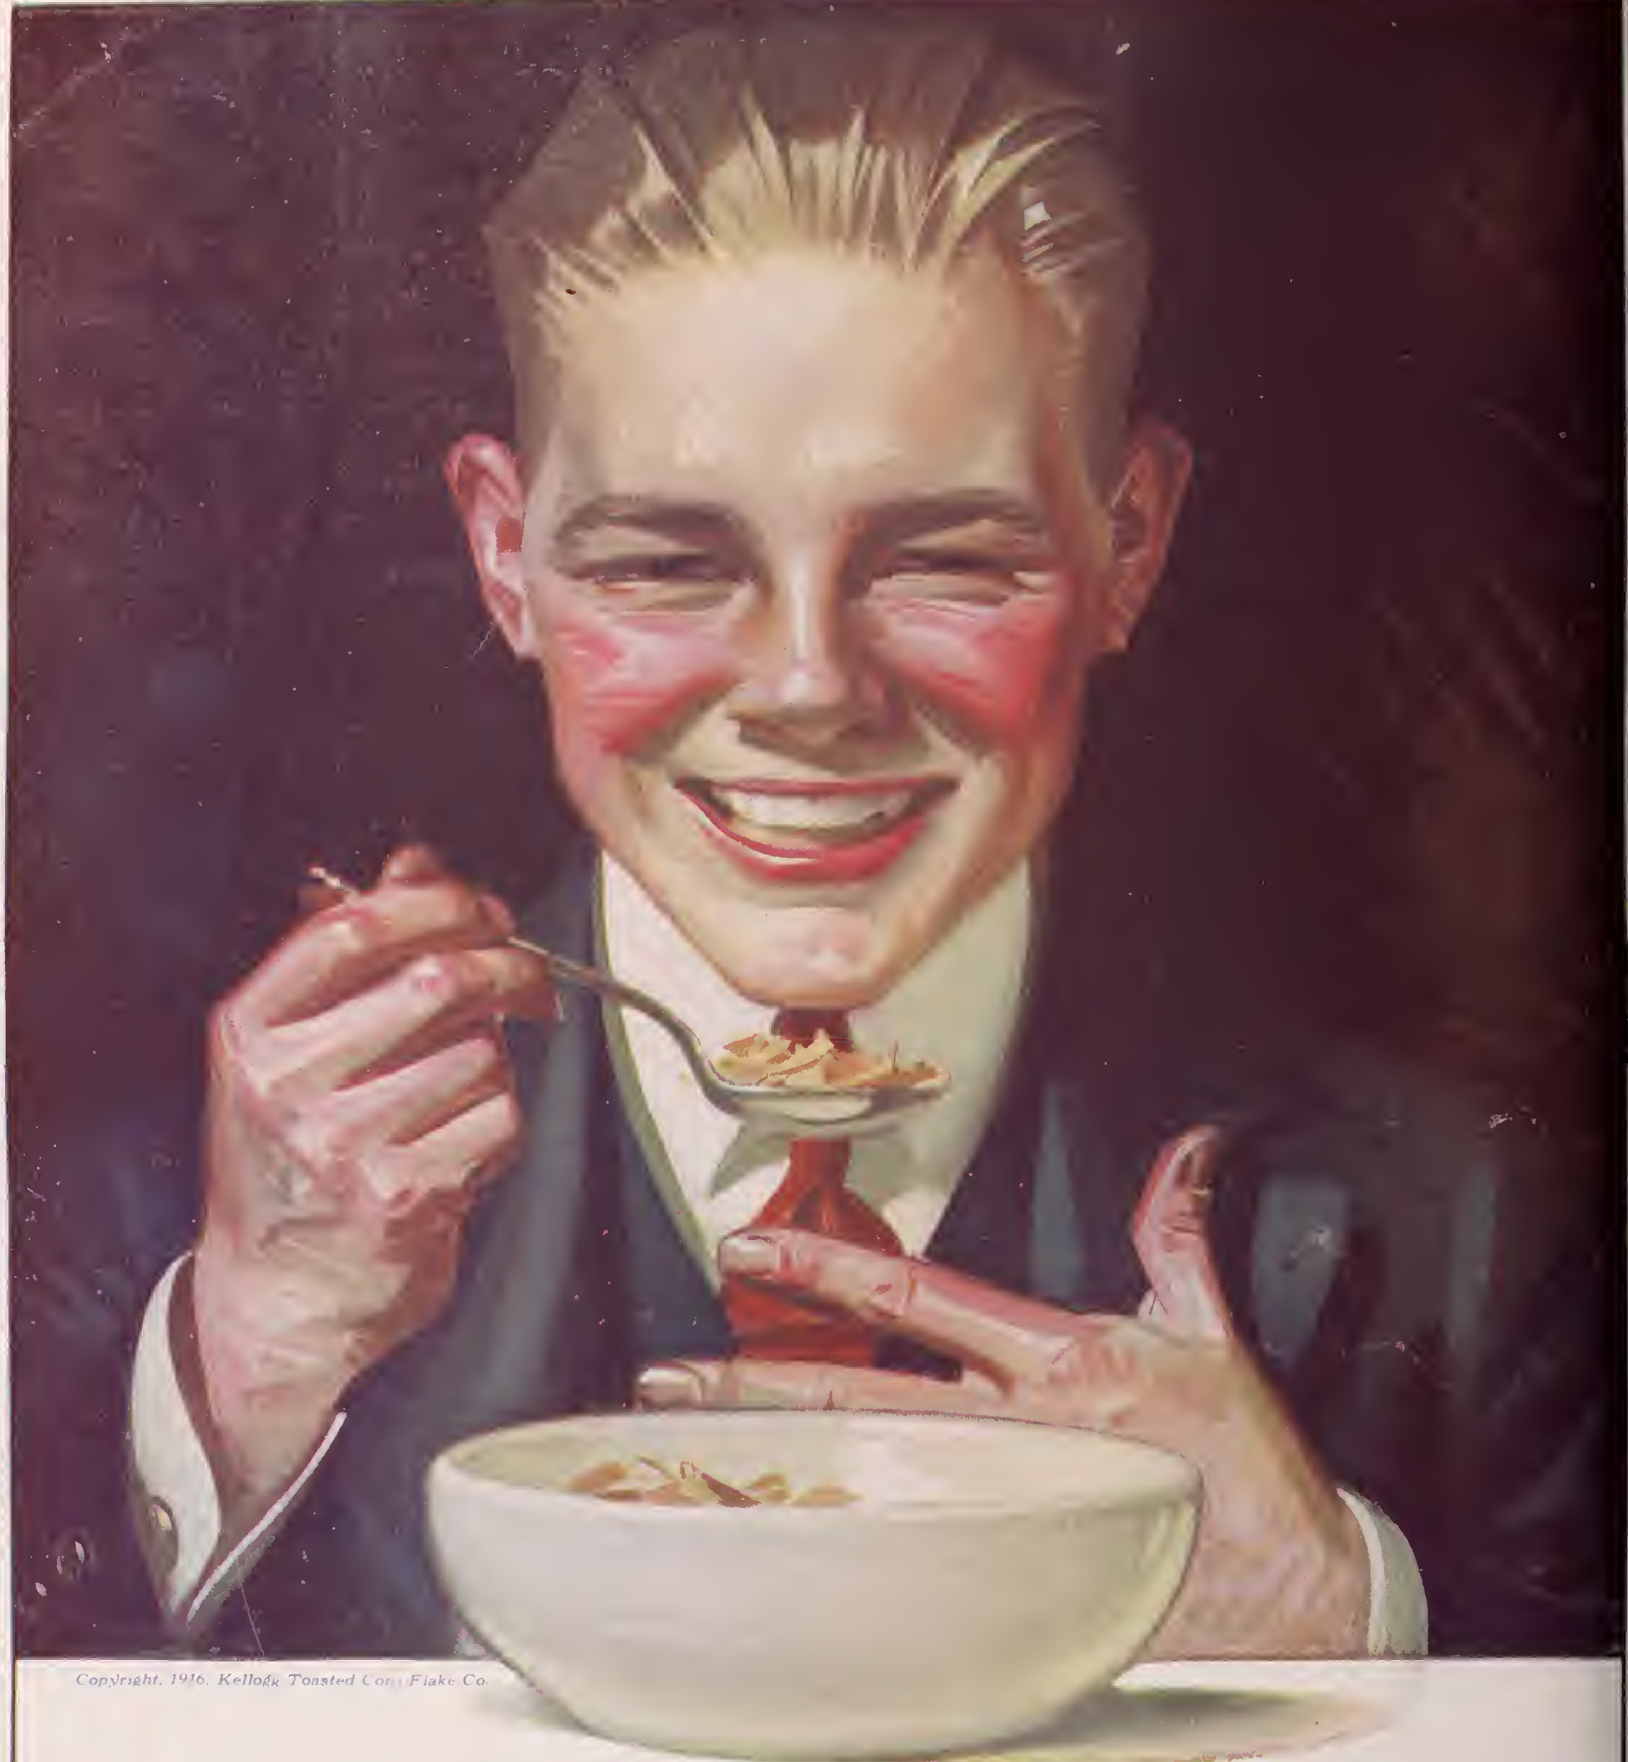
Mrs. E. R., Flickville, Pa. If the descent of the Holy Spirit took place on the day of Pentecost, were none of the Old Testament characters filled with the Holy Spirit? If not, what took the place of it?

There is no doubt that many of the Old Testament characters were indeed filled with the Holy Spirit. Such saints as Enoch, Moses, Isaiah, Ezekiel, felt in their souls the same fire of God which came to the hearts of the disciples on the day of Pentecost. Yet although the Holy Spirit was the same both before and after Pentecost, there was undoubtedly a difference in the experience of receiving him, and also a difference in the universality of the gift. That is, those who received the Holy Spirit after the death of Jesus and based their faith on the power of that death must have had something in their consciousness which no Old Testament saint could have had. The New Testament saints, those who received the Holy Spirit at Pentecost and all those who have received him since then, have in their minds the fact of the death of Jesus on the cross. They know that, in Christ, God himself was suffering for their sins; and in that knowledge and that experience there is a tenderness and power which those who lived before Calvary never could have had. Further, after that death of Christ on the cross and the rending of the veil in the temple, the gift of the Holy Spirit became available for everybody in the world. God was henceforth to reveal himself not only to the Jews, but to those of every nation who would believe the Gospel. There is no longer any need of temple or of sacrifice. Every one may enter into the Holy of Holies, where formerly only the high priest could go, and meet God face to face. Rather, every heart may be itself a Holy of Holies in which God dwells continually by his Spirit.

Constant Reader, Goshen, Va. 1. The problem is one for the church itself to decide. We cannot judge, not knowing all the facts in the case. 2. Prov. 15 : 8 means that God, who sees into the heart of men, can judge between hypocrisy and sincerity, and that the pretence of religion without the reality is an abomination in his sight. It is not for any man, however, to set himself up as a judge over others, and to decide whether a certain person is or is not sincere in his religious attitude. Of open sin one may be permitted to judge, but "God alone knoweth the heart," and we should be careful not to claim such knowledge for ourselves, lest we sin.

G. A. L., Grayson, Ky. We have no knowledge of the discovery of such a tablet. Write to Professor Albert Clay, Babylonian Department, Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

Mrs. M. D., Cobourg, Canada. All Christians are not alike, temperamentally. Some are kind, gentle, sympathetic and deeply spiritual, like John "the beloved apostle," while others are impulsive, headstrong and bold to the point of rashness. We would not condemn those, however, who may differ with us as long as we agree on vital principles.



Copyright, 1916, Kellogg Toasted Corn Flake Co.

THE clear-skinned, keen-eyed, athletic boy of today is fully alive to the wonderful flavor of Kellogg's Toasted Corn Flakes. He misses this flavor in the imitations of Kellogg's.

He wants the Original Toasted Corn Flakes—with their crisp, fresh-from-the-oven taste—and you can leave it to him to get them.

It is a remarkable fact that there is no storage space at Kellogg's. Each day's production is shipped crisp from the ovens in the Kellogg WAXTITE package—that keeps the fresh, good flavor in and all other flavors out

W. K. Kellogg

WAXTITE
THE PERFECT PACKAGE
Kellogg's
TOASTED
CORN
FLAKES
W. K. Kellogg
KELLOGG TOASTED CORN FLAKE C
BATTLE CREEK MICH

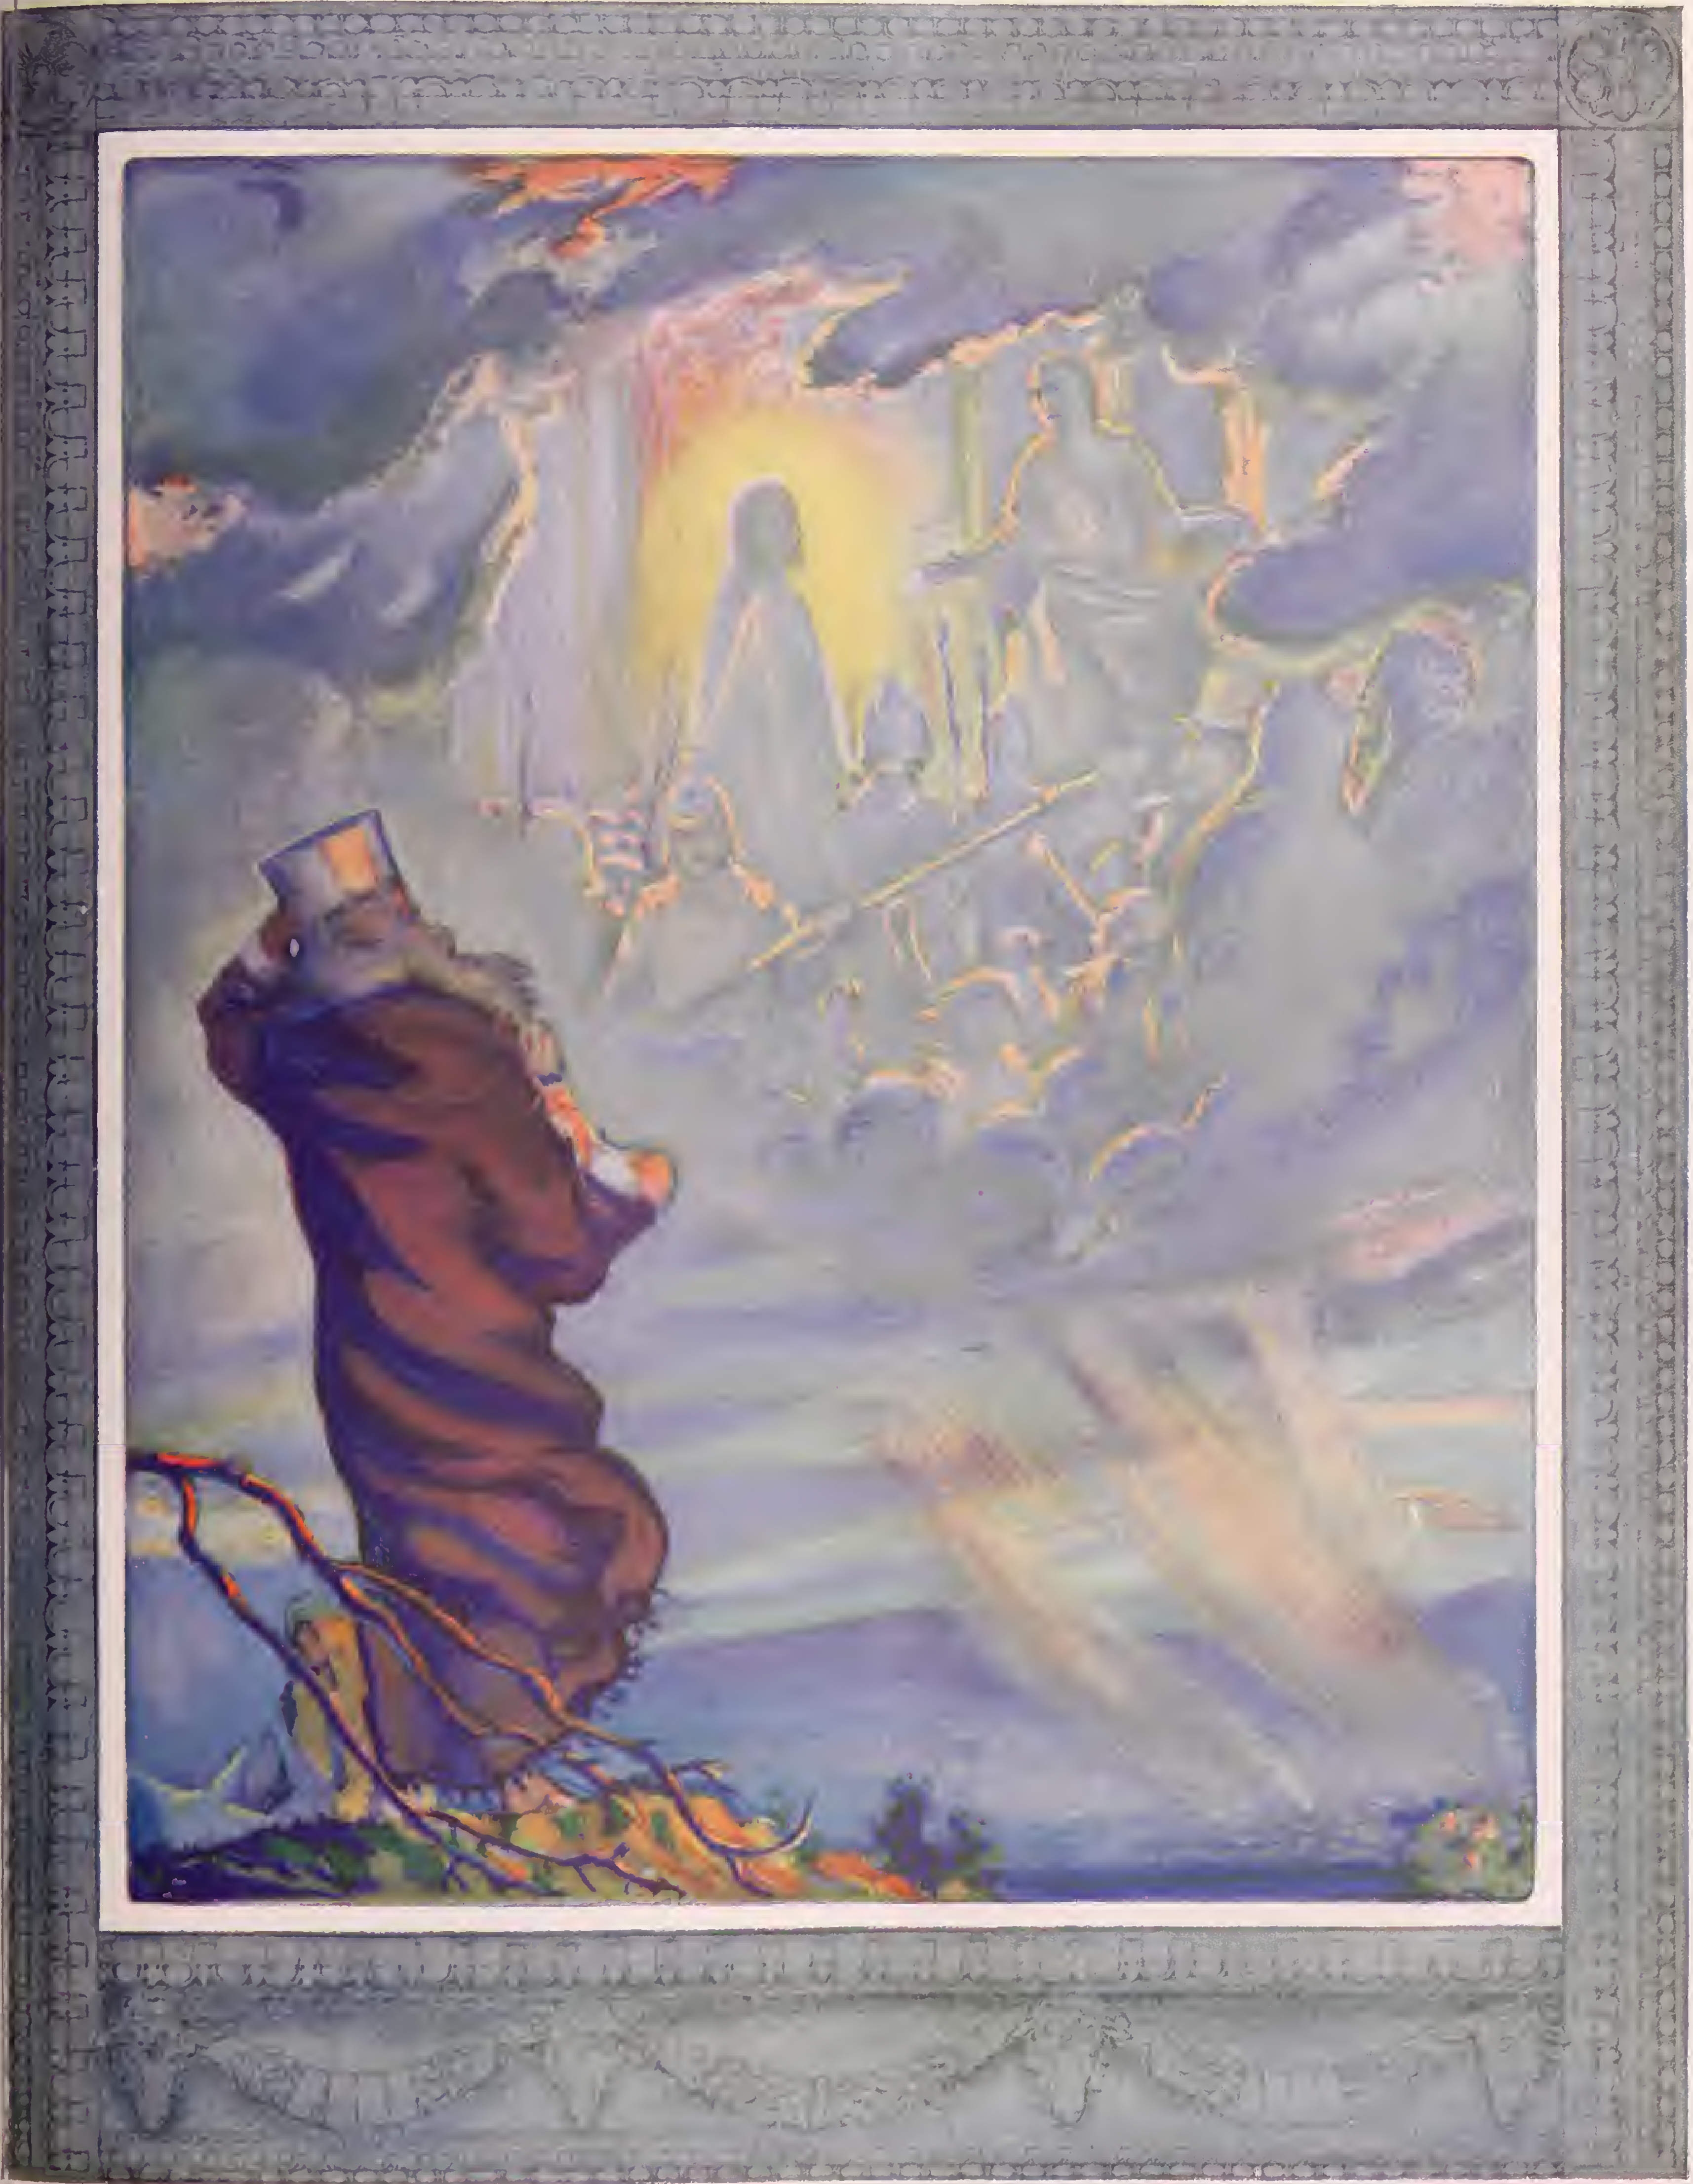
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, MARCH 22, 1916

VOL. 39 —NO. 12. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

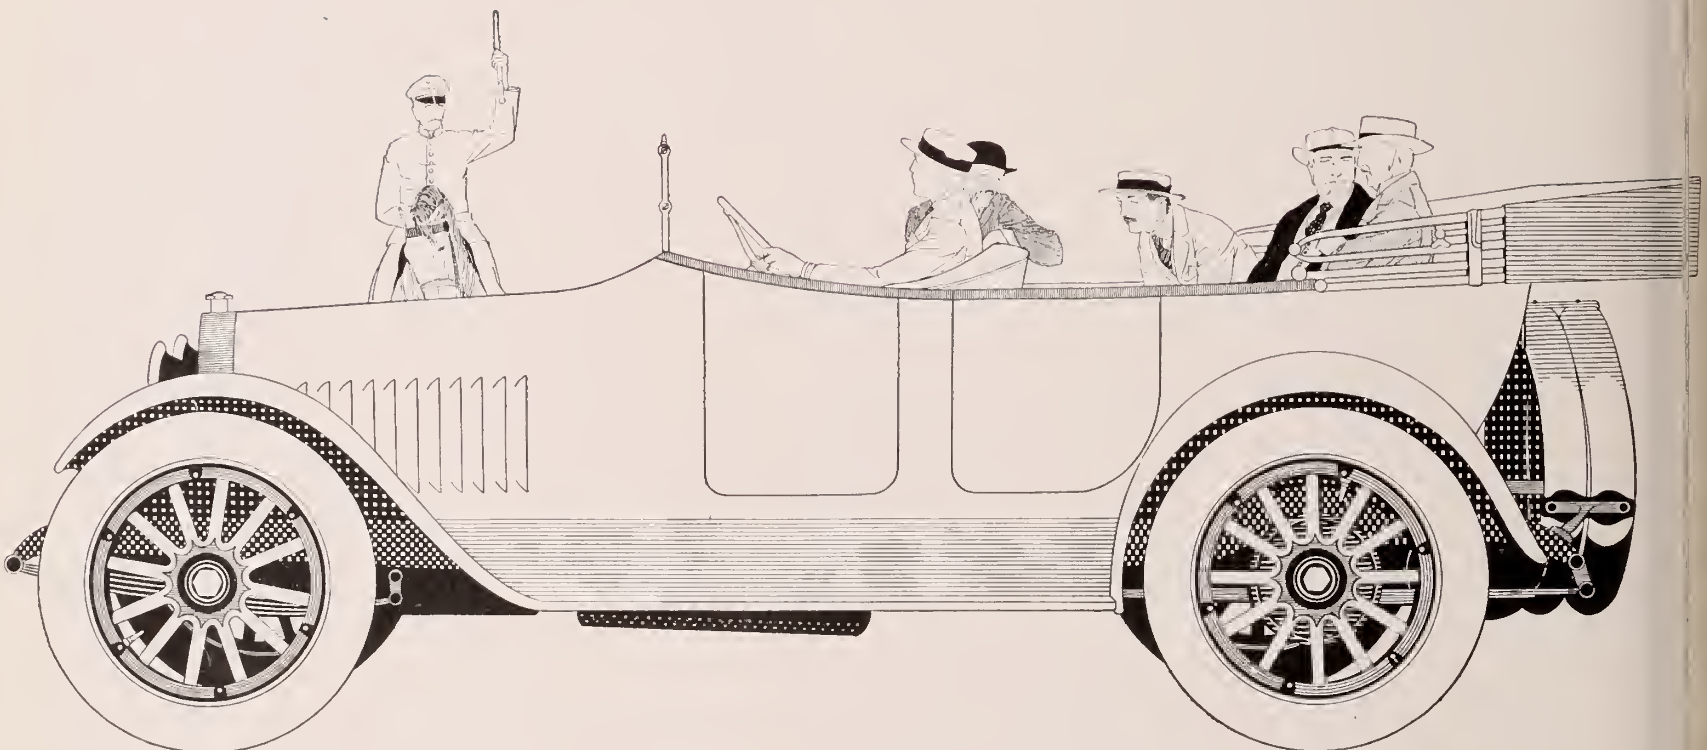


Painting by H. Willard Ortlip

THE VISION OF ISAIAH. "He is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he openeth not his mouth."

CHALMERS · MOTOR · CO
Detroit, Mich. U.S.A.

Quality First



High Engine Speed is Attained With Absolute Safety in the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmes

Picture six sinewy arms—her pistons—spinning the crankshaft at the rate of 3400 revolutions per minute.

Then picture the little nostril of her carburetor inhaling a sufficient mist of gasoline to fill her cylinders with a fresh charge in less than one-twentieth part of a second.

There's never a gasp or moan as she breathes in the dormant, pent-up energy of her gasoline, brings it to life and compels it to perform.

Her magnificent engine speed spins every gallon of gas into 18 miles of untroubled travel.

There's a sparkle to her going that is absent in the mere brute might of the ordinary low-speed engine.

For here useless might is transfigured into economy, instantaneous pick-up, and obedience that's half-human.

3400 r. p. m. represents the greatest crankshaft speed we have ever heard of. And Chalmers engineers have achieved it with absolute safety.

The heavy, hardened $2\frac{1}{4}$ inch crankshaft is balanced to the weight of a hair by ingenious machining.

All useless weight, pressure, and friction have been removed from all reciprocating parts and bearing surfaces—and 12-ounce aluminum pistons take the place of $2\frac{1}{2}$ to 3-pound cast-iron pistons of the past.

And finally, a perfect balance of power is acquired and delivered each of the six cylinders.

Hence throbless, fretless flight—due to a pleasant, even strean might rushing to the rear wheels at every speed.

That is the primary cause of this car's wonderful riding comfort— the real reason why it adds 1000 miles to the life of your tires.

The mettle, the spirit, the liveliness of this vehement, yet obedie beast gives you a sense of delight that you never knew a popular-pri car could bring you.

You'll know, the instant you throw out the clutch and step on little button, why the 3400 r. p. m. Chalmers has won its way right the cockles of every owner's heart.

You'll understand why this is the car that gives motoring wholly and unguessed values.

Touring Car or Roadster, $1050 Detroit; $1475 in Canada
Cabriolet - - $1400 Detroit; $1900 in Canada
Color options: Meteor Blue, or Oriford Maroon with gold stripe

Chalmers Motor Company Detroit, Michig

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

To the Help of a Forward-Looking People

By WILLARD PRICE

"THE world has a right to expect something truly great from this Panama Congress." So spoke Dr. John R. Mott in the opening session of the ten-day Congress on Christian W k in Latin America which met in Panama during February. He had reason for the expectation. Be re him were gathered over three hundred of the st ngest religious leaders of Christendom. Twenty-on nations were represented, including most of the re blics of Latin America, the islands of the West In s, the United States, Canada, England, Spain an Italy.

presentatives of more than fifty denominational or nizations were present. The Protestant Episcopa ishop sat down beside the Seventh Day Adventis Presbyterian, Lutheran, Moravian, Baptist, M odist, Waldensian and Salvation Army men we gathered together. Not that they had decided to gree on all matters of faith and doctrine! Far fr it! But they had agreed to forget their disagreeme s for a time and unite whole-heartedly in a single gre enterprise—the planning of the social and rel ous conquest of Latin America. Dr. Mott was rig when he said the world might properly expect gre things of this congress.

hink I can not do better than simply to ll the day-by-day story of the congress, let g the facts fall into place practically in e order in which they appeared during th iscussions.

e note of cooperation was struck by Ro rt E. Speer on the first day. As chairman of e congress he made the key-note speech, ta g as his subject "Our Attitude."

Not only must our attitude be one of cle discernment and compassionate love," sai Dr. Speer. "It must also be stripped of th selfishness which can only see from our an of vision, which can only include our pa cular brotherhood, which can only live by he light of our own tradition and expe nce. From these selfishnesses we must be berated if we would pass out into the gr ness of Christ and be fitted to do his w in all these Latin American lands."

though an invitation was extended sev al months ago to the Roman Catholic Ch ch to take part in the congress, the in ation was not accepted. However, ce in prominent members and ecclesiastic of the church have expressed their good wi toward the congress. Most notable an g these expressions was a letter from th Archbishop of the West Indies, which wa read before the congress by Dr. Speer:

> Im deeply interested in the congress to be held at nama, to which you are proceeding. I have rea with care the various bulletins issued by the Pr aratory Committee in New York. I can not do that the spirit manifested in these advance re ts will prevail in the congress itself, and that there will be a sincere desire on the part of all those who will ultimately influence the decisions of the congress to make the full use of this great opportunity for obtaining reliable information as to the religious and moral condition of the communities in Latin America, and the educational needs. I trust that when the final reports are circulated they will, together with the influences started by the congress, help to begin a new state of affairs in the vast regions of country which you have under your purview.
>
> May God give you his blessing, and therein the power to exercise a sound judgment and discretion in what is said and in what is recommended: and grant that all may be done in the deepest love of truth and charity.

Possibly a Future South American Bishop

A Child of Bolivia: May She Never Become Like this Old Beggar Woman of Peru

IT was interesting evidence of the cosmopolitanism of the congress that the proceedings were carried on in three languages—English, Spanish and Portuguese. Many of the most impressive addresses were made in the Latin languages, and were later published in English for the benefit of those whom Dr. Speer described as "Spanish illiterates."

The Republic of Panama extended greetings to the congress through its representative, Señor Ernesto Lefevre, Minister of Foreign Affairs. He stated that although he himself was a devout Roman Catholic, he honored the purposes which had brought together this congress, and offered the cordial wishes of his government for the success of this enterprise. The address was delivered in Spanish and then repeated in English.

Perhaps the method of business employed throughout all the sessions of the congress should be summarized right here. For the past couple of years eight commissions, each made up of more than two hundred members and correspondents, distinguished men of two hemispheres, have been at work preparing eight tremendous reports dealing with every conceivable phase of life and progress in Latin America. All of these reports had been printed, each one making a good-sized book, and were placed in the hands of the delegates for their use during the sessions of the congress. The main work of the congress was to take these reports one by one and discuss them from every angle. The valuable points brought out in the discussions will be incorporated in the reports before they are finally published in permanent book form. The ultimate result will be a series of volumes presenting the most thorough study of Latin America that has ever been made.

The reports are on the following subjects: I. Survey and Occupation. II. Message and Method. III. Education. IV. Literature. V. Women's Work. VI. Church on the Field. VII. Home Base. VIII. Cooperation and Unity.

And so on this first morning, the delegates, each holding a copy of the fat report on "Survey and Occupation," took up the discussion of this subject. Each man who wished to speak was allotted seven minutes.

Dr. John Wesley Butler occupied his seven minutes with a review of the situation in Mexico. He stated that of all the pot-

A Banana-Laden Raft on the Rio Vinces, Ecuador, the Almost Pagan Republic of the Equator. There Are But Three Evangelical Churches in Ecuador

Here the Venezuelan Laborer Lives and Dies—Unsaved? "The Men Are Without Personal Religion." Five Evangelical Churches for 2,000,000 People

pourri of pure Indians, mixed races and Europeans in Mexico, the pure Indian of the country was the best man there. He is the man who promises most for his country. But for four centuries he has been the victim of oppression. For these four hundred years he has been without the Bible and Christ.

Of the fifteen million people of Mexico, probably not one million have ever possessed a Bible. The great majority of the fifteen million would not even know what is meant by the Bible. A Mexican who was asked if he had a Bible replied in the affirmative and produced a copy of a dime novel.

The discussion ranged down through Central America. A man from Salvador spoke of his country as "the smallest of the Central American republics, but the most thickly populated of all. Salvador has been afflicted with fad religionists—cranks," he said. "Perhaps this is our misfortune through being in proximity with the United States!"

Guatemala was described as being in a condition of "baptized paganism." One priest had boasted that he had baptized ten thousand in one day. Lacking Christian instruction, the thousands of baptized natives, though nominally Christians, still continue all the practices of paganism.

Another man rose to describe the same basic conditions in Cuba. A Cuban storekeeper was asked, "Why do you close your store on Good Friday?"

"Because it is the custom," he answered.

"How did it become the custom?" The Cuban shrugged his shoulders in token of ignorance. Although he was nominally a Christian, he had absolutely no notion of the Christian reason lying back of the custom of Good Friday.

Venezuela was presented as a land where poverty of poverty exists among the majority, although great riches lie around them. The people do not have enough initiative to develop the vast possibilities of the country.

There is only one missionary for a district in Peru which contains two and one-half million people, said a speaker on that country.

"We must open the heart of the Roman Catholic women," said Señor Elphick, of Chile. "The women flock to the Roman churches. The priest does not care so much about the men. He wants the women, because through them he can get the children. If we wish to reach the men of the next generation we must reach the women of this." This point was stressed again by Bishop Stuntz. "Wives, maids and mothers, these be the tools by which we manage men," he quoted from Browning.

Brazil was described by Señor Alvaro Reis as a great desert. "Even since the proclamation of the republic, there have been more than 80 persecutions. Agnosticism and atheism are rife."

Having sketched the problems of Latin America, attention was turned to ways and means of meeting these problems. The need of reaching the educated classes was emphasized. "One per cent. of the people of Latin America exercise perhaps ninety-nine per cent. of the intellectual and moral influence," said one speaker. "If we can reach the one per cent. we shall have gone a long way toward winning the ninety-nine."

The need of certain missions withdrawing from comparatively overoccupied areas and taking up work in unoccupied areas was mentioned. Dr. S. Earl Taylor stirred the gathering profoundly when he said: "Before we came here, Bishop Stuntz asked me, 'If they want us to give up part of our territory, shall we do it?' I replied, 'Of course we have put life and blood into the work; but if the part that we leave is to be well taken care of and continued after a well correlated program, I am in favor of giving up any part!' "

Speaking for the breaking down of denominational barriers, Mr. Joseph E. McAfee said: "We do a great injustice when we impose upon the Latin Americans the divisions which we are discovering to have been a mistake. It is the plain right of a free people to differ. But haven't the Latin Americans a right to differ in their own way, and haven't we confused confusion confoundedly by superimposing all our disagreements upon them?"

These Types Are Discouraging? Why? Did Not Christ Come to Lift Up the Lowly, Instruct the Ignorant and Save to the Uttermost?

Dr. Speer, in summing up the situation, declared it to be "a great asset that we are dealing with hopeful nations. There is a great difference between doing missionary work among forward looking people and among backward looking people. The nationalistic spirit seen everywhere in Latin America, although it creates difficulties, is one of our greatest assets, because it is evidence of a forward looking people."

Intense interest marked the proceedings of the next day. The theme "Message and Method" was considered. Under this subject came the attitude which should be adopted toward the Roman Catholic Church in Latin America. It was fully expected that there would be bombs thrown during this discussion. The blood of many Protestant missionaries runs "liquid fire" in the presence of the error and falsehood found in Latin lands.

But the Christlike spirit which had seemed to fall upon the congress at the very beginning dominated the work of this day in a remarkable manner. B op Oldham introduced an extremely delicate su ect with most sweet and beautiful words:

"I hesitate greatly to speak on this subject," said B hop Oldham, "but I promised to do anything I was asked do and I have been asked to do this. I, too, was born a nan Catholic, but have always lived under a free flag and not therefore feel so acutely as you.

"I would distinguish between minor matters and damental error, and with that determination to understan hat Dr. Mott quoted from the Bishop of Oxford, I would rch for the underlying reasons for the error so that I migh how how that need to which the error seeks to minister he better met by a true understanding of Gospel teaching. ake the worship of the Virgin Mary. What makes this one the most widely received and popular errors of Romanis Is it not the longing of frail humanity for that in God hich feels the weaknesses and sympathizes with the strug of poor, failing folks? How shall I preach in the prese of this human fact and this Roman tea ng? Shall I not bring to my hearers a Chri vho is not only very God of very God—be en, not made—but also very man, who w not an high priest who can not be touche vith the feeling of our infirmities, but was all points tempted like as we are? And uld I not ceaselessly endeavor with ost tenderness to point out that all th are seeking in Mary is present in bou less measure in Jesus our human-divine S our and seek thus to recover for them eir loving Lord? That is, in a word, I uld seek to be evangelical rather than Pro nt in the general trend of my teaching. I uld trust the clear light of my positive onstructive Biblical statement to su am wrong ideas, for it is the very funct of light to shine away the darkness."

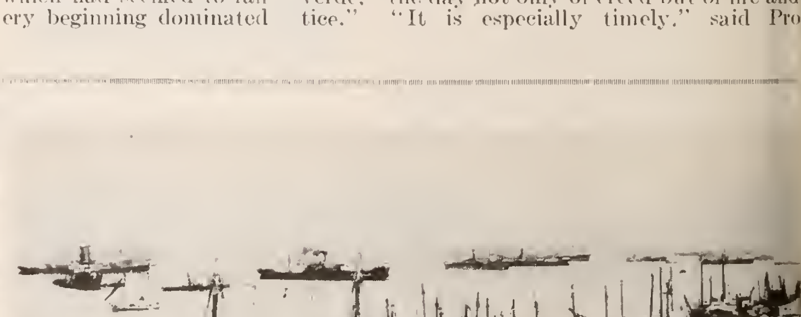
SO sane an introductory state nt created an atmosphere in wh it was impossible for rancor and b erness to be expressed in the discu ion which followed. Dr. Speer thre the meeting open and gave absolute eedom for the expression of co ury views. But the speakers were actically unanimous in upholding the position held by Bishop Oldham. The consensus of opinion was that i the attitude toward the existing c rch in Latin America complete li rty should be granted to each evang cal worker to meet the situation he thought best in his own loca circumstances.

There occurred a lively perio uring the afternoon session o the question of how much emp sis should be placed on the conversion of the indiv ual and how much on Christian social service. Thi vas started by a missionary in these words:

"If any tourist comes to me hoping to learn nething about the political, industrial or comm ial conditions in Cuba he will be badly disappo ed. I don't know anything about the fruit situation the sugar situation in Cuba. These things are n my business. My business is to know nothing but sus Christ and him crucified."

An avalanche descended upon the head o the gentleman from Cuba. The need of wide h an knowledge and an alert interest in all the eve lay problems of the people was emphasized by sp ker after speaker. "Thousands of people have d ted away from religion because they have failed to s its connection with daily life," said one. "This the age of applied Christianity," said Professor M teverde, "the day not only of creed but of life and actice." "It is especially timely," said Pro sor

Bagging Cereals for Export, Argentina. A Republic as Large as the United States East of Kansas City, and with but 75 Evangelical Churches



On the Waterfront at Montevideo, Uruguay. A Population of 2,000,000 Has Turned from Catholicism to . . . a Willingness to Receive the Truth

Wiam Adams Brown, "to emphasize the social Gpel now. There are three special reasons: first, su an illustration of the Gospel has been overloed by the prevailing religious institution in Latin Arica; second, social service affords a point of coact for reaching individual lives; third, without su a social illustration of the Gospel we shall not beble to meet the test coming to this hemisphere af the present war is over."

nother speaker pointed out the fact that thousands of ersons after conversion are allowed to remain in ev home and community surroundings, so that backsling is frequent and often inevitable. The work of th ndividual Gospel must be followed by the work of e social Gospel.

Ve must not lose sight of our objective," said Biop Lambuth, "which is not civilization, but evgelization; still we must recognize that social sece opens a new avenue of apoach."

d so in the treatment of "ssage and Method," two grt elements were stressed in th lay's discussions. First, the ne of a Christlike spirit of fairne toward the Roman Catholic Cch; and second, the need of a ialized Gospel.

e next day the report on "ucation" formed the backgrnd of the discussion. The ne of better men for educational wc was expressed.

Many go to Latin America wl might better have stayed at ho," said Dr. Webster E. Brning. "People seem to th that anything will do for Lah America. I wrote to the diity halls asking for a man to go South America. One reply std that in that hall practically ev man was interested in Ca or India, but the letter ran. 'We have just one man—he rough, uncouth, awkward; heeminds me of a big Newfothand pup—but I think he's justhe man you want for Latin Arica.' Now, what could such a n do when he came up against theulture and philosophy of the La world?"

nother feature stressed repedly during the day was the ne for industrial education. As Pr dent Henry Churchill King sai "One of the greatest proble of today is the proper combination of cultural an vocational education. In many mission fields theconomic independence of the church will not be poble without such training."

e next day, after briefly discussing "Literature" in e forenoon, the delegates by invitation of the gornor of the Canal Zone enjoyed a trip through thCanal on a government steamer. Not a few theght and spoke of the spiritual significance of that Cal. Although it has severed North and South, it ha bound the two continents together more closely th ever before. Influences will stream back and for through it from North to South and from South to orth. Perhaps this congress will help bring it ab t that these will be not merely commercial influces, but also social, moral and religious currents of ower. Indeed, the Congress and the Canal too ar ilures, if this shall not be the case.

THE theme of the seventh day was Women's Work. The majority of the speakers were women. An interesting piece of work was described by Mrs. W. B. Allison, of Guatemala. Her method of placing the well-to-do of Guatemala in contact with Christianity has been by the way of the servants. She converted and trained a number of servants—placed them in prominent homes—and soon she was showered with requests for more such girls as these. The fine example of the Christian servant girls is found to be a tremendous lever with the upper class, and many of the well-to-do of Guatemala, including the former minister from Guatemala to the United States, have been influenced in this way.

A missionary from Cuba told the pitiful story of mothers who will take even their clothing to the pawn shop to get money for the mitigation of the punishment of their loved ones in purgatory. He urged education which shall clear away this heavy superstition.

The Best Types of the Women of Venezuela, Trinidad and Brazil Stimulate Our Efforts to Evangelize all the Womanhood of These Sister Countries of the Western Hemisphere

Of every one hundred children born in Mexico, only eighteen live to reach the age of six years. This was given by Miss Orvis as the warrant for the free clinic and free distribution of milk and ice for children, in which work she has a part.

The need of better educational work and of more fully developed Christian social service were the two points most emphasized in the discussion of women's work.

In the evening session of this day a Roman Catholic in a stirring address appealed to the congress to promote their mission work in Latin America as rapidly as possible. The speaker was Emilio del Toro, judge of the Supreme Court of Porto Rico, a jurist of great distinction and influence.

"Until a few years ago," said Judge del Toro, "the Catholic Church was, in my native island, Porto Rico, the state religion. Among the public expenditures those for worship were conspicuous. The influence of the clergy extended everywhere. And what was the result, after four centuries of abundant opportunities? A people for the most part indifferent or unbelieving.

"There took place a change of régime. The church was separated from the state. A struggle began. Under the protection of the free institutions of North America established in the island, Presbyterians, Methodists, Lutherans, Baptists, Episcopalians, began their work. Faint-hearted Catholic priests accustomed to the enjoyment of special privileges descried the ruin of their church. But it was not so. The spirit of the North entered into her, and men accustomed to a life of freedom gave her a new impetus. And today, separated from the state, sustained by herself, she is realizing a nobler and more Christian mission than in the times when her power was absolute."

On the following day "Cooperation and Unity" was discussed. Men of every denomination and creed discussed this theme, which one might have supposed to be delicate, in the freest possible manner. There seemed to be no restraint, no self-consciousness. Every one took the complete friendship of every one else for granted.

"If the world is to be brought to Christ in this generation or any other generation, cooperation among religious forces is absolutely necessary," said Bishop Wilson. Later he added, significantly, "We can not have unity in and for South America unless we have unity in and for North America."

In the discussion of "The Church in the Field," Professor Monteverde expressed the feeling that the Sunday school should be the most useful way of propagating the Gospel in Latin America. He urged the adoption of something more suited to use in Latin America than the International Lessons.

On the next and last day, methods for stirring up the home church to an interest in Latin America were considered.

"The thing that will thrill the people of the United States to giving," said Mr. Joseph McAfee, "is the evidence that the missionary forces are working in cooperation—that there is no schism or division between us." This point was stressed again by Dr. Mott in his closing statement. "If we stand together during the coming years, he said, there is nothing that can effectively stand against us."

The congress was a thinking body rather than an acting body, but it appointed a permanent Committee on Cooperation in Latin America, with the following officers: Chairman, Robert E. Speer; vice-chairmen, Bishop Brown and Bishop Oldham; treasurer, James H. Post; executive secretary, S. G. Inman.

The work of the congress is to be immediately carried further in smaller conferences, or "regional conferences," as they are called, which are to be held during March and April in Lima, Santiago, Buenos Aires, Rio de Janeiro, Barranquilla, Havana and San Juan.

f Course Women Work Like This Outside of South America. In North America 'ossibly. But Wherever They Work the Gospel of Jesus Christ Will Rest Them

And Now Here Is a Kitchen. Oh, Yes, There Are Equally Uninviting Kitchens Among the Poor of Our Towns. Forget the Kitchen: Is the Woman Worth "Evangelizing"?

A Week in the World's News

© International News Service

© International News Service

PROMINENT FIGURES IN THE ARMED MERCHANTMEN DEBATES

Representative Flood, Chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Relations; Represen'ative Kitchin, Democratic Leader on the Floor of the House; Senator Stone, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations; Senator Gore, and Representative McLemore

NEW SECRETARY OF WAR. On March 7 President Wilson sent to the Senate the nomination of Mr. Newton Diehl Baker of Cleveland, Ohio, to be Secretary of War, succeeding Lindley M. Garrison of New Jersey. Mr. Baker is an ex-mayor of Cleveland and was private secretary to Postmaster General Wilson in President Cleveland's cabinet. He held the office of city solicitor in Cleveland for ten years until his election as mayor. Mr. Baker has received degrees from Johns Hopkins and Washington and Lee Universities and has been closely identified with the reform movement in Cleveland. Mr. Baker announced in accepting the cabinet offer that he believed in peace and also in preparedness.

LINER STRIKES SHOAL. The Spanish liner Principe de Asturias, in service between Barcelona, Spain, and Brazil, was wrecked March 6 off Sebastiao Point near Santos, Brazil. The steamer remained afloat but a short time and at last reports 338 passengers and 107 members of the crew were still missing; 143 passengers and crew had been landed at Santos. The liner was a new vessel with a gross tonnage of 8,371.

© Lawrence Figley

Newton D. Baker

Newly Appointed Secretary of War

PROHIBITION LOSES IN VERMONT. At a referendum election on March 7, the state of Vermont voted on the question of reenacting the prohibition amendment. The amendment lost by a vote of 17,601 to 31,967, which leaves Vermont a local option state.

LABOR LEGISLATION IN 1915. The United States Department of Labor has recently announced a summary of the legislation of the various states during 1915, in which labor is directly interested. In five states the administration of workmen's compensation, factory inspection and other labor laws were consolidated under one authority in an industrial commission. In Illinois a commission on unemployment, consisting of three representatives of labor, three of employers, and three of the public, was established to investigate and to report at the next session of the legislature. California and Nevada also passed resolutions providing for the investigation of unemployment. Idaho passed a statute providing emergency employment by county boards of commissioners, employments to be on the highways and not more than sixty days' work to be furnished any person within one year. Public employment offices were established in California, Idaho, Iowa, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, and the licensing and supervision of private employment offices were provided for in seven states. Idaho prohibited private employment agencies operated for gain. Arkansas and Kansas passed minimum wage laws relating to the employment of women and children, making eleven states which have such legislation. Idaho appointed a commission to investigate the subject. Arkansas and Pennsylvania strengthened their laws governing child labor.

RECORD DREDGING AT PANAMA. On Friday, February 18, the new 15-yard dipper dredge Cascadas excavated and loaded into scows 23,305 cubic yards of rock and dirt, which is believed to be the world's record for a day's work of any kind of excavating machine in hard material. Including the work of the Cascadas, a new day's record for excavation on the bases of the slides was made on the same day, the total being 43,030 cubic yards. The average output of the dredges in the cut for seventeen weeks was 256,922 cubic yards. The schooner A. J. West was handled through the canal on January 6, but larger vessels are still being forced to make the trip around the Horn.

CONQUERING THE WHITE PLAGUE. The latest report of the Bureau of the Census shows that in 1914 tuberculosis caused over 10½ per cent. of all deaths in the registration area of the United States. The death rate from tuberculosis has, however, declined from 200.7 per hundred thousand population in 1904 to 146.8 in 1914. This decrease is the result of a more general understanding of the laws of health, a greater appreciation of the value of fresh air, and the efforts of various societies for the prevention of tuberculosis. The fundamental truth that tuberculosis is a communicable, preventable and curable disease is at last being recognized throughout the country.

ST. LOUIS VOTES FOR SEGREGATION. On February 29, at a special municipal election, the city of St. Louis voted on two ordinances designed "to prevent ill feeling, conflict and collisions between the white and colored races in the city of St. Louis and to preserve the public peace and promote the general welfare by making reasonable provisions requiring the use of separate blocks for residence of white and colored people, respectively." One of the ordinances provides that a white person or a negro cannot become a resident in a block occupied entirely by those of the opposite race; the other ordinance imposes the same restrictions on blocks occupied to the extent of 75 per cent. by one race. The ordinances carried by a vote of approximately 52,000 to 17,000. The election was unusually quiet, with no disorders, although they were fought by every legal means by the negroes. It is expected that the ordinances will be carried to the United States Supreme Court before either side will admit defeat, the Supreme Court never having yet passed on the legality of such a separation of the races.

David R. Francis

New Ambassador to Russia

CARMEN SYLVA DIES. Princess Elizabeth of Wied, Dowager Queen of Rumania, who is best known to the world through her writings as Carmen Sylva, died at Bucharest on Thursday, March 2. Her husband, Charles I, died since the beginning of the European War, and she had been ill for some time. Queen Elizabeth had only one child, a daughter, who died at four years of age. She had made the whole Rumanian nation her children, and no queen since Victoria of England has been so universally loved and respected.

NEARLY HALF MILLION ATLANTIC PASSENGERS. According to the official figures of the Bureau of Navigation, more than 400,000 persons crossed the Atlantic as passengers in 1915 between American and European ports. Of these 250,000 traveled on vessels owned by belligerent powers, and 150,000 traveled on neutral ships. Slightly more than half of the travelers were east-bound.

STATES MAY TAX TRAI NG STAMPS. On March 6 the Su eme Court of the United States held th the Washington and Florida trading mp laws were constitutional. The la impose taxes on trading stamps or co ons. The court held that such regulat n of the business of giving premium co ons was within the powers of the state gislatures. State courts in ten state ave held premium advertising to be le l.

THE BRITISH PLAN EX NSION OF COMMERCE. At a m ing in London on March 1 of the 1 tish Association of Cha bers of Commerce, Am ean activities in Russi and South America ere urged as among th ain reasons for en etic British action in t organization of l nch banks and com erce connections in ose fields. The Am can consular system re ved a notable tribute. nufacturers both of nen and of steel statin hat they had been a to secure more exact t hnical details from the American consul reports than they ould from the British g ernment itself.

PROMOTION OR MERIT. On March 1, Secretary the Navy Daniels transmitted to Con ss a draft of a new personnel bill in ich has been incorporated the recomm dations contained in a recent report the Navy Personnel Board. The out nding feature of the new legislation the abandonment of promotion by sen ity, for which promotion by comp tive methods will be substituted. T bill calls for 330 more officers than a provided for by existing law, the incr e to be gradual, over a period of five y s.

ARGENTINA BORROWS $1 00,000. Since the beginning of the r in Europe the South American Repu e of Argentina has borrowed $79,500, 0 in New York, the latest loan of $15,0 ,000 just having been arranged. The f ancing of Argentina's commerce has eviously been handled in London.

BUILDING A MERCHANT ARINE. It was announced recentl hat 252 ships of more than a thousan ons, not counting warships, were unde construction in the shipyards of the ited States, the average size being out 5,000 tons. The shipyards are s l to have contracts on hand sufficient t eep them in full operation for three ars. Senator Burton of Ohio expresse imself at the Whitehall Club in New ork on February 19 as opposed to t government ship purchase act. He sai hat American shipping on the high se was

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

certain to occupy a more favorable position at the close of the European conflict than it did before the war. The war has changed shipping conditions materially, the business is now profitable and there is no necessity for a government subsidy. With the American shipyards already two years behind their orders, he could not see where the government was going to get any boats. He favored the modification of the Seamen's Act to make it more suitable to the needs of the mercantile marine, especially in those points at which it handicaps the entrance of American vessels into the foreign trade.

MEXICAN BANDITS CHALLENGE UNITED STATES. Just before daylight on March 9 "General" Francisco Villa, outlawed Mexican bandit, with a force estimated between 500 and 1,500 men, raided the town of Columbus, N. M. Three troops of the Thirteenth United States cavalry encamped at Columbus immediately engaged the bandits, and in the fighting that followed nine American soldiers and about two hundred Mexicans were killed. The raiders set fire to the houses in the town and shot down the inhabitants as they rushed from the blazing buildings. They also fired indiscriminately at every house in which a light appeared. Eight civilians perished. The Mexicans were driven out of the town about two hours after the attack and were followed by three troops of cavalry, who continued across the line into Mexico. One of the Mexican dead was identified as Colonel Pablo Lopez, who was one of the leaders accused of the massacre of American citizens at Santa Ysabel. Villa was reported to have said that he intended to force intervention. He had led his troops in two days over twenty-five miles of desert from Boca Grande. The attack was a complete surprise to the American authorities, and it was even reported that a small garrison of Carranza troops which had been posted on the border near Columbus joined the bandits in the raid.

Feeling in Washington was thoroughly aroused over the unprovoked attack by Villa on American territory. The Administration determined at once to punish the perpetrators of the outrage and to send a punitive expedition into Mexico to capture Villa and his men. Secretary Lansing informed Carranza's confidential agent at Washington, Señor Arredondo, of the intentions of the American government, and Señor Arredondo wired Carranza advising him not to interfere with the American plans. Orders were sent to General Funston at San Antonio to assemble a force of infantry and cavalry of sufficient strength and to take Villa dead or alive. For obvious reasons the dispositions of troops and the plans of action were not announced. It was announced that there were 19,000 troops now available on the border and 20,000 additional could be dispatched to the border at once. It was understood that General Funston's first force would total 5,000 to 8,000 men. General Funston recommended the relentless pursuit of Villa as the only sure protection against further raids, and the temper of Congress expressed in both House and Senate showed that Congress was ready to back the President in any military move that he might find to be necessary to put an end to the outlawry along the border and the murder of Americans on both sides of the line. Villa was reported on March 10 to have returned to Boca Grande. Three columns of Carranza troops were reported to be closing in on Villa, and it was understood that they might cooperate with the American forces. General Villa is said to have in the neighborhood of 3,000 men in his present force. In addition to these there are several thousand former soldiers of the Villa and Carranza armies scattered among the northern states of Mexico, some of them in organized bands which are living by pillage. Carranza is reported to have under arms not less than 85,000 men about evenly divided between the northern and southern states of the republic.

© International Film Service

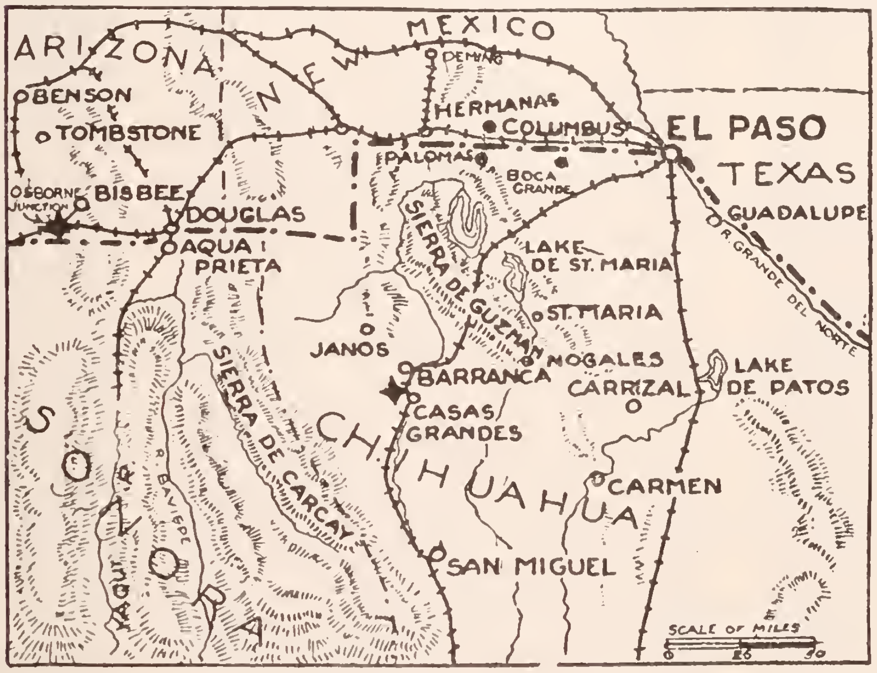
Major-General Frederick Funston

Latest reports on Monday, March 13, were that Brigadier General John J. Pershing would be in immediate command of the expedition into Mexico, Major General Funston being in general command of the border situation and of the Mexican operations. Troops were then being hurried to the border from garrison posts, but no attempt had yet been made, so far as reported, to begin the serious business of capturing Villa. General Funston, in a statement on March 12, said: "The people must be patient. We must be adequately prepared for this thing. Concentration and transportation of troops is not all of our problem. We are going to march into a country which will afford us little or no forage and the commissary must be adequately supplied." The general said that the expedition would be gotten under way just as soon as possible. It seemed to be the general feeling among American army officers that the capture of Villa would be a long chase and that American troops would not be in Mexico less than a year. Carranza was also reported to be concentrating considerable bodies of troops in the state of Chihuahua, one report placing between five and six thousand Carranza soldiers in the territory through which the American expedition must pass. Feeling in Washington seemed to be that the punitive expedition in search of Villa might easily become the beginning of real intervention.

In answer to the first notification of the American intention to capture Villa, General Carranza replied with a request that in view of the history of previous similar occurrences, notably in the case of the Indian outlaw Geronimo, the American government should permit the entrance of Mexican troops into American territory in pursuit of outlaws and bandits. At last reports no answer had been made by the American State Department to Carranza's request, and information was telegraphed from El Paso on Saturday the 11th that private messages conveyed the information that the Carranza government had notified the United States that it cannot consent to American troops entering Mexico and would regard such a movement as an unfriendly act. Following the raid on Columbus, the American army began rounding up Mexicans suspected of being spies, and there is a tendency to suspect the entire Mexican population along the border, of whom there are upwards of 25,000. Since the recognition of Carranza, the embargo on the shipment of arms across the border has been raised, and Carranza's troops are now reported to have a considerable supply of small arms ammunition and a reasonable quantity of ammunition for their artillery. The embargo was restored, however, immediately decision was made to dispatch an expedition into Mexico. It was reported that in spite of the utmost vigilance, considerable quantities of ammunition which had been ready for export were placed on wagons and smuggled across the line into Mexico. A dispatch from Philadelphia on March 12 stated that tremendous orders for munitions had been placed for the United States government within the last six weeks.

Our forces may possibly meet a well-organized body of Carranza veterans armed to the teeth with American ammunition. At this writing the expectation appears to be that Carranza will either cooperate with the American troops or will attempt by hurrying his own dispositions to capture Villa before the American expedition gets under way. The fear is also growing that he will do neither of these things, but will make common cause with Villa. There are at Casas Grandes about 500 American citizens, members of a Mormon colony, who are in great danger of Villa's bandits.

There can be no question that a serious crisis in our Mexican relations has arrived. Almost anything may be said to be possible, from deadly border warfare to actual intervention with all Mexico opposed to the American forces.



Columbus, N. M., and Adjacent Territory

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indépendance Belge

ON the western front interest continues to be centered on the German effort to capture Verdun. The German tactics used here have been adopted with the primary object of saving the lives of their men as much as possible and are hence much slower in obtaining definite results than the older tactics of direct assault. The tactics now being used contemplate the selection of a particular objective on the front, then the continuous and heavy bombardment of that objective and the ground between that objective and the advanced position of the German troops, until as far as possible all defensive works or obstacles have been cleared away and the enemy troops have been driven out of the objective and the intervening territory. This result achieved as nearly as possible, the German infantry advances, their own artillery fire over their heads forming a "curtain of fire" between them and the enemy, and entrench themselves at the point they are able to reach.

A halt of a day or two now ensues, during which the troops complete their fortification of the ground captured and bring up the artillery which was left behind in the advance, after which the process begins anew. This method is not spectacular, nor rapid, but it is saving of men, which is more important than the consumption of a few days' time. (The word "saving" is used solely in a comparative sense. The butchery is frightful. –Editor.)

A good idea of the German position around Verdun may be obtained by drawing an ordinary question mark and placing a dot in the center of the loop. This dot will represent Verdun. The point at the end of the long side of the mark will then be St. Mihiel. The German object is to press together the curves of the loop by pressure from time to time at various points until they unite at St. Mihiel.

The slowness of this method of advance and the effectiveness of the French resistance seem to indicate that the present battle will last for three or four weeks longer at least before it reaches a conclusion one way or the other. This is one of the critical battles of the war, and its result when reached cannot fail to exert a marked influence on the whole future course of events.

On Sunday, March 5, the hardest fighting occurred on the northern front generally, and the fiercest of this fighting took place to the south of the village of Douaumont and to the east of the hamlet of Vacheranville. South of Douaumont, the French, who were endeavoring to regain possession of this important point, attacked furiously but were repulsed without gain, which same ill fortune attended a German assault in force on the French positions to the east of Vacheranville.

Everywhere the artillery was hard at work, particularly at and near the villages of Handimont and Fresnes on the east front. Some idea of what the artillery fighting in this battle means

Continued on page 367

A Letter for a Baby's Life

WOULD you write a letter to save a baby's life? Would you write a letter to help save the lives of several million babies?

A letter from you to your congressman urging him to support the Emerson resolution in Congress will help forward the movement to get milk through to the dying babies of Germany, Austria and Poland.

Babies can not live without milk. And milk is the one article of diet of which the Central Empires can not secure a sufficient supply.

Arrangements have been made to have the milk distributed by the American Red Cross. It will therefore go only to babies. The babies will die if they do not get it. Thousands have died already.

The Emerson resolution authorizes the American Secretary of State to urge the Allied Powers "to permit the free and uninterrupted importation of condensed milk, from neutral countries, to Germany and Austria and their allies, solely for the relief of babies and infants of said countries."

You have grieved and prayed over the horrors of war. Here is a chance to do something that may greatly lessen its horrors. In the name of your own little children, in the name of little children everywhere, in the name of humanity, in the name of the Christ, send your plea at once that Congress pass this reasonable, humane, practical resolution.

The Great Invitation

A SERMON BY REV. WILLIAM A. WALDO *

TEXT—Isa. 55:1. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat."

THIS little word "come" is one of the sweetest in the Bible. The Bible begins with "come," and it ends with "come." The Lord said unto Noah, "Come thou and all thy house into the ark." The word occurs in nearly every section of the Bible, and in the last chapter we have this precious invitation. "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And he that heareth, let him say, Come. And he that is athirst, let him come: and he that will, let him take the water of life freely."

The invitation of the text gives us a beautiful conception of the heart of God in its tenderness and love for humanity. While it is in an Old Testament setting, it has a New Testament ring, Messianic in its nature, evangelistic in its intensity. It speaks forth with wonderful power. Here God addresses the world.

"Ho, every one that thirsteth." This refers to the class of people who are dissatisfied with worldly things. Soul thirst is the soul's anxiety and longing for that which is holy and spiritual. Our natures are twofold. We have a dual nature—the physical and the spiritual. The physical is satisfied with that which nourishes the body, while the spiritual thirsts for things eternal, and cries out after the living God.

A PROFESSOR in psychology once asked his class for a definition of the soul. One pupil gave the following: "The soul is that which feels and thinks and acts." After this, a little girl spoke up and said, "Professor, is the soul that thing within our breasts that aches so hard sometimes?" "Yes, that's it," said the professor, who himself was a child of God. The unconverted man is like the prodigal, with a soul thirst, longing for home. Have you ever experienced homesickness? It is the heart-heaviness of the exile, faint with yearning to see the old faces, to hear once more the sweet, familiar voices. He is sick with desire for home. God has many such exiles today—men thirsting for better things than the present life offers them. Their souls cry out for the living God.

One of the greatest men known in America was Francis Murphy. At one time he lived in evil ways, possessed by the passion for strong drink. He was thrown into prison, and missionaries and preachers made every endeavor to touch his heart. It was all to no purpose. There seemed no hope of a permanent reformation. One day his little girl, looking in through the iron door of his cell, with tears in her eyes said, "Papa, we is lonely at home without you." These simple words wrought in him contrition and amendment of life. He abandoned drink and became one of the most enthusiastic temperance workers in the world. What multitudes of thirsting souls throng this land today! They are seeking in vain for the satisfaction and peace which are to be found only in reconciliation with the heavenly Father. They have wasted their substance in riotous living; they have spent all; they are in want; they burn with an unquenchable thirst. Some of these unhappy men may be here. To you is opened up that well of water, springing up into everlasting life, which is able to quench the thirst of the soul and give you eternal satisfaction.

Much is said in regard to the importance of leading rich people into the kingdom of God, and I would not say a word derogatory to such a noble purpose. Certainly, our churches and philanthropic institutions need more rich men and the kind of help they can offer; but it is plainly shown in the Gospels that Christ had a special message for the poor. In his great inaugural Sermon on the Mount he said, "Blessed are the poor in spirit; for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." No man can get into the kingdom of God through his money.

But it is not until the soul has learned the insufficiency of earthly possessions to satisfy its deepest needs that, in the acknowledgment of its poverty, it listens gladly to this invitation. Dr. Cuyler said that when the richest man who has died in New York within his memory was on his dying bed, he asked his attendants to sing for him. They sang the old familiar revival hymn, "Come, ye sinners, poor and needy." The dying millionaire said to them in a plaintive tone, "Yes, please sing that again to me. I am poor and needy." What could fifty millions of railway securities and bank stocks do for him on the verge of eternity?

"Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." Here the invitation includes everybody. The provision of grace is as free as the air we breathe. The river of salvation flows past us and the proclamation of the Lord is, "He that will, let him take the water of life freely." Young and old, rich and poor, learned and ignorant, bond and free, are alike invited. "For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life."

"Whosoever" is the standing invitation of God to every man, woman and child in the world. It belongs to no one else more than it belongs to yourself, dear sinner; as said Richard Baxter, "I thank God for the word 'whosoever.' Had it said 'Richard Baxter,' I am so vile, so sinful, that I should have thought it meant some other Richard Baxter; but the word 'whosoever' includes the worst of all the Baxters that ever lived, and so it includes me."

THERE is a beautiful incident told from the life of Rowland Hill. That great old preacher never did things quite as other people did; he dared to be himself. In his conduct of family worship, he had the peculiar habit of mentioning every one by name in his prayer—all his servants included. "Lord, bless thou the cook Susan and the maid Jane," and if the manservant was there he said, "Bless thou my manservant John." He loved to tell the Lord whether they were converted or not. The servants became used to it. Once a new cook came into the establishment, by the name of Biddy; and at family worship the next day he asked the Lord to bless Susan and Jane and John, adding, "Lord, bless the new cook, Biddy, just come, and change her heart if she is not converted, and make her all thine own." Directly after family worship, there was a knock at the good man's door; it was the new cook, who said, "If you please, Mr. Hill, I am glad to be in your service, and I hope I shall be very comfortable, but I am not accustomed to having my name mentioned in family prayer. It makes me feel uncomfortable." "God bless you!" said the old man; "does it? I would not make you feel uncomfortable for anything; I won't mention it." The next morning, when he began to pray, he again said, "Lord, bless Susan and Jane and John," and he added, "Thou knowest, Lord, that I would like to ask some good thing for Biddy; but she tells me I must not mention her name to thee."

Directly after prayers there was another knock at the study door, and sure enough it was Biddy. "Oh," she said, "if you please, Mr. Hill, I do not mean that; don't leave me out; mention my name also, won't you?" So it is with salvation. The invitation is extended to everybody. None are left out.

"Hearken diligently unto me. . . . Incline your ear, and come unto me." An active, responsive hearing is one of the conditions of salvation. The written word has been the means of the conversion of some, notably of Augustine and of Luther. But very often it is by the spoken word that the truth is brought home to the soul. "Hear, and your soul shall live," is the Old Testament Gospel. The New Testament is like unto it: "Take heed therefore how ye hear" "He that hath ears, let him hear."

"Buy wine and milk without money and without price." We might think, from what has already been said, that is a strange way of buying when no money is in use; yet it is not so strange when we understand the language of Christ. To the church of Laodicea he said, "I counseled thee to buy of me gold refined by fire, that thou mayest become rich; and white garments, that thou mayest clothe thyself." There are some few things that money cannot buy, for the simple reason that they are too valuable to be purchased with money. No price can be set upon them. Wisdom cannot be purchased with gold. "She is more precious than rubies." Salvation, the supreme blessing to the human soul, is beyond a money valuation. Blood, and not gold, is the price of our redemption. It is on the ground of the priceless redemption of Jesus, through grace, that God says, "Come now, and let us reason together; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

THE provisions named in the text are likewise threefold. "Let your soul delight itself in fatness." The blessings which Jesus gives are not only good, but they bring to the soul complete satisfaction. The longing soul receives an abundant and free supply of grace. I read some time ago of a man in Wales who, along the road on a hot and sultry day, met a little girl, carrying an earthen pitcher full of spring water on her head. He said to her, "My little girl, will you give me a drink of water?" She lifted the jug om her head and he drank from it, and it was so old and pure that it quenched his thirst, and he a d. "Where do you get that refreshing water?" She aid to him, "Do you see up yonder a spring fl ng through the hedge?" "Yes, and does that s ng ever dry up?" The little girl said, "Yes, in the mmer time it dries up." "And what do you do th ?" he asked her. "Do you see a path up the h to another spring?" she said. "Well, does it eve ry up?" he inquired. "Yes," she said, "in the ery hottest summers it dries up." "And what do ou do then?" the gentleman asked. She said, "W go up to the spring at the top. Up, up there, it er goes dry." Yes, as Christ said, "Whosoever dri th of the water that I shall give him shall never t st; but the water that I shall give him shall beco in him a well of water springing up into eternal ." Here is a soul satisfaction that is perfect and abi g.

"I will make an everlasting covenant with you, en the sure mercies of David." "The sure merci of David" are the promises of mercy which God de to him. These include the promise that the Me ah should come of his seed, and sit on his throne nd establish an everlasting kingdom, and thereby ve peace and happiness to Israel. This was the erlasting covenant that God made which neve as been, and never will be, broken. We now enjo he fulfilment of this covenant in the mediatorial wo of Jesus. Covenant mercies are all his. They are rchased by Christ with his own precious blood, ey are treasured in his hand, and out of his hand the re dispensed to us. The soul that believes on him as, therefore, the divine protection. Let God ap around you the banner of his love today, and yo ill experience a security that is divine and eternal. hat a wonderful provision for sinners! God has ma for all a satisfaction full and complete; a life free and ernal; a protection divine and abiding. These bles gs are within the sinner's reach. The great invitat is extended to every sinner. Come to him t y. Come and hear. Come and buy. Come and at. "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now i he day of salvation." Tomorrow may be too late.

WHILE on board the Majestic a few years ag returning from England to America, a gent an related this very touching story to me of a vene le English deacon who had served faithfully as ay worker for over a score of years. He served his c ch well and his family better. All the members of the fa ily had, through that father's influence, been won to C st. When the good man knew that he must die, he ed the members of his family to his bedside, and t ng them one by one by the hand, in a few sentenc he gave each his parting blessing. To the wife, fi to embrace him, the husband said, "Good night." he asked him why he said "Good night." "Beca it will not be long," he answered, "before you will et me in heaven, as one of God's children, and whe ou meet me, I will then say 'Good morning'." The stborn came, and after a few words the father id, "Good night." To the second-born, a sweet ng daughter, the father, after a few parting words, kewise said, "Good night." When the waywar on approached the bed, the father gave him a few w ds, and said "Good-by." The son, filled with an ty, said, "Father, why do you say, 'Good night' all the rest, and 'Good-by' to me?" The father re d. "My son, from your earliest boyhood I have s ght your salvation with tears at the throne of grac I have earnestly, by loving efforts, invited you t become a Christian, and nevertheless you have res ed the offers of mercy. I fear that you have sinned ay your day of grace, and that I shall not meet y in the morning of the eternal world. For this re on, my son, I say 'Good-by.'" This message wa he means under God of bringing the wayward son his knees. The father's last effort was successful. en and there the son bowed upon his knees at his fat r's bedside, repented of his sinful life, and offered his very touching prayer: "O God, my father's God, ve mercy upon me, and forgive my sins. O Jesus ny father's Saviour, have mercy upon me, and save ny soul. O Holy Spirit, my father's Comforter, ope ny heart, and dwell within me." And he rose and p ed his hand in the hand of his dying father, who answ ed in his dying breath, "Good night, my son, od night!"

That hour will come when we must face the re ity of another world, both with our loved ones and th ourselves. May God grant that the tender ap al of this invitation and the persuasion of the ly Spirit may bring you into fellowship with him. C e.

---

*Preached in First Baptist Church, Paterson N. J.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

Believing Is Seeing

SUNDAY, March 26. Rom. 4:20. "He staggered not through unbelief." The divine promise had been given. There could be no doubt about that. But there were no external helps to make the soul certain of its fulfilment. The promise had no friends in the outer circumstances. The face of everything frowned upon it. Common experience was against it. Common sense was against it. And yet Abraham "staggered not"! He steadied himself on the promise. His soul nested in the divine purpose. He dwelt in the secret place of the Most High. By faith he companioned with friendly realities when every hard and glaring event appeared to be his foe. For faith is a finer sense even than common sense. Common sense, when it is despoiled of faith, is a very local and deceitful sight. But seeing is believing! Nothing of the kind. Believing is the only true seeing! "Said I not unto thee that if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see . . ." "He endured as seeing Him who is invisible."

And we, too, have to trudge over roads where circumstances just shriek against our creeds. We have heard the divine word but the "not likely" stares upon us on every side. And common sense is very aggressive, and it rears itself against the promise of our God. And the gathered wisdom of the world obtrudes itself against the hidden wisdom of the Lord. Our material setting is unfriendly. And we begin to look foolish in our simple faith. And, God help us, sometimes we begin to feel foolish, and we are tempted to make obeisance to the kingdom of the apparent, and to bow down and worship it.

Never was there greater need of deep-living men and women who will confront the proud and massed "unlikelies" with the spoken promise of our God. Never was the need more urgent that we should confirm ourselves in the promise amid the uncomfortable irony of circumstances, and the loud and blatant taunt of our foes. We must wear the word of the Lord like an athlete's belt! "Having your loins girt about with truth!" These are the men and women who remain victors on the field at the end of the long and bloody day. At the beginning of day theirs was the faith which gives substance to things hoped for; at the end of the day the things hoped for have become their eternal possession. J. H. J.

Fighting Against the Flesh

MONDAY, March 27. Isa. 63:1-9. "Mighty to save." Israel and Edom were hereditary enemies, from the days of their fathers and progenitors Jacob and Esau. The border-lands between them were the scenes of incessant forays, and throughout their history, they were at constant war. When a more than usually strong king was enthroned at Jerusalem, Edom would be overrun and placed under tribute; but this turn in the fortune of war would soon be reversed. And the Hebrew people could never forget the unconcealed joy of their inveterate foe when Babylon was about to carry the remnants of Jerusalem into captivity.

Isaiah has another story to tell. In this majestic chapter, he seems to descry the genius of his people personified, standing on the southern frontier of Judah and gazing across the low desert-plains toward Edom, far away beyond the southern end of the Dead Sea. Presently a figure is descried of a mighty warrior approaching from Edom, and as he draws near, the stains on his raiment suggest that he has been treading the wine-press, so crimson are they. "Who is this," she cries, and is reassured by the announcement, "I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save." Then she learns that the stains are not due to the blood of grapes, but to the blood of her foes, who will never molest her again. What a lesson is here! Edom always stands for the flesh—the self-life which has lusted against the Spirit from our earliest memories. "The most impossible of all is that from sin we e'er should cease. Yet shall it be, we know it shall. Jesus, look to thy Faithfulness." He has gone into the fight for us, and now stands between us and our enemies. F. B. M.

Getting a Firm Hold on Faith

TUESDAY, March 28. Mark 9:23. "All things are possible to him that believeth." Joseph Parker was accustomed to use the phrase, "The almightiness of belief." The careful reading of the Gospels tends to confirm one in the conviction that the phrase contains a massive truth. What Jesus said to the father of the epileptic boy he said to virtually all who came inquiring the secret of unlocking the storehouse of divine power. To get firm hold of this principle is to succeed as a Christian, and to succeed as a Christian is to triumph in one's lifework.

The moment of Luther's entrance into the larger life of immortal fame came when he realized, when stumbling up the stairs of his monastery, one eventful day, the meaning of the words: "The just shall live by faith." Some years ago the writer took lunch in the mission outside Calcutta, India, where William Carey wrote his Sanscrit dictionary in four volumes, and founded the first great mission school in India. On the walls of that room was Carey's motto—"Only believe!"

We may be able to repeat the verses of Scripture as glibly as the Moslem repeats the Koran; we may be capable of meeting the theological arguments of our opponents; but the vitality of our religion resides in the truth that we have made our own by the conscious, experimental, personal belief in God. Spiritual greatness is the venture of faith; it is the daring of the soul; it is the ability actually to trust Almighty God beyond and in addition to our own strength.

Let me stop and think where and how I have thrown myself on God's almightiness when my own strength failed. There have been moments when I have known the possibilities of that eternal and infinite life which I share with my Maker. To believe God is to discover him. C. S. C.

Melchizedek the Type of Christ

WEDNESDAY, March 29. Gen. 14:18-24; Ps. 110:1; Heb. 5:6. "Melchizedek, king of Salem." He was a priest. The spiral column of altar-smoke climbing up into the clear air told of his morning and evening sacrifice; and his neighbors spontaneously recognized his claims. Man needs a priest, but the craving has been met in Jesus Christ, who ever lives to intercede for us. "His priesthood partook of the mystery of eternity." We need not suppose that this mystic being had literally no father or mother, beginning of days, or end of life. The fact on which this narrative fixes our thought is that no information is afforded on any of these points; in this he typifies the glory of our Lord. He is the Ancient of Days; the King of the Ages; the I AM. He does for us now what he did for the world's gray fathers, and what he will do for the last sinner that shall claim his aid. His priesthood was royal. "King of Salem and Priest of the Most High God." How marvelously the two blended in Jesus! As Priest, he pitied, helped, and fed men; as King, he ruled the waves. As Priest, he pleaded for his murderers, and spake of paradise to the dying thief, while his kingship was attested by the proclamation above his head. As Priest, he breathed peace on his disciples; as King, he ascended to sit down upon his throne. Mark the order. Not first peace at any price, or at the cost of righteousness, but righteousness first. There are plenty who are willing enough to have him as Priest, who refuse him as King. But he will not be Priest on those terms. His priesthood succored Abraham. When the patriarch was weary and victorious, and therefore peculiarly open to temptation, Melchizedek forestalled him. So our Lord prepares us against trial by giving himself. F. B. M.

How Can We Know God?

THURSDAY, March 30. Phil. 3:10. "That I may know Him—" Paul counted the gift of the personal knowledge of Christ above everything. "I count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." Paul had honorable birth, he had education, he had character—"as touching the righteousness which is in the law, found blameless." He did not seek as the supreme goal of his life the acquaintanceship with Christ because he was poor or friendless or mentally helpless. The width of his experience and the strength of his mind convinced him that the height of human endeavor consisted in the aim—"that I may know him."

Christ through the centuries has not been the Master of the poor only; neither has God been, throughout the generations of men, only the God of the simple-minded. From Moses till now, he has fired the intellects as well as the souls of the loftiest genius of mankind with the arch-passion of Paul, to "know him." Daniel Webster once said that the greatest thought that ever passed through his mind was of his personal responsibility to God.

How can we know God? What does acquaintance with Christ mean? It is not a mystical matter; it is a practical one. We come to know an earthly friend by being with him, by trying to understand him, endeavoring to please him, knowing those whom he knows and likes. To understand and to care for one, there must be a certain intimacy. Indifference comes from lack of knowledge, and dislike often from distance.

Prayer, a genuine intelligent search for the mind of God in the Scriptures, in the best books, in the lives of godlike men and women, these are great essentials. The righteous king Uzziah "set himself to seek God." C. S. C.

Even Faith Is Put to a Test

FRIDAY, March 31. Gen. 22:1-12; John 1:29. One of the first principles of the Canaanitish religion demanded that men should give their first-born for their transgressions. As Abraham witnessed those terrible rites, he thought of Isaac, and it did not startle him, therefore, when God said, "Take now thy son, and offer him up." He was to learn that while God demanded as much love as ever the heathen gave to their cruel and imaginary deities, yet heaven would not permit of human sacrifices or of offered sons. A greater Sacrifice was to be made to put away sin. His obedience was, therefore, allowed to go up to a certain point, and then peremptorily stayed—that in all future time men might know that God would not permit, or accept, human blood at their hands, much less the blood of a bright and noble lad. On previous occasions, Abraham had taken with him a lamb, and Isaac noticed the omission. He said, "My father, where is the lamb?" What a stab was this to that sorely tried heart which dared not even then give up its secret! Then, with a gleam of prophetic insight mingled with unwavering faith, he answered, "My son, God will himself provide a lamb for the burnt-offering." Finally, he took the knife. Here was a proof of how much mortal man will do for the love of God! Here was evidence of the child-like faith which must have thrilled the heart of the Eternal, and moved him in the depths of his being. Is it to be wondered at that Abraham was known as the friend of God? If we dare put it so, God found in him a reflection of his own supreme sacrifice; though he found a way of escape for him, yet he would not spare himself. "Where is the Lamb?" "Behold the Lamb of God!" "He spared not his own Son!" F. B. M.

The Heights Beyond Our Vision

SATURDAY, April 1. I Cor. 13:12. "Now I know in part." A student of theology once asked his professor how long it took him to understand the atonement. The professor thought a moment; then, looking the young man in the face, said, "Eternity!" Shall God's children ever graduate from the study of his great truths? Shall they not, in the ages to come, know more of the riches of his glory? Will we ever find the outer rim of infinity? Is it not a pleasing thought that we shall follow on to know, evermore viewing heights higher beyond?

We know enough now to trust our heavenly Father, to believe in Christ, to love the Holy Spirit, but to understand the how and the why of creation, redemption and glorification; the what, whence and whither of the soul in all the expansion of its eternal future, will be the delightful study of endless ages. The prayer of Moses will be appropriate then, "I beseech thee, show me thy glory." Here we behold only a little of our Father's goodness as it passes before us in life, but always beyond we shall ever see some new view of his omniscient, omnipotent, omnipresent grandeur.

Let us therefore leave the great mysteries for revealment in the university beyond the skies. Here we know in part, see through a glass darkly; but our Father knows, and, if we live true to what we do know, he will open the secrets of his wonderful being and universe to us as we become more and more like him. The secrets of nature have been revealed to student minds as humanity needed them; so we believe it will be in the unfolding of glories in the realm of grace. E. W. C.

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

The Immediate Duty

NOW that the storm in Congress over the "warning" resolution has passed and the atmosphere has cleared, it is well to look over the situation calmly with a view to discovering just what may be expected to come out of it. It was a peppery disturbance while it lasted. There was no disguising the fact that in both Houses the majority of the members held it to be a duty to warn our citizens against traveling on belligerent armed vessels. But we need not go into the details of the strategy by which the silencer was applied and Congress was subdued to the will of the Executive. What Congress was forbidden to do, the President will now accomplish through the State Department, which can refuse to give protection or assurance of redress to Americans who insist on traveling on armed liners. Thus the Administration's prerogative is asserted, and the government, by a swift strategical stroke, relieves itself from responsibility in the premises.

In the mind of the average citizen, all this parliamentary fencing and the impassioned outbursts of eloquence in both Houses, in denunciation of citizens who wantonly imperil the nation's peace, leave a decidedly doubtful impression. After Senator Stone's declaration in the Senate—after a conference with the President on March 7—that the Executive was not only a firm friend of peace but was still resolved to employ all the means in his power "to avoid involving this country in the disastrous war," why should such a wrangle, which kept Congress in a turmoil a whole week, have been necessary at all? It surely cannot be claimed that it served the purpose of reassuring the nation as to the peace policy of the government. Yet we have Senator Stone's further declaration that the President's "supreme wish" is to avoid the calamity of war, and that it should be impossible for any senator to believe that the President has so changed the attitude he has so long maintained as an advocate of peace, as to wish now to make this country a party to the conflict.

In view of this evidently authorized statement, there would seem but one course for the Administration to follow. It cannot permit it to be written on the pages of history that this great republic, professing the noblest of principles and the greatest love of humanity, stood by in dumb indifference while not only Europe but half the world was perishing of suicide. Our immediate duty is to take vigorous measures to promote world peace. The nation's honor demands this. Our people are wearied of the hollow and unsatisfactory forms of diplomacy; they want real action. And if it be the "supreme wish" of our President, as it unquestionably is of this people, there can be no longer reason for delay.

The Christian Herald is for peace and always has been. Our readers believe in peace—not the peace of pusillanimity, but of righteousness and justice. They have been neutral—more so than the Administration itself, for they have protested against the vile munitions traffic, with its big orders and its fat dividends, which jarred the souls of right-minded citizens as being cruel, avaricious, un-Christian and unneutral. Our readers hold that it is the duty of every American citizen, from President down, to help by all honorable means to bring back peace to the world, to bear and forbear like true peace-lovers, and even to forgive much. They have no sympathy with the American who struts around or travels with a chip on his shoulder. They want to believe that our government is sincerely for peace, and they would rejoice to see it translate that "supreme wish" into action by an effort to bring about a concerted peace movement among the neutral nations. In this our government must take the initiative; it should have done so months ago. Now, the great opportunity is here—and it must not be permitted to pass unimproved.

The neutral nations are calling us to marshal them in this campaign for peace. It is the call of humanity, the call of honor and of world leadership. What is our answer?

New Work for a Grand Jury

SOMETHING new in the annals of grand jury procedure took place at Youngstown, Ohio, the other day when the grand jury there returned indictments against E. H. Gary, executive chairman of the United States Steel Company, and 113 other persons or corporations controlling the steel manufactering industries of that region. In the Youngstown strike four lives were lost, thirty-seven persons were injured and a million dollars' damage done to property. The grand jury was asked to find out whose fault it was, and they have declared that it was Judge Gary's fault, and the United States Steel Corporation's fault, and the Carnegie Steel Company's fault, and the Republic Iron and Steel Company's fault, and so on.

The basis of the grand jury's charge is that these persons and corporations were guilty of a "conspiracy to keep down wages." Judge Gary was singled out because he was declared to be in dictatorial control of the whole situation.

The charge that any foreign power had any part in fomenting the strike is denied.

The progress of the trials following these unusual indictments will be watched by the American people with profound and intense interest.

Judge Gary has already characterized the indictments as an "outrage" and a "travesty." But that is a matter not for Judge Gary but for petit jurors of the state of Ohio to determine.

Mirth and Melancholy

IT is related that a famous clown, named Seal, who had made thousands laugh, became a victim of settled melancholia. When he consulted a physician, the latter, not knowing the identity of his patient, told him: "Go and see Seal. He'll cheer you up and give you a good laugh." The patient looked at him in amazement, and in the saddest of voices said, "But, doctor, I am Seal! Can nothing be done for me?" We are reminded of this incident by a somewhat similar case in New York a few weeks ago, where a famous circus jester, after a long and successful career, succumbed to melancholia and committed suicide by asphyxiation. Grimaldi and George Fox, two of the most noted clowns of their day, were victims of morbidness. We might extend the list by mentioning others who reacted from the long strain of enforced merriment, and became gloomy and despondent toward the close of life. Their experience goes to prove that counterfeited mirth, however successful for a time, has its fixed limits. These Yoricks, whose lives had been spent for exciting mirth in others, reached a point where they could no longer keep up the counterfeit presentment. Can it be true then, as has frequently been alleged, that mock merriment becomes, to those who make it a life vocation, the most hateful of professions? Do they revolt against a calling that becomes unendurable? Does the jaded clown grow sick of his calling at last? Here is a fine problem for the psychologist, to tell us why mirth made to order returns to vex the soul of the maker. We can picture in imagination the gloomy thoughts of the professional joker who wrestles with the evasive quip, which is designed to excite cachinnation. We have before us a mental glimpse of the agony that accompanies the production of the average "funny column" of the newspaper. But why, of all men in the world, should the merry clown, the fellow all spangles and bubbling over with seemingly irresistible humor, drift into morbid mania, while light-hearted, happy-go-lucky simple souls, but making no pretension to art, live on to old age, full of good-humored frolic and jocularity to the last?

What Is Patriotism?

PEOPLE are getting more and more excited about Marjorie's battleship. Ex-President Roosevelt complimented her patriotism and now the New York daily to which she sent the original dime with her "patriotic letter" is collecting money from all quarters for her battleship.

The New York Hippodrome was engaged the other Sunday afternoon, and thousands of people came at the newspaper's invitation to help forward the project. The performers went through their antics, the orators through their speeches. Little Marjorie came out and bowed. And all the money from the tickets went to the cause of Marjorie's battleship.

An individual or a nation is truly in a befuddled state when a thing like this is greeted with delight. A little girl, who ought to be thinking about sweet, innocent, childlike things, trying to build a huge murder machine! If Marjorie could see the great splashes of blood on the deck of a battleship in action; if she could see how a sailor looks with his chest torn open or an arm or a leg torn off, or what a scattered mass of blood and bones looks like that had been a sturdy sailor a moment before, she would hardly be so keen to build her battleship.

"A little child shall lead them." But the gentle man who wrote that had no vision of a little child leading people to tear one another to pieces. The picture he painted then was a picture of peace. Even the ravenous beasts are living in gentle amity—and "they shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain."

But this little child is being encouraged to lead to murder.

There is a better way for patriotism to ex ess itself. President Wilson spoke long ago of the ag that was too great to be stained with selfishness.' He spoke of the vision of our country, serving and he ng all other countries of the world, great in service not in conquest.

Patriotism is a thing that is to grow broade nd broader till the patriot loves all lands. The ge of the new system of prison reform, which is wo ng such vast miracles, is that the "gang spirit" ch keeps convicts loyal to each other is to be expa ed till it embraces all of society.

This is what must be done with patriotism. Pa otism is not best expressed by blowing to piece he young men of other lands. Patriotism is bes expressed by seeking to enlarge the territory and p ble of its affection and spreading the Gospel of peac nd brotherhood and service over ever-enlarging g ps till it shall include all the world.

Teach the children to lead us toward this so of patriotism; not to incite us to build more hi us machines for maiming and slaughtering our bro rs of other lands.

The Wandering Jew

THE old legend of the Wandering Jew ho could never die, and who spent his li in weary, endless journeyings, was at st partially realized in the strange stor of Nathan Cohen. He had been refused admitt ce to the United States because the immigration aut rities considered him mentally unsound and f ed that he might become a charge on the country. He was sent back to Brazil, but that country also ref ed him admittance. He went back and forth upon he sea from one nation to another, traveling forty t usand miles, but finding no open door for his bewild ed mind and desolate heart.

He had once resided in the United States, but as betrayed by a friend who robbed him of his for ne and his youthful wife; and it was grief over his tragedy that broke his mental powers. At last he Hebrew Sheltering and Immigrant Aid Society u rtook to provide for him and upon this guarante he was at length admitted to the United States an ecame an inmate of a sanatorium at Greens Fa ls, Connecticut. But his rest life in America was t be brief, for on March 3 he passed on to the long st that waits all earth's tired travelers.

The Wandering Jew! Strange symbol of wear ss and restlessness! The end of the sad story s ns sweet and gladsome. After the weary miles of o an roaming, after rejection and refusal at the gat ay of many nations, to find a home at last and the go forward to the better home!

For all restless, wandering souls Christ offe a happy haven. He is even now, for believing s ls, the "haven of rest." Trained as a Hebrew and th failing mentality, we can not believe this lonely an will be classed among those who wilfully reject he Saviour. Doubtless he understands and adores im now. Meanwhile the offer holds for all: "Come to me, and I will give you rest"—rest here, and sure be of rest hereafter. This hope we have "as an an or of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which ntereth into that within the vail, whither the foreru er is for us entered—even Jesus."

Heart-Culture

IT has been said that in a certain part of he desert regions of southern California the oil is very rich, and the trail across the deser of the occasional local showers may be trace by the green flowering plants that have sprung up in he once arid soil, so lately watered. Water is the ly thing needed to make of this desert a garden of pa dise. May it not be true that in the spiritual re m of our own hearts what seems to be dry and arid d unlovely is really rich soil, full of the seeds of e y spiritual grace, waiting only to be called into lif y the touch of the quickening shower of heavenly l e? The desert lies always open to the shower; but e, by our lack of faith, our interest in the sordid th gs of the world, our passion for mammon or plac or precedence, have drawn over the plain of our h rt an impenetrable sky of self. If this were rolled b k, if the garden of our heart were laid bare to the m stries of heavenly things as the desert spreads it beneath the gathering stormcloud, might it not be that the barrenness of our hearts, under the touc of infinite love, would blossom with the fruits of e Spirit, even as the desert blooms with the verdur of earth?

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

hiladelphia Forbids Drink

I' caused widespread surprise when Mayor Smith of Philadelphia, the other day put 10,000 employees of the city on the "water wagon." In s statement the mayor said: "Toda I have given instruction to every di tor and bureau chief to issue a geral order against drinking among emoyees during working hours. An emoyee who must use liquor when on du , or who takes liquor with him when de led for work, cannot remain in the cit employ. Rum and efficient pu e service is an impossible combi ion." In accordance with these insuctions, Carleton E. Davis, chief of e Water Bureau, issued an order to e 1,500 employees in his department, saying, "Intoxication to any dege tends to numb a man's faculties an render him an inefficient and irroonsible employe. Each repsible officer will be ldpersonally for caring out these insuctions to the let ." Following the lead of Chief Das, James P. Maughlin, chief of he Electrical Buau, issued a sinar order to the 1,0 men in his doartment. Di tor Wilson of the Department of Puic Safety also anunced that the polemen, firemen, another employees of is department, to he number of 10 0, will receive no e of the "tempenance during woing hours" decre The principal fac r in the new attit e of hostility to these of alcoholic liq rs is the Workmes Compensation La which recently beme effective in Phdelphia. This copulsory abstine e from drink on thoart of so many thesands is not a qu tion of religion or morals, but a col question of bu ess. The muniality of Philade ia is only folwing the example of most lines of bigbusiness in requ ng abstinence as a matter of eff ency in sheer self-protection. The off rs of the city of Philadelphia do nogive as a reason for their action that th men will make poor husbands, fat rs or sons, that they will dull their me l natures or ruin their characters by rink. They frankly say that as the ne law makes the city liable for mey damages where there has been ne ect or incompetency on the part of th employees, and as intoxicating liqrs are responsible for so many ac lents and injuries, they are unwilling to sk or tolerate the use of rum while on uty. Efficiency is not the highest mo ve in fighting rum, but it is a tr endously powerful, practical one. Th e is this mention by the inspired wr rs of 3,000 years ago, of man's phical and moral degeneration from st ng drink: "Who hath woe? Who ha sorr w? Who hath contentions? Who ha babbling? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes? They that tarry long at the wine, they that go to seek mixed wine." (Prov. 23: 29, 30.)

Farragut's Flagship Sold

IN accordance with an act of Congress, the United States ship Franklin was sold at auction at the Navy Yard at Norfolk January 24, to Joseph G Hitner of Philadelphia for $16,787.53 She was a wooden vessel, housed over, and was built at the Navy Yard, Portsmouth, N H, in 1855–65, her length being 265 feet 9 inches, breadth 54 feet 3 inches, displacement 5,170 tons. The Franklin could tell many a story of conquest, but she ranked, in her modest make-up, as a queen of the sea because she was the flagship of Admiral Farragut, one of the greatest naval leaders the nation ever had. He was literally "rocked in the cradle of the deep." The son of a Revolutionary soldier, he went into the United States navy a mere lad When only eleven years of age, he sailed with Commander Porter on the Essex in the war against England. At twelve he was prize-master of a captured vessel, and at thirteen he engaged in the bloody naval battle against the Phœbe and the Cherub He was made a lieutenant at eighteen In December, 1861, he was sent in command of an expedition against New Orleans and the next month was appointed commander of the western gulf blockading squadron, under Porter as commander of the fleet. Farragut ran the forts, forced the river, sank or burned the Confederate fleet, and captured New Orleans, one of the early signal victories of the war In 1862 he was made rear admiral. In 1864 he fought the battle of Mobile Bay and captured the city That year Congress created the rank of vice-admiral for him, and in 1864 it created the supreme rank on purpose to fittingly honor him Admiral Farragut was not only one of the greatest sea-fighters the world has ever known; he was one of the most beautiful Christian characters that ever adorned American history The old warrior survived the seas and the battles and went to his coronation at Portsmouth, N. H, in 1870. The statue of him in Washington, and the figure of him in New York, and the universal respect and affection of a nation, seem to apply these words to him: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith" (II Tim. 4 : 7.)

© International Film Service

Compass and Sun-Dial

AN inventor has just turned the pocket compass into the double service of marking the time of day by a sun-dial on its surface. In addition to the usual "points," there is a graduated hour scale with two twelves at the north and south. "The crystal by which the magnetic needle is protected has a line etched across it through the center and it is mounted in a bezel which permits the glass to be moved around. The instrument being held horizontally and the etched line being directed against the sun, the time is indicated by the needle, the point of which overhangs the graduated hour scale." The sun-dial, which marks the movement of the sun's shadow, was used among the ancients for indicating the time. There is this reference to its use among the Hebrews: "And Isaiah the prophet cried unto the Lord, and he brought the shadow ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the dial of Ahaz." (II Kings 20: 11.)

A Mill Girl's Beautiful Voice

MISS BARBARA BOURNHILL, twenty-one years old, a silk-ribbon weaver in one of the mills of Paterson, N. J., and soprano soloist in the First Baptist Church of that city, was selected from a list of twenty-eight contestants for the honor of being "local artist" at the Paterson Musical Festival in April. It is said that three or four wealthy women who heard her sing in the contest indicated their willingness to take her away from mill work and provide for her musical education. Why should there be any surprise that a humble silk-weaver should take the honor? There is ability, character and real genius among the factory and shop girls of our land. While the material callings are followed for a temporal support, many cultivate the finer arts, answering this beautiful description: "That our daughters may be as cornerstones, polished after the similitude of a palace." (Ps. 144: 12.)

A Mountain of Honey

AMONG the many attractions of Griffiths Park, near Los Angeles, Calif., is a large, high rock with odd-looking cavities in which innumerable colonies of bees have made their hives and deposited their honey. The finest honey in ancient times was found in Mount Hybla in Sicily and Mount Hymettus in Attica. California is the most famous bee-farming region in the world, not a few bee-keepers having from 2,000 to 3,000 hives, some of which yield 700 pounds of honey. Parts of Palestine were a paradise of flowers, and a home for the bees, and for God's people. "A land that floweth with milk and honey." (Joshua 5: 6.)

Replanting Forests in China

THE killing of trees and the resultant damage in this country is nothing to the massacre of the forests and damage following in China. So generally have the trees been cut down in that country that there is no timber left for the plain people for fuel. Farmers and villagers have to use dried manure and grass and roots for that purpose. Many of the trees saved are for coffins. The Germans, when they took Kiauchau eighteen years ago, commenced replanting the forests, and made that barren province green for the Japanese, who have just seized it. China has waked up to what replanting can accomplish. Major George P. Ahern of the U. S. A., while director of the Philippine Bureau of Forestry, by having Chinese students come to his college, and by encouraging the establishment of schools of forestry in the empire, did much to setting China to work to replant the trees so cruelly cut down. The wholesale destruction of the forests for centuries has produced alternately the floods and droughts and famine following which in one season alone cost two million lives. Science in olden times did not know how close was the relation of the forest tree to human life. The law of Moses in the war sieges forbade the cutting down of the trees that ministered to human life: "Thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof by forcing an ax against them; for thou mayest eat of them, and thou shalt not cut them down (for the tree of the field is man's life) to employ them in the siege." (Deut. 20: 19.)

Gen. Booth's Memorial

GENERAL BOOTH, the founder of the Salvation Army, died in 1912. It is now proposed that large training colleges throughout the world, where Salvation Army officers may be trained for their labors, be formed as a fitting memorial to General Booth. In accordance with the general plan, it is proposed to build two of such colleges, one in New York City to cost $300,000, the other in Chicago to cost $250,000, with an endowment of $450,000 to maintain and perpetuate them. A preliminary meeting was held at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church in New York on February 28, with Rev. Dr. Nehemiah Boynton in the chair. Miss Evangeline Booth, commander of the Salvation Army of the United States, made an address in which she described the principles and work of the organization with great clearness and eloquence. And as she spoke of the service for the poor, the suffering, the outcast men and women, the self-denials of the workers, their overcoming faith, and the divine inspiration, the ministers were stirred into the intensest enthusiasm and promised support to the proposed memorial. Short addresses were made by Rev. Dr. J. E. Lloyd, A. H. Evans, C. R. Raymond, Lee Beattie, and Walter Laidlaw. No marble shaft or figure, however tall or imposing, could so fittingly perpetuate the memory of William Booth. In his ministry to the bodies and souls of men, he kept steadily in view Him who gave this evidence of his Messiahship: "The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them." (Matt. 11: 5.)

DISPOSSESSION

"THE BOTTLE"—V.

Dear John:

Your money came two hours too late. We were already evicted.

Flory wanted to move in again, and pay up the back rent with it. But I'm too wise for that. I may get a job next week.

The last landlord grabbed most of our good furniture. One good room's all we need now. So what you sent will carry us nicely.

I am controlling my drinking well. Since the accident, I only take enough to help me get strong. Honest, I don't drink more than a couple of quarts a week. I need that much to keep my strength up. When I get strong again I'm going to quit for good and all.

So you see, in the end all will come right again.

Goodby,

BILL.

Dear Bill:

Won't you and Flory and the kids come out and put up with us?

Really, I need help on this new place I've just bought. The sunshine and wholesome surroundings—God's gifts—will help you much more than that whisky tonic. No stimulant really strengthens you. It only deadens momentarily your sense of fatigue. Afterward it leaves you more exhausted.

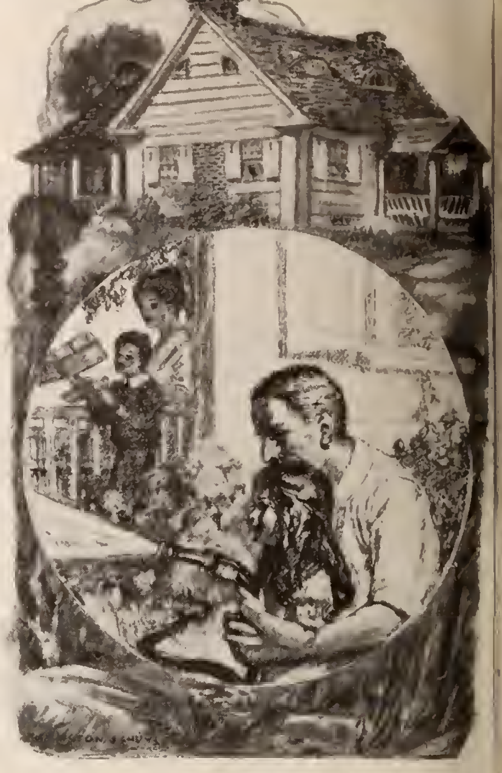
Come right out, Bill. I warn you if you don't come, I'm coming after you—and get you.

You have got to stop fooling yourself into thinking you still have control. We'll fight Old Demon Rum, and win out.

You need help. Here's where you'll get it, from

Your old friend,

JOHN.



POSSESSION

No. I

No. II

No. III

No. I

No. II

No. III

No. IV

No. IV

Why Not Let Them Die and Be Done With It?

IT begins to look like too big a task to provide food and shelter for the homeless in Poland. What is the use of keeping up the effort? Why, think of it: there are 5,000 villages which have been burned to the ground, the people who used to live there driven into the frozen fields and windy forests. There are hundreds of thousands of such people; some reputable observers say millions. And they have literally nothing to live on. Nothing. Why, the task of reaching those multitudes and covering their shaking, freezing limbs and filling their wasted forms with nourishment is simply impossible!

(With God, all things are possible.)

But is it worth while? These miserable people are reduced already to such a low state that they gnaw on roots and bark for nourishment. Surely such wretches have lost all interest in life, so why shouldn't they die off in these frozen forests and pitiless fields? Why should their babies keep up their ceaseless wailing through the nights? What have they to look forward to? Why should those trembling mothers be allowed to hope on for better days? Humanity has trodden almost everything that is human out of them except that last lingering belief that all humanity is not cruel; that last lingering belief that there still are human hearts that will reach out through the distances and find them (these beaten down ones) and lift them up and carry them to a fireside, a table, and a place of hope. That is about all the human instinct that is left in them. Why not just quench it?

("I have come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.")

WELL, if you persist, you Christian people with reasonably good homes, with happy children about you, with perhaps a dollar or two or five or ten in excess of your needs for new spring attire, and all that, if you insist on a way being found for your extra wealth, or for some tear-stained dollars that you really need but simply cannot hold back from such a cause for very pity—why, we say again, if you insist upon putting milk to the lips of Poland's starving babies and bread in the mouths of Poland's starving mothers and a little clothing upon the backs of Poland's homeless wanderers, do it.

(Easter is almost at hand. Easter is one of those days of which the Heavenly Father said, Is not this the fast that I have appointed you: that you deal your bread to the hungry, and bring the poor that are cast out to your house, and when you see the naked that you cover him, and undo heavy burdens and let the oppressed go free, and break every yoke?)

Well, certainly here's an opportunity to deal bread to the hungry, clothe the naked and put your arms around the oppressed and set them free. You never in all your lives will have a greater opportunity to do this, or rather an opportunity on a greater scale. If you really want to do these things, if the spirit of Christ constrains you, if you really take God at his word as to what he considers the right way to celebrate a church day such as Easter—and we know of old that there is scarcely a Christian Herald reader who does not feel that way—then here's the opportunity indeed.

HARPER'S WEEKLY has published a first-hand report on conditions in Poland by its special representative, Mr. W. H. Hamilton. Mr. Hamilton says that the practical American mind thinks that it likes facts and figures, and so he gives some which may be pertinent here. "Three-fifths of Poland is practically dependent on agriculture for its living," he says, and adds, "During the Russian retreat, there was carefully planned and radically carried out as a military measure, the laying waste of a broad zone of the country by burning its villages, destroying its crops and herds, and breaking up its means of transportation and communication. Five thousand villages were burned and four million people made homeless. Innumerable country houses and farms were burned, and more than a thousand churches totally destroyed. One million horses and two million cattle were taken for the army or destroyed. Even the bare earth was ravished by the digging of endless trenches, and by the effect of heavy shells. The fertile soil was swept away or buried under clay and gravel, and even in the richest districts made unproductive for at least a decade. The whole agricultural production, valued at $500,000,000 a year, has been entirely stopped by want of seed and implements. Thus there is a rural population of 5,000,000 reduced to beggary, dying of hunger and cold, feeding on roots, barks, and in some cases, potatoes which can still be found in the fields. Of fuel there is none, even in the large cities."

Why don't these people go to the cities? Listen to Mr. Hamilton: "When I visited in Warsaw some of the eighty soup kitchens which have been e l- lished there by the civil governn it, and which distribute once a day a wl of carrot soup and 200 gramm of bread each to about one hundred u- sand of the absolutely destitute, i as bitterly cold. A large proportion he women and children in these bread es, some of whom had been waiting ur and five hours for their daily r n, did not have on shoes and stock gs. Some of them were barefoot with eir feet bloodless stubs; others had es of bags or other cloth or even newsp rs wrapped around them."

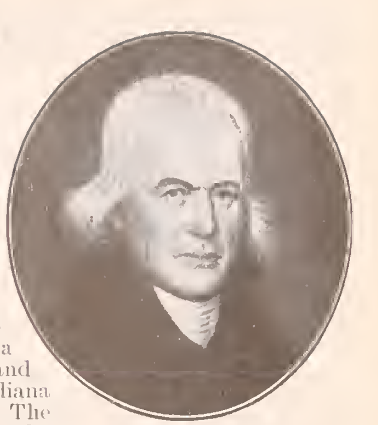
If you can think of anything bet to do with some of your extra m y, or some of your hard-to-spare m y, than to send regularly, week by we in such amounts as you think righ to the relief of such people—then do at thing by all means. At this momen he Christian Herald knows no er channel for systematic, week-by- ek obedience to the outstanding mand of Christ himself that his followers, fi of all, shall give to the poor.

WE will have your gifts to he Widows and Orphans of the ar in Europe administered with the ut st expedition and economy and wisd in Poland, and in all the other devas ed regions in the old world. Let m come, friends, your gifts, in ever-inc s- ing streams for these war-weary n ti- tudes who wait for help from you.

Take on your hearts the support a while of one unknown child, or m er and child, or entire family, as you y be able. Send what you think wi be enough for this, week by week, d leave the results to God.

Francis Asbury, First Methodist Bishop in America

hn Street Church Today



Francis Asbury

JUST now the Methodist people are having a more or less good-natured difference of opinion over the relative claims of John Street Church in New York, founded in Philip Embury's shop in 1766, and a church founded near Frederick, Md., by Robert Strawbridge in the same year. Both churches claim to have been the "cradle of Methodism" in America, and it is certain that Methodist movements were born of the devotion of loyal Wesleyans in both places. Bu a cradle is a piece of furniture in which an inf t, already born, grows to lustier childhood and gre er strength; and if Methodism had a cradle anywh , that cradle was the undaunted spirit and the co erated and tireless service of Francis Asbury. His ry has been said to be but the biographies of "k " men, of leaders, of kings and ministers and gen- era and knights, and, occasionally, serfs. Methodist his ry in America, for forty-five years at least, is ful comprehended in the life of this man, who was the inister of Wesley, the commanding general of the American connection, the knight whose lance wa lways raised against sin and evil and for every ca that made for the weal of mankind, and the ser nt who served his Lord and his parish with for ude and humility, with power and patience, an with love and diligence.

ancis Asbury was born August 20, 1745, near Bir ingham, England. He was converted at the age f seven. At fourteen he began reading White- fiel s sermons. Through his reading he heard of the Me odist movement and found his way to Methodist ser es in barns and fields. At seventeen he was lic sed to preach, and at twenty-one he was admi d to the Wesleyan conference. The be nings of Methodist work in America ha been noted by Mr. Wesley, and he ha already sent three local preachers to the olonies, when, in August, 1771, he cal l for another volunteer to go. As ry volunteered at once and sailed for merica September 4, 1771, arriving at iladelphia after eight weeks of very rou h weather.

quotation from Asbury's journal sh s the spirit of this man who was to be e leader of a little flock until it bec ne a great host. After severe self-exa ination he felt that "his visit to the New World was not to gain honor or em iment, but clearly and simply to de te himself to the service of God and inc others to the same hallowed consec tion." His prayer on the voyage wa that he might be "complete in all the ill of God, and holy in all manner of onversation as He that had called hi was holy."

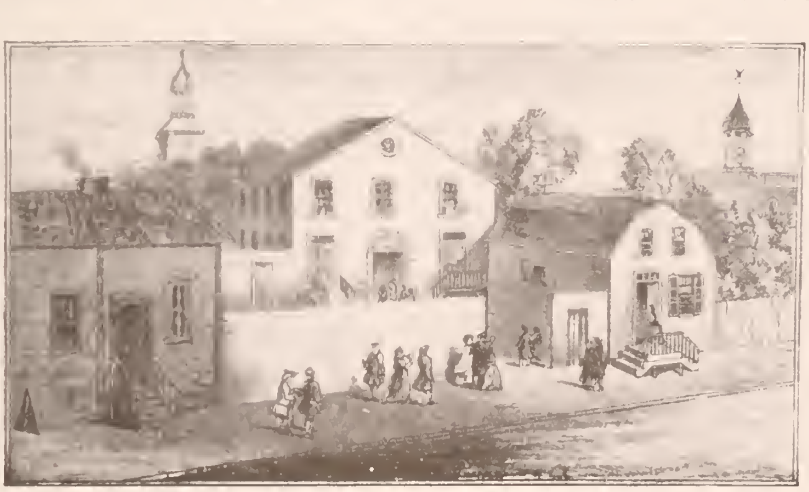
Asbury found little Methodist societies in New York, Philadelphia, Maryland and Virginia. He was warmly welcomed. at Philadelphia, later going to New York, and preaching his first sermon in John Street Church, November 13, 1771. Asbury at once began itinerant work, following out Wesley's dictum to "go where the people need you most." Asbury wrote in his journal, "My brethren seem unwilling to leave the cities, but I will show them the way. I have nothing to seek but the glory of God, nothing to fear but his displeasure. . . . Whomsoever I please or displease, I will be faithful to God, to the people and to my own soul."

At the time of Asbury's arrival in New York, it was a city of 25,000 people, extending from Battery Place to the present City Hall Park; and there were seventeen churches—three Dutch Reformed, three Episcopal, two Lutheran, one German Reformed, two Presbyterian and one each of Baptist, Seceders, Moravians, Jews, French Protestant and Methodist. While the Methodists had their separate societies at this time, the preachers were not authorized to administer the sacraments, and ministers and people attended the Episcopal churches to receive the communion.

The first regular conference of Methodist ministers was held in Philadelphia July 14, 1773, and was composed of ten preachers representing 1,116 members. After independence was won and recognized Mr. Wesley decided to remove the limitations from the Methodist ministers (they were not authorized to administer the sacraments), and to create the church in the United States an independent and self-governing body. The conference of Christmas, 1784, was called to receive letters from Mr. Wesley recommending the plan of organization of the church in the United States. This conference was attended by 104 ministers, representing 18,000 members. On December 27 Mr. Asbury was consecrated Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States; and there began that period of itinerant service which ended only with his release from all things earthly. Asbury's salary was the same as that of the other ministers: $64 a year with traveling allowances. He had one new outfit of clothing a year, usually the gift of friends in New York. At the time of his election as bishop the Methodist influence had spread through the wildernesses of Virginia and Tennessee and Kentucky and Indiana to the Mississippi. The church grew rapidly; the three annual conferences of 1784 had become twenty by 1792, and Bishop Asbury conducted each of these annual conferences, appointing the preachers to their charges and exercising firmly, but with unvarying justice and patience, a constant oversight of all of the elements of the expanding work. He traveled 6,000 miles each year. Often he rode fifty miles in a day, preaching two or three times, fording streams that were frequently in flood, threading his way over devious mountain trails through a wilderness infested with savages, driven with curses from unfriendly cabins to struggle on through the night over untried paths until he could find an open door, and sleeping many times on the ground in wet clothes. Rugged though he was, the constant exposure told upon him, and he fought sickness and distress of body through many weeks of every year; yet he kept on. In his later years the country had become a little more civilized, and he did some of his traveling in an old chaise that was given to him.

The country was in the midst of a great revival when Asbury reached America. Great union camp meetings were held, especially in the South and West, and at some of these meetings the crowds were so great that no one man's voice could reach them all. At these meetings, Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and perhaps Congregationalist preachers would be addressing the assembly at the same time; and yet, so great were the crowds, there was no interference. The Spirit was present in mighty power, and conversions and additions to the churches were by the hundreds. It was not unusual for a conference to make a gain of 700 or 800 members in a single year, and the other Protestant bodies made similar increases. Bishop Asbury preached often at these camp meetings, and souls were born into the kingdom under his preaching; but his greatest work was the building up of the organization that is the Methodist Church of today. From 1784 to 1800 Asbury was practically the sole bishop of the American church. Although elected a bishop Dr. Coke, especially following the death of Wesley, had spent most of his time in England, and at the General Conference of 1800 Bishop Asbury offered to resign to make way for the election of a younger man. The conference elected an associate bishop and the work was divided between them

Bishop Asbury continued his itinerant journeys to the conferences, and it was while journeying toward Baltimore for the General Conference of 1816 that his last illness overtook him. He preached his last sermon on a March Sunday at Richmond, Va. From Richmond he struggled on and at last reached the home of George Arnold, near Fredericksburg, Va., where he died on March 31, 1816, one hundred years ago.



Wesley Chapel, the First John Street Church

Among the Workers

T E MEN'S NATIONAL MISSIONARY ONGRESS, to be held in Washington, D. , April 26 to 30, under the direction of the aymen's Missionary Movement, will be on f the most momentous religious gatherings since the World Missionary Conference in inburgh in 1910. All the important for n and home mission agencies are making pre rations to participate. The sessions wil e held in Memorial Continental Hall. De ates have been allotted to the various Pr stant religious denominations upon an eq table basis, each denomination selecting its ow representatives. Among the speakers exp ted at the Congress are Mr. John R. M Mr. Robert E. Speer, Dr. Shailer Ma ews, Dr. W. D. MacKenzie, Bishop Fra is J. McConnell, George Sherwood Ed , Raymond Robbins, Dr. Silas McBee, Dr John F. Goucher and Ex-Lieutenant Go rnor A. J. Wallace of California. Applicatio for membership should be made to the mis onary agencies of the religious denominatio or to the Laymen's Missionary Moveme 1 Madison Avenue, New York.

P TOR B. F. MITCHELL of the Presby- rian Church at Timnath, Colo., reports for six members, of whom twenty were he of families, received into his church fol ing a two weeks' evangelistic meeting un the leadership of Dr. Francis E. Smiley of nver, Colo. Pastor Mitchell also reports tha following the revival there was established a public reading room, library and social center to supplant a pool room whose customers had been converted.

EVANGELIST HENRY W. STOUGH and party closed a six weeks campaign in Atlantic City early in February, and 1,000 conversions are reported. The Stough party went from Atlantic City to Tampa, Fla.

EVANGELIST JAMES B. MAC CLURE of Tamaqua, Pa., began a five weeks' evangelistic campaign at Chittenango, N. Y., early in February.

EVERY Monday afternoon at half-past two, an old-fashioned holiness meeting is conducted at the Pentecostal Church of the Nazarene, Eighth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, New York City. Messages are delivered by Spirit-filled preachers and teachers, and inspiring testimonies given. Special revival services have been conducted every night at eight o'clock by Evangelists Hanson and Archibald. A successful revival campaign has just closed at the East Rockaway Pentecostal Church of the Nazarene, at which many souls were blessed. Evangelist Schiverea recently closed a remarkably successful campaign at the John Wesley Pentecostal Church, Brooklyn, of which Rev. William Howard Hoople is pastor. The meetings began early in January and were to continue only through that month, but because of the unusual results were continued throughout February.

MICHIGAN is to vote on constitutional prohibition in November, and the temperance forces are engaged in a vigorous and united effort for a "dry" state. Detroit is reported to have 40 per cent. of all the saloons in the state, and this stronghold of wet sentiment has recently been stormed by the W. C. T. U. under the leadership of Mrs. Etta Sadler Shaw of St. Louis, Mo.

JOSIAH NORRIS TILTON of Raymond, N. H., for many years a faithful worker in the Methodist Church, and a loyal friend of the Christian Herald, died on November 21, 1915.

ACCORDING to statistics prepared for the Rochester, N. Y. Convention of the Layman's Missionary Movement, the contributions of the 73 churches of Rochester to all missions and benevolences increased from $77,502 in 1904 to $150,335 in 1911. The average weekly gift per member increased 2.1 cents. The city of Newark, N. J., is planning for another convention in two years. At the Decatur, Ill. convention, the First Methodist Church broke the record for conventions up to that time by enrolling 200 men.

EVANGELISTIC services are meeting with notable success throughout New England. The Evangelistic Association of New England has three Gospel preachers busy in the smaller towns with appointments ahead to the end of March. Successful meetings are reported in Wollaston, Mass., under Evangelist A. N. Peters, and from Gardner, Mass., Darien, Conn., Eastport, Me., and Manchester, N. H. Keene, N. H., is arranging for an evangelistic campaign in May, to be conducted by Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman and Charles Alexander.

EVANGELIST J. H. GRAMPS of Fort Plain, N. Y., has been doing good work in a quiet way among the congregations of New York City, and in personal evangelism. He has an earnest message, and many have been led to renewed faith in God.

A FIFTEEN days' revival meeting which closed February 20 at Monroe Center, Ill., resulted in the conversion of twenty persons and in twenty-one additions to the church membership.

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

CHAPTER XI

I HAD witnessed a battle between spiritual and unspiritual forces. The spirit had conquered the flesh. The young man's will had been reinforced in the crisis of his battle. A voice out of the immortal world had silenced the sin-prompting, had put to flight the world siren that lured him to ill. "So near is heaven to earth!" I cried, and as I opened my eyes, if tears were on my cheeks, they were not tears of grief. My guide said, "Very near, indeed, but not all mortal ears are sensitive to heavenly voices. Wilful continuance in sin, deliberate disobedience to heavenly voices, dulls and deadens the senses of the soul." His words reminded me of the memorable epigram of a preacher I used to hear—"One who lives in a machine-shop can not hear the music of an Æolian harp."

PALACES, mansions, pavilions, I had seen—gates, towers, arches—but no place of worship, no altar, no shrine. My mind was engaged in this reflection when my guide, evidently to guard me from a mistaken notion, reminded me: "It is written that the Apostolic Dreamer saw no temple in the New Jerusalem. All this realm is a temple. Our every breath is worship and our every thought is praise. There is no need for sacred places, since every place is sacred where God's glory dwelleth. Earth is full of the riches of his goodness, but heaven is full of the riches of his glory. Yet," continued he, "think not there are no places of special interest to the ransomed of the Lord. You have seen some of them, and you shall see others. There are no 'times and seasons' here, and yet they who enter these gates bring with them inextinguishable memories of certain great events, epochal incidents not alone in their lives but in the history of the race. They who have followed Christ on earth can never forget in eternity the deep significance of feasts and fasts, of commemorative anniversaries, the observance of which has helped them on their heavenly way. They who sang their Christmas hymns on earth, their penitential hymns on Good Friday, their Easter anthems, cease not their grateful praise even though they may have learned the new song, the song that mortal tongues could never sing."

Even before he spoke I knew that there were some sights in heaven which my eyes could not see, some sounds which my ears could not hear, until for me the sights and sounds of earth had closed forever. I had already seen in some degree that heaven is indeed the fulfilment and completion of earth at its best.

I NEXT journeyed from the city in the Morning Land to another, builded on the shores of a crystal sea. The approach to the city by the sea was over a mountain, which we ascended so gradually and easily that we had reached the summit before I was aware that we had risen to a height from which a bird's-eye view was possible both in the direction from which we had come, and looking toward the sea. It was evident to me that this city was of great antiquity; not that any sign of decay was visible, but that its architecture was of a type belonging to an age in the history of humanity before the dawn of the Christian era. I had looked at it but a moment when it flashed upon my mind what city on earth this place most resembled. It lay before me, the city of a dream, and yet there were the walls and palaces, the towers and pools of the City of David as it must have been in the golden age of its splendor. I saw innumerable streams flowing through orchards and gardens, making their way toward the sea. I thought, "Are these the streams that make glad the City of God?" I heard the music of the sea from afar like the echo of an infinite choir.

IN the center of the city rose a hill crowned with a building, or rather a group of buildings. It may not be possible for us to reconstruct, even in imagination, Solomon's Temple as it appeared in the golden age of Jerusalem. In size the temple of my vision far exceeded that, but the general outline must have been much the same. There were courts within courts, and massive gates on either side. I could see from the mountain upon which I stood that a great procession was wending its way up the hill toward the most beautiful gate of the temple and through it into the outer court. Here my guide enlightened me. He said, "The architects who planned and the artisans who built the temple in which God was worshiped for a thousand years have planned and built this temple, and to it come constantly those to whom the thought of it was dear in the other world. Those who enter it find now no altar of sacrifice—He to whom those ancient blood-symbols pointed, the eternal Lamb, having been slain once for all." As he spoke I heard, above the sweet sound of the sea, the song of singers in the temple. I could discern in it the music of child voices. The song grew in volume, until I could think only of those words in the book of Revelation which describe the chorus of "ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands."

LOOKING more closely, I could see in the center of an open court of the temple the radiant figure of a Man—the same I had seen on the bank of the river—the Good Shepherd among his lambs. Suddenly I made out the words of the song; they were of him, and thus they ran: "Worthy is the Lamb that has been slain, to receive power and riches and wisdom and might and honor and glory and blessing." Separate groups of singers somewhat distant from the central group responded with a sevenfold "Amen." Those nearest the figure of the Man knelt before him.

Just as the echoes of the incomparable song died away within my ears, I saw the colossal figure of a Cross, planted in the midst of the inner court of the temple, rising into the very sky.

AS I gazed upon the Cross, in the light of which the city and the temple vanished from my view, it changed its form, and where the Cross had stood I saw a tree which, for all its towering height and immense spread of branches, suggested nothing so much as the tree of the Apocalypse, which "bare twelve manner of fruits . . . and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."

It came not as a surprise to me when my guide said, "Your vision soon must fade. Your journey draws near its end." Like the disciples who witnessed the transfiguration of Jesus, I coveted the continuance of the experience. Yet I knew that I must return to the life I had eft and the tasks that were unfinished. My mpanion—I had almost said, my comfor r—assured me, "You shall see the Treasur of Prayer before you take your place again ith those whose prayers ascend unceasingly to G d." So saying, he took my hand, and then ens d a journey of inconceivable rapidity, yet wit the ease of thought. We passed over high m untains and illimitable plains.

At last—and I do not mean to convey the impression that the flight was a weary o or that I was impatient for it to end—in the listance at my right I saw in the midst of a far iar plain the octagonal Tower of Victory, and the network of highways leading thereto. Th n I knew from the general direction of our ght that I was to see again, and was probab to make my exit by, one of the gates on the we ern boundary of the city.

IF my journey was to end so soon, I tho ht, surely it is proper that I should thank my guide, my heavenly benefactor. Straigh ay he spoke, "We are never happier than en showing the beauty and the bounty of our h avenly home. Next to beholding the face o the Father, the chief joy of the inhabitants of his country consists in helping others to be ha py. This is God's will. The Golden Rule that sus gave your world is the supreme law here.'

PERHAPS it was because "exceeding ace had made me bold" that I inquired, " ere you also once a dweller on earth?" He rep ed, "I saw your world flung off into space from the flaming furnace of the sun. I saw the f ces ordained by the Father shaping it into be ty. I saw the beginning of life on your planet nd marked the moment when man first dare to call himself a child of God. I have seen em res rise and fall, dynasties perish, kings me ure strength with the King of kings and go dov to death. I have borne messages to the pro ets of the Lord in your world, and have been a ong those who encamped on earthly hills when ey that feared the Lord called upon him for su or. I saw the star hang over Bethlehem and witnessed his return when he ascended on igh 'leading captivity captive and bearing gift for men.' My interest in the world and its in bitants will not end until the last child of rth enters the deathless life."

While he had been speaking, we came w hin sight of the Treasury of Prayer. Ea hly treasuries are built with the strength of rts, in order to defeat the purposes of those who would "break through and steal." This s ucture more resembled a palace of pearl. Y it did not look unsubstantial—rather the wo of infinitely artistic hands. The pearl mosq at Agra is less beautiful, more evidently ea ly, than the building of my dream. The do on the side from which I saw it was of paneled p arl. set in a framework of sapphire. Through it did not pass, but into the wonderful interior was permitted to look, for the door stood ajar and white-winged messengers, moving sw tly, entered.

HAVE you ever looked into the recei ng-room of a great telegraph center? I so, you have had the impression that the ace yo saw was connected with the uttermost pas of the earth, and in a sense, doubtless, it as so connected. As I gazed into the Trsury of Prayer, I had that same impression rad to its highest power. But this, I learned, wa also a sending-station, for through other dos God's couriers, having received their "sled orders," were passing out. In the very ceer of the Treasury of Prayer I saw what seed to be a great golden basin. About it std four and twenty brightly clad angels with crytal vials in their hands out of which there coinually poured a stream of glittering jewels, sml but perfect, and reflecting light each from unmbered facets. It was like a shower of liqd sunshine. "These," said my guide, "a heavenly symbols of the supplications of he saints—their intercessions and thanksgivngs." I marked that the jewels being poured ou varied in radiance and that some seemed tired with scarlet light. "Those," said my gue, "are emblems of the prayers of parents for heir children. But the brightest jewel that flaes within those walls symbolizes the interceon of the Great High Priest, our Lord himself." "All this is too wonderful for my understanding," I cried, "and yet it is enough to know that the faint prayers of God's struggling children on earth are precious in his sight."

"Let us now go to the Interpreters' Gate," said my companion, and to that portal we passed. I had stood before it earlier in my vision. Through it I had been readmitted after passing from gate to gate along the shining stairway. Through it I was also to leave the City, my vision being ended. The Interpreters' Gate was also the Prophets' Gate, and as we approached it I observed that throngs of newly-arrived pilgrims were coming in, every one receiving an abundant welcome. They included representatives of all races and nations, and I thought of Bishop Howe's hymn:

"From earth's wide bounds, from ocean's farthest coast,
Through gates of pearl streams in the countless host,
Singing to Father, Son and Holy Ghost,
Alleluia!"

BEFORE my vision faded, the angel of my journey addressed me, saying, "Heaven has no message for earth save that which has been delivered by the prophets and apostles. Say to those who are the Lord's remembrancers that his word can never fail, and that he that doeth the will of God abideth forever. See that thou hold fast that which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. Forget not the trimmed lamp and the girt loin, for in such an hour as ye think not the Bridegroom cometh."

He remained at my side as I passed through the inner gate and down the stairway to the Gate of Pearl. Through it I looked into the surrounding darkness lighted up here and there only with twinkling stars. Then there fell upon my spirit a deep slumber, and when I awoke from it I was again in the world of time, within the old familiar walls, weak of body, but strong of faith and firm of hope. Not voice of angel-guide nor music of heavenly choir is graven on my memory so deeply as the words of him my soul seeketh, "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me."

To be continued

The Treadwell Mines

CONTINUING
FRANK G. CARPENTER'S ALASKA NARRATIVE

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

I AM at the Treadwell mines which lie here on Douglas Island in southern Alaska, about as far north of the United States boundary as the disnce from New York to Chicago. Whin a rifle shot of where my typewrer stands there are four great mining prerties that have already yielded eig times as much gold as the amount Ue Sam paid for the territory. Their to production up to January 1, 1915, wa 24,000,000 tons of ore, from which wa taken more than $58,000,000 in go, or $2.42 for each ton of ore that we through the mills. Last year the mines produced more than 1,500,00 tons of ore, and their gold output th year was over $3,800,000, or more th one-half what we paid for Alaska. Tl mills are now crushing about 5,000 to of rock per day, and they have engh ore blocked out to keep them bu for six years to come. The force of borers consists of 1,300 men, and th get on the average wages of $100 pe month. The mines support a comunity of about 3,000 people, wl live in the towns of Douglas and Tdwell.

ton of ore is two thousand pounds. It as much as two horses can haul in a agon over a country road. An oe of pure gold is worth $20, so that th gold represented by $2.42 would weh about one-ninth of an ounce. Ts means that only one-ninth of an ounce of gold has been scattered through every two thousand pounds of that ore, and also that the whole two thousand pounds had to be dug from the earth, crushed to powder, run through chemicals and handled again and again to get that tiny bit of gold out. The managers of the mine tell me that they are able to do this for $1.35 per ton, so that there is all told a profit of about $1.05 in mining this gold. At the present output this means a profit of over $5,000 a day.

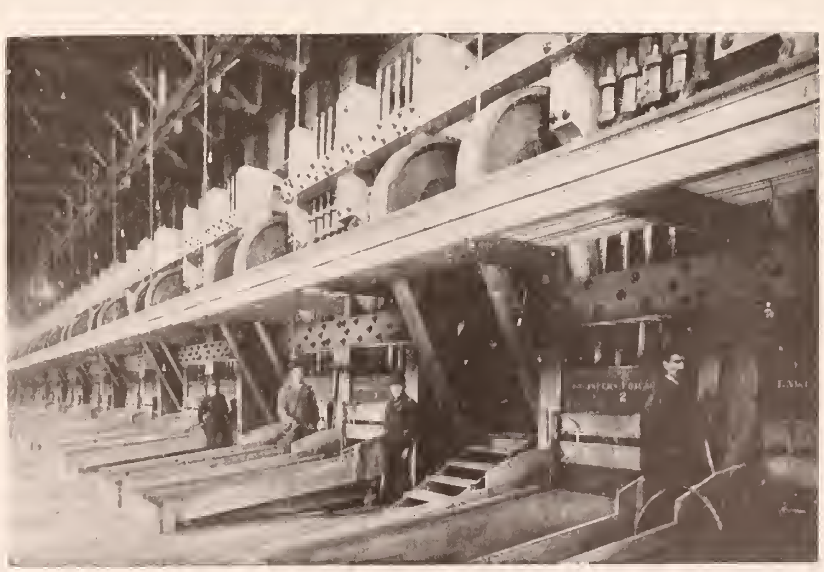
BUT before I go further let me tell you something of the romance of these wonderful properties. Immediately back of me on the side of the mountain is the great Glory Hole, which covers the site where the first gold was discovered. It is several hundred feet above the Gastineau Channel, and far down the slope of the mountain, the upper portions of which are now covered with snow. It is now abandoned, and they are mining in tunnels far down below it. The hole is a mighty ellipse 800 feet long, 600 feet broad and more than 600 feet deep. You could drop the Washington Monument inside it and its aluminum tip would still be fifty feet from the top. You could lay it lengthwise within it, and the ends would not touch the sides. You can still see the remains of the gold ore in its sides. Its walls of black rock are streaked with drab and gray, and here and there is a string of white quartz from which comes the gold.

As you look a great rock slides off the top and goes crashing down to the bottom. It was from such rocks the mine got the name of Glory Hole, as the miners were often here sent into eternity. Strange to say, many of their deaths came from the crows. These birds made the neighborhood of the Glory Hole their favorite roosting and feeding places. They were so numerous that trumpeters were stationed about the hole to warn the miners of danger in case a flock should light on the edges. The first blast of the trumpet meant, "Tho crows are now lighting," and the second warned the miners that the rocks were loosening and would soon be down upon them. A slight pecking of the gravel overhead was liable to start an avalanche that would carry tons of rock down the sides.

THE richest ore of the Treadwell mines was found at the top. Like cream, it seemed to have risen from the low-grade gold-bearing rock underneath. This ore was discovered by a Canadian whose nickname was French Pete and whose real name was Pierre Erussard. French Pete came here with some Indians when Juneau and Harris were making their gold finds on the opposite side of the Gastineau Channel, and began to prospect Douglas Island. He washed the sands of the beach and found color. A little later he climbed up the hills to where the Glory Hole is and there discovered an outcrop of gold-bearing quartz, upon which he located two claims. He named one claim "Paris," after the capital of France, where he expected to spend the great treasures he had discovered, and the other "Bear's Nest," because it was in a little cave that was occupied by a bear and two cubs. French Pete then started mining, but had nothing more than rockers and sluice pots and could crush and wash only the softer parts of the lode. He took out some gold, but not enough to pay well, and a little later on sold the mine to John Treadwell for the sum of $5. That was in 1881.

John Treadwell had come to Alaska at the instance of some California capitalists. He had been prospecting in the Silver Bow basin, back of Juneau, and had found quartz gold in the belt where the Ebner mine now is. But the gold was poor, and he was about to give up in despair and go back to San Francisco when he met Pete and learned of his discovery on Douglas Island. He went to see the claims, but did not think much of them, as the ore seemed to be of too low a grade tc pay for the mining. He suggested, however, that Pete should give him a quit-

Mining Gold Five Hundred Feet Under the Ocean



One of the Stamp Mills, Showing Stamps and Quicksilver Tables

Looking Back and Looking Forward

Martha Muchwork was in the midst of her weekly washing. It was big, and it was heavy. She was dead tired and only half through at noon. She knew she wouldn't finish till five or after.

She was discouraged. She had been over-working for fifteen years. Looking back she couldn't remember a day in all that time when she hadn't gotten up tired, and gone to bed tireder; and she didn't see anything ahead of her but work as long as she lived. Just then Mrs. Next-door came in.

"I've made up my mind," she said, "to interfere. I've noticed how sick you look and how hard you work. Now I have just as much to do—but look at the difference! I'm all through my washing! And every day I get done hours before you do. Why? Because I use Fels-Naptha Soap and it does all the hard work for me—housework as well as washing. I don't wear myself out hard-rubbing my clothes. Fels-Naptha does the most work with the least help from me, and does it in half the time."

Nowadays Martha Muchwork looks forward to the hours she has to spend for rest or pleasure. She uses Fels-Naptha Soap too, and the perfect combination of naptha and other wonderful cleansers in the soap does her washing and every soap-and-water task easily, perfectly and in half the time it used to take.

We want you to try Fels-Naptha Soap and will gladly mail you a sample if you will send name and address to Fels & Co., 7301 Woodland Avenue, Philadelphia, Pa.

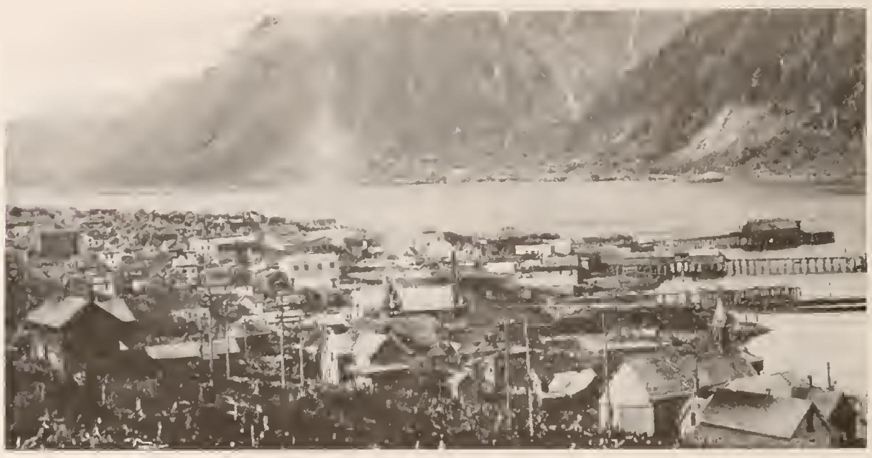
claim deed for the two properties for $5, and he would try to sell them to the capitalists of San Francisco. Pete had a store, and the understanding was that if the mines were opened the miners would trade at his store. This was an additional consideration, and so for $5 was sold this property, from which, as I have said, have already come about sixty millions of dollars.

I WENT down into the mines with Mr. Russel G. Wayland, the assistant manager of the Treadwell properties. We climbed into the bucket and held on to the rim. Then an electric signal was given and we shot down into the darkness. The great bucket wobbled this way and that as we fell. Our descent was at an angle of about fifty degrees. We continued at that angle for something like 2,000 feet, and after that the fall was even more precipitous. At last we stepped out far under the ocean. We were now given acetylene lamps, and with these we picked our way through the tunnels and stopes. The tunnels were partially lighted by electricity, and each of them had its railroad. We walked between the tracks, stepping now and then to the side, and squeezing ourselves to the wall to let the mule-drawn ore trains pass. At one place we passed a mule stable, and I was told the mules were kept down in the mines for several years at a time. Those I saw were fat and not at all vicious. The darkness does not affect their eyesight, as is generally supposed.



Douglas, Alaska. Juneau Dimly Seen Across the Channel

I stopped now and then in the stopes or great caverns, where the miners are blasting the ore. They use drills operated by compressed air to sink the holes for the dynamite, and thus cut out great rooms away down under the sea. These stopes are several hundred feet high, and of almost an acre in area. Some of them are filled with gold ore nearly to the roof. Nevertheless, only a slab of rock lies between them and the ocean.

Leaving the mines, I went through the mills, where they were crushing the mighty masses of rock to powder and saving the gold. As soon as the property was bought, way back in 1881, the company began to install the best of modern machinery. Its first mill had 120 stamps. That was constructed thirty-three years ago. The company now has five great mills with 930 stamps, and thirty more stamps under construction. The motive power for the mills is partially electric, supplied by water powers on Douglas Island and on the mainland. A part of the power comes from a hydro-electric plant at the foot of the Mendenhall Glacier, which is twelve or fifteen miles away, and another part comes from four miles southeast of Juneau. California crude oil is used for generating steam and heat, and the company is now burning about 8,000,000 gallons of such oil every year. The oil is brought here in tank ships and stored in steel tanks.

THE red buildings may be seen from the ship's deck as you ride up the channel. They wall the sides of the hills and as you come near them a noise like so many blasts of artillery fills the air. Inside it is almost deafening. You may shout into the ear of the man at your side, but you cannot make yourself heard. The noise is from the hundreds of stamps which are always falling upon the ore to crush it to powder. As the ore comes in it is in rock of all sizes from that of the broken stone of a macadamized road to masses as large as a flour barrel. The larger rock is broken until it is of a size fit for the stamps. These reduce everything to a powder as fine as the finest flour dust.

Each stamp consists of a long steel beam as big around as the arm of a man, fitted into a mighty shoe, which is eight inches in diameter and perhaps a foot long. This shoe is of steel. It is fastened to the end of the stamp, and the stem and shoe together weigh about half a ton. In crushing ore the stem is so hung by the machinery of the mill that it can be raised and dropped on the ore 100 times every minute. Think of dropping a half ton upon rock every time your watch ticks, and you have a slight idea of the power that grinds the ore to a powder. There are hundreds of these stamps working at once, and as you look at them you do not wonder at the noise. There are almost a thousand of them falling within a stone's throw of where I am writing, and every time they drop 900,000 pounds of weight falls on the ore. This dropping goes on day and night. Sundays and week days, all the year through, and the result is the tiny atoms of gold which are so multiplied that they run high into the millions.

The wear and tear of the machinery is enormous. The shoes are of solid steel. Each of them is twice as big as a loaf of bread, but it is worn to the thickness of a knife blade after it has crushed three tons of ore. The iron block upon which the ore lies is soon ground away, and it has to be replaced for every five tons.

The process of getting the gold out of the ore dust after the crushing is simple. In front of the stamps is an apron of netting made of wires put together in a mesh finer than that of any kitchen sieve. As the ore is crushed a stream of water carries the flour dust through the mesh and it falls onto inclined tables of copper coated with quicksilver. Now quicksilver has an affinity for gold, and as the powdered ore flows over it it swallows the free gold, as it were, and the rock sand passes on. After a time the quicksilver becomes loaded with gold. It is then scraped off and put into a furnace, where the heat vaporizes it and the pure gold only is left.

In addition to this free gold there is some gold in the baser minerals found in the rock. These minerals are taken out on shaking tables and then treated to a cyanide bath, which sucks up the gold just as water takes up any salt dropped into it. The cyanide water is then put through a process by which it gives up the gold.

PRESS dispatches from Oakland, Cal., March 7, announce the death of James T. Treadwell, who, with his brother John, located the famous Treadwell gold mine on Douglas Island, Alaska. Mr. Treadwell died suddenly on a ferry boat between San Francisco and Oakland.

A VALUABLE BOOK

The book "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered" received in good shape. I cannot see how you can afford to give so valuable a book for so small a favor.

Valparaiso, Ind. Mrs. H. H. Rowe.

On the Highst Shelf

When a cereal food has reached the top-shelf of public favor, showing an unbroken record of incas-ing sales for fifteen yrs, there must be more an one "reason" for it. he finest sales organization nd the cleverest adverting ever devised will not ep a food at the top-nch unless it has behind it cher merit than mere pate-goodness. As a matte of fact there are six god "reasons" for

Shreddel Wheat

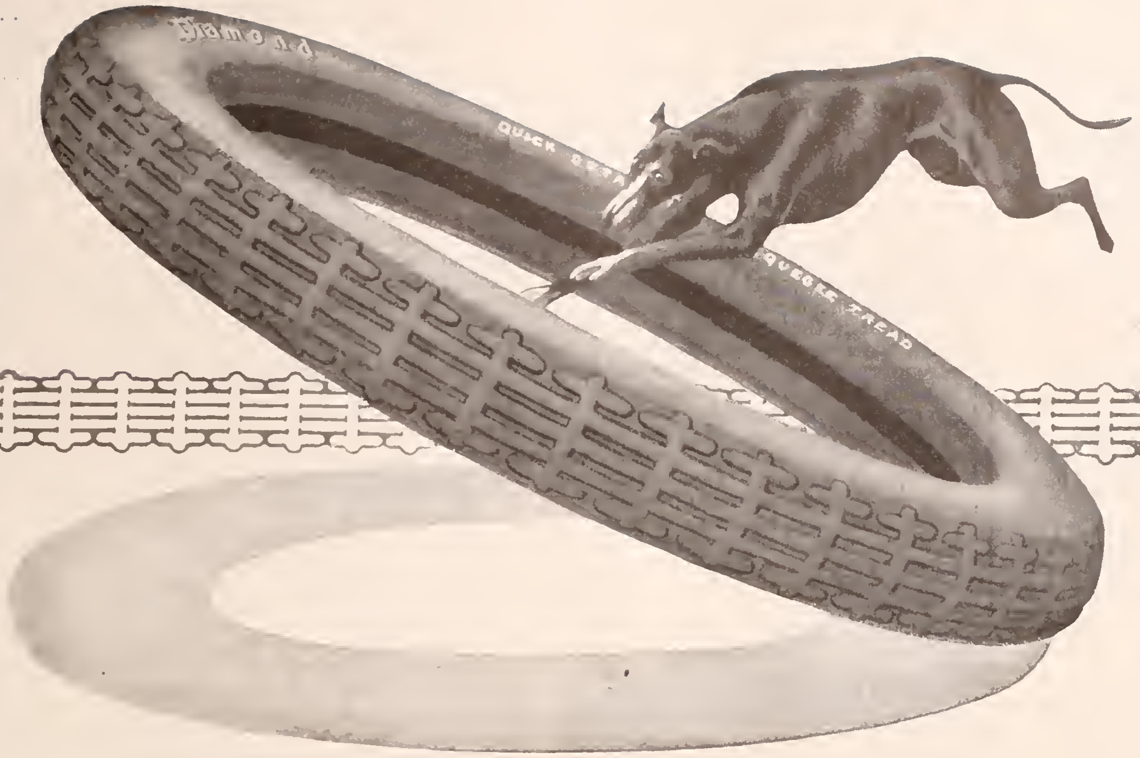
Here they are: cleanliss of manufacture; purity of product; easy digestibi y; tr-oughly cooked and rey-to-serve; fair and honor le "selling policy." There re many other "reasons" ut these are the cardinal caes for the unchallenged lea r-ship of Shredded Whsat over all other cereal fods.

For breakfast heat one c more Biscuits in the ove to restore crispness; pou hot or cold milk over then adding a little cream; sal or sweeten to suit th taste. Deliciously nourishing for any meal wit stewed prunes, slice bananas, baked apples o other fruits.

Made only by

The Shredded Whit Company

Niagara Falls - - New Yrk



This Lively, Sure-footed Squegee-tread of 1916 black "Velvet" Rubber

• • •

PLENTY of ACTION in the new black "VELVET" Rubber tread of the 1916 Diamond Tire.

'Stretchy as a pure rubber band,—so it will yield to sharp obstacles on the road without puncturing.

'Springy as a Baseball which rebounds from the Bat,—so it will instantaneously take up the millions of minor vibrations that are beyond the capacity of steel springs to absorb.

'Clingy as the muscle-padded foot of the Greyhound,—so as to give its maximum Traction with a minimum of Friction.

That's the new black "VELVET" Rubber tread in 1916 Diamond Tires.

Cut a sliver off it, and you'll uncover a surface so close-grained and shiny that it looks like a facet of Flint.

Stretch it thousands of times,—to twice or thrice its length,—but you cannot tear its fibres, or kill its capacity for immediate recoil.

• • •

BLACK-TREADS, with Red-sides—so shall you know the new "VELVET" Rubber Diamond Tires of 1916.

Priced so reasonably (notwithstanding the rise in the Rubber Market) that you will marvel at the delivery of so MUCH Mileage,—so MUCH Liveliness,—such WONDERFUL Response-to-Power,—without a premium price being charged for all these premium advantages.

"Velvet" Rubber is now used in (1916) Diamond Auto Tires,—Diamond Inner Tubes,—and Diamond Bicycle Tires.

You'll find that its use multiplies the Service they render, without increasing their price to you.

Test out the new "VELVET" Diamond Tires, and see!

Diamond SQUEGEE Non-Skid Tires

Sunny Days Bran Days

Have you ever tried bran food every day for a week?

If so, you know the laxative effect. And you will never quit.

Three things are quite important. One is to have the bran food dainty. Second, to have it varied. Third, to have the bran in flake form.

Pettijohn's Bran Foods best meet these requirements. One is a morning luxury. The other makes fifty dainties. Thus every meal may have its bran food, and every day be benefited by it.

And that's well worth while.

Pettijohn's

Breakfast Food

Rolled Wheat with Bran Flakes

Soft, flavory wheat in flake form, hiding 25 per cent unground bran. A morning whole-wheat dainty—15c per package.

Pettijohn's Flour—This is 75 per cent fine patent flour mixed with 25 per cent special bran flakes. Use like Graham flour in any recipe. New recipes on the label. 25c per large package.

Order both from your grocer.

The Quaker Oats Company

Makers—Chicago [1217]

KEEP YOUR CHILDREN STRONG

Some children catch one ailment after another, have colds after colds, while other children are seldom sick

If your children are pale or frail, if they catch colds easily, lack ambition or are backward in school, they need SCOTT'S EMULSION which is rich in the food elements to create good blood to strengthen their bodies and brains—SCOTT'S EMULSION is free from alcohol or habit forming drugs.

CHILDREN RELISH IT.

REFUSE SUBSTITUTES.

14-58

SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

Money for Easter

Over 800 Church organizations are making extra funds selling

Brewster Chocolate and Cocoa

Your society can do it.

No capital required.

Write today for particulars naming your Church and Society.

Brewster Cocoa Mfg. Co., Jersey City, N. J.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions." and "How to Get Your Patent." RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

CHAPTER XVIII

SCHOOL had settled down to real work by the opening of the new week. Margaret knew her scholars and had gained a personal hold on most of them already. There was enough novelty in her teaching to keep the entire school in a pleasant state of excitement and wonder as to what she would do next, and word had gone out through all the country round about that the new teacher had taken the school by storm. It was not infrequent for men to turn out of their way on the trail to get a glimpse at the school as they were passing, just to make sure the reports were true. Report stated that the teacher was exceedingly pretty; that she would take no nonsense not even from the big boys; that she never threatened nor punished, but that every one of the boys was her devoted slave. There had been no uprising, and it almost seemed as if that popular excitement was to be omitted this season and school was to sail along in an orderly and proper manner. In fact, the entire school as well as the surrounding population was eagerly talking about the new piano, which seemed really to be a coming fact. Not that there had been anything done toward it yet, but the teacher had promised that just as soon as every one was really studying hard and doing his best, she was going to begin to get them ready for an entertainment to raise money for that piano. They couldn't begin until everybody was in good working order, because they didn't want to take the interest away from the real business of school; but it was going to be a Shakespeare play, whatever that was, and therefore of grave import. Some people talked learnedly about Shakespeare and hinted of poetry, but the main part of the community spoke the name joyously and familiarly and without awe, as if it were milk and honey in their mouths. Why should they reverence Shakespeare more than any one else?

Margaret had grown used to seeing a head appear suddenly at one of the schoolroom windows and look long and frowningly first at her, then at the school, and then back to her again as if it were a nine days' wonder. Whoever the visitor was he would stand quietly watching the process of the hour as if he were at a play, and Margaret would turn and smile pleasantly, then go right on with her work. The visitor would generally take off a wide hat and wave it cordially, smile back a curious softened smile, and by and by he would mount his horse and pass on reflectively down the trail, wishing he could be a boy and go back again to school—such a school!

Oh, it was not all smooth—the way that Margaret walked. There were hitches, and unpleasant days when nothing went right, and when some of the girls got silly and rebellious, and the boys followed in their lead. She had her trials like any teacher, skilful as she was, and not the least of them became Rosa Rogers, the petted beauty, who presently manifested a childish jealousy of her, in her influence over the boys. Noting this Margaret went out of her way to win Rosa, but found it a difficult matter.

Rosa was proud, selfish and unprincipled. She never forgave any one who frustrated her plans. She resented being made to study like the rest. She had always compelled the teacher to let her do as she pleased and still give her a good report. This she found she could not do with Margaret, and for the first time in her career she was compelled to work or fall behind. It presently became not a question of how the new teacher was to manage the big boys and the bad boys of the Ashland Ridge school, but how she was to prevent Rosa Rogers and a few girls who admired her from upsetting all her plans. The trouble was that Rosa was pretty and knew her power over the boys. If she chose she could put them all in a state of insubordination, and she chose very often during those first few weeks.

BUT there was one visitor who did not confine himself to looking in at the window. One morning a fine black horse came galloping up to the school at recess time, and a well-set-up young man in spotless military uniform sprang off and came into the building. His shining spurs caught the sunlight and flashed as he walked. The gold braid on his coat and the buttons on his cap flashed also. The boys in the yard stopped their ball game, and the girls huddled close in whispering groups and drew near to the door. He was a young officer from the Fort, some thirty miles away, and he had brought an invitation for the new school teacher to come over to dinner on Friday evening and stay until the next Monday morning. The invitation was from the wife of the captain in command of the Fort. She had heard of the coming of the beautiful young teacher and wanted to attach her to her social circle.

The young officer was deference itself to Margaret, openly admiring her as he talked and saying the most gracious things to her; and then while she was answering the note he smiled over at Rosa Rogers, who had slipped into her seat and was studiously preparing her algebra—with the book upside down.

Margaret, looking up, caught Rosa's smiling glance and the tail end of a look from the officer's eyes, and felt a passing wonder whether the young man had ever met the girl before. Something in the boldness of his look made her feel that he had not. Yet he was all smiles and deference to herself, and his open admiration and pleasure that she had come to help brighten this lonely country and that she would accept the invitation, were really pleasant to the girl.

The young officer had light hair combed very smooth, and light blue eyes. They were bolder and handsomer than the minister's, but the girl had a feeling that they were the very same cold color. She wondered at her comparison, for she liked the handsome young man, and in spite of herself was a little flattered at the nice things he had said to her. Nevertheless when she remembered him afterward it was always with that uncomfortable feeling that if he hadn't been so handsome and polished in his appearance he would have seemed just a little bit like that minister, and she couldn't for the life of her tell why.

When she looked back at Rosa there was a narrowing of the girl's eyes and a frown of hate on her brows, and Margaret turned with a sigh back to her school problem: what to do with Rosa Rogers?

But Rosa did not stay in the schoolhouse. She slipped out and walked arm in arm with Amanda Bounds down the road.

MARGARET went to the door and watched, and presently she saw the young officer wheel and come galloping back to the door. He had forgotten to tell her that an escort would be sent to bring her to the Fort as early on Friday afternoon as she would be ready to leave the school, and he intimated that he hoped he might be detailed for that pleasant duty.

Margaret looked into his face and warmed to his pleasant smile. How could she have thought him like West? He touched his hat and rode away, and a moment later she saw him draw rein beside Rosa and Amanda, and presently dismount.

Bud rang the bell just then, and Margaret went back to her desk with a lingering look at the three figures in the distance. It was fully half an hour before Rosa came in, with Amanda looking scared behind her, and troubled Margaret watched the sly look in the girl's eyes and wondered what she ought to do about it. As Rosa was passing out of the door after school she called her to the desk.

"You were late in coming i after recess, Rosa," said Margaret ntly; "have you any excuse?"

"I was talking to a friend," sai Rosa with a toss of her head which d as plainly as words could have do , "I don't intend to give an excuse."

"Were you talking to the gen man who was here from the Fort?"

"Well, if I was, what is that you, Miss Earle?" said Rosa hau tily. "Did you think you could have the men and boys to yourself?"

"Rosa," said Margaret, try t speak calmly, but her voice tre bling with suppressed indignation, on't talk that way to me. Child, d you ever meet Mr. Forsythe before?"

"I'm not a child, and it's n e of your business!" flouted Rosa a rily, and she twitched away and flung rself out of the school. Margaret, tre bling from the disagreeable encounter, ood at the window and watched the gir oing down the road. She knew in he eart that this girl, once an enemy, wou be a bitter one, and her last move had en a most unfortunate one, coming as it did with Rosa in the lead. She uld, of course, complain to Rosa's fan , or to the school board, but such was the policy she had chosen. She wante o be able to settle her own difficulti It seemed strange that she could not ach this one girl, who was in a way t key to the situation. Perhaps th play would be able to help her. She s nt a long time that evening going o the different plays in her library, and ally with a look of apology toward ttle photographed head of Shakespea she decided on the "Midsummer N ht's Dream." What if it was away abo the heads of them all? Wouldn't a f get something from it? And was it better to take a great thing and to make her scholars and a few the community understand it, rathe han to take a silly little play that wou not amount to anything in the end Of course they could not do it well; hat went without saying. Of cou it would be away beyond them all, t at least it would be a study of som ing great for her pupils, and she uld meantime teach them a little out Shakespeare and perhaps help so of them to learn to love his wor and study it.

CAREFULLY she went ove the parts and selected the one ich she thought would best fit Rosa R ers, and please her as well, because i ave her opportunity to display her uty and charm. She really was a pret girl and would look well in the art. Margaret wondered whether sh ere altogether right in attempting to w the girl through her vanity, and yet hat other weak place was there in wh to storm the silly little citadel of her ul?

And so the work of assigning par and learning them began that very ek; though no one was allowed a part ntil his work for the day had all been h ded in.

At noon Margaret made one ore attempt with Rosa Rogers. She rew her to a seat beside her and put ide as much as possible her own re mbrance of the girl's disagreeable a ons and impudent words.

"Rosa," she said, and her voic was very gentle, "I want to have a littl alk with you. You seem to feel that yo and I are enemies, and I don't want y to have that feeling. I hoped we'd b the best of friends. You see, there isn any other way for us to work well tog her. And I want to explain why I spo to you as I did yesterday. It was n as you hinted, that I want to keep a my acquaintances to myself. I hav no desire to do that. It was because eel responsible for the girls and boys i my care, and I was troubled lest pe ps you had been foolish——"

Margaret paused. She could s by the bright hardness of the girl's yes that she was accomplishing no ng. Rosa evidently did not believe her

"Well, Rosa," she said sudd ly, putting an impulsive, kindly hand c the

Kyanize
KY-AN-IZE

White Enamel

American Made.

Will not crack, chip or peel.

Dries hard. Durable.

Leaves a brilliant, beautiful, white, stay-white gloss on wood, metal or plaster, outdoors or in.

Economical!

Costs a little more—but covers double the surface of ordinary enamel.

Easily kept clean.

No repainting necessary.

Kyanize
KY-AN-IZE

Floor Finish

A lasting varnish for all nterior woodwork.

Use it on floors, stairs and all standing finish.

Equally good for furniture.

Dries hard — and wears long.

Comes in eight colors.

Kyanize White Enamel and Floor Finish are recommended by Architects and Decorators everywhere. You should try them.

There's a Kyanize Agent in your neighborhood If you do not know him write us. We will gladly give you his name and address.

Bston Varnish Company
Erett Station Boston, U. S. A.

girl's arm, "suppose we forget it this time, put it all away and be friends. Let's learn to understand each other if we can, but in the mean time I want to talk to you about the play."

And then indeed Rosa's hard manner broke, and she looked up with interest, albeit there was some suspicion in the glance. She wanted to be in that play with all her heart; she wanted the very showiest part in it too; and she meant to have it, although she had a strong suspicion that the teacher would want to keep that part for herself, whatever it was.

But Margaret had been wise. She had decided to take time and explain the play to her and then let her choose her own part. She judged wisely that Rosa would do better in the part in which her interest centered, and perhaps the choice would help her to understand her pupil better.

And so for an hour she patiently stayed after school and went over the play, explaining it carefully, and it seemed at one time as though Rosa was about to choose to be Puck, because, with quick perception, she caught the importance of that character; but when she learned that the costume must be a quiet hood and skirt of green and brown she scorned it, and chose at last to be Titania, queen of the fairies. So, with a sigh of relief, and a quick insight into the shallow nature, Margaret began to teach the girl some of the fairy steps, and found her quick and eager to learn. In the first lesson Rosa forgot for a little while her animosity, and became almost as one of the other scholars. The play was going to prove a great means of bringing them all together.

Before Friday afternoon the parts had all been assigned and plans for the entertainment were well under way.

Jed and Timothy had been as good as their word about giving the teacher riding lessons, each vying with the other to bring a horse and make her ride at the noon hour; and she had already taken several good lessons and a long ride or two in company with both her teachers.

The thirty-mile ride for Friday, then, was not such an undertaking as it might otherwise have been, and Margaret looked forward to it with great eagerness.

CHAPTER XIX

THE little party of escort arrived before school was closed on Friday afternoon and came down to the schoolhouse in full force to take the teacher away with them. The young officer and another one, with the hostess herself from the Fort, comprised the party, and Margaret dismissed school ten minutes early and went back with them to Tanner's to make a hurried change in her dress and pick up her suit case, which was already packed. As they rode away from the school, Margaret looked back and saw Rosa Rogers posing in one of her sprite dances in the school yard, saw her kiss her hand laughingly toward their party, and saw the flutter of a handkerchief in young Forsythe's hand. It was all very general and elusive, a passing bit of fun, but it left an uncomfortable impression on the teacher's mind. She looked keenly at the young officer as he rode up smiling beside her and once more experienced that strange sudden change of feeling about him.

She took opportunity during that long ride to find out if the young man had known Rosa Rogers before; but he frankly told her that he had just been ordered out to duty at the Fort a month before from an Eastern post, and was bored to death because he didn't know a soul in the whole state, and until he had seen her had not laid eyes on one whom he cared to know. Yet while she could not help enjoying the gay badinage, she carried a sense of uneasiness whenever she thought of the young girl Rosa in her pretty fairy pose with her fluttering pink fingers and her saucy smiling eyes. There was something untrustworthy, too, in the handsome face of the man beside her.

There was just one shadow over this bit of a holiday. Margaret had a little feeling that some of the folks from the camp might come down on Saturday or Sunday, and she would miss them. Yet they had said nothing about it, and she had no way of sending them word that she would be away. She had meant to send Mom Wallis a letter by the next messenger that came that way. It was all written and lying on her bureau, but no one had been down all the week. She was therefore greatly pleased when an approaching rider in the distance proved to be Gardley, and with a joyful little greeting she drew rein and hailed him, giving him a message for Mom Wallis.

ONLY Gardley's eyes told what this meeting was to him. His demeanor was grave and dignified. He acknowledged the introductions to the rest of the party gracefully, touched his hat with the ease of one to the manner born, and rode away, flashing her one gleam of a smile that told her he was glad of the meeting; but throughout the brief interview there had been an air of question and hostility between the two men, Forsythe and Gardley. The young officer surveyed the other rudely, almost insolently, as if his uniform gave him rights beyond the other, and as if he resented the coming of the stranger. Gardley's gaze was cold, too, as he met the look of the officer, and his eyes looked keenly, as though they would search and find out what manner of man was riding with his friend.

When he was gone Margaret had the feeling that he was somehow disappointed, and once she turned in the saddle and looked wistfully after him, but he was riding furiously into the distance, sitting his horse as straight as an arrow, and already far away upon the desert.

"Your friend is a reckless rider," said the young officer, with a sneer in his voice that Margaret did not like.

"Isn't he fine-looking? Where did you find him, Miss Earle?" asked the wife of the commandant eagerly. "I wish I'd asked him to join us. He left so suddenly I didn't realize he was going."

Margaret felt a wondering and pleasant sense of possession and pride in Gardley as she watched, but she quietly explained that the young stranger was from the East, and that he was engaged in some kind of cattle business at a distance from Ashland. Her manner was reserved and the matter dropped. She somehow felt a reluctance to tell how her acquaintance with Gardley began. It seemed something between themselves. She could fancy the gushing wife of the captain saying: "How romantic!" She was that kind of woman. It was evident that she was romantically inclined herself, for she used her fine eyes with effect on the young officer who rode with her, and Margaret found herself wondering what kind of a husband she had, and what her mother would think of a woman like this.

There was no denying that the luxury of the Fort was a happy relief from the simplicity of life at the Tanners'. Iced drinks and cushions and easy chairs, feasting and music and laughter. There were books, too, and magazines, and all the little things that go to make up a cultured life; and yet they were not people of Margaret's world, and when Saturday evening was over she sat alone in the room they had given her and looked herself full in the face in the glass and confessed to herself that she looked back with more pleasure to the Sabbath spent with Mom Wallis than she could look forward to a Sabbath here. The morning proved her forebodings well founded.

True, there was a brief service, formal and cold, but the people of the Fort seemed to have little interest in it, and went through the form as if it were breakfast, or some other fixed duty.

After it was over there were various forms of amusement proposed for her pleasure, and she really felt very much embarrassed for a few moments to know how to avoid what to her was absolute Sabbath-breaking. Yet she did not wish to be rude to these people, who were really trying to be kind to her. She managed at last to get them interested in music, and grouping them around the piano, after a few preliminary performances by herself at their earnest solicitation, she coaxed them into singing hymns.

To be continued

Would You Like to talk with Moody's Pastor about the Great War?

Has this Greatest War of the Ages puzzled—perhaps shaken—your Christian faith?

Is it to be the last great war, as many hope? The Bible's answer is clear, positive, terrible. Are you posted?

Do you know what real prophecy—the Bible's—has to say about this war?

Did you know that the most talked-of man in America to-day, when real prophecy is mentioned, was D. L. Moody's pastor?

That he is Editor of one of the most widely used reference Bibles in the world—the Scofield—published by the great Oxford University Press?

Dr. C. I. Scofield is just finishing one of the most extraordinary series of articles on Bible prophecy that has ever been prepared.

They will be published exclusively in The Sunday School Times, an every-week Bible-study and Christian Life journal for adults.

Did you know that almost one-fourth of the Bible is prophecy?

That the present year's International Uniform Sunday-school Lessons in Acts cannot be understood without a clear knowledge of "What Say the Prophets?"

Do you know how to distinguish between the wild, unbalanced talk about Christ's Second Coming, and the precious, thrilling truth?

Dr. Scofield's articles will tell you. They solve the riddle of the tragic World-War.

An opportunity of a life-time lies just ahead for you in these articles in The Sunday School Times.

Although the regular single-subscription price to this interdenominational journal is $1.50, you can have the Times every week for 6 months for 50 cents, in order to secure Dr. Scofield's entire series.

The series starts immediately.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TIMES CO
11th and Walnut Sts., Philadelphia, Pa.

SPARTON
Safety Signals

Forty resourceful motor car engineers tried to find a weakness in Sparton; failing, they adopted it as part of their standard equipment.

There is a Sparton for every size car—four to fifteen dollars.

THE SPARKS-WITHINGTON COMPANY
Jackson, Michigan

Parley's Canyon, Utah

Here It Is At Last!

$1.50

"Ideal" Radiator Thermometer Makes Fireless Cooking Easier
A wonderfully accurate mercury instrument (no springs), registering from 100 to 600° F. Stands on the radiator—tilted at just the proper angle to ensure easy reading. Large, clear figures. Can be used in ovens as well. Tube is of extra strong glass, set in a groove and having a bulb at both ends, will not break. Eliminates all disagreeable guess work and uncertainty. You can now do your cooking
In Accord with the Principles of Leading Schools of Domestic Science
Simply set the Thermometer on the radiator—heat the radiator to proper temperature required for whatever article of food you intend to Roast, Bake, Steam, Stew, or Boil—and your Cooker does the rest. No matter what make fireless cooker you possess, you should use the "Ideal" Thermometer. Indispensable if you want your food cooked properly. Earns its cost by the saving of fuel that is unknowingly wasted under the "guess" method. Comes handsomely nickeled, in a neat case, complete with "Schedule of Temperatures" for different foods, meats, etc. Price only $1.50 prepaid, or Now Furnished Free With Every IDEAL GUARANTEED Fireless Cookstove.
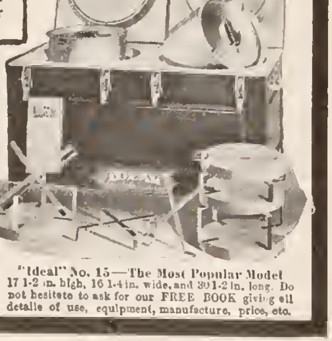
9 Sizes to Select From — One for Every Home
Roasts, Bakes, Steams, Stews, and Boils Perfectly
The "Ideal" cooks the flavor INTO not out of the food. Cuts cooking costs 80 per cent. Affords highest cooking efficiency. Strong, durable construction assures long life. Patented "Water Seal" Top and "Heat Conserving Valve" (exclusive with the "Ideal") prevent seeping away of precious cooking heat. No wonder the "Ideal" is in a class by itself—ahead of all. Generous fireproof heat repelling insulation. Separate covers give access to one compartment without disturbing the others. Heavy, thick, pure Aluminum lining throughout. Seamless Aluminum Cooking Compartments. "Ideal" Aluminum Utensils and Radiator Thermometer. Outer case built like a cabinet (not like a box) of specially "vulcanized" solid oak. RESISTS CLIMATIC INFLUENCES. Gives long, faithful service. The "Ideal" helps you realize your desire to provide BETTER meals with less work, bother and expense. Send postal for our interesting fully illustrated free book which tells all.
THE TOLEDO COOKER CO., 1376 W. Bancroft Street, Toledo, Ohio
In most places, a reliable dealer sells the "Ideal" line. If no dealer near you, we will ship direct. Take no substitute for the "Ideal." If your dealer does not handle our goods, give us his name and we will send you, free, a book of valuable recipes.



"Ideal" No. 15—The Most Popular Model 17 1-2 in. high, 16 1-4 in. wide, and 30 1-2 in. long. Do not hesitate to ask for our FREE BOOK giving all details of use, equipment, manufacture, price, etc.

PURE White Mountain COLD
"The Chest with the Chill in it"
For over forty years the "White Mountain" refrigerator has ranked first in the North, South, East and West. They are today and always have been recognized as America's Greatest refrigerator. Carried by leading dealers everywhere. Send for handsome catalogues and booklets.
DUPLEX CIRCULATION MAINE MFG.CO. REFRIGERATORS NASHUA N.H. GERM PROOF

KIDDER'S PASTILLES For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for Asthma (Inhalation) All Druggists; or by mail, 35c.
STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Chalestown, Mass.

YOU CAN AFFORD Familiar Songs of the Gospel (No. 1 or 2). Round or shape notes. $3 per hundred; samples, 5c each. 83 songs, words and music.
E. A. K. HACKETT, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

The Conversion of Saul

International Sunday School Lesson for April 2. Acts 9: 31
(Compare also Gal. 1:11-17; I Tim. 1:12-17)

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

By REV. F. B. MEYER, D.D.

This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into th world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. I Tim. 1 : 15.

This is the way of the saints! As the white-plumaged bird rises higher in the heavens, her form is reflected more deeply in the still waters of the lake beneath, and as the soul ascends closer to the throne of God, where his glory and beauty shine with ever-augmenting splendor, it becomes increasingly conscious of its native deformity, ignorance, and evil. So long as Job only heard of God by the hearing of the ear, he prided himself on his unblemished record; but when he saw him, he abhorred himself and repented in the dust.. Probably throughout the tribes that went up to worship in the t ple there was none more perfect in ch acter and behavior than the prop Isaiah, who had already acted and spo as God's messenger to his age. The f five chapters of his prophecies, as we h them, are sufficient to establish his re lation. But when he beheld the burn seraphim above the throne, he cried, am a man of unclean lips, and am better than the rest of my people, als unclean lips." Paul's increasing kn edge of his Lord led to his ever increa depreciation of his own merits.

Saul's Surrender

By Arthur H. Howland

DID you ever stop to think what your life would have been if Saul of Tarsus had not been converted? This man Saul, "who was also called Paul," has had not only many enemies outside the church, but many vigorous antagonists inside the church. Many present-day students of the Scriptures and of economics say that Paul caused the church to swerve from the simple teachings of Jesus about man's duty to God and his fellow man, and plunged it into a maze of doctrinal controversy, from which it has not yet emerged. Some blame Paul for the warlike attitude the church has often assumed. In fact, I know a thoughtful and gifted Bible teacher who is inclined to throw most of the blame for the present appalling combat among the nominally Christian nations of Europe upon the shoulders of this same restless Jew who strove with Peter for the control of the early church. It is true that Paul believed in monarchy, gave no rebuke to slavery, and drew many of his illustrations from scenes of battle. Yet a man who could write the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians ought to be credited with understanding pretty well what Love means. And if the world has not followed his teaching it is not his fault.

In fact, all the accusations against Paul fall to the ground when we study thoroughly his teachings about love, as they appear in all his epistles. His heart was on fire with love for God; and he understood perfectly well the teaching of Jesus that the only way a man can show his love for God is by loving and serving and helping and saving his fellows.

The account of John Wesley's conversion, which he gives in his diary, throws clear light on the question of Paul's helpfulness. You remember what it was that was taking place when Wesley "felt his heart strangely warmed." You remember that it was the strange warmth kindled then that made Methodism and all its allied movements and outgrowths possible. Try to visualize the many millions to whose souls this strange warmth has spread, and then notice that it first came to John Wesley's heart when some one was reading aloud Luther's comments on Paul's letter to the Galatians. The fire had first flashed in Paul's heart; Luther had caught it up fifteen hundred years later; and now, while this hungry young priest of the English Church was listening to Luther's fiery interpretation of Paul's fire of divine love, the light and warmth of that same divine fire leaped to his heart to bless the world. But the line of fire spreading from the heart of Paul has gone in many other directions than this. It was gathered up in the lives of the Reformers, and from such men as Calvin and Zwingli and John Knox it reached the hearts of Jonathan Edwards and Charles G. Finney and D. L. Moody and other great evangelists and missionaries in every quarter of the globe. If you will study up the influences that to your own conversion, you will be etty sure to find that Paul had a han n it somewhere; while the whole n lern church, and indeed the whole n lern world, based as it is on the gos l of liberty that Luther preached, goe ack to the heart of the man who lo l to sign himself "Paul, the slave of sus Christ."

BEFORE taking up in detail th nar- rative of Paul's conversion, us note briefly what were Paul's grea on- tributions to the religious thou of the ages. The greatest word his message was Grace. All God's bl ngs come, not because we deserve th or earn them, but because God lov ne. Jesus and his apostle John taugh hat God is love. Paul emphasized th fact that this love expresses itself in w ler- ful blessing upon the human sou He felt that this blessing comes to nen through the death of Jesus on the os. He was so sure of this that he de red he had determined not to know ny- thing but "Jesus Christ and him crucified." But all this, and a the wonderful details of God's per- abounding blessings, all the wo rful reach of that blessing to satisfy the full every spiritual longing of ma ind Paul summed up in this wonder ord, Grace. Paul's second great wo was Faith. God's grace reaches the man soul as the person believes. Paul' hird great word was Love. The b sing that came to his human soul th ugh faith took the form of love—lo to God, love for God's moral law, lo for his fellow believers in Jesus, lo for the members of God's great sen race, love for all the members the great Gentile world lying in sp tual darkness. The love that was pul ing in the soul of Paul did more to l the Gospel of Jesus burst through the nits of Judaism to save the outside orld than did the tender love of the a stle John or the sturdy and impulsiv ove of Simon Peter. The fourth grea ord in Paul's message was Liberty Be- cause we love God and love hi aw, and love the people whom God law tells us not to harm but to help, are free; no longer held in bonda by "weak and beggarly elements" and outworn traditions, but free to low the fires of love anywhere they l us out to the service of mankind, the name and under the leadership of sus.

But it was a very different ma rom this who went riding toward Da scus on the day of which our lesson ells. He went "breathing out threat ngs and slaughter" against the disci s of the Lord. He had credentials fro the high priest at Jerusalem to the a hor- ities of the synagogues in Dan scus that if he found any Christians he ght arrest them and bring them as pris- oners to Jerusalem.

It was about a six-day hor ack journey from Jerusalem to Dam us. As he drew near the city there c e a sudden light; so sudden, so brig so powerful that he fell from his rse. And then a voice spoke: "Saul, aul, why persecutest thou me?"

"Who art thou, Lord?" The

MORE THAN EVER

Ir eased Capacity for Work Since Leaving Off Coffee

M y former coffee drinkers who have men work to perform day after day, hav ound a better capacity and greater endu nce by using Postum instead of coffe An Illinois woman writes:

"I ad drank coffee for about twenty year and finally had what the doctor calle 'coffee heart.' I was nervous and extr ely despondent; had little mental or p sical strength left; had kidney trouble and nstipation.

"T e first noticeable benefit which followe the change from coffee to Postum was e improved action of the kidneys and owels. In two weeks my heart actic was greatly improved and my nerv steadier.

"T en I became less despondent, and the sire to be active again showed proof of r ewed physical and mental strength.

"I ormerly did mental work and had to g e it up on account of coffee, but since sing Postum I am doing hard mental abo with less fatigue." Name given by Post n Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

P um comes in two forms:

P um Cereal—the original form muste well boiled. 15c and 25c packages.

I ant Postum—a soluble powder—disso es quickly in a cup of hot water, and, ith cream and sugar, makes a delicio beverage instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

B forms are equally delicious and cost out the same per cup.

"T ere's a Reason" for Postum.

—sold by Grocers.

THIS IS THE WAY

T MAKE MONEY.

To any man who has no special training and wants to earn money, I would recom d nothing better than selling World's Star goods. When I started in this k I had never done any soliciting of any kind. The commission on my day's orders came to $7.00 What other work is there that a woman do to earn that amount? One cannot help but succeed with World tar goods, and enthusiasm. Both will lead to success.

States Mr G. H. Littlefield, of Oregon.

World's Star Hosiery and Klean Knit Underwear

Lower Prices Higher Values

We Have Helped More Than 9000

ambit deserving women. You can do the same as they have done. Sell W 's Star Hosiery and Klean-Knit Underwear in your home town. No pr s experience is necessary we show you how to make money in an ea ongenial and profitable way. We are known everywhere. Our adver g makes sales easy—the quality holds the trade. PROMPT DELI RIES and PROTECTED TERRITORY. Our free catalog tells whole y.

WORLD'S STAR KNITTING CO.
DEPT. 111 BAY CITY MICH

A WOMAN FLORIST

6 Hardy Everblooming Roses 25c

On their own roots ALL WILL BLOOM THIS SUMMER

Sent to any address post-paid; guar teed to reach you in good growing condition.

GE ROSE COLLECTION

Mrs ndrew Carnegie, Snow White
Lad ary Ward, Yellow, with Red
Lad illingdon, Golden Yellow
Mi- ly, Dazzling Red
Hel aft, Delicate Cerise
Fre Grandest Pink

SPE L BARGAINS

6 Ca tions, the "Divine Fl r," all colors, 25c.
6 Pr -Winning Chrysa mums, 25c.
6 Be iful Coleus, 25c.
3 Fl ring Cannas, 25c.
3 C e Double Dahlias, 25c.
3 C e Hardy Iris, 25c.
10 L y Gladioli, 25c.
10 S b Pansy Plants, 25c.
15 P Flower Seeds, all different, 25c.

A ive Collections for One Dollar, Post-Paid. Guarantee satis ion. Once a customer, always one. Catalog Free.

MIS ELLA V. BAINES, Box 28 Springfield, Ohio

S VE HALF Your Paint Bills

By ing INGERSOLL PAINT—proved best y 66 years' use. It will please you. O ly paint endorsed by the "Grange." M de in all colors—for all purposes.

DELIVERED FREE

F o the Mill Direct to You at Factory Prices.

NGERSOLL PAINT BOOK—FREE

Tells about Paint and Painting for Durability. How to a d trouble and expense caused by paints fading, chalk g and peeling. Valuable Information free to you, h Sample Color Cards. Write me. DO IT NOW I can save you money.

O. Ingersoll, 253 Plymouth St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

of the proud man, now humbled, came up from the dust.

"I am Jesus."

"Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

And that was the beginning of the greatness of Paul.

IT was a different Saul who rose blinded from the dust of the Damascus road—very different from the one who had been riding his horse proudly along the highway a moment before. The light of heaven had blinded his eyes, but it had not yet shined into his heart. There were deeper depths of consecration and self-abandonment to reach. And for three days he struggled and prayed in the house of Judas on the street called Straight, without sight, without food, until the last thing had been yielded up to the risen Christ. Then came the knock upon his chamber door, and faithful Ananias entered to lay his hands upon him and pray that he might be filled with the Holy Ghost.

All his trouble and darkness ended then. He was, indeed, to have trouble enough later on, but it was of an altogether different kind. Never again the spiritual darkness and gloom; never again the spiritual defeats; never again the strange loneliness of heart-separation from God. He had thought that in persecuting the followers of Jesus he was honoring and pleasing the God of his fathers; but he found that the pierced hand of the risen Saviour had led him to the arms and to the very heart of God.

Emphasize the need of old-fashioned conversion. Jesus said. "Ye must be born again." What our Sunday school pupils and teachers and officers need, what our church membership needs, is a new and determined and humble effort to find out whether or not we have been truly converted. "Examine yourselves," Paul urged, "whether ye be in the faith." Much has been said and taught lately about infant regeneration. It is true that many children, growing up in spiritual homes, come into an experience of the divine life without being conscious of a definite crisis, but the probabilities are that these cases are far rarer than is supposed. There is in almost every case a time of conscious disobedience, for which forgiveness must be sought. Boys and girls, if they are wisely and gently led, can come to an experience of conscious regeneration, in which they find Jesus anew.

THE characters in this story are Jesus, Ananias and Saul. Saul needed Christ; Ananias had found him; and Ananias was living so near him that when the whisper came to take that walk down Straight Street to the house of Judas on this strange errand, Ananias was glad to go. And his touch, and his faith, and his prayer helped Saul to trust and be saved.

Be sure to read the accounts Saul gives of his own conversion in his addresses before the Jews (Acts 22 : 1-16) and before King Agrippa (Acts 26 : 1-20). See also Gal. 1 : 11-24.

Let the class discuss the various things Paul had to surrender to make his consecration to Christ. See Phil. 3 : 5-9. Ask the class to discuss what consecration is, what it implies. Notice that Paul, although his consecration was complete, always insisted that it was not his consecration but his faith that had led him to salvation; not his promises to God, but God's promises to him. Consecration merely clears away the hindering obstacles so that the soul may reach the place of faith. And it is faith that brings the abounding grace of God to the soul, with its renewing and sanctifying power.

◆

Young People's Topics for April 2

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR and B. Y. P. U. (Consecration Meeting.) The Consecration of Time. Ps. 90 : 1-17.

EPWORTH LEAGUE. Outgrowing Home Religion. Col. 2 : 8; Gal. 3 : 1-3; I Thes. 5 : 21; I Tim. 6 : 20; II Tim. 1 : 3-6; 3 : 14, 15.

Maxwell

Service

SERVICE should be a big and vital-factor in every efficient institution. Yet the word is sometimes loosely used, not to describe a highly important department, nor to conceal it, but rather in place of it.

Maxwell service has a real and definite meaning. It starts with the car itself and it is perpetuated by a highly effective organization consisting of 16 complete service stations, 54 district branches and over 2,500 dealers and agents—all intent on giving surpassing service to every Maxwell owner.

Maxwell responsibility does not cease with the sale ot the car, for Maxwell owners represent the good will ot our company—their satisfaction is our biggest asset and their loyalty to our car and our company is paramount.

One Chassis, Five Body Styles

Two-Passenger Roaster	$635
Five-Passenger Touring Car	655
Touring Car (with All Weather Top) .	710
Two-Passenger Cabriolet	865
Six-Passenger Town Car	915

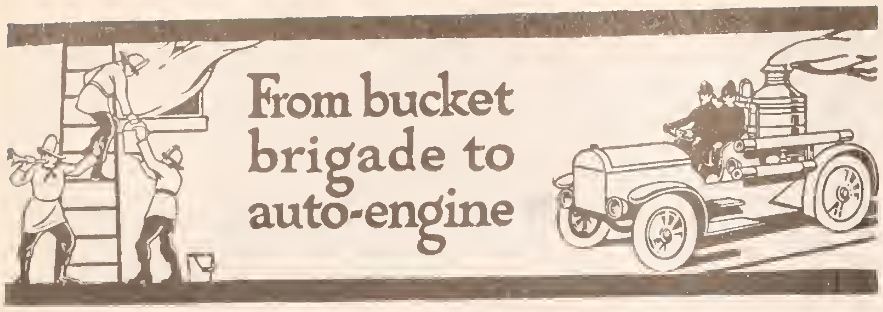
f. o. b. Detroit

Full equipment, including Electric Starter and Lights

In Canada $830, $850, $975, $1150, $1250, f. o. b. Windsor

Maxwell

MOTOR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICHIGAN



From bucket brigade to auto-engine

On the first policies issued by the Hartford Fire Insurance Company there is a quaint steel engraving that gives an interesting picture of the primitive fire-fighting methods of 1810. A crude, hand-operated pumping apparatus stands before a blazing three-story dwelling, while a bucket brigade of 50 men is required to supply the water for one feeble stream.

Rather a contrast to the modern 100 horse-power auto engine rushing at express train speed to the scene of the fire, there to supply a dozen hose lines with inexhaustible, high-pressure streams. Yet this contrast is no more striking than the difference between the first hesitating steps in the development of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company and the present complete and comprehensive

INSURANCE SERVICE
OF THE
TWO HARTFORDS

The Hartford Fire Insurance Company in all its 105 years' history has been in the forefront of every sound, progressive movement for better fire insurance protection. As a result it does today the largest fire insurance business in the country.

The Hartford Accident & Indemnity Company carries into the field of casualty and bonding insurance the same progressive methods, unquestioned financial strength and business integrity that have marked the history of the parent company.

The two companies, between them, write practically every form of insurance but life insurance.

Check on the coupon below the kind of insurance that interests you most. Mail it to us and we will send you full information.

Hartford Fire Insurance Co.
Hartford Accident & Indemnity Co.
Hartford, Conn.

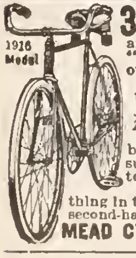
COUPON—CHECK—TEAR OFF—MAIL

Hartford Fire Insurance Company, (Service Department C-3), 125 Trumbull Street, Hartford, Conn.

Gentlemen.

Please send information on the kind of insurance checked to the name and address written on margin of coupon.

☐ Fire
☐ Accident
☐ Health
☐ Auto Liability
☐ Auto Collision
☐ Auto Theft
☐ Auto Fire
☐ Baggage
☐ Motor Cycle
☐ Burglary
☐ Employer's Liability
☐ Workmen's Compensation
☐ Bonding
☐ Elevator
☐ Plate Glass
☐ Race Horse
☐ Tornado
☐ Hail
☐ Golfer's Policy
☐ Parcel Post
☐ Rent
☐ Merchandise in Transit
☐ Live Stock Transit
☐ Live Stock
☐ Sprinkler Leakage
☐ Marine
☐ Breeders and Exhibitors
☐ Teaming
☐ Salesmen's Samples
☐ Registered Mail
☐ Use and Occupancy
☐ Explosion



30 DAYS FREE TRIAL
and freight prepaid on the new 1916 "RANGER" bicycle. Write at once for our big catalog and special offer.

Improved Models, prices reduced. Extraordinary new offers. You cannot afford to buy without getting our latest propositions. WRITE TODAY.

Boys, be a "Rider Agent" and make big money taking orders for bicycles and supplies. Get our liberal terms on a sample to introduce the new "RANGER."

TIRES, equipment, sundries and everything in the bicycle line half usual prices. A few second-hand bicycles $3 to $8 to clear.

MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. M-71 CHICAGO

LEARN TO DRAW
Illustrators—Cartoonists—Designers are in demand. Many of our pupils obtain paying positions before completing the course. Personal Instruction by artist of 30 years' experience. Correspondence and local school. Send sample of work for free criticism, and 6c in stamps for illustrated book. Artist's outfit FREE to enrolled students.
WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART,
961 F St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

BECOME A NURSE
WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.
Fifteenth Year.
The Chautauqua School of Nursing
341 Main St., Jamestown, N.Y.

A VACUUM CLEANER ON FREE TRIAL
The Reeves $5 Vacuum Cleaner is guaranteed to take ALL the dust from both rugs and furniture. Delivered at your door on 30 days' free trial. Send for booklet.
AGENTS WANTED
THE REEVES V. C. CO.
130 Broad Street Milford, Conn.

Write for Manufacturer's Price
"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"
Trade Mark Registered

Kalamazoo Pipeless (One Register) Furnace
Here's furnace comfort at retail stove cost. Low factory to you price—top-notch quality throughout—has no equal for getting most heat from little fuel used. Easy to set up—no pipes to fit except smoke pipe. Heats the whole house. Write at once for details.
CASH OR CREDIT—FREE TRIAL
We pay freight and ship within 24 hours. $100,000 guaranty. We also sell pipe furnaces and supply complete plans FREE prepared by experts. Write today and ask for Furnace Catalog No. 927.
Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs., Kalamazoo, Mich.
Stoves, Ranges, Gas Stoves, Furnaces, White Enameled Metal Kitchen Kabinets and Tables. 4 catalogs—say which you want.

Beauty vs. Happiness

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

"IF I had plenty of money," said the Young Poet, gazing far off past the crowds that filled the subway car, past the gaudy advertisements, past the gray walls that hurried endlessly on, "if I had plenty of money I wouldn't stay here!"

The Writer Girl moved uneasily in her seat and glanced down in somber meditation at the stubby toe of her brown shoe. The Young Poet's remark had not been exactly complimentary. "Why not?" she questioned.

"It's so—so colorless!" answered the Young Poet with an impatient movement of one slender hand. "So matter of fact. So uninteresting!"

"Yes?" said the Writer Girl softly, though vaguely. She was looking interestedly at the young couple across the way. They were talking earnestly together, with heads bending very close, and hands that lingered when they brushed against each other.

"I wonder if they're going to be married?" questioned the Writer Girl.

"Eh—who?" asked the Young Poet, coming swiftly out of his dream; "married?"

"That man and girl across the way," supplemented the Writer Girl. "They are so interested in each other. See the way he touches her hand. And see see the way she looks up at him!"

"But why do you care?" asked the Young Poet. "You don't know them. What difference does it make if they are going to be married?"

"None—to me," answered the Writer Girl. She sighed, but quite suddenly she smiled again. "But it makes a lot of difference to them," she said.

"If I had a great deal of money," said the Young Poet, breaking an oppressive little silence, "if I had a great deal of money I'd want to spend my time in Brittany, and learn the French language correctly, and live with the peasants. It's such a beautiful, peaceful, romantic life there by the sea. It's so full of color and music and poetry!"

"It must be!" agreed the Writer Girl enthusiastically. "It must be lovely." She sighed again, but it was a happy sigh, and her mind was full of folklore and fairy tales and bright peasant costumes.

"But I haven't got enough money," mourned the Young Poet. "And there isn't any beauty like that in America." His glance fell on the fat child who sat in the corner of the car. The fat child was eating an over-ripe banana. He shuddered.

"Have you ever been down on the East Side?" questioned the Writer Girl abruptly. "It's rather a wonderful place, I think. My work takes me down there often. Lots of the little kiddies know me—some of the mothers do, too. I get just bushels of romance, and color, and even—poetry, out of the East Side." All at once the glimmerings of a big idea crept through her brain. "Why," she asked excitedly, "why don't you go and live on the East Side? You have money enough for that! I've known people who lived in the slums and were very happy there. It's so full of heart interest—"

"But it's so dirty," objected the Young Poet, "and dirt isn't beautiful. One doesn't look for beauty in a garbage pail. The slums are a garbage pail to me."

THE Writer Girl looked out through the windows of the subway car at the dull walls that flew past. A golden light, flashing from out of the darkness, lighted the gloom for one bright, almost glowing, moment. "But is beauty the biggest thing in the world?" she asked.

"It is—to me," said the Young Poet. "All my work is the outgrowth of my desire to give beauty to the world. All my interest is in beauty. Beauty is almost my religion."

"I think you are wrong there," said the Writer Girl, quite seriously. "All wrong. Beauty isn't the greatest thing in the world to me. Neither is it the foundation of my work."

"Well," the Young Poet was nk-ly conciliatory—"what is you big dream, your big motive, the bi idea that lies back of your stories? here must be something."

"The greatest thing in the wo , to me," said the Writer Girl softly "the greatest thing in the world is happ ss!"

"But," said the Young Poet, can you find happiness in objects at I cannot find beauty in?" Ther was a note of real anxiety in his quest n.

The Writer Girl looked acro the aisle. The fat child was still ting the over-ripe banana. "Why yes, I can!" she answered. Perha she remembered the Young Poet's sh der.

"Can you find happiness i the East Side?" questioned the Youn Poet again. "Can you find happin s in what to me is a garbage pail?" His voice was incredulous.

"If you'd ever seen an Eas Side mother holding a tiny baby in vaddling clothes, you wouldn't ask at," answered the Writer Girl. "I you had ever seen one of the childre with a dirty ice-cream cone, or a oken flower! If you had ever seen hem dancing to a hand-organ, or singing eer, raggy songs! Yes, oftentimes I've found happiness there in the slu ."

"But," said the Young Poe and there was still a sound of unbe f in his voice, "can you find ha ness here—in this subway, real, big ital happiness?"

The Writer Girl nodded signif ntly to the young couple who sat acr the aisle. Quite frankly, now, they c sped hands. Quite oblivious to the hers they smiled into each other's eye

"There's happiness," answer the Writer Girl. "Big, real, vital hap ess. Only it shouldn't concern me, y say But somehow I can't help feelin bit of the happiness that they mu feel. Somehow I can't help being gl for them. It's like the light that shed through the car a moment ago, ghtening up the darkest corners. ppiness is a light that flashes int lark corners! And to me such happi ss is almost a religion. And it's bea ul."

THE Young Poet looked at t girl across the way. She was no pretty, but there was something in h face as she looked at the man by her de—something that was almost r ant almost holy. Quite suddenly he shed that some one might, some day, k at him in just that way. One co almost make a sonnet out of such ook

"Why, it is beautiful," he said ftly "It is beautiful!" He sighed.

The Writer Girl stood up, for car had reached her station. But the ung Poet was lost in a dream. L king back over her shoulder she la hed, and there was a shade of triumph her laugh.

"Then I win, don't I?" ques oned the Writer Girl.

Quite forgotten, the fat child m hed the over-ripe banana.

◆

Bible Anniversary Sun y

SUNDAY, the 7th of May, 1916, it be celebrated by churches, Sunday ools, Young People's Societies, and othe hristian organizations throughout the len and breadth of the United States as u ersal Bible Sunday, the celebration mark the completion of one hundred years of and service of the American Bible Soci A Sunday school program, entitled "On Hundred Fruitful Years," has been prepa and samples of this program, as well a other literature that will assist in the observ ce of the day, may be secured by address the American Bible Society, Bible Hous New York City. In 1915 the work of the iety reached new totals in spite of a redu on in income. Intensive work of the home ncies brought a total circulation of 1,185,29 cript tures, an increase of 119,000. The were printed at the Bible House in 1915 tot of 2,515,725 Scriptures, a gain of 42 Four hundred thousand copies were dist uted during the year to the soldiers in rope through the American Bible Society ting for the Sunday School children of A rica. Since the organization of the Societ 115 000,000 copies of the Scriptures hav been printed and circulated.

The War in Europe

Continued from page 351

an gathered from the estimate of 'ren artillery officers, eye-witnesses f th struggle, that about four million bell n all were fired by both sides urir the first four days of the attack, her the front was only eight miles ong. The cost of this number of shells lone taking large and small together, oul be about fifty million dollars.

M day, the 6th, was a lighter day as r a infantry fighting went, a result f th weather, in which rain and snow lter ted, making the clay soil of this egio a mass of soft yet tenacious mud, hic rendered the movements of oop in large numbers extremely iffic t. The artillery combat, how- ter, aged unceasingly and spread fur- her the westward. The bombard- ent n the western front was so severe hat e French were driven out of the illag of Forges, which the Germans ccu d.

T day the weather improved, and ard nfantry fighting took place on oth he northwest and the northeast ont South of Forges an infantry tta was delivered by the Germans n H No. 265, which was carried, and the afternoon another German rush ave hem possession of the Corbeaux ooc o the southwest of the very im- orta strategic position of the Cote e l' e.

Or Wednesday the Germans materi- lly proved their position on the west ont y capturing the village of Regine- ille nd the territory south of the illa as far as the heights of Cumere nd Rabon. The French, however, y a vigorous and gallantly sustained unr attack, drove the Germans out f th Corbeaux wood. On the northern ont here was some hard fighting in e gion of Douaumont, from which ase German attack southward was pu d. East of this, however, a err n infantry attack was successful dr ing the French out of the Haudau- ion redoubt, where there was hard ght g on Monday when the French ea ured this position from the err ns, who, as now stated, retook the eastern front there was also rea rtillery activity, and the German fa y secured its position at Fresnes ving the French further to the est f that hamlet.

T rsday, the hardest fighting was on e rthern front centering around ort le Vaux, and the village of the am ame. During the day these points har d hands repeatedly, finally re- ai ng in the possession of the French. n western front very hard fighting ok lace in the Bois des Corbeaux, hi the French recaptured from the er ns the day before, but this gh g had no decisive results.

O Friday, the Germans made a very ar counter-attack in great strength n western front, on the French in e ois des Corbeaux and succeeded d ing them clear out of the wood to e outhward, following up their dv tage by opening up an attack on e ote de l'Oie which partially ec ded. There was also very hard fa ry fighting on the northern front ro l the Vaux positions, the Germans ap ing Damloup further to the ast

T eastern front was also very ni ted, the Germans beginning a en l artillery assault on the entire ne far south as St. Mihiel, evidently re ing for an infantry attack.

T great question now in this battle tl French supply of seasoned troops, r ly seasoned troops can stand the igh and sounds of this incomparable at of the war. If the French have le of these troops they will be able o c tinue the battle for weeks; if not, ny well be doubted whether or not ou troops will prove able to stand he rain.

T re is a limit to the number of old ro France can draw from the other or ns of the western line, without so ea ning such portions as to render he ne readily vulnerable to assault. e ave only one reported indication ro which to draw any deductions. It s l that a contingent of Australian ro have been thrown into the defense f t fortress. The fact that it has been necessary to bring these troops to this front is perhaps not totally without significance.

On the rest of the western line, the British, French, and Germans at various points scored local successes during the week, but as these practically equalize each other, and are without influence on the great battle they seem hardly worth particularizing.

The return to the German naval port of Wilhelmshaven, March 4, of the celebrated commerce raider Moewe, the captor of the Appam, in safety, was the maritime event of the week. On arrival the Moewe had on board 199 prisoners and $250,000 in gold, part of the booty seized on the captured ships, some of which had originally formed part of the Appam's cargo. During her several months' cruise the Moewe had captured twelve British ships, one French, and one Belgian, a total of about 58,000 tons, of which only the Appam was not sunk. The Moewe's performance in reaching a home port in safety, passing through the British fleet as she must have done, is one of the spectacular feats of the war.

Parliament was enlivened by the unexpected return to its precincts of Colonel Winston Churchill, who immediately precipitated an acrimonious debate on the management of the navy by his successor, Mr. A. J. Balfour, formerly prime minister. The surprise of Colonel Churchill's speech was that he insisted on the recall to a position of authority over the navy of Lord Fisher, his bitterest enemy of yore. He also warned the House of Commons that a serious naval situation was facing them, and hinted that the German fleet was all prepared to take the high seas.

There have been repeated rumors to the same effect, from various sources, but as yet, these rumors have not been substantiated. A minor Zeppelin raid on Great Britain, much further to the north than heretofore, gave rise to the idea that this raid was in reality a search for the British battle fleet. This fleet has been supposed to be concentrated in some harbor of the north coast of Scotland or of the islands adjacent to such north coast, but this is not certainly known.

The strained relations between Germany and Portugal, arising from the seizure of German ships by the Portuguese naval authorites at Lisbon and elsewhere culminated on Thursday, March 9, by a formal declaration of war on Portugal by Germany. This makes a grand total of fourteen nations now involved in the war. It is doubtful whether the entry of Portugal into the war will have any particular effect, unless such untoward incidents occur on the Spanish frontier as will bring Spain into a hostile attitude toward Portugal. Portugal has called up her reserves, military and naval, and announces that she expects to take an active part in the war, but this is apparently impossible.

In Mesopotamia there has been some rather hard fighting during the week. The British relieving force under General Aylmer, which has been held up some twenty odd miles from its objective Kut-el-Amara, where the British under General Townshend had been surrounded by the Turks for some two months, was heavily reinforced last week, and the early part of this week made a forward move from Umm-el-Arnk. The first part of the advance was comparatively easy, but when the advancing British arrived at the main Turkish positions at El-Sinn, March 6, a two days' battle ensued, in which the British were unable to dislodge the Turks, and the conclusion of the fight found both sides in the same positions as at the beginning.

The Russians have continued through the week to make progress toward the Black Sea port of Trebizond. The Russian fleet has taken part in this movement, acting with the troops who are moving along the coast, by bombarding the littoral towns in advance of them, thus rendering capture more easy. At present writing the Russians have attained a point about twenty-eight miles northeast from their objective, and report that they expect to enter Trebizond within the next few days.

PRICE
ROOMINESS
DEPENDABILITY

FIVE PASSENGER
$ 740

Pullman power of motor and smartness of line and appointment are known and recognizable features.

But do you know that the Pullman Five-Passenger Four is the roomiest car of its class—the most capacious motor under a thousand in price.

C-H Magnetic Gear Shift—
$110 extra

Dealer Territory Open

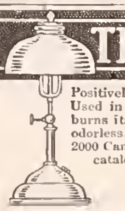
Write Dept. 32

SPECIFICATIONS: 114-inch wheel base; 32-H. P. four-cylinder motor; Batavia non-skid tires on all four wheels; cantilever rear springs; Independent electric starting and lighting systems; Dixie high-tension magneto; honeycomb radiator; full floating rear axle.

PULLMAN MOTOR CAR CO., YORK, PA.

(Established 1903)

LE PAGE'S
GLUE 10c
WILL MEND THAT VASE



The "BEST" LIGHT

Positively the cheapest and strongest light on earth. Used in every country on the globe. Makes and burns its own gas. Casts no shadows. Clean and odorless. Absolutely safe. Over 200 styles. 100 to 2000 Candle Power. Fully Guaranteed. Write for catalog. AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
470 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

GET THIS 50c ONE-QUART

"Wear-Ever"

Aluminum Stew Pan

FOR Only 25c

If coupon is mailed on or before May 20, 1916

Do you know why so many women prefer "Wear-Ever" aluminum cooking utensils? If not see for yourself the difference between "Wear-Ever" and other kinds of aluminum and enameled utensils.

WEAR-EVER
T.A.C.
ALUMINUM
U.CO.
TRADE MARK

Look for the "Wear-Ever" trade mark on the bottom of every utensil. If it is not there it is not "Wear-Ever." Refuse substitutes.

The Aluminum Cooking Utensil Co.
New Kensington, Dept. 34. Pa.
(or if you live in Canada) Northern Aluminum Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ontario.

Send prepaid, 1-qt. "Wear-Ever" stew pan. Enclosed is 25c in stamps or coin—money to be refunded if not satisfied. Offer good until May 20, 1916, only.

Name . . . .

Address . . . .

Good Health is Your Birthright and almost every woman can have a Perfect Figure

I know it!

I have helped 75,000 splendid women to better figures, better health, and richer happiness in real living and I will help you. You will be delighted at the very start with the simple, practical, pleasant methods I advise—and with the improvement you realize in your physical and mental happiness.

You Can Be SO Well

A physician writes me: "Am very glad to tell you that you've made a new woman of my wife Her weight Dec. 14th last was 184½ lbs., today, May 17th it is 146½ lbs. You may perhaps recall the cramps in toe, lameness and pain in Sacroiliac joint, catarrh, headaches, dyspepsia, epigestic tenderness, constipation (but I'll be easy on you, won't prolong the list) these are all things of the past."

A pupil writes: "I've gained 8½ lbs. in 5 weeks. Don't you think that's good, Miss Cocroft?"

In the privacy of your room, with just a few minutes a day, you follow the simple, easy, pleasant methods I arrange to fit your individual, personal case; practical, scientific exercises for the nerves and muscles controlling the weakened organs, as well as to decrease or increase your weight, improve your figure and find a perfect poise of body and mind. If you suffer from

Indigestion Constipation Anemia
Sleeplessness
Nervousness
Torpid Liver
Rheumatism
Catarrh
Headache Weakness

write me about yourself. If you know some friend whom I have helped, or am helping, ask her. Write me about your faults of health or figure; your letter will be personal to me and my reply will be just as sincere to you. I number thousands of physicians among my friends; their wives and daughters are my pupils. Medical magazines advertise my work. With my letter to you I will send my book which is filled with valuable information. It tells how to stand, sit and walk, and many other simple things which are truly helpful. If you do not need it get it for a friend. I will send it free.

Write to me now. Do not wait. I have had a wonderful experience, and I should like to tell you about it.

SUSANNA COCROFT,
Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Rand, McNally & Co., have just published Miss Cocroft's new book, "Beauty a Duty." For sale at all booksellers. Beautifully bound.

"I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer, "Worth more than a farm," says another. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it.

The Natural Body Brace

Overcomes WEAKNESS and ORGANIC AILMENTS of WOMEN AND MEN. Develops erect, graceful figure.

Brings restful relief, comfort, ability to do things, health and strength.

For Children Also

See What It Will Do For You

Does away with the strain and pain of standing and walking; replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens and strengthens the back; corrects stooping shoulders; develops lungs, chest and bust; relieves backache and nervousness. Comfortable and easy to wear.

Wear It 30 Days Free at Our Expense

Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank, etc., and read our very liberal proposition.
HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body Brace Co.
171 Rash Building SALINA, KANSAS

PATENTS Manufacturers BUY—Patents that FULLY Protect—are the kind we get. Proof and reliable books free.
LACEYS Patent Lawyers, 710 Barrister Bldg., Washington, D. C.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

Five Bright, Capable Ladies to travel, demonstrate and sell dealers Good pay. Railroad fare paid.
GOODRICH DRUG CO., Dept. 71, Omaha, Nebr.

Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League. All correspondents are specially requested to make their letters as brief as possible. Write requests and acknowledgments on separate sheets.

AN Indiana lady writes: "I desire to become a member of the Prayer League. Left without father or mother when only six years old, I had no one to go to but God, and can truthfully testify to his goodness and tender mercy and care of me. He has always answered my prayers, and saved my life in a miraculous way a number of times. He has blessed me with husband, sons and daughters in answer to prayer, and they are all living. I have also one grandson."

A Mother writes from Lexington, N. C.: "Two weeks ago I asked prayer for my little girl's life and want to say she was saved by prayer. Thank God for his goodness."

A reader from Kansas writes: "Some time ago I asked you to pray for our daughter and her husband, who had been separated. I can thankfully say they have been reconciled and are living together again. Will you please pray that they may become Christians on account of their three dear little children?"

Miss L. C. B., Chester, Vt., writes: "I wish to acknowledge two signal and direct answers to prayer for financial aid within a short time. Help came from an entirely unknown source. Who can doubt God's faithfulness to answer prayer?"

Acknowledgments of answers to prayer have also been received from:

Miss E. M. T., Sherrill, N. Y.; Mrs. R. K., Northport, Mich.; Mrs. R. E. F., Myerstown, Pa.; Mrs. M. K. S., New Cumberland, Pa.; An Aged Mother and Believer, Onalaska, Wis.; Mrs. E. E., Moscow, Idaho.; Mrs. V. L. V., Blacksburg, Va.; Mrs. H. G. K., Chester, Pa.; Miss L. V., Zanesville, Ohio; S. V. S., Ransomville N. C.; Mrs. G. W. H., Chambersburg, Pa.; C. B. L.; Mrs. K. J. B., Norwich, N. Y.; I. M. S., Mount Vernon, Wash.; Mrs. C. E. B., New Salem, Mass.; Mrs. M. E. R., Darlington, Pa.; J. B. T., Washington, D. C.; Mrs. J. R., Hamlin, Texas; Mrs F. M. A., Readville, Mass.; Mrs. M. E. S., Clatskanie Ore.; H. H. B., Baltimore, Md.; Mrs. M. McK., Murdocksville, Pa.; Mrs. M. E., Madison, Miss.; Mrs. F. A., Oriskany Falls, N. Y.; C. B., Ottawa, Ill.

A Michigan lady writes: "Some time ago I wrote asking you to pray that my father might be helped mentally. I received a letter this week to the effect that his mind is in better condition than it has been for some time. I am very grateful both to you and to our heavenly Father for this. I also asked prayer for the preservation of our home. This home still holds together, but it seems as though it would have to be broken up at any time. Will you continue to pray that God's power may so take hold of this husband that he will be able to overcome temptation, and have his mind centered in his home again? My faith becomes so weak at times, and it will help me to keep up if I can feel that you are helping me in this time of great need."

W. A. L. writes from San Francisco, Calif.: "One very dear to me is seeking a divorce from her husband, and I ask you to pray that instead the family may be reunited, with Jesus at the head of the home, and that their two boys may grow into Christian men."

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Harriman, Tenn.; Birmingham, Ala.; Wyoming, N. Y.; Providence, Fla.; Drain, Ore.; Elkton, Va.; Bombay, N. C.; Bloomington, Kan.; Milton, Iowa; Wrightsburg, Ky.; Louisville, Ky.; Depauw, Ind. (for the ingathering of souls during revival meetings); Rye, Colo. (that a Sunday school class may be saved); Newark, N. J. (that a Sunday school class may have a deeper desire for spiritual things); Fairwater, Wis. (in the Machford Church); Sergeantsville, N. J. (in the Brethren Church); Chambersburg, Pa. (that a band of Christians may be successful in their work); Springfield, Ohio (in the St. Paul M. E. Church); Austin, Wash. (that Sunday school scholars may be saved); Jackson, Minn. (that saloons may be kept out of this town); New Cambria, Mo. (First Congregational Church); El Paso, Texas (that the Mutual Aid Gospel Union may be successful in its work); Cheney, Wash. (in the Methodist Church).

Mrs. F. W. V., Mrs. I. B. D., Mrs. H., C. S. K., Mrs. J. M. B., ask prayer that their sons' minds may be restored; R. N., Mrs. D. M., Mrs. K. A. H., Mrs. J. A., Mrs. J. M. G., an anxious mother, their daughters'. Miss M. I. T. asks prayer that a child's mind may be restored; twenty-four other friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for other relatives, friends, or for themselves.

"Faith" and A. A. K., ask prayer that their mothers' sight may be restored. Twenty-two friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for relatives, friends or for themselves.

Mr. and Mrs. P. W. ask prayer that they may be converted. Seventy-three other friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Seven parents ask prayer that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit: Mrs J. C., Mrs. C. M. B., their husbands. Twelve other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be delivered from the habit.

S. B. and H. J. ask prayer that friends may be cured of the drug habit.

Forty parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; twenty-six wives, for the conversion of their husbands. Eighty-four friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be converted.

Twenty-four readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends.

One hundred and thirteen friends ask prayer for healing.

One hundred and thirty-one friends ask prayer for the healing of relatives or friends, including Mrs. M. J. M., that granddaughter may be cured of stammering; and Mrs. H. D., that daughter may regain the use of limbs.

Seventeen friends ask prayer that their hearing may be restored. M. S., asks prayer that mother and father may have their hearing restored. Ten friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing for other relatives or friends.

Forty-five friends ask prayer for help and guidance in financial affairs.

Sixty-five friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs, including Mrs. R. H., who asks prayer that a five-year-old boy may be restored to his parents.

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof, sanitary and durable for outside or inside painting. It is the cement principle applied to paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manuf'r., 164 North St., Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write to-day.

HOOSIER STOVES & RANGES FREE

To try in your own home 30 days free, no matter where you live. Show your friends. Send it back at our expense if you do not want to keep it. Hundreds of thousands in daily use. Perfect bakers, efficient heaters, made of high grade material, beautifully finished, smooth design, guaranteed for years by our Two Million Dollar Bond.

Ask your dealers to show you Hoosier Stoves. Write for our big free book showing photographs, describing large assortment of sizes and designs to select from, explaining our free trial. Send postal today. Write your name and address plainly. No obligations.

HOOSIER STOVE CO.
164 State St., Marion, Ind.

20 Best Gladioli 25c.

Best flowering bulbs, all colors mixed—Many new and finest.

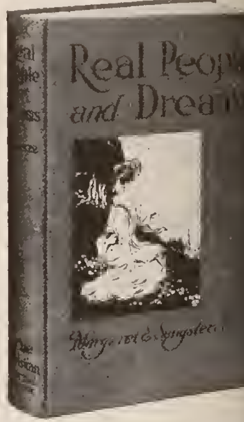
Also 10 choice named Gladioli for 25c. Some of the handsomest new and rare sorts known.

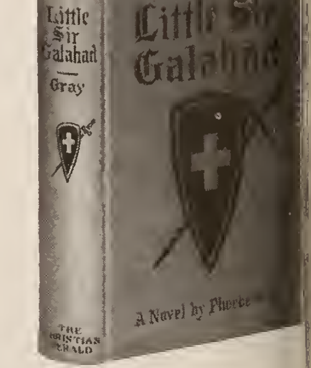
Both lots, 30 bulbs for 40c., or for $1.00 we will send 100 mixed and the 10 named.

All bulbs post paid with complete culture and catalog.

Big Catalog of Flowers and Vegetable Seeds, Bulbs, Plants and rare new Fruits free to all who apply. We are the largest growers of Gladiolus, Caunas, Dahlias, Lillies, etc,
JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Inc., Floral Park, N. Y.

150 Envelopes and 150 Letterheads, 6x9½ inches, nicely printed, mailed for $1.00. Samples free.
HERALD CO. Charlotteville, N. Y.





Two Worth-While Boo s

The two volumes described belo will be a worth-while addition to any ome library. If you are about to renev our subscription to The Christian Heral ake advantage of one of these special ers. adding the small additional amou re-quired.

Real People and Dre ns

Margaret E. Sangster, Jr., does no ake up her stories and poems—they jus orm themselves on the background of he aind as winter sprites trace wonderfui p res on windowpanes, and then simply b use she cannot help herself, she sets d n a description of these pictures. The are, in all, in her new book, "Real Peo and Dreams," about eighty poems and rty-two short stories and sketches. s is the work of a genius.

We will send this new volume by M aret E. Sangster, Jr., handsomely bound in oth, with a new photographic frontispi of Margaret E. Sangster herself, and wit lustrations for a number of the poems, tc her with the Christian Herald for one hole year, postpaid, for $1.85. Or, we will d to old subscribers, FREE, as a rewar this volume for sending us one new yearl ub-scription to the Christian Herald wit .50.

Little Sir Galaha

We do not know when we have ha uite as much pleasure in reading any bo this year as "Little Sir Galahad." The s so much that is charming and humoro and intensely human in the whole story at it appeals to the reader probably with ater force than if the action were on nore dignified level.

"Little Sir Galahad" is really a s y of the golden age in our own time. Tha eau-tiful season that makes life radiant hile it lasts.

It is as good a story as we have e oun-tered in many a day, and that's sa ng a good deal.

"Little Sir Galahad," 376 pages, illu ated and handsomely bound in cloth, l be sent postpaid with one yearly subsc ion to the Christian Herald for $2.00. Or, will send to old subscribers, FREE, as a r ard, this volume for sending us one new arly subscription to the Christian Heral with $1.50.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New Yo N. Y.

ASTER MUSIC

wo fine new Sunday school services—e Easter Message" and "Easter Offe ng"—5c per copy, 55c per doz., $4.35 p 100, postpaid. Sample copies free.

he Gospel Choir"—Easter number—c ains some of the finest music ever w ten for the "average" choir. 15c per c . 10c per copy in lots of 10 or more. S ple copies free.

EASTER RECITATIONS

pages of bright, new recitations, d ls and exercises by the best writers. 1 per copy, $1.80 per doz., postpaid. No f samples.

RAINBOW SONGS

he best book of primary and junior s gs as yet compiled. Chas. H. Gabriel, E or. 30c per copy, $3.50 per doz., postp t. Sample for 15-day examination.

HE RODEHEAVER CO.

1 Monon Building - - CHICAGO
Lippincott Building, PHILADELPHIA

2 Easter Post Cards 10c

THE BEST CARDS YOU EVER SAW

SOME GOLD SOME SILVE ALL E BOSS

20 of the most beautiful post cards ever sold, 10 cents, consisting of eautif d artistic designs of Angels, Crosses, Text, Pretty Flowers, Rabbits, Chicks ; all with appropriate Easter Greetings. ALL ARE EMBOSSED, some i d and some in silver, lithographed in many colors on fine cardboard.

. HE AN & CO. 2310 Lincoln Ave., Dept. 102, CHICAGO

J PANESE ROSE BUSHES

Five for 10cts.

The Wonder of the World

Rose Bushes with roses on them in 8 weeks from the time the seed was planted. It may not seem possible but we Guarantee it to be so. They will BLOOM EVERY TEN WEEKS Winter or Summer, and when 3 years old will have 5 or 6 hundred roses on each bush. Will grow in the house n t winter as well as in the ground in summer. Ros All The Year Around. Package of seed with r guarantee by mail, only Ten Cents. Jap Seed Co. Box 202 South Norwalk, Conn.

WOULD YOU

show this standard high grade 42 key fully visible typewriter to your friends and let them see wherein it excells any other $100 typewriter, if by doing this and rendering other small assistance, you could easily have one to keep as your own? Then by post card or le r to us simply say, "Mail Particulars."

GI YOU

WO STOCK TYPEWRITER CO., Dept. M 176, Chicago, Ill.

START YOUR FORD FROM THE SEAT

Throw away your crank. Start from the seat with a SANDBO 2-Compression STARTER

92,000 sold. Differs from all others. Sold on 30 days trial; positively guaranteed. New improved 1916 model—price $14. Write

$14

DON'T DO THIS

SA O STARTER CO., 99 Sandbo Bldg., Rock Island, Ill.

WHEEL CHAIRS and TRICYCLES

A Wheel Chair is often an invalid's greatest comfort. We offer over 75 styles of invalid's rolling chairs and tricycles with latest improvements. Ship direct from factory to you and sell on

THIRTY DAYS' TRIAL

Liberal discounts to all sending for FREE Catalog now.

GORDON MFG. CO.
569 Madison Ave., Toledo, Ohio

olding BATH TUB

Costs little, no plumbing, little water. Weight 15 pounds, folds into small roll. Full length baths, far better than tin tubs. Lasts for years. Write for special agents offer and description. Robinson Bath Cabinet Co., 4096 Factories Bldg., Toledo, O.

I IVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.

Th s Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio

LYMYER CHURCH ELLS.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Wr to Cincinnati Bell Foundry B-51 Cincinnati, O.

WAR

Bedding foretold present war; also Turkish War—gave exact dates 18 years ago, claims America becomes involved, exalting Governments and Institutions be utterly destroyed, new age approaching; shows how and why; multitudes devouring his pl ook, "OUR NEAR FUTURE." Intensely fascinating, convincing. Biblical al ng great sensation. Silk-cloth, 216 pages. Postpaid, $1. Agents MARIE ANTOINETTE KEHOE, Pelair, Harford County, Maryland.

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE

of pure bred poultry; 70 breeds illustrated and described, many in color. Perfect poultry guide—all facts. Low prices on stock and hatching eggs. Incubators and brooders. 23 years in business. You need this book. Send 10c for it—today.

B. H. GREIDER, Box 14. Rheems, Pa.

Merry Moments

[A GOOD laugh will cure many ills (see Proverbs 17: 22). A good laugh never wears out. Perhaps you have stored away in your memory some laughs of extra potency in doing good. Tell us about them. We want little, short things for this column, that are packed full of merry laughter; so full that there is no sting in them, no offensiveness of any kind, no malice, certainly no irreverence, nothing but pure fun. We will pay according to the length and, in our judgment, the merits of such contributions. None can be returned, however, unless accompanied by a stamped and addressed envelope. Just address them to The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City.—THE EDITOR.]

ANSWERED ACCORDING TO HIS FOLLY.—A perspicacious young man, passing where an old colored man was busy setting fire to the dead grass in a meadow, accosted him thus:

"Don't do that, Uncle Eb; don't do that!"

"Why so, sah; why so?"

"You will make the meadow as black as you are."

"Never mind dat, sah; never mind dat! Dat grass will grow out an' be as green as you is."—The Lutheran.

WILLING TO CONTINUE SERVING HIS COUNTRY.—"How did you leave all the folks out home?"

"First-rate," replied Senator Sorghum. "I told them I was going to see if I couldn't straighten out a few problems for the government between now and spring. That cheered them up a great deal."

"To what problems did you have reference?"

"Oh, nothing in particular. I never go into details with my constituents. If you get to explaining things, you are liable to make them sound so easy that the voters get to thinking they don't need you."—Washington Star.

ONLY THEY DON'T MAKE 'EM SO DURABLE.—Amos Whittaker, a miserly millionaire, was approached by a friend who used his most persuasive powers to have him dress more in accordance with his station in life.

"I am surprised, Amos," said the friend, "that you should allow yourself to become shabby."

"But I'm not shabby," firmly interposed the millionaire miser.

"Oh, but you are," returned his old friend. "Remember your father. He was always neatly, even elaborately dressed. His clothes were always finely tailored and of the best material."

"Why," shouted the miser, triumphantly, "these clothes I've got on were father's!"—London Sketch.

A VALID CLAIM FOR DAMAGES. A Portland, Oregon, dispatch tells of an application for indemnity filed under the workman's compensation law of that state, by a farm hand. The blank form for the filing of claims contains two questions, evidently intended to apply to injuries sustained in mills or factories. One of these is, "What was the nature of the machine by which you were injured?" The other question is, "Was the machine in good order at the time of your injury?" To the first of these questions the answer was, "Cross," and to the second was an enthusiastic, heavily written and boldly underlined, "YES." To the question, "How were you hurt?" the answer was, "I was kicked by a mule."

FAIR WARNING. In a New Haven church bulletin: "Morning service, 10:30. Prepare for the Worst. Quartet will sing."—New York Tribune.

WHY NOT? Willie, according to the Chicago Daily News, was on a visit to his uncle in the country and was watching him milking one evening. When he returned to the house his aunt asked him: "Is Uncle Hezzie through milking yet, Willie?"

"Not yet," answered Willie. "He's finished two faucets and has just commenced on the other two."—The Continent.

More Butter Money

Butter money means much to many farm women. You can easily get more butter money for that long desired piano or phonograph and get it with less work.

When there's a song in your heart and the world seems bright, you put vim into your work and drive that separator handle up to speed. But when tired, you take it a bit easy and turn the handle slowly. Your present separator, no matter whose make, will lose a lot of cream—and, of course, money—when turned below speed. But—

THE NEW SHARPLES SUCTION-FEED
Separator gets all the cream all the time.

The bowl drinks in the milk as needed—always just enough for perfect separation. The faster the crank is turned, the more milk you skim. You won't be bothered with streaks or white specks in the butter, either, for the cream is always of even thickness. You'll make more and better butter—and thus get more butter money.

It's easy to fill the large low supply can. The tubular bowl is easy to handle, easy to put together, easy to wash—only one inside piece—no discs. Just think of that!

Send postal for free book, "Velvet for Dairymen," which tells all about this wonderful new machine. Write today, before you forget. Address Department H

The Sharples Separator Company
Also Sharples Milkers and Gasoline Engines
West Chester Pennsylvania
Chicago San Francisco Toronto Portland

Army and Navy Liquid Glue

Odorless, Clean, Mighty to Mend

The ONLY liquid hide and sinew glue. Send 10 Cents and we will send you at once anywhere, postpaid, a large self-sealing container of this REAL glue.

Name of your dealer appreciated

STANDARD GLUE CO., Dept. C, Baltimore, Md.

Will You Take Orders?

Your spare time is worth big money demonstrating the 1917 Model, Steel, 18-in-1 Automatic Handi-Tool. Equals separate tools costing $160. Lifting and pulling jack; fence building tool; stump and post puller; baler; press; hoist; vise; etc. No experience needed. Demonstrator free. Credit given. Exclusive territory. Write for special factory agency offer.

Chas. E. Benefiel Co. 234c Industrial Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

Typewrite The New Way

80 to 100 Words a Minute Guaranteed

Totally new system. Based on Gymnastic Finger Training! Brings amazing speed—perfect accuracy—BIG SALARIES. Easy for anyone. First day shows results. Learn while working. 48 Page Book Free, illustrates and explains all. Gives letters from hundreds with salaries doubled and trebled. A revelation as to speed and salary possible to typists. Postal will do but write today—NOW

10 Easy Lessons Learn at Home

Tulloss School of Typewriting
5303 College Hill
Springfield, O.

BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES

The New 10c Trial Size Box

Handy to carry, convenient to use and sure to relieve coughs, hoarseness and throat irritation. Contain no opiates—harmless but effective. Regular sizes 25c, 50c and $1. At all druggists

If your dealer cannot supply you, we will mail any size upon receipt of price.

JOHN I. BROWN & SON, Dept. 84, Boston, Mass.

PATENTS SECURED THROUGH CREDIT SYSTEM.

Free search. Send sketch. Book and Advice Free. WATERS & CO., 5100 Warder Bldg., Washington, D. C.

DEAF?

This "1916" Acousticon Must Sell Itself!

Every Motor Car dealer is willing, yes, eager, to have you try his car before you buy or even pay a deposit—because he believes in his car, is proud of it and has confidence in its recommending itself to you. No matter how many satisfied customers he has, he would not expect or dream that you would obligate yourself, until you know how it suits you. That is exactly our policy in selling Acousticons. But we go much further. Although we have 270,000 delighted users and friends, we urge every person hard of hearing to try the type of Acousticon which suits the best, in his or her own home for ten days, absolutely free of a penny of cost, or even of deposit. By that time you will know if you can hear, and we will know if you keep it that you will be satisfied with it—and satisfied customers are the only kind we have or desire.

WARNING! There is no good reason why everyone should not make as liberal a trial offer as we do, so do not send money for any instrument for the deaf until you have tried it.

The "1916" Acousticon has patented features and improvements that are exclusive, and this generous offer is likely to put us somewhat behind in our production. So we suggest that you send for your free trial today. Just say "I am hard of hearing and will give the Acousticon a trial if it costs me absolutely nothing." Address

GENERAL ACOUSTIC CO.
1314 Candler Bldg. New York
Toronto, Ont. Office, Royal Bank Bldg.

Help Us Do a Great Work

To give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace. Luke 1 : 79.

* * *

O send out thy light and thy truth: let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles. Ps. 43 : 3.

* * *

Make haste to help me, O Lord my salvation. Ps. 38 : 22.

* * *

For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters : and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. Rev. 7 : 17.

* * *

Two are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labor.

For if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up. Eccles. 4 : 9, 10.

Stimulating Bible Study

THROUGH the Bible Picture Contest carrying its appeal of picture solving and concrete rewards we have interested hundreds upon hundreds of people who have not been Bible readers. Some of them had not looked into a Bible for years; others had never received even the rudiments of that Christian teaching to which all the world is heir.

THERE is hardly a day's mail but holds some messages from these awakening ones messages that have fired our hearts with enthusiasm for this work. The Bible Picture Contest leads most naturally to interest in the fountain-head of the saving thoughts that flow through the short selection of verses used by contestants. We know now that the Contest is what we hoped it would be it is an effective way to secure the attention and interest of the non-reader of the Bible, and then to bring him into exalting and sustaining touch with the Book itself.

BUT we must reach more whose spirits need arousing more and more and more! We are doing our best will you aid us? Through you the life of some friend, some acquaintance, near or far away, can be eternally brightened, for through you he can be brought to listen more closely to the words of Christ. Let us have the name and address of one or several to whom you wish a complete outline of the Bible Picture Contest sent. Many of you may wish to send the complete Contest equipment to someone you know, but we do not ask that. Our plea is only that you let us undertake the mission, that you send us the names of three or four people who you feel would be interested in the Contest and who you know would be benefited by increased contact with the Bible.

IT IS not given all of us to aid in the redemption of our fellow men or the reawakening of their spiritual lives, but here is a way in which every man and every woman and every child can do a part, remembering the obligation to help others to the pathway of life, which our Saviour laid upon us all when he said:

> "Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." (Matt. 7:14.)

The covers of the Holy Bible are the portals of the gate. Will you help to bring more into it?

Then will I teach tran essors thy ways; and sinners ll be converted unto thee. Ps. : 13.

* * *

Strengthen ye the wea ands, and confirm the feeble kn Isa. 35 : 3.

* * *

So that we may boldly . The Lord is my helper, and I ll not fear what man shall do me. Heb. 13 : 6.

* * *

Let the word of Christ ll in you richly in all wisdon each-ing and admonishing one other in psalms and hymns and itual songs, singing with e in your hearts to the Lord. C 3:16.

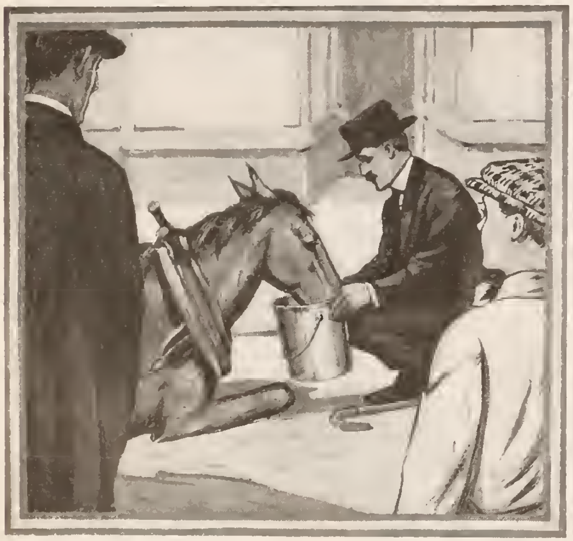
* * *

And I will bring the d by a way that they knew no will lead them in paths that have not known: I will make ness light before them, and oked things straight. These thi will I do unto them, and not sake them. Isa. 42 : 16.

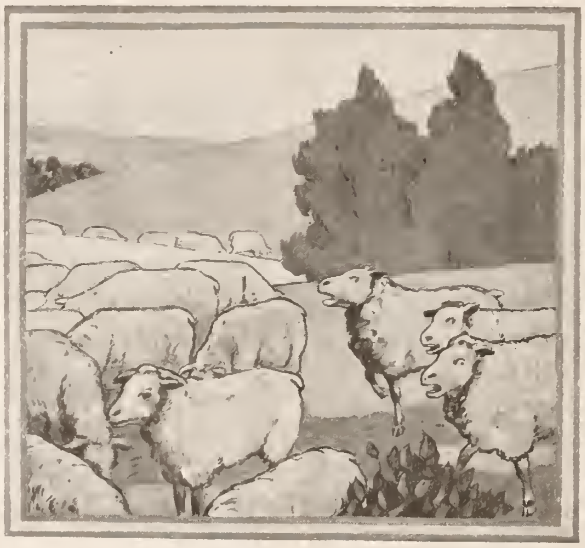
THE Bible Picture Contest offers all an interesting picture-naming diversion, with $3,500 in cash rewards.

AND with it comes an increasing interest in he Bible itself, upon which the Contest was foun ed.

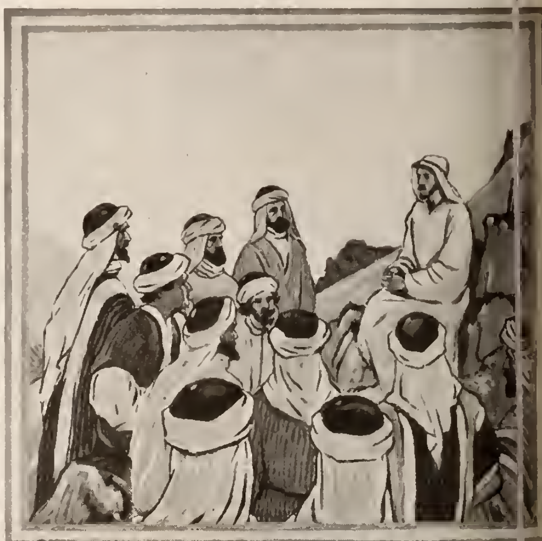
Picture No. 40



Picture No. 41



Picture No. 42



YOU can write on a postcard, or a piece of paper, the names and addresses of those to whom you think the Bible Picture Contest particulars might prove of interest, and who might find mental and spiritual profit in discovering or finding again the wonderful beauties of the Bible. Indeed, many you know probably were once in touch with Christian work and thought, but they have drifted away and become indifferent. We believe we can reawaken them.

WE will send to any one you indicate a complete explanation of the Contest, with Rules, object lesson pictures, etc., showing just what the Contest is, and how it can be competed in—either free absolutely, or in connection with the Christian Herald and the complete outfit of "Gems from the Bible" and Reply Book. All these instructions have already been had, of course, by those now in the Contest. Address your postcard or letter to The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York, N.Y.

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

T E editors of the Christian Herald will be lad to answer any question addressed to th Iail-Bag, provided it be of general interest an not merely personal. Correspondents may us nom de plume to identify the question, but al tters must contain name and address of the se r, in addition to the nom de plume. No at tion will be paid to anonymous letters.

Questions and Answers

ANXIOUS, Washington, Iowa. I have been a church member for a long time, but have never been entirely satisfied with my Christian experience. I do want to love God with all my heart, and to please him in everything, but am often troubled with doubts and depressions. I have prayed earnestly to know what my trouble is, but seem to receive very little light. At times when others are rejoicing in God my heart is often deeply burdened. At other times God seems very near. Why does my experience fl uate so? Is it because I have n een truly saved?

e little book by Gilchrist, " per Experiences of Famous C stians," would help you to u rstand your condition and to fi the way out. You will find th it is the almost universal ex- pe nce of Christians that after th conversion they have had a pe d of this very same kind of fl uation together with all sorts of iritual depressions and defeats. B Christian experience and the S tures alike indicate that it is p ble to enter into a new and b r and higher experience. The m careful study of the New T ament seems to prove that the di ples were surely converted men b re Pentecost: but the experi- en of Pentecost brought them in a brighter, stronger, purer, and st lier experience. This same bl ing is open to all believers. R Hannah Whitall Smith's " Christian's Secret of A Happy Li " There are many other help- fu ooks, giving counsel as to how th experience may be found and k , such as S. D. Gordon's "Quiet T s on Power"; Dr. Torrey's " Baptism with the Holy S t"; John McNeil's "The Spirit- F d Life"; William Arthur's "The T gue of Fire"; Dr Steele's " lestone Papers" and "Love E hroned." Read also the lives o uch great Christians as John W ley, Charles G. Finney, Bishop W iam Taylor. But after all, the si le key to the victorious life is ith. One might read all these b s and yet get no help unless o believed that God's promises m be made just as true in his li s they have been in the lives of t saints. We must take God a is word and believe that he is respecter of persons, but de- si that every one shall share in th abundant riches of his grace.

rs. E. C. I., Pleasant Gap, Pa. T re is no such passage in the B e as you mention (see Job 14: 1 and Acts 16:28). Life is a p ious gift from God and should b o valued. There is nothing in S pture to justify the view that w have a right to shorten our ex- is ce. The Christian Church from t earliest times has taken a stand a nst suicide, and the laws of m have made it a crime. There is thing more sad or tragic than t case of one who, in a moment of passion, t ws life away and rushes unrepentant and a nprepared into the presence of his Maker.

. H. P., Cherry Valley, Ill. It is a sure t n of advancement, not only in the spirit- n life but even in worldly wisdom, when a n realizes that concealment of his mistakes is eakness and that acknowledgment is s ngth. If I have done a real wrong, even u tentionally, to my friend or neighbor, I ould be prompt to admit it and even to a ogize. His attitude may be hostile and r ntful for the moment; nevertheless I owe h an explanation in justice to both of us, a in recognition of the Christian principles w h I profess.

eader, Canada. The Gospel is the mes- s of peace and forgiveness to the repentant, o arning and awakening to those still living i in, and of assurance and service to those w have accepted Christ and entered on the new life. All three classes may be found in any average congregation. We know from long experience that there is a tendency, in certain minds, to criticize harshly the minister who may be doing his duty faithfully as he sees it. Then the pastor himself may seem to lack due discrimination at times. He might be strengthened and helped and his work rendered much more efficient by the cordial cooperation of the earnest Christians in his church. It is well worth while to make an effort of this kind. Why not get together and talk it over with him in the spirit of brotherliness? It may bring about just the conditions needed for effective work. We will put the case before the Prayer League.

Subscriber, Greenville, Va. 1. The passage in I Tim. 6: 16 is often misunderstood, and this is evidently the case with those who teach that it implies the annihilation of the soul at death. "Christ only hath immortality" means that he alone of all who have ever appeared on earth has immortality, not derived, but "as the very essence of his being." It was obviously the purpose of the apostle, in writing the passage in question, to emphasize the fact that immortality is not inherent in the human race and is solely the gift of God. See John 5 26; Rom. 2: 7; I Cor. 15: 22; John 6: 27; John 3: 16; and II Tim. 1: 10.

B. S. Bothwell, a teacher of Sandoval, N. M., sends this interesting letter to the Mail-Bag: "The mention of that ancient romantic and unusually strange Indian pueblo of Acoma recalls the fact of the similar but smaller and less known Pueblo de Sia, evidently the smallest 'true republic' in all the world. This village of 180 souls is situated on a barren rock-hill of about five acres, at whose base flows the broad Jemes River upon its listless bed of treacherous quicksand. Up the northern slope of this uncouth hill runs a narrow, winding path, nobody knows how old. No doubt, long before William the Conqueror won at Hastings, the sturdy Indian built his rude adobe den upon this cheerless path and carried here with much fatigue his fuel, food and drink—just as is done to this day. Of one fact the Sia is justly proud; that the great Lincoln signed the deed guaranteeing forever their title to a five-mile square reservation. In this huddle of adobe huts, in the center of this small commune, the crafty Sia maintain a true republic without written law, jail or force, an example from which many a more intelligent community might learn some valuable lessons. They are self-supporting, except that Uncle Sam provides a day-school ten months each year, and gives the needed clothing to their children."

Mrs. M. S. H., Chiloquin, Ore., writes: "In your good paper from time to time I have seen some very good rules for right living. I have five rules for governing children which I feel sure cannot be excelled. They were given to me over fifty years ago by a minister who was then superintendent of Spencer Academy, Indian Territory. I have tried and proved them on nine children. The rules are: 1. Punish good-naturedly. 2. Consent cordially. 3. Refuse finally. 4. Command often. 5. Never scold." We give our correspondent's letter in the hope that it may interest and possibly help others who have the duty of child-training, either as mothers, teachers or guardians.

S. W., Council Bluffs, Iowa. Can you tell me of any peace movements before the present one?

Isaiah had an inspired vision of a time when swords should be beaten into plowshares and spears into pruning-hooks. By the Amphictyonic Council the Greeks sought to mitigate war, though their efforts did not reach as far as the barbarians, as they called the rest of the world. In the eleventh century A.D. a peace movement, called the Truce of God, spread over Western Europe. A peace palace was erected and peace conferences were held at Liege, and Christendom dreamed the same dream of peace that it afterward dreamed in the first decade of the twentieth century—a dream from which it was rudely awakened by the Crusades, which might be compared in their extent to the present world war.

C. B., Concordia, Mo. Both subjects are controversial. The Scriptures contain many passages warning against intemperance.

C. M. B., Willows, Calif. 1. In dealing with questions in the Mail-Bag, we select those that are likely to prove helpful to our readers. Controversial subjects or questions that are prompted by mere curiosity, and which have no value in themselves, cannot be dealt with. 2. Write to Information Bureau, War Department, Washington, D. C., for information regarding the steamship Vesuvius.

E. G., Gilman, Ill. You must have misunderstood the speaker. When men persist in sin knowingly and wilfully, and the restraining power of the Holy Spirit is withdrawn, then the inevitable consequences follow.

Miss C., Iowa. We see no harm in what you describe. It has the aspect of an innocent and pleasant pastime.

C. W. R., Philadelphia. The passage in Luke 21: 24 implies that Jerusalem, the center of the race of Israel, would one day cease to be "trodden down by the Gentiles," as it then was trodden by pagan and now by Mohammedan unbelievers. "The times of the Gentiles" is the period of their dominance. When this period has expired, the Jews, as Romans 11 intimates, will be again "grafted into their own olive tree," and one church of Jew and Gentile will fill the earth. There has been much discussion recently among students of prophecy on this particular question, but it is necessarily speculative. Opinion is sharply divided concerning the relation of the present war to the prophecies.

H. W. L., Caledonia, Ohio. The Hymeneus mentioned in I Tim. 1: 20 is the same person referred to in II Tim. 2: 17. He was a professor of Christianity at Ephesus who, with Alexander and Philetus, had backslidden and led others into error. These men are believed to have taught erroneous views concerning the resurrection and other important points of doctrine, making shipwreck of the faith of those who followed them, just as wild and unscriptural teachers mislead many through false doctrine in our own day. Hymeneus, it is believed, was restored to the church afterward, doubtless on renouncing his errors; but it is said that his repentance was not permanent, and that he backslid anew and caused more trouble subsequently.

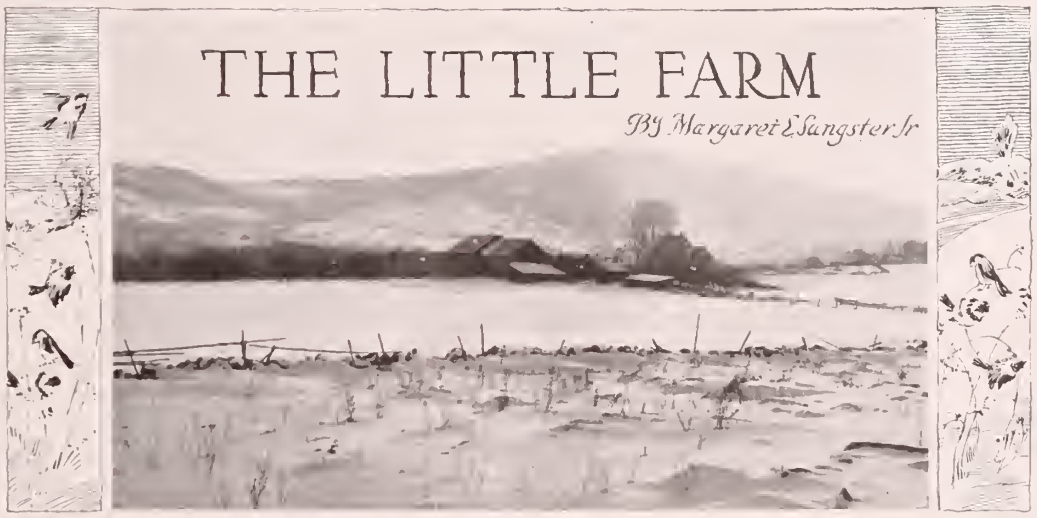
C. J. D., Lake Arthur, N. M. Sarah Bernhardt is still living, though an invalid.

G. P., Centerville, R. I. The identification of certain prophecies in Daniel and Revelation with events now taking place is a temptation to many students of the Bible. We have received numerous letters on the subject. To all such we would reply that the subject is one on which no one can speak or write with authority. Divine wisdom alone can interpret these mysteries (see Dan. 12: 10), and unless we have this wisdom, we shall be like many modern interpreters who have tried to deal with unfulfilled prophecy and have lamentably failed. God, in his own time and way, will bring to pass what his prophets have spoken. It may be, indeed, that the present war will bring about the fulfilment of certain events foreshadowed thousands of years ago; but those who are disposed to reckon and explain these mysteries would do well to remember the words of the angel to Daniel, when the prophet asked him: "What shall be the end of these things?" "Go thy way," he said, "for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end." We might add that all the writers on prophetical interpretation disagree, some on essential points, others on detail. They lack that wisdom which can come only by divine inspiration. (See Rev. 13: 18.)

A. A. T., Westboro, Mass., writes to call attention to the fact that while the word "girl" occurs but once in the Bible (in Joel 3: 3), the plural—"girls"—is found in Zech. 8: 5.

THE LITTLE FARM

By Margaret E. Sangster Jr



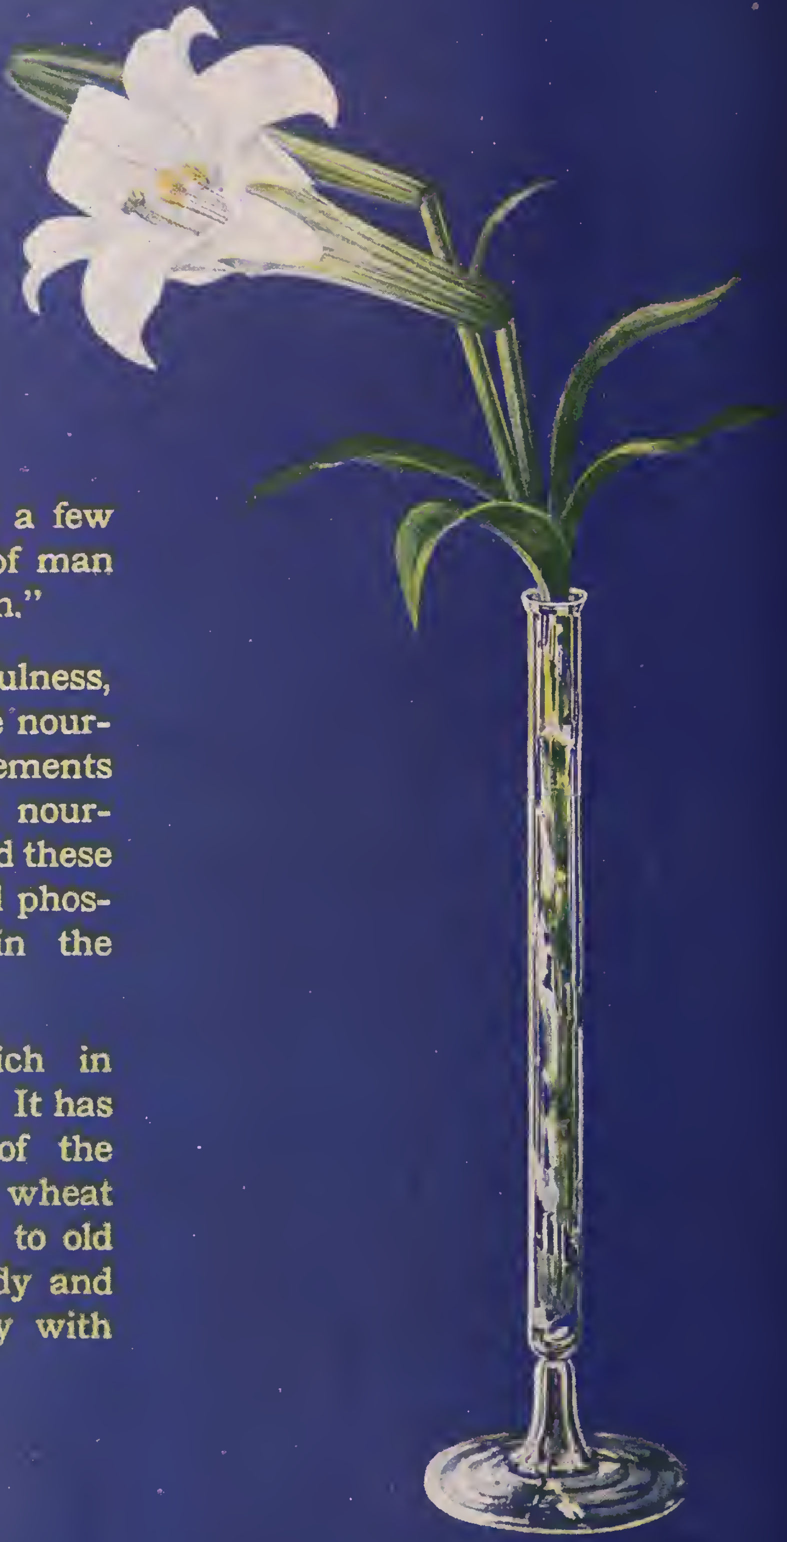
THERE'S a little farm that nestles in the shadow of a hill;
It's a lonely spot in winter when the earth is white and still;
When the tempest makes your heart ache with its bitter, wailing sigh,
And the roads are all unbroken, and a storm is in the sky.

There's a rocky bit of pasture where the huckleberries grow;
It's a quiet place in winter 'neath the ghostly sheet of snow;
And the vines that twine their tendrils all about the stony wall
Are the wraiths of creeping woodbine that was scarlet in the fall.

There's a time I can remember at the twilight of the day,
When the shadows, growing purple, look like forms that kneel to pray;
When a little mother standing in the window strikes a light,
And the lamp-shine glimmers golden all across the winter night.

There's a little farm that nestles in the shadow of a hill,
And a group of memories haunt me—I am sure they always will . . .
For a boundless love, far reaching, stretches toward me where I roam,
And my heart is lonely, sometimes; for that little farm is home!

"Consider the Lilies of the Field, How They Grow"



The life of the lily is but a few transient hours. The life of man is "three score years and ten."

But to live his life in its fulness, man—like the lily—must be nourished by those same vital elements which Nature provides for nourishing every living thing; and these include the valuable mineral phosphates so often lacking in the usual dietary.

Grape-Nuts food is rich in these wonderful elements. It has delicious taste, is made of the entire nutrition of whole wheat and barley, and from youth to old age, builds and rebuilds body and brain in beautiful harmony with Nature's perfect plan.

"There's a Reason" for Grape-Nuts

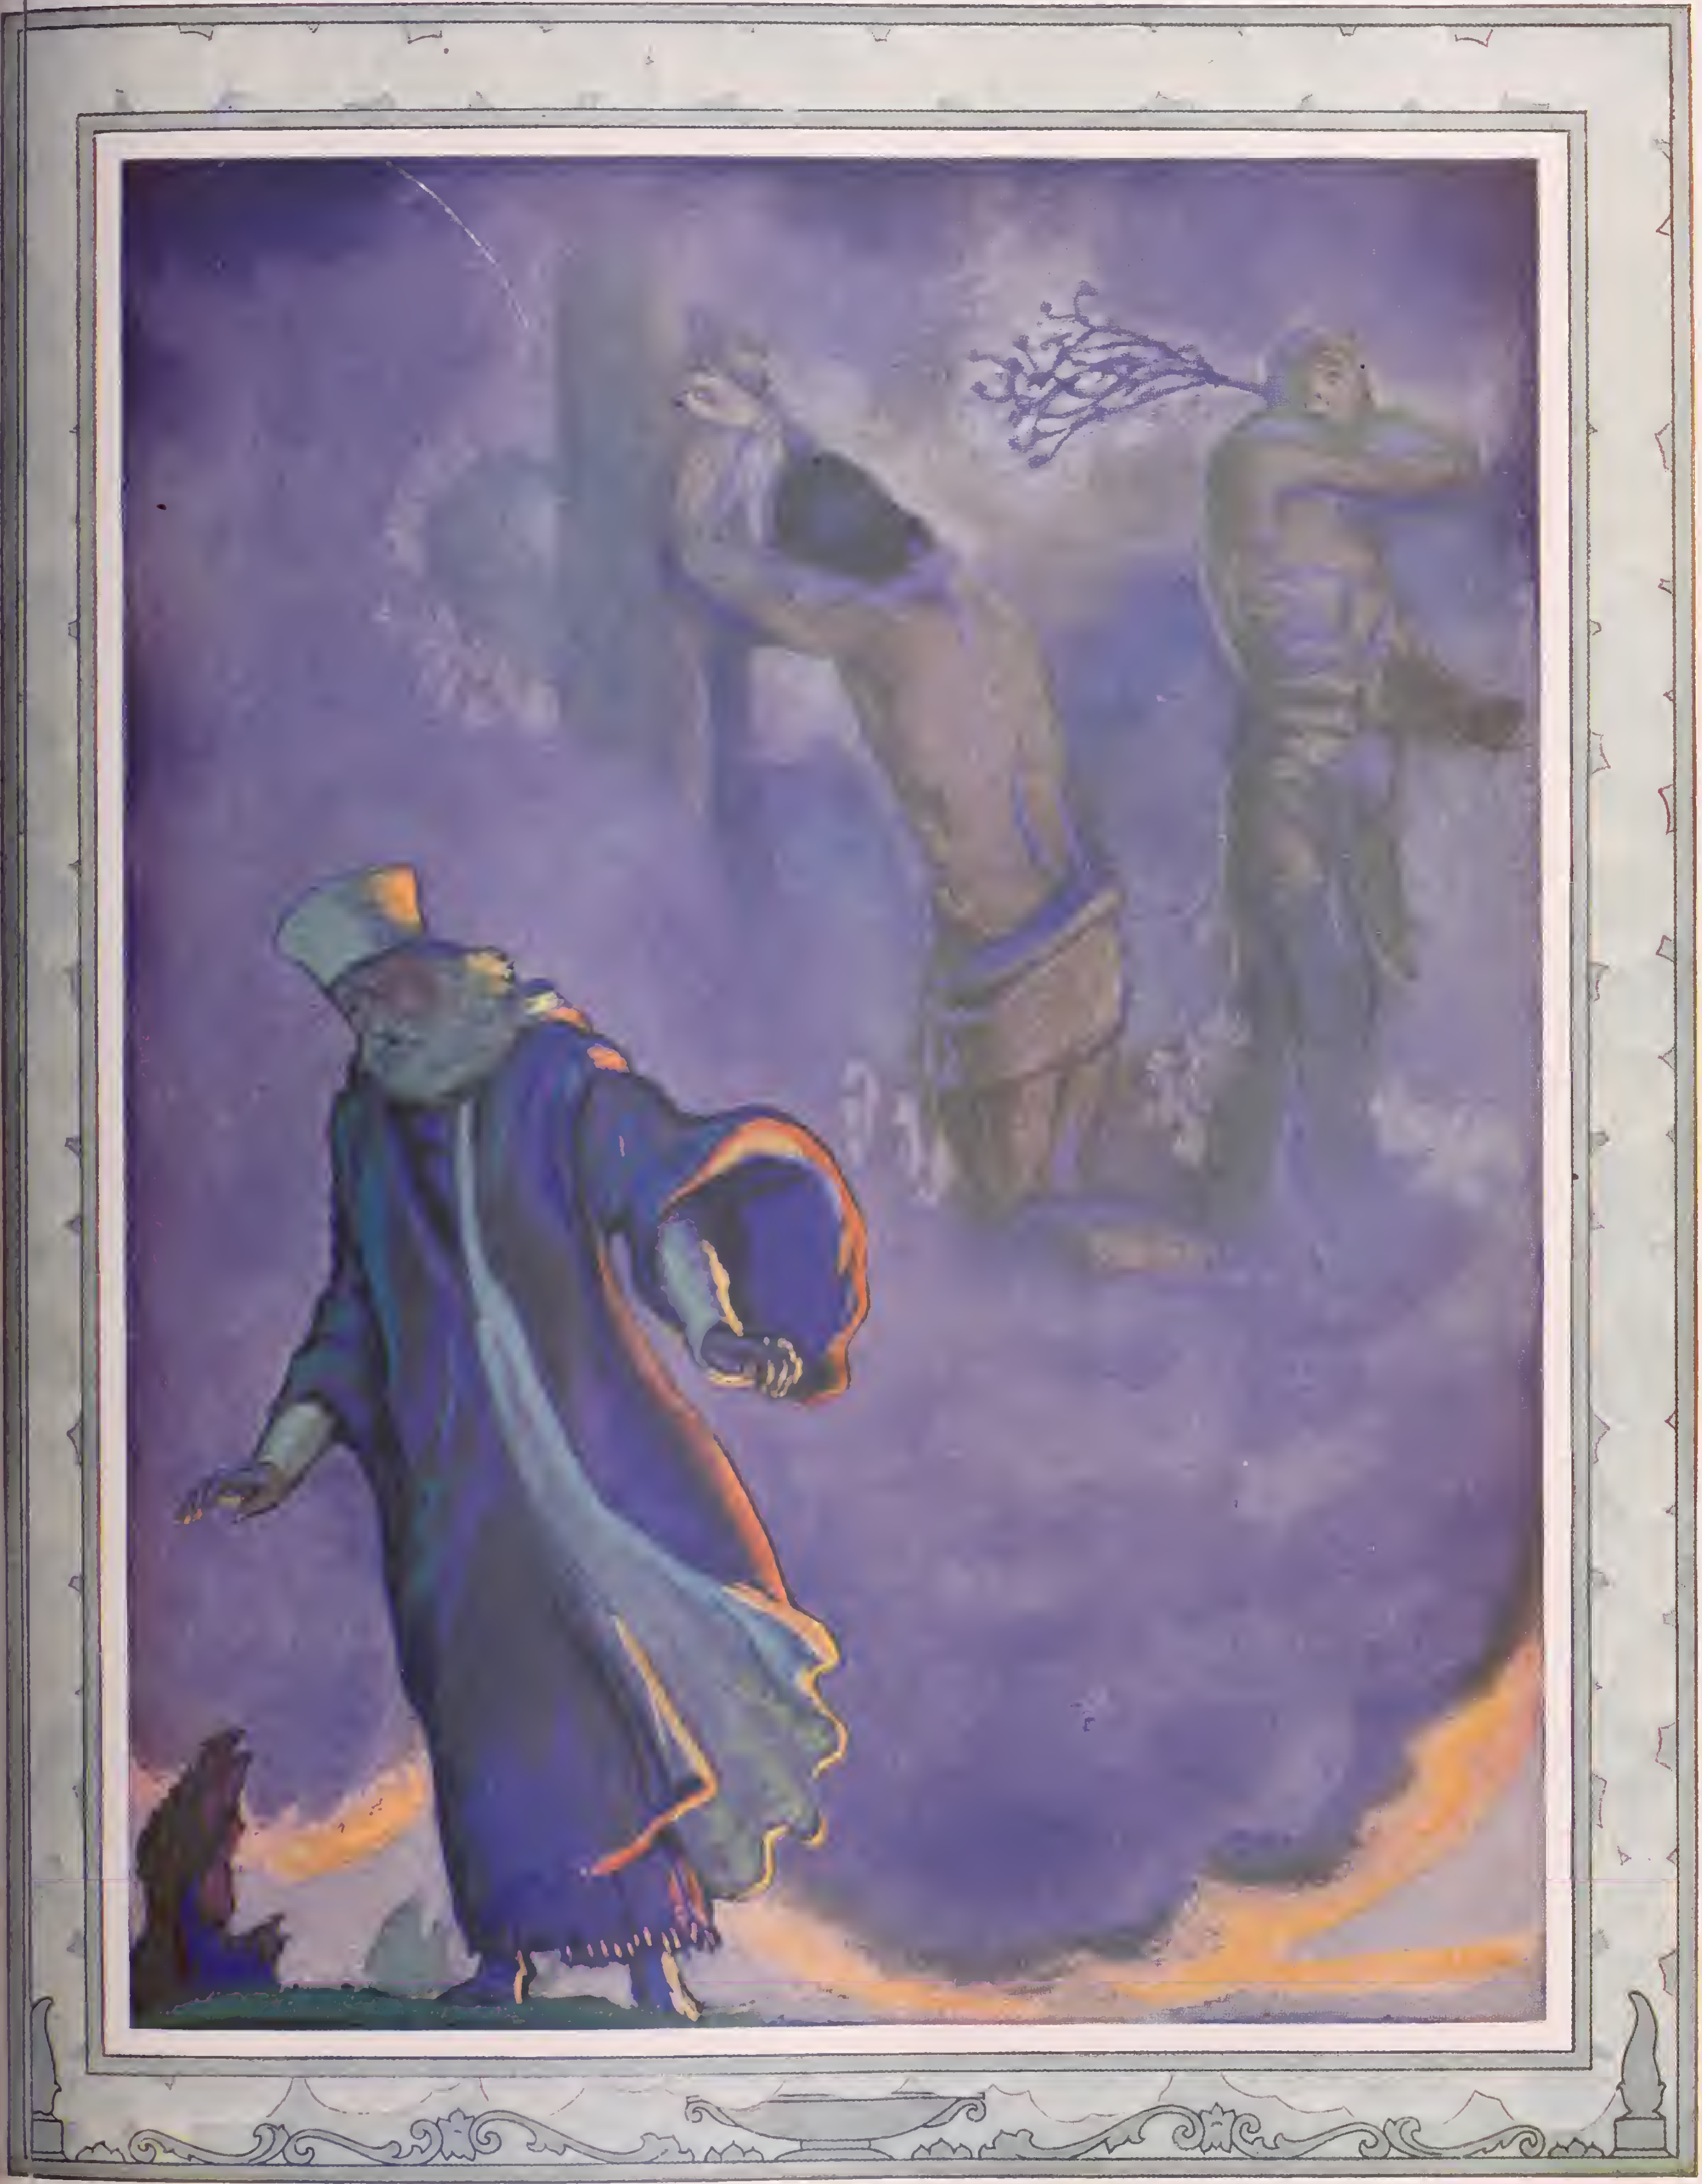
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1916, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, MARCH 29, 1916

VOL. 39—NO. 13. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



Painting by H. Willard Ortlip

ISAIAH S VISION OF THE SCOURGING. "The chastisement of our peace was upon him, and with his stripes we are healed."
Isa. 53. 5. Matt. 27. 26; Mark 15. 15; John 19. 1.

New Lubricant Prevents Rapid Formatio of Black Solid Matter in Your Engin

The heat in your automobile engine turns part of ordinary oil into black solid matter—the greatest enemy of lubrication, a cause of rapid wear.

Ordinary oil breaks down after a few hours use, forms black sediment and loses in lubricating value. Ordinary oil cannot stand up under the terrific heat of an automobile engine. The sediment is destroyed oil—all lubricating value in it has been killed by heat.

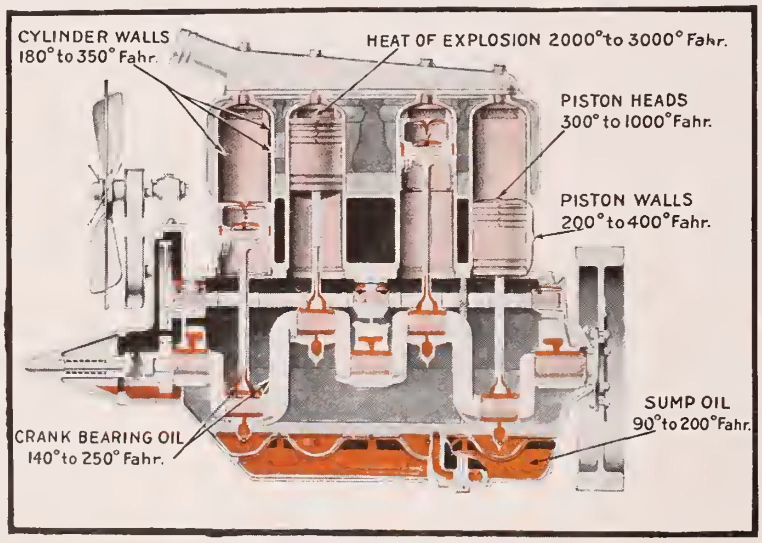
Solid matter means friction. The sediment has an inactive or negative effect. It partially crowds out the remaining liquid oil. This under-supply of oil to the metal surfaces causes friction—heat—wear—loss of power and expensive repairs.

When tests are run with the same motor under precisely the same operating conditions using different lubricants, a remarkable variation will be found in the amount of oil destroyed by heat. This is shown by the amount of black sediment which settles out of each after standing.

The oil floating above the sediment is red in color by transmitted light and may be assumed to be as serviceable as when fresh.

The volume of sediment formed, and the rapidity with which the oil is destroyed depend upon its chemical structure. Oils which have a non-heat resisting chemical structure are unfit for use in any type of automobile or other internal combustion motor.

Such oils make trouble and increase maintenance cost in direct proportion to their rate of destruction when exposed to heat. Consequently the amount of oil used and the cost of lubrication per mile depend not on the price per gallon but on ability to resist heat.



CYLINDER WALLS 180° to 350° Fahr.
HEAT OF EXPLOSION 2000° to 3000° Fahr.
PISTON HEADS 300° to 1000° Fahr.
PISTON WALLS 200° to 400° Fahr.
SUMP OIL 90° to 200° Fahr.
CRANK BEARING OIL 140° to 250° Fahr.

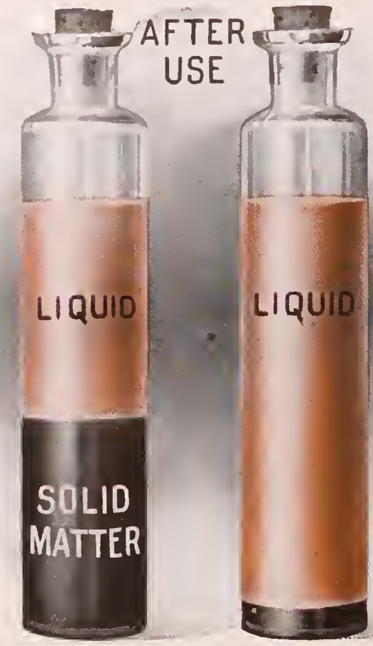
These High Operating Temperatures Cause Rapid Destruction of Ordinary Oils

Relative Oil Destruction

The contents of the two bottles shown illustrate clearly the relative durability of ordinary oil and of Veedol, the new lubricant that resists heat. Veedol deposits only a small fraction as much sediment as ordinary oil. The operating temperatures shown on the sectional drawing of the motor bring out forcibly the intense heat to which motor lubricants are subjected.

There is a fundamental difference between ordinary oils and Veedol.

Ordinary oils are unstable and therefore unserviceable because of non-heat-resisting chemical structure.



ORDINARY OIL AFTER USE

VEEDOL AFTER USE

Showing Finely Divided Solid Matter in Suspension

Special processes of manufacture developed by this company and the use of Pennsylvania paraffine-base crude oil, give Veedol, the new lubricant, its unusual chemical structure, and its remarkable heat-resisting ability.

Make This Road Test

Remove the drain plug from the lowest part of your motor crank case and allow all old oil to run out. Replace the plug, fill the sump up to correct oil level with kerosene and run the motor slowly under its own power for about thirty seconds, to cleanse the interior. Then draw out all kerosene, replace the drain plug and refill with Veedol.

The exact amount of fuel and oil in the car should be recorded and a reading of the speedometer taken before starting. Then let a test be run over a familiar road including steep hills and straight level stretches, for any distance up to five hundred miles or more.

You will find that your motor has acquired new pick-up and hill-climbing ability, due to the maximum mechanical efficiency made possible through Veedol.

You will find your mileage on both gasoline and oil increases. You will reduce your carbon trouble. Your motor will have more power.

What It Means In Actual Saving

The average mileage of all automobiles is conceded to be approximately 6000 miles per year, and the annual expense of operating the typical or average car ($850 car), as figured by an expert statistician, is approximately $416 per year.

Depreciation, repairs and gasoline come to about $268.

This new lubricant resi s heat and prevents rapid se i-mentation. This means l s wear, less expense, mo e power.

Solid matter in your oil means friction and w r. Friction and wear mean expense. Thus expense va es in direct proportion to the amount of black solid ma er formed by the oil. For this reason, ordinary oil is up your repair bills, lessens your gasoline mileage d by shortening the life of your car, materially incre es your depreciation costs. Engineers state that y 50% to 75% of repairs and 50% of depreciation e due to improper lubrication.

Veedol prevents rapid sedimentation and saves u money on three of the greatest items of expense.

The cost accounting records of taxi-cab compa s, bus lines and large corporations show that Ve ol should save you from $50 to $115 per year on gaso e, repairs and depreciation.

Since Veedol wears several times longer than i-nary oil, your lubrication bill itself will actuall e smaller when you use Veedol.

If you are interested in saving money you will b n-terested in making your own tests of this remark le new lubricant.

Get a five-gallon can of Veedol and make the d test described.

Where You Can Buy Veedol

Progressive dealers everywhere have secured Ve ol and can supply you. Look for the orange and b k Veedol sign.

Any Veedol dealer will give you a copy of the Ve ol book free. This book explains how Veedol resists at and specifies the right body of Veedol for your car.

Each dealer is also supplied with a large chart s i-fying the right body of Veedol for each automo e, motor-boat or motor-cycle.

If, for any reason, you cannot get Veedol at ce write to the Platt & Washburn Refining Co. By e-turn mail you will receive a copy of the book free, d the name of the dealer who will supply you.

PLATT & WASHBURN REFINING).
1808 Bowling Green Bldg. New Y k

NEW 100 PAGE VEEDOL BOOK FRE

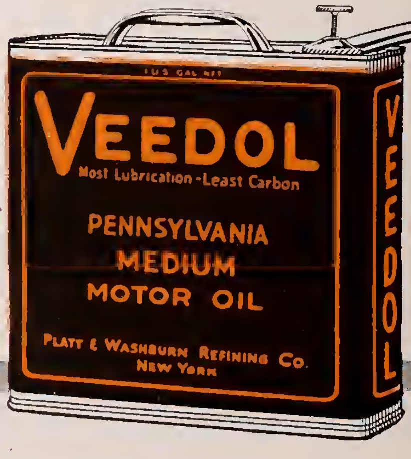
Write for the new Veedol book "The Lubrication Internal Combustion Motors."

This book explains the A B C's of oil refining and finis ing. It gives full information regarding the laboratory a practical service tests to which lubricants are subject before final approval and shipment.

It describes and illustrates all types of lubricating s tems used in automobiles, motor-cycles, motor-boa tractors, etc. It contains a fund of useful information a scientific facts discussing lubricants and lubrication fr its many angles.

This book also shows how the Veedol Engineering D partment, which is at your service, is helping car owne over 100 pages profusely illustrated in colors.

WRITE TODAY



Veedol is s lied in one gall and five gallon led cans; 15 on, 28 gallon 53 gallon el drums; an 28 gallon and gal-lon white o ar-rels.

A special ing device is s ied with each etal container.

Guarantee hen sold in th gi-nal packag

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD

An Illustrated News Weekly for the Home

The Mexican Situation

© International Film Service

gadier General John J. Pershing

Sla to active command in Mexico

TO most Americans Mexico is a land of romance, the country of "mañana" (tomorrow). We have grouped all the Mexicans under the title of "greaser" even as they have grouped us under the no less complimentary title of "gringo," a heritage from our unjustified campaign of 1845. Nevertheless, while the peon has perha experienced little but misery and exploitation. th still has been in Mexico a considerable body of ab and well-educated people of Spanish and mixed Eu pean blood. These people were the backbone of the Diaz régime; they were the plant ers merchants financiers and politicia, and so long as the strong hand of Di bound them together, they expe nced an abounding and increasing pr perity. The great oil deposits we developed, the rich agricultural pla s were being brought under subec on, and the ore deposits of the we rn mountains were being worked wit profit to both miners and Mexico.

ese were the cientificos whose na has been anathema in Mexico fro the first day of the Madero revolut n, which was to emancipate the pe and give the land to the people on he principle that "the earth be gs to him who works it."

ristian Herald readers are familiar wit the incidents that led to the murde f Madero and the rise of Huerta to e provisional presidency. The de ls of Huerta's seventeen months of secure tenure in the Mexican pa e are too recent to need recapitulat n. His flight, his return to America nd his death as a prisoner in the U ed States are all recent history.

t the flight of Huerta was not to ean peace in Mexico. The very m who had driven Huerta into exile un r the guise of restoring the consti tion were unable to find power enough to go ar nd when Huerta was eliminated and fought am g themselves for the place of precedence. The su me chief, Carranza, within three months of a tri phal entry into Mexico City hastily withdrew to V Cruz, which the American troops had evacuated on ovember 23, 1914, after seven months' occupaio Villa, who had been Carranza's best general, turned against him and with him were more than half of the soldiers of the constitutional army. During the rest of 1914 events went badly for Carranza. The approach of the Villa forces to the neighborhood of Vera Cruz at one time made it appear that Carranza might be forced to transfer his mobile capital to Yucatan.

EARLY in 1915 General Obregon, second only to Villa in ability as a military commander, and who had remained loyal to Carranza, began to report victories in a series of engagements with the Villa-Zapata-Angeles forces, his first definite victory being on January 5. Several times in the fall of 1914 the situation near the border became so serious that large bodies of United States troops were concentrated and ready for any eventuality which might occur. The whole of northern Mexico was without any organized or settled government, and parties of bandits roamed at will and paid very little attention to the location of the boundary, invading American territory, driving off cattle and murdering American citizens with a degree of impunity which led many Americans to demand intervention. American troops, however, remained on American territory and protests to various momentary authorities in Mexico resulted in momentary relief.

© Mutual Film Corporation from Underwood & Underwood

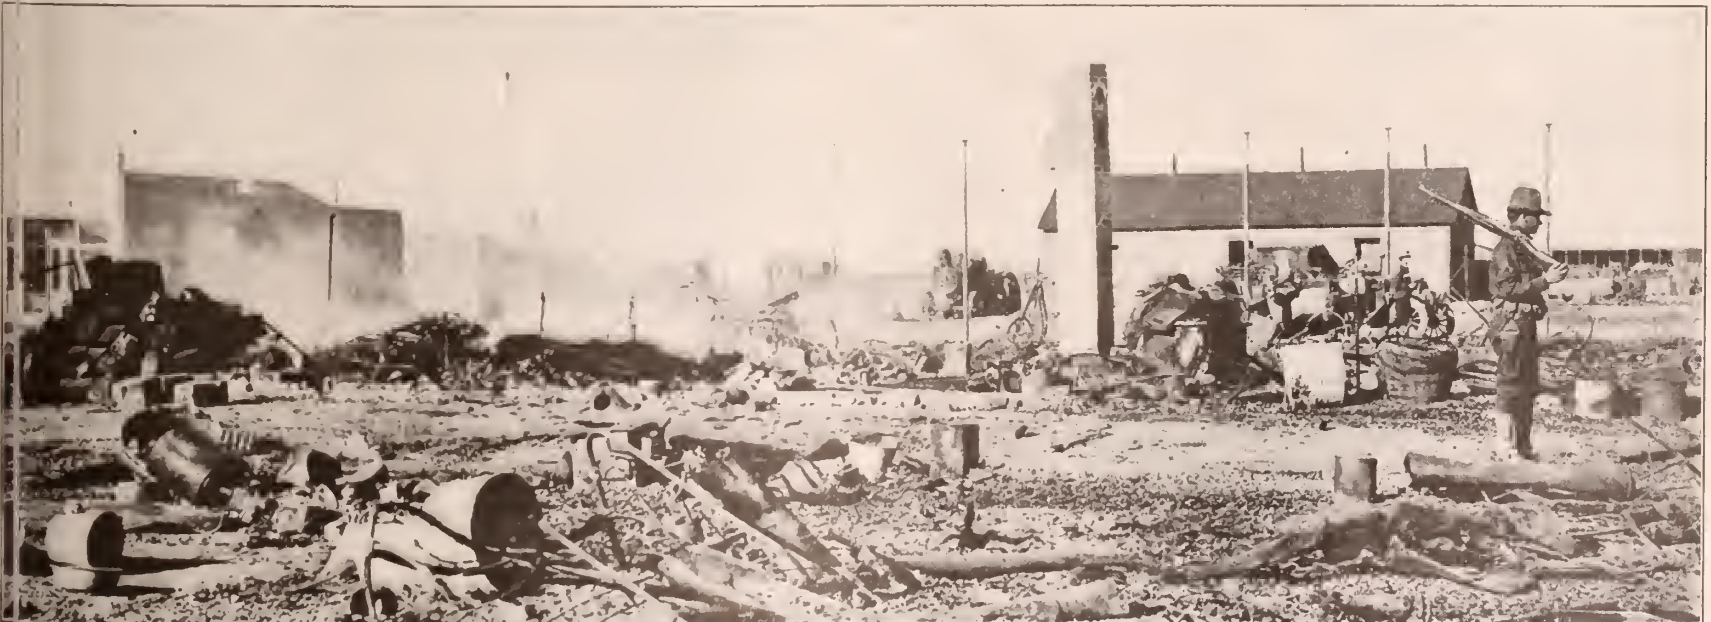
A characteristic picture of Villa leading his followers on a raid

In the meantime, the struggle between the two branches of the old constitutionalist army continued, with the advantage remaining on the side of Carranza. During the month of July, 1915, the capital of Mexico changed hands three times. At the end of the struggle for Mexico City, the balance of power was so little determined that neither side dared occupy the city, and all communication by rail or by road was blocked. The residents of the city, both Mexicans and foreigners, were on the verge of starvation.

On June 2, 1915, President Wilson sent a note to the different factions of Mexico calling upon them to act together promptly for the relief of their country, otherwise the United States would employ means to help Mexico save herself. This appeal reached no apparent result other than intensifying of the efforts of the various factions to gain the upper hand. On August 14, 1915, a note was sent by the representatives of the United States and six South American governments to Carranza, Villa, their generals and the governors of the various states of Mexico, proposing a friendly conference with all those who directed armed movements in Mexico. Villa accepted the proposal promptly, his prompt acceptance being looked upon in many quarters as an evidence of the seriousness of his position. Carranza, flushed with recent victories, rejected the proposal and advised the nations concerned of the dangers which might ensue from interference by outsiders in the internal affairs of Mexico. The American government had at one time been willing to recognize the government of which Villa was the head, partly because Villa appeared to be the strongest man in Mexico, partly because Carranza had consistently ignored our government and its agents at every opportunity. Carranza had not fired on the United States flag, but he had gone Huerta several degrees better in his evidences of that disdain for the northern neighbor which marks the feeling of the bulk of Mexico.

The proposal of August 14 coming to nothing, the seven nations concerned found it necessary to adopt a new plan. On September 18 they agreed to recognize the faction which at the end of three weeks had best shown its ability to maintain order. And on October 19 the Carranza government was recognized by the United States and by eight of the republics of Central and South America as the de facto government in Mexico.

FROM the murder of Madero in February, 1913, to October, 1915, there had not been a government in Mexico which had been recognized by the govern-



© Underwood & Underwood

Columbus, N. M., after the Villa raid. Ruin of Commercial Hotel, where several Americans perished, in foreground

© American Press Association

This is how a village street looks after a visit from Villa

© Underwood & Und

United States soldiers at border to resist return of raiders to Columbus

ments of the world. With the recognition of the Carranza government, the latest embargo which had been laid against the shipment of arms and ammunition into Mexico was lifted against all the ports controlled by Carranza, and was maintained more rigidly than ever against all the territory occupied by Villa. Carranza, thus well armed and supplied, was able gradually to overcome the organized resistance of Villa, although several times during the fall of 1915 intervention on the part of the United States appeared extremely imminent. On September 27 conditions along the border had become so acute that Colonel Blocksom, in command near Progreso, reported to General Funston that "if Carranza does not stop these bandits, I believe we shall soon be compelled to follow them across."

At three different points on the border Villa made attempts to capture or destroy garrisons of Carranza troops, and each time the action threatened to overflow onto American territory, and clashes between Mexican and American troops were narrowly averted. Carranza troops were several times permitted to travel through American territory in order to reinforce garrisons threatened by Villa forces; the latter were constantly losing the character of organized troops and assuming more and more the nature of bandits. By February of this year Villa and his following had been driven into the mountainous districts in the western part of the state of Chihuahua and Villa had been declared an outlaw. Carranza troops controlled all the principal settlements and maintained a fairly effective control over the railways, although they were unable to prevent occasional raids by Villa, such as the attack at Santa Ysabel which cost the lives of a number of American citizens and brought renewed demands from many sources for intervention.

Villa, however, remained reasonably secure in his mountain retreat, living off the country, until his raid on the town of Columbus, New Mexico, chronicled in last week's Christian Herald, brought the American government to the limit of its patience and resulted in orders to General Funston to go into Mexico and pursue Villa to the end.

From February, 1913, to date, the position of Americans in Mexico has been extremely hazardous. Several hundred have been killed, thousands have lost all their possessions. The attitude of the American government has been misunderstood. Our policy of watchful waiting, which was meant to give Mexico a chance to work out her own salvation, has appeared from the southern side of the line to be merely an evidence of weakness, and has brought us into contempt that deepened the hatred toward Americans which has smouldered in Mexican hearts ever since Buena Vista and Monterey.

While the Administration, in ordering Funston to capture Villa, disclaimed all intention of violating Mexican sovereignty and expressly declared that the expedition was a friendly one, designed to assist the recognized authorities in Mexico to do that which they appeared unable to do alone, yet so sensitive is Mexican pride of race and country that it has hardly seemed possible that the entrance of American troops into Mexico even as a punitive expedition against an international outlaw could result otherwise than in the welding of Mexicans into an organized resistance which would of itself provoke intervention. At this writing it appears that Mexico, worn with five years of strife, is willing to be a little less sensitive and to grant the American government the benefit of the doubt as to its intentions. Carranza's response to the notice that American troops were to follow Villa was a proposal for a mutual arrangement by which the troops of either authority were to follow bandits and marauders across the international line. Secretary Lansing's reply accepting General Carranza's proposal was framed in such cordial language, with such a clear statement of the American intentions, with such a complete compliance with Carranza's request, at it brought immediate agreement from the Car za government, and has resulted in an apparent ermination to cooperate closely with the American es in the rounding up of Villa. In sending the te accepting General Carranza's proposal, Secr ry Lansing issued this statement: "In order to re ve any misapprehension that may exist either i he United States or in Mexico, the President has au orized me to give in his name the public assurance at the military operations now in contemplation b is government will be scrupulously confined to he object already announced, and that in no cir mstances will they be suffered to infringe in any d ee upon the sovereignty of Mexico or develop into i ervention of any kind in the internal affairs of our er republic. On the contrary, what is now being d is deliberately intended to preclude the possibili of intervention."

THE assembling of American forces along he border for the pursuit of Villa proceeded act ly until by the 15th of March there were more an 12,000 troops organized in three columns, read to enter Mexico at Columbus, New Mexico, at a nt about forty-five miles west of Columbus near Hac a, New Mexico, and at some point near Dou s, Arizona. It was announced on March 15 at Brigadier General Pershing had crossed the b er at Columbus with about 4,000 troops; the Thirte th Cavalry, which had received its baptism of fire i he raid, formed the vanguard of the column. A sm er force under Colonel George A. Dodd crossed he boundary near Hachita. The Mexican garriso at Palomas, south of Columbus, joined the colum of General Pershing under orders to cooperate wit he Americans. Some of these Mexicans were being ed as scouts.

Continued on page 395

The Gospel in the Radium Belt

By
WARREN F. WILCOX

GIVEN an untouched parish as large as some Eastern states, at some points 100 miles from a railroad, broken by ranges, chasms, desert, and other untoward physical conditions, and hostile with prejudice and antipathy toward Christianity, what would you expect of one missionary? But don't leave God out of the account.

As preparation—all unguessed—James F. Walker, Congregational minister, had been out of the active ministry for eighteen years, ranching in South Dakota and Colorado, prospecting and mining, in search of health. Then in April, 1910, marrying in Grand Junction, Colo., he started on an overland wedding trip of 150 miles with mountain buggy and team of bronchos to take up new duties as the first missionary to the scattered population in the radium lands of western Colorado.

Mr. Walker located at Redvale, near the center of population but by no means geographically the center. It is twenty-eight miles from Placerville on the railroad, a narrow-gauge line, 404 miles from Denver. During the first summer the family lived in a tent twelve by fourteen. The parsonage was finished in November; then the tent served as a stable. A church of twenty-three members was organized and a Sunday school instituted.

From Redvale the work reached out into the surrounding country. The bronchos have averaged 3,000 miles a year. The specific field covered by Mr. Walker is larger than the state of Delaware, yet possesses but a few hundred people, probably 1,200. But the real field includes a wilderness of several hundred miles in every direction; a vast, unsurveyed, untracked, uncharted region between settlements, with an altitude of 5,000 to 7,000 feet.

The whole region is always in sight of perpetual snow, and includes the San Juan range with its rich gold and silver treasures, and the great mining camps of Silverton, Telluride and Ouray to the southeast, and the La Sals in the very heart of the radium belt, to the northwest. All along the cliffs of the great canyons lie the radium ore deposits, for this is the famed Colorado-Utah carnotite belt, an ellipse 150 miles in circumference and five wide, lying at the base of the La Sals.

The Redvale church, or chapel, dedicated just a year after Mr. Walker's arrival, is the center of community life. The building is used as a day school, for meetings of a musical and literary club, socials, and various other kinds of gatherings.

But plans are under way for a new building. At a recent meeting, one of the men present, not a member, said he would give $25 for a new church. Another interrupted and said: "Last fall I promised the preacher lumber for a new barn, but if you will give him this old chapel for a barn, I will give 5,000 feet of lumber for the new church." The first speaker then raised his $25 to $50, and the lumber man doubled his offer, saying that if the church would take the lumber at the mill, eighteen miles away in the mountains, he would give 10,000 feet. Others, all non-church-members, offered work, a bell, and other things.

FROM Redvale the work was started in the famed Paradox Valley, at Paradox, forty-five miles away and seventy-five from the railroad. The route leads through three canyons and over the desert. Twice has Mr. Walker been overcome with the heat making this journey, and has burned his hand to a blister by inadvertently placing it on the buggy tire in alighting. But the winters are as cold as the summers are hot.

After much effort, a church of thirteen members was organized at Paradox in February, 1911. A church bell, the gift of the First Congregational Church in Grand Junction, broke the silence of the ages and reverberated along the eternal hills where for centuries the cry of the coyote, and in later days the crack of the cowboy's gun, have been the only sounds.

The evening services at Paradox are held in a dimly lighted room supplied with old-fashioned school desks. A few lamps at the front of the room light the speaker's desk (a drop-leaf dining t e) and the organ. At the rear hang o or two lanterns. To complete the ligh ng system, a dozen candles are distrib ed about, fastened to the desks by ir own tallow. Most of the lights re extinguished when the sermon be s, to prevent dazzling the eyes of e congregation and to give an u bstructed view of the preacher. e faces of the people are thus d ly visible, but enough is seen to conv e one that they are there on accoun of genuine interest and not out of le curiosity.

In speaking of the organization of e Paradox church, Mr. Walker s s: "While the great peaks of the m tains were receiving a fresh baptis of snowy whiteness from the hand of Nature, I publicly administered e rite of baptism—the first baptis l service ever held in the Paradox. d for the first time these rock-rim d walls that surround the fairest of ir valleys witnessed the celebration f the Lord's Supper."

THE third station is Nucla, forty- e miles from the railroad. It is e outgrowth of a socialistic colony, loc d here as the most accessible point r the construction of the Nucla Di h. This ditch is eighteen miles long, d raises the water several hundred t up out of the San Miguel River. It s built by sheer grit, determination d perseverance. None of the members of the colony had money, and they suffered heartrending hardships. Being a desert land, even though the soil is most fertile, it would produce nothing until water was applied, and irrigation could not be practiced until the ditch was constructed. At times members of the colony would go to distant points and work to secure money to send back to those who were working on the ditch, in order that they and their families might have something to eat. It is said that in their extremity they would get a piece of pork and pass it on from house to house, each family boiling it in their beans just long enough to give flavor.

The religious sentiment of the founders of the colony was anti-church and even anti-Christian. They declared that no creed, church organization or saloon should ever be tolerated in the colony. There were a few people in the colony who were Christians and when Mr. and Mrs. Walker first visited Nucla they were met with the bitterness against the church even on the part of those who professed to be Christian. One man was so bitter in his opposition that he would turn his team out into the sagebrush, rather than meet Mr. Walker and speak, as Mr. Walker always insisted on doing when he met others in the public road.

Nevertheless, a church was organized in May, 1911, with eleven members and in April, 191 a very nice building with a seating capacity of 225 was dedicated. The church was built mostly by subscriptions and the subscriptions were mostly paid in work. The members secured from the Forestry Department a grant of timber twe[illegible] miles away. They cut the trees, hauled them to the nearest sawmill, then hauled the lumber and put up the edifice themselves. Today the church houses a branch of the county high school established at Nucla last fall.

Mr. Walker has also preached occasionally at Bedrock, where there had never been religious services before.

AMONG other meeting places in his parish is Bedrock, sixty-five miles from the railroad. The services are held in an old adobe schoolhouse, the building and front door being perforated with bullet holes, evidences of strenuous times in bygone days. Then there is Sinbad Valley, twelve miles north of Paradox and seventy-seven miles from the railroad; and Naturita, the oldest settlement here, and the postoffice address of the Standard Chemical Company, which has expended over a million dollars in the Paradox country, pioneering for and developing carnotite-radium. It is twelve miles from Redvale. There is a flourishing Sunday school, and preaching every three weeks. Nine miles from Nucla a Sunday school has been organized at Third Park in a schoolhouse called the "Radium" Schoolhouse, where there is a large foreign population, but they turn out very nicely to the services. Usually there is a row of young men who are unable to get seats, and so arrange themselves on the floor. And there is also La Sal Creek, southwest of Paradox, eighty-five miles from the railroad and fifty-five from Mr. Walker's home, in the heart of a rough mountainous country, the trail being narrow and so steep that it is dangerous. The only way to get to these people is on foot or horseback. No vehicle can get through. Mr. Walker found some Mormon families there, and in one family baptized four children and preached to the people under unusual circumstances.

A bit of Missionary Walker's parish, site of the concentrating mill and camp of the Standard Chemical Company in the heart of the radium belt

THE first year the Walkers traveled ten miles to a call; last year five, which shows that the population is increasing. In the first three years the bronchos traveled 11,000 miles, putting in 270 days on the road. Eastern ministers can scarcely appreciate the meaning of Mr Walker's work. Often he has become almost frantic for an hour's study and a little ministerial fellowship. Reports to the Congregational Missionary Society run about this way:

"January 2 was my day to go to Paradox, and Mrs. W. was sick all the preceding night. It is anything but comforting to start out on a forty-five mile drive in the dead of winter and leave the better half of the firm at home sick in bed, with the nearest doctor ten miles away. But if the Paradox people were to have the Gospel preached, I must go, as there is no one to send. I left home Saturday at 8 A.M. It was cold. At noon, half the distance covered, I stopped, fed Princess and Blaze, built a camp fire and sat on a rock beside it while I ate my lunch. The dinner hour passed, I kicked the snow from my shoes, wrapped up snugly and drove on, reaching my stopping-place for the night in good season. The warmth of the fire in the heater and the hospitality of friends reached my heart.

"The home was an adobe house of three rooms. The family consisted of a widowed mother, eighty years old and totally blind, and her son and daughter. Her Christian faith is strong. Sunday morning the son took his team and drove me six miles to the schoolhouse, in order that my team might rest. We got back to the adobe house for dinner, and in the afternoon I drove to Bedrock for an evening service. It was very cold and I had three miles to drive after service to reach my stopping-place for the night, and it was 12:30 by the time I got warmed through and ready for bed. The next morning I left for home as early as possible, arriving at 5:30 P.M."

AGAIN: "Friday morning we had five inches of snow on the ground and the roads in horrible shape. However, on Saturday morning I rose at 3:30 to start on my forty-five mile drive to Paradox. There was a special reason for my starting so early, as I had promised a cow-puncher in the La Sal Mountains that I would meet him in the Buckeye Reservoir on that evening and perform a wedding ceremony for him. He was to have a saddle horse ready for me to ride the last eight miles of the distance, when I had gone as far as it is possible for a team to go. The last eight miles is up a rugged trail with a rise in elevation of 2,500 feet or more. I changed from buggy to saddle horse as soon as possible when I had reached the Waggoner ranch, where the saddle horse was waiting, and pushed on rapidly, fearing that I was late. Mr. Waggoner said that two and one-half or three hours was good time in which to make the trip, but I reached the Buckeye sawmill in just two hours. The bride was one of three sisters whose two brothers ran the sawmill.

"When the guests had arrived, the young lady in question informed me that the ceremony would be next morning, as she was superstitious since she had heard that Saturday was unlucky, and she wanted a good day to be married on.

"I wish I could picture to you the scene in Buckeye Reservoir. The sawmill and the buildings stand in the heart of a great reservoir, that will, if the plans are carried out, in a few years be filled with water eighteen feet above the present buildings, to supply the Paradox Valley with irrigation waters. This reservoir site is or was full of great pines, some of them 250 years old."

Again, in speaking of an overland trip to Montrose to attend a church meeting, a trip of a hundred miles or more, Mr. Walker says: "Monday we started, passing through the deserted village of Pinon, where some of our Nucla people had lived for so many years and labored so hard to build the great flume and construct the ditch that should carry the life-giving water to the arid land about Nucla. Pinon is an esthetic name, but the sight of the fallen houses, old garden spots, neglected fruit trees, the straggling rosebushes and the little graveyard enclosed with white palings, gives one a feeling of depression."

On the return home from that trip, it rained.

"It rained all during the conference; it rained all the way home. We pitched our tent in the rain; we broke camp in the rain; we drove in the rain. We rode above the clouds and we rode in the clouds. The second day of the journey home we drove thirty-six miles down rough mountain roads that had been badly washed by the heavy rains. At five P.M. we were yet fifteen miles from home. Our bedding was wet; we had no hay for the horses, so we decided to push on. The faithful bronchos seemed to enter into the spirit of it all and they kept up their mettle to the last. We began the last long hill; it rained harder and harder; it grew dark; we had no lantern, so we made a 'shad-a-gee' lantern of an old tin can and a tallow candle. We came to a place where even in a good light it is difficult to find the road, so with the pastor holding the lantern, his wife driving, and the bronchos leading on by native intuition, we found every turn safely, had no mishaps and reached home at nine, tired and wet."

MR. WALKER has just recently passed into the automobile stage of his missionary career, a car having been donated by an Eastern friend to the Home Missionary Society for this field. A fortunate thing indeed, for there are at least four places where he expects to start services this coming season.

And is this all? There is a generation of young people rapidly coming on into manhood and womanhood in this strange parish who will never get schooling beyond the eighth grade unless the school is brought to them. Missionary Walker expects some day to have a Christian academy located there. "This is a young empire in the making and the foundations must be laid to meet the needs of the future," he declares.

Behold the prophet's vision: A Christian academy in the heart of this wilderness. And yet, why not? If we don't leave God out of the account.

A neighborhood is known by the post office it keeps. Note this indication of the crowded condition of Paradox.

Just after service at the Third Park Church. How many of this group will see that coming "Christian Academy"?

A Week in the World's News

Senate Passes Water Power Bill. On March 8 the Shields Bill to provide for the development of water power in navigable waters by private capital, passed the Senate by a vote of 46 to 22. Senator Walsh of Montana, who voted for the bill, said he considered it bad legislation, but firmly believed it would be amended when it reached the House. Advocates of conservation have opposed the bill bitterly because it provides for grants for periods of fifty years under licenses issued by the secretary of war, and for the purchase at the end of that time of the plants at the option of the government; and also because the bill provides that in any contest for a particular site, the applicant shall be favored who is able to guarantee the best construction. It is feared that this will throw the water power projects that may be developed under the bill into the hands of certain groups of capitalists who already control a large part of the water power of the country. Gifford Pinchot has declared that the bill is vicious and should be defeated.

Scandinavia Will Not Initiate Peace. On March 10 the Rev. Dr. Charles Aked of the Ford Permanent Peace Tribunal and two of his associates went from Stockholm to Copenhagen, where the Scandinavian premiers were in conference, in order to induce these statesmen to propose mediation between the belligerents. The premiers heard Dr. Aked courteously but decided that the present was not an opportune time to propose peace.

Will Not Pay Yuan's Debts. On January 23 circulars were received at the various legations in Peking from the civil governors in the territory now included in the present Chinese rebellion, in which the history of the republican movement was outlined, and President Yuan Shi Kai was declared to have plotted to overthrow the republic in opposition to progressive sentiment in the country, contrary to his oath of office. The manifesto declared that treaties entered into between the republican government and the different nations before the question of the imperial form of government was raised will be continued in force; that the military and civil governors will be entirely responsible for the protection of the lives and property of foreigners residing within the territory they control; that the republic will not recognize any treaties, agreements or loans entered into between Yuan Shi Kai or his government and other nations after the question of imperial form of government arose, and that opposition will be offered to any attempt by other nations or peoples to assist Yuan's government. On February 6 the revolutionary forces were reported to have been defeated in Szechuan Province with a loss of more than 200 men and many machine guns. American missionaries near the Mongolian border, who were thought missing, were reported to be safe.

A Million Tons for Russia. Early in March it was asserted that there were at sea, or in ports waiting to discharge cargoes, more than 300 steamships carrying over 1,000,000 tons of material and munitions for the Russian army. One hundred of these ships are in the ice-free harbor of Kola on the Arctic Ocean waiting for the opening of the port of Archangel on the White Sea or for the completion of the railway being built from Kola to connect with the lines from Archangel to Petrograd. The bulk of this material, aside from these hundred ships, is being handled or will be handled through the ports of Vladivostock, Dalny and Port Arthur, and will reach its destination over the Siberian Railroad, which is being double-tracked. Railway construction east from Kola is proving difficult because of the snow-covered land and frozen swamps.

Curious crowds gathered to see a German aeroplane which the French brought down in a street of Salonica

Turkish artillery crossing the Tigris from Bagdad on a boat bridge

Railway Men Demand Eight-Hour Day. Announcement was made on March 8 of the result of the referendum vote taken by the employees of the railroads of the country on the question of demanding an eight-hour day. More than 80 per cent. of the 400,000 men employed on 528 railway lines voted for the demands. The present wage agreement expires March 31. The men asked for an eight-hour day and time and a half for overtime, which railroad officials claim means an increase in wages of nearly $100,000,000 a year. When the vote is finally tabulated, the demands will be presented to the officers of the railways and thirty days will be given for a reply. If the reply is unfavorable, another referendum will be taken upon the question of a strike.

To Amend Rural Credit Bill. Stating that he will amend the "landschaft" bill which the Christian Herald recently printed in full, Senator Morris Sheppard explains: "I was in error in stating that the members of a landschaft are responsible jointly and severally for its debts. The liability is a collective, proportionate one—such a liability as attaches to the land of an ordinary school district or drainage district in the United States. The bondholder has no right to sue an individual member of a landschaft, but has merely the right to exercise the power of assessment which the landschaft possesses proportionately against all members. The collective liability feature of the landschaft is not at all new or untried in this country. I act, it is not as rigorous as the liability the landowners in the school distri of some of the states, where an indi lual landowner may be sued by a bond lder and his entire property taken. The landschaft is a less rigorous insti tion than the school district in anothe ay, in that a certain proportion of the ters in a school district may compel the land to be held responsible for ool bonds; whereas in a landschaft embership is entirely voluntary. Th ore I study the landschaft the more become convinced of its simplicit and workability."

No German-American War. n a recent interview reported in the ress on March 14, Herr von Jagow, G nan foreign secretary, said: "I neve ave thought it possible that Am ans would believe anything so absurd hat Germany after this war would atta the United States." Herr von Jago said that wars were not made out of ra but that they were the outcome of t settled policy of the nations engage He said that Germany had never tak any step that could lead any sensible son to believe that she meant to tou the sovereignty of any American stat and that he had not the slightest rea to believe that Germany would chan her American policy. As an evide of Germany's wish to remain on fr dly terms with America, he cited the odification of the submarine w fare through concessions to America hat cost Germany a real price in m ary effectiveness. He cited the fact th the American press had been host to Germany even before the Lus nia affair, and that this fact and othe acts in the relations of the two countri had changed the warm feeling for A rica which had previously been fou in Germany. But he ascribed the t of possible war between the countr to "restaurant politicians." He sa "I have said it before, and I rep it gladly, that the German gover ent disavowed any responsibility o any plots in America having to do wi fomenting strikes, destroying prope or stirring up trouble in Mexico. I our own citizens have engaged in su enterprises, it has not been at o instigation."

Coal Miners Win Advanc It was reported on March 7 th the bituminous coal operators and ers had reached an agreement pro ing for payment on the mine-run s em in western Pennsylvania and in In na, and for increases in pay in various lds, the total aggregating $8,500,00 annually.

Colorado Coal Strike Comm ion Reports. On March 8 Presiden Vilson sent to Congress the report the commission which he appointed investigate the Colorado coal strike. The report states that there is doubtle discrimination against some individu in the matter of employment, althou the operators are employing union an non-union men without regard to the ke. The commission finds that the 4 indictments returned as the result the disorders incident to the strike ha left a festering sore on public opinion. The commission calls attention to the act that all of the indictments were ret ed against former employees of the ompany, although "some of the citiz of the state believe that many illega cts were committed on the part of the rators, and justice which finds all t indictments on one side does not se to them even-handed." The comm ion expresses no opinion as to the co ctness of this belief, although it state at in some cases the indicted men ar suffering great injustice in that the are either confined in jails or, if out on ind, are refused employment because c he

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $1.50 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to the Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

in tments and are prevented from le ing Colorado by their bonds. The co mission finds that the mining condi ns are in many respects as nearly id as it is possible to make them, but po ts out that a serious drawback to th prosperity of the coal industry in Co rado is the shortage of industries in he state to consume the smaller siz of coal and slack.

arden Osborne Not Guilty. As a rt of what has been charged to be a litical conspiracy, Warden Thomas M t Osborne was placed on trial on a ch ge of perjury, one of three charges on which he had been indicted. On M ch 15 after the prosecution had re d its case, the presiding judge dire d the jury to bring in a verdict of no guilty. The attorneys for Mr. O orne had called the attention of the co t to provisions of the law which ma e illegal the investigation upon wh h the perjury charge was based, bu the order of the court was based no upon the technicalities of the law, bu upon the complete failure of the pr ecution's case to support the charge. It expected that the other charges will pr e equally unfounded in fact and th the whole enterprise by which Mr. Os rne was to be disgraced and disqu ified will fall of its own weight. Th victory of Warden Osborne over his tra cers is more than a personal victo . It carries with it the promise of a ne era in the treatment of prisoners in the penal institutions of this country. The days of political exploitation and of prison ring profits are fast passing.

Rim Manufacturers Enjoined. An injunction was served March 10 on the Standard Welding Company of Cleveland, enjoining the company from continuing to manufacture or ship "demountable" rims for automobile wheels. The rims were held to infringe upon the Perlman patents. It is said that the upholding of these patents creates the most serious situation which the automobile industry has ever faced, since the rim makers claim that Mr. Perlman is demanding a prohibitive royalty. The Perlman patents were not applied to "clincher" or quick detachable nor to some types of "demountable" rims, but they do apply to the type of "demountable" rims in use by a big majority of the automobile trade.

Peru's Finances Improving. On February 19 Peru announced that it had decided to withdraw its diplomatic representatives in the United States and in Brazil, all the other legations maintained by Peru having already been discontinued. This move is taken as part of a general policy of retrenchment made necessary by the finances of Peru, which have suffered seriously as a result of the war in Europe. It was announced on February 11 that, beginning February 14, the Lima post office would pay all money orders, whether domestic or international, drawn in 1915. Postal money orders have not been paid since the middle of the summer of 1915. Peru's national expenditures in the last fiscal year were less than the national income, but the interest on her national debt and other fixed charges exceed half a million dollars. Peru is, however, slowly recovering from the financial crisis.

Georgia Threatens Reform. The state of Georgia is reported to have at last become aroused over the disregard for law which has been manifested within its borders within the last few years. Of the seventy-four lynchings in the United States in 1915, one-third occurred in Georgia. The people of the state were somewhat disquieted by this announcement, but the lynching of more than eight negroes by Georgia mobs in January crystallized the public opinion of the state into a demand for the curbing of the lawless element. The press and pulpit have now taken up a crusade for law-enforcement and the ridding of the state of the lynch habit. Governor Harris is seeking a reelection upon a platform of law-enforcement. Georgia's unwelcome preeminence in mob violence is perhaps only a corollary of the failure to enforce the prohibition statute in many parts of the state. While the state is technically "dry," many parts have been considerably saturated, and have even boasted of their freedom from the restrictions of the law. The latest legislature strengthened the dry laws, and after May 1 the sale of intoxicants in Georgia will be a much more difficult undertaking.

Army Transport for Commerce and Relief. The army transport Buford was reported on March 8 as loading at New York for Manila. It was said at the War Department that because of the great shortage in freight carriers on the Pacific the Buford might be placed on the regular transport route between Manila and San Francisco. On the same day Ambassador Morgenthau was reported to be arranging with the Navy Department for the use of a navy collier to carry a cargo of food of about 900 tons to the famishing people of Palestine.

Power and Fertilizer in Shale. A bulletin of the United States Geological Survey, recently issued, calls attention to shale deposits in Colorado, Utah and Wyoming from which may be distilled commercial kerosene, gasoline and a large amount of paraffine, as well as good illuminating gas, the shale containing all the elements of crude oil. In addition, the process of distillation produces ammonia, which may be used in the manufacture of commercial fertilizer or other nitrogen compounds. Similar shale is being worked in Scotland, and if the price of gasoline should go to still higher levels, it will be commercially profitable to work these shale beds.

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

European journalist of many years' standing; military critic; staff writer of the Paris Daily Mail and Le Temps; contributor to l'Indêpendance Belge

PERSISTENT rumors reach us that Enver Pasha, the Turkish minister of war and one of the two leaders of the young Turks, ha been assassinated. It is officially an unced that a new minister of war ha been appointed, but this may be, an probably is, because Enver Pasha ha gone to Asia Minor to assume co nand of the Turkish troops there fig ing against the Russians.

ring the week Admiral Von Tirpit , the head of the German navy, res ned his post. This admiral was the originator of the German subma ne campaign and its chief supporter.

he married men in England and Sc and who attested under Lord D y's recruiting scheme on the understa ing that the single men should be ta n first, and whom it was intended to ll to the colors for the end of this mo h, not nearly all the single men ha ng been mobilized, agitated succe ully to postpone the call, and as a res t the recruiting situtation is in a ra r muddled condition for the time be g.

he Russian campaign in Europe was un arked by any particularly interest g or important incidents the past we , local artillery activity of a minor de e and an occasional skirmish at iso ed points on this long line were all th occurred.

ne serious naval mishap occurred in e waters surrounding Europe during the week. The French torpedo bo destroyer, Renaudin was sunk by a s marine in the Adriatic, with a loss of officers and men out of a compleme of 83. On March 19, German air aiders over Kent, England, killed 9 rsons and injured more than 30 oth s. One of the four German sea pla s was brought down by a British air an.

e British have cleared the western fro ier of Egypt of their foes and have oc pied the town of Solturn, which th were forced to evacuate last Nov ber, the Senussi retiring southward int the desert.

Africa, too, the British attack on Ge an East Africa under the comma of General Smuts, a Boer, is ma ng progress. During the week the Germans were forced out of Muchi an Arusha further south and at the en of the week were said to be on the poi of capture. The bulk of the British orce in this campaign is composed of South African volunteers, men peculiarly suited to the work in hand.

The fighting around Verdun has continued all the week, with occasional lulls followed invariably by very hard infantry fighting. In considering this battle we must remember that the word Verdun, as applied to it, does not mean a town only, but a fortified district approximately 15 miles wide from east to west and 30 miles long from north to south, thus comprising an area of about 450 square miles. The defenses of this district form an exhibit of the art of fortification from the middle ages to the very latest devices learned since the 17-inch guns first came into action, and trench war began. The town itself is moated, walled and battlemented.

Further afield along the crests of the immediate hills, the forts which were regarded as modern eighteen months ago have now been abandoned, transformed, or moved many miles from the town right into the midst of the confused hills of the Highlands of the Meuse, each one of which has become a fortress in itself and part of a vast and intricate system of fortifications.

Today, Verdun is undoubtedly the strongest and largest defensive position in the world, and to take it would be a long and arduous task; but in view of its strategic importance its capture would be worth very great sacrifices to the Germans, as its capture would almost inevitably compel the evacuation of the whole French position in eastern France as well as the position along the Aisne to the west.

On the other hand, if this stronghold is not taken by the Germans, the French will be reasonably sure of preserving their present lines as bases for an offensive, which can be launched as soon as the British get up an army large enough, and of the requisite quality, to support the French in such an effort, which the French now are unable to carry through alone, as they are not rich in men.

Sunday the 13th of March was an extremely quiet day on all the Verdun front so far as infantry fighting goes. The afternoon before a German attack had captured from the French some trenches on the eastern front to the northwest of Eix, but on Sunday all infantry action ceased. But though the infantry was quiet the artillery was not—and this Sabbath day saw tremendous shelling by all the artillery of both sides on all three fronts, western, northern and eastern.

On Monday practically the same conditions prevailed, except that it became very noticeable that the heaviest of the German artillery attack was being made on that portion of the west front which extends from the west bank of the Meuse to Bethincourt, evidently as a preliminary to further infantry attacks between these points. The object the Germans have in view on this side of the river is probably to force their lines southward to within artillery range of the solitary line of railway running to the west on which Verdun most largely depends for supplies. It seems possible that if the Germans successfully accomplish this object of either capturing or destroying this railroad, the French will be obliged to evacuate Verdun.

On Wednesday, the Germans launched a tremendous infantry attack to the southward between the Meuse and Bethincourt, and succeeded in bending back the French line by driving a salient into it from the Cumiéres-Bethincourt line southwestwardly to the crest of the Le Mort Homme Hill, from a base in Corbeaux wood. This hill is a very important strategic point, particularly as an artillery position, overtopping as it does the neighboring ridges to the east and west, and by this superior height also commanding the country to the south. This ground was not won, however, until a most desperate French resistance had been overcome nor held until four very fierce French counter attacks had been repulsed. Even then the German position was not at all firmly established, as the French held the western, northern and southern slopes of the hill from near its crest downward. So that before the Germans can make full use of the newly won position, by bringing up artillery and installing it thereon, it is imperatively necessary for them to clear these slopes.

This same day there was hard fighting, much of it hand-to-hand, south of the villages of Vaux and Damloup, and to the east of Fort Vaux on the northern front, which was indecisive. The artillery was active on all the fronts the whole day.

Thursday, the struggle over the hill continued on the west front, with no apparent advantage to either side, continuing all through the night, both sides throwing in fresh troops constantly. On the northern and eastern fronts the artillery activity continued intense.

Friday saw no change on the west front. The French attacked the German positions again and again but gained no ground, though the casualties on both sides were very heavy. On the northern front the Germans launched an equally unsuccessful infantry attack on the French trenches directly south of the village of Vaux and the fort of the same name. After an all day struggle both sides found themselves in the positions they had occupied in the morning.

Saturday was quieter, though the combat still raged severely on Le Mort Homme Hill (Dead Man's Hill) on the west front, and the artillery thundered incessantly on all the fronts. There was no infantry fighting on either of the northern or eastern fronts.

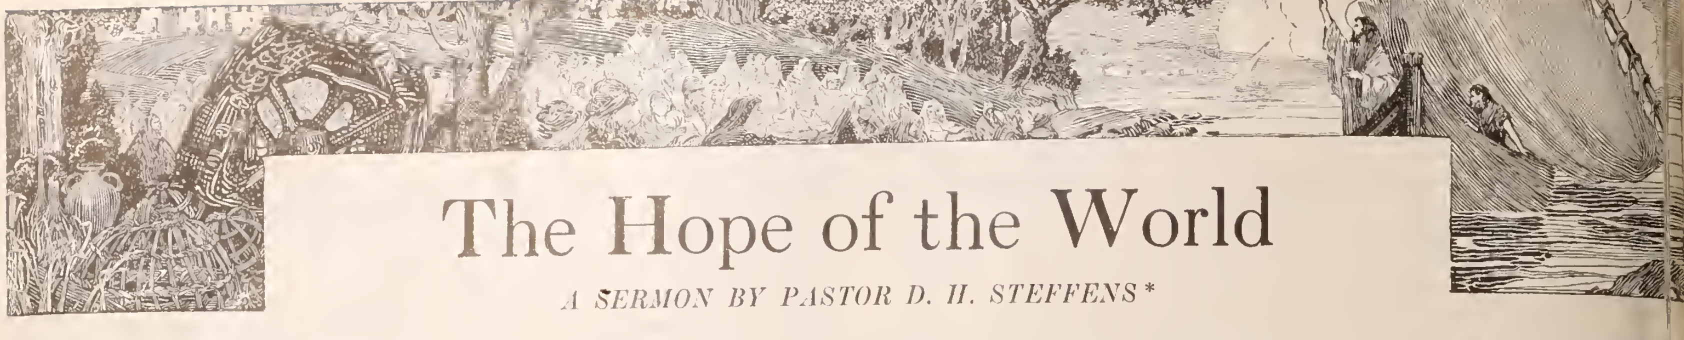
The Germans claim to have taken nearly 30,000 prisoners in the battle so far, besides a large quantity of artillery and other implements of war. There are the usual tales of extraordinary losses appearing in the daily press, but while the casualties are large, it is very doubtful whether they are abnormal, as both sides are fighting very cautiously and only exposing their men when absolutely necessary. This battle is not as yet half completed.

In the Caucasian campaign during the past week the Russians continued to force back the Turks, but as they did not give the name of a single place the whole week which could be found on any available map, it is very difficult to form any idea of what their progress actually amounted to. Certainly, however, they are very little nearer, if any, the objective of their left, Trebizond on the Black Sea. In Persia, the Russian troops still continued to advance to the southward and have now reached the foothills of the mountain wall which divides southern Persia from Mesopotamia.

In Mesopotamia, the British force on the Tigris below Kut el Amara, which was advancing to the relief of the British, apparently suffered a severer defeat at Felahie last week than was supposed. The Turks claim that the British left over 5000 men on the field, and further allege that about the middle of the week the entire British relief expedition began a general retreat.

In addition to the expenses of the actual belligerents, several neutral pow-

Continued on page 395



The Hope of the World

A SERMON BY PASTOR D. H. STEFFENS [*]

Text:—I John 5 : 19, 20. "The whole world lieth in wickedness. And we know that the Son of God is come."

WHAT a comment the present world conflict offers us on the first statement of our text, "The whole world lieth in wickedness." And what a wellspring of comfort and hope for God's sorely tried and faltering people is contained in the second statement, "We know that the Son of God is come." The coming of the Son of God into the flesh, with all that that implies, from his incarnation to his final coming for the completed redemption of his saints—this is the one hope of the world. It has no other, for "the whole world lieth in wickedness."

If this be true, then it is a frightful error to hold Christianity or the church responsible for this war. Yet that is exactly what men are doing. The inability or failure of the church to prevent it is held to be an overwhelming indictment of Christianity. Nor do they hesitate to say so. In the opening chapter of one of the most recent books on this subject, the author discusses "Christian Morality and the War." He says: "For Christian nations waging war with each other to talk of morality is mere hypocrisy. This war is proof, if proof were needed, of the bankruptcy of Christian morals and the weak hold the unselfish teaching of Jesus has on the modern world." I accept this last statement as true. That it proves the "bankruptcy of Christian morals" I refuse to admit. The author himself does not believe it, for in his very next sentence he says: "Science, with its 'struggle for existence,' and 'survival of the fittest,' science, which has reinforced paganism with its Nietzschean ideal, is the inspirer of the present struggle."

But science with its philosophy insists that the world is growing better. It conceives of humanity as a rising race, improving with each succeeding century, decade, and year; improving, mark you, through its own inherent powers and by its own efforts. As tangible evidences of such improvement it proudly points to its discoveries and inventions, its artistic achievements, its governmental reforms and social movements for the betterment of society. Did it need the present cataclysm to teach us that the hope of the world is not scientific achievement, philanthropy or social justice, not civilization or "Kultur," not mere intellectual or mechanical "efficiency"? Did it need the utilization of all of these things by the governments of the world for indescribable bloodshed and boundless destruction to teach us that the world, if left to itself, is without hope, that we are a fallen race, like lost sheep, utterly gone astray from the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls? Surely not, if we believe the Word of God, which tells us that "the whole world lieth in wickedness," or (and this is John's meaning) "in the wicked one."

IN the next verse he speaks of the Son of God, even Jesus Christ, as "him that is true," opposing him to the wicked one, the "father of lies," who is "the prince of this world," "the god of this world," the "spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience," the "ruler of the darkness of this world." The whole world is not only touched and affected by him, but it lies wholly and completely in his power. It is instinct with his spirit and obedient to his will. The unholy passions which are the very impulses of the wicked one are the springs of the world's policy and action. "He was a murderer from the beginning and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own, for he is a liar and the father of it."

According to these words of our Lord, lying and murder are the especial works of the evil one. Then what of the great nations of the world today? What of their hollow, insincere, capricious friendships, their forced and deceitful contracts, their shallow, lying press reports, their puerile, ridiculous, ferocious quarrels? Do any of them know what they are fighting for? They have not yet been able to tell us unless we admit that "the natural result of commercial competition is political antagonism." In other words, ambition and greed have caused this war as they caused all other wars—ambition and greed, the lust for glory, wealth and power. Have any of them given a satisfying reason for the astounding doings of their censors and press bureaus? Have any of them justified their shameful disregard of the rights of people who have no part in their quarrel, their abominable efforts to force other weaker nations into the struggle and thus widen the already all too great area of misery and woe; their diplomatic trickeries and double dealings; their proud unwillingness to listen to any suggestions looking toward the restoration of peace; their uncompromising determination to crush and annihilate each other?

Is the world gone mad? Ah, here is the explanation: "The world lieth in the wicked one." Even where men by the blessed light of the Gospel of Christ have been brought into obedience to Him who is the Hope of the world; where the blessed truth of God has strengthened the bonds of society and sanctified every relation of life, even here we see sad proof that the wicked one is indeed the ruler of this world, and to a fearful extent controls and directs the thoughts and deeds of the sons of men. When it is therefore said that "science (which is but the world's knowledge and thought) is the inspirer of the present struggle," we can but acquiesce and say: Aye, verily! It was not "the unselfish teaching of Jesus," of "Him that is true." It was not "Christian morality." It was the selfish teaching and wicked morality of him who is the "father of lies" and "a murderer from the beginning."

WITH him, the whole world is under condemnation (I Cor. 11 : 32). It must inevitably perish. Nor is there any help in it. All these things of which it is so proud, its wisdom, its art, its culture; all of these things which it comprises in the talismanic word "civilization" are doomed. Strange that the world does not see this. The world has had many civilizations, some of them in more than one respect superior to ours. None of them has kept it from wickedness and from the reward of wickedness, which is decay and ruin. All of them were utterly impotent to give it perfect health and peace. But the world will not see. Blinded by the father of lies, the children of this world deem themselves happy in their wretchedness, and glory in their shame.

Is there then no hope for the world? Must it go from bad to worse—down, ever down to helpless, l peless ruin? Ah, says John, "we know that the S of God is come." This is the hope of the world. He is come into the kingdom of the wicked one. B his gracious incarnation, taking it upon him to d er man, not despising to be born of a virgin, he came to the flesh. Very man of very man, he was tempt in all points like as we are, yet without sin. He end ed the assaults of the wicked one, even unto ta ng the sharpness of death, the wages of sin. Thus id he by his death and resurrection destroy the v ks of the devil and deliver the world from his vil power.

We, says John, speaking of himself and his f ow believers, we know this: "We know that the S of God is come." We know how he came. We l ow this by faith in his Gospel, which declares that ' od so loved the world that he gave his only begotten on, that whosoever believeth on him should not p sh, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his on into the world to condemn the world; but tha he world through him might have life." Knowing is, we have by the blessed assurance of faith come to holy fellowship with him, being born anew fron he kingdom of the wicked one into the kingdom of od and his Christ. We have confessed our faith in im who is Jesus Christ, God's only Son our Lord, p lging him our fealty and our service, living for ete ty unto him in righteousness and holiness, in the p er of his Holy Spirit, and looking with joyful confi ce to the ultimate victory of his church over the w ld. For "he maketh wars to cease unto the ends o he earth; he breaketh the bow and cutteth the spe in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire." Kno ng this, we can have hope even in the midst of these esent calamities. They cannot endure. Christ " ust reign, till he hath put all enemies under his f t." "The kingdoms of this world" are to "becom he kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he all reign forever and ever." Then shall these h rs cease, for then the wicked one shall deceive th ations of the earth no more, but righteousness nd truth shall prevail throughout all eternity.

THIS is the hope of the world: "The Son of od is come," to come again in majesty and g y. As we know this, we realize the supreme dignity he indispensable importance and the magnificent sition of his church in this world. Through it od is working out his eternal purposes, uniting in im that is true all those spiritual forces which mak or the overthrow of evil and the final triumph of od. "For whatsoever is born of God overcometh he world, and this is the victory that overcometh he world, even our faith." Who, knowing this, can lk of "the bankruptcy of Christian morals," simpl ecause "the unselfish teaching of Jesus had so w a hold on this modern world" that it did not pre nt this war?

As we realize that the hope of the world is in C ist and his church, we are moved to a profound pit or this poor world which "lieth in the wicked e." Being in the world, yet not of the world, we all strive to separate ourselves from its method its spirit and its aims. We cannot go out of the w ld. Nor can we ever absolutely separate ourselves om its society, its literature, its politics, its comm e. But we shall not be satisfied merely to thin its thoughts and do its works in the spirit of the w ld. We shall not be satisfied merely to establish libr es, playgrounds, recreation centres and social s lements. I am not condemning or criticizing se things. I am not trying to belittle the great od they do. I am urging that the hope of the world i ot in them. It is in this: "We know that the Son of od is come." As we forget or overlook this truth w re working in the spirit of the world. As we reme er and make it the inspiration of our every act and d, we are glorifying God through Jesus Christ. And is is the end and purpose of all Christian life.

As we realize that the hope of the world is in C ist and his church, we shall more earnestly strive t mpart this blessed knowledge to the world. Kno ng him, we must make him known. Having tasted ppiness in him, we must desire to confer this ha piness upon others. Being faithful subjects o is kingdom, we must extend its borders. Seeing he world's misery, we must work and pray for it leliverance. Thus may God, who ever brings good ut of the wickedness of men, overcoming the wicked ne and his kingdom by the blood of the Lamb and he testimony of his saints, bring good out of this pre nt evil, to the glory of him that is true, even his Son, ho is the true God and eternal Life.

Do Thou for Me

By Annie J. Flint

DO thou for me, God—my God;
Helpless, I appeal to thee;
What is best I cannot tell,
What is right I cannot see.
Blind, I dread to stand or go,
And I fear to lose the way,
For I know not what to do
And I know not how to pray.
Hear my cry: "Do thou for me—
I can trust it all with thee."

FIGHT thou for me, God—my God;
How shall I my foes withstand?
I should only fail and yield;
Take the battle in thy hand.
Thou my Rock, my Strength, my Shield,—
Lo, I flee to thee for aid;
Weak—so weak—but be my strength,
Perfect through that weakness made.
Hear my cry: "Fight thou for me—
More than conqueror I shall be."

LIVE thou for me, God—my God;
Come thou and abide in me,
That my sinful self may die,
Daily crucified with thee.
Think my thoughts and speak my words,
Move my lips, my hands, my feet,
Till thou art unveiled in me
And thine image is complete.
Hear my cry: "Live thou for me—
Thus alone I live for thee."

---

[*] Martini Evangelical Lutheran Church, Baltimore, Md.

Daily Meditation

FOR EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR. LED BY

J. H. JOWETT, D.D., F. B. MEYER, D.D., REV. E. WHITTIER CASWELL AND CLAYTON SEDGWICK COOPER

The Capacity of Sympathy

SUNDAY, April 2. Phil. 2:4. "Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." Parochial vision is never true. If my eyes are confined within th ircle of my own things, I shall misread the values of e, and I shall become the victim of sore delusion. It in the petty self-circle that evil prejudices are bc, and cruel asperities, and these always constitute a iritual fog which destroys the accuracy of all ou judgments. And just here we come upon a very su le irony in the law of life. A man who steadily re ses to look sympathetically upon "the things of ot rs" can never really see his own. He may think th he does, but that is only one aspect of his delu n. We can only get our true vision by exercising ou sight in the welfare of our brother. That is to sa a vital part of our moral equipment is buried in ou neighbor's field. We refine and purify our lenses in nother man's affairs. Selfishness never gets be nd fragments; sympathy makes us whole. A selfish man sees nothing truly; he has not found his eyes.

ow the larger life is not gained in a day. We ca ot leap into a healthful and helpful regard for th things of others. True sympathy is a very delica and exquisite spiritual ministry. We may so ea y bruise where we intend to serve. We can be br que in our interest, and awkward and clumsy in ou attention. Nothing demands so tender, and therefo so firm and sure, a touch as the fingering of a soul, an if we are to do it helpfully we require powers of th rarest refinement. For instance, we need a wellsc oled and disciplined imagination. We need to be ble to pierce forced laughter and find behind it a ll of tears; to get at the back of seeming frivolity an find a weary, breaking heart.

nd then, too, we need disciplined emotions—hethy, tender, responsive. For we are to weep wi them that weep, and to rejoice with them that d ejoice, and no shallow and conventional sentim t will suffice. We are to be able to thrill to the sh awaking mood of the soul which is just falling in ve with Christ; and we are to feel the gathering ch of a love that is growing old and cold in the ye s. Where can we get these needed powers with wh h to look upon the things of others? We can ge hem in reverent and purposeful communion with th Lord. We can feed and nourish our sympathies on "the compassions of Christ." We can become pa akers of his nature, sharing his spirit, and therefo fitted to share his sight and his ministry. "Ask, an it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; kn k, and the door shall be opened unto you."

J. H. J.

The Angel of the Presence

ONDAY, April 3. Isa. 63:9-19. "The angel of his presence saved them." Too often the term "a gel" has a cloudy and indeterminate meaning. W are apt to use it as a term to distinguish the natives of eaven; whereas it is a term of office, and means an nvoy, a messenger, one who is sent; and there is O who above all others deserves the name. Jesus is esignated here. Even before his incarnation, hi delights were with the sons of men, and he is re atedly described under the title of the Angel-Je vah. This is an extremely beautiful phrase, the is music in it—the Angel of God's Presence. H dwelt ever in the recognition of his Father's pr ence. When he came near he brought with him th sense of that presence. When he was present, th living presence of God was really communicated ar brought nigh.

hrough all their wanderings, he accompanied the hc s of Israel. He knew their sorrows and was to hed with the feeling of their hardships. They ne ded love, infinite love on his part, so unlovable and re llious were they; and they had it. See Hosea 11 1-4. They needed such pity as a woman shows to th complaining, querulous child at her breast; and he are them and carried them all the days of old in th e everlasting arms that were never weary of their bu len. But may we not claim the same untiring ca? "All the days" he has promised to be with us, ev to the end of the age. Live always in the ungr ved presence of the Angel of Presence. Let him sa you from sin and sorrow, from mistake and failur Rest in his love and pity! Let him redeem you an carry you! This is the privilege of the saints!

F. B. M.

Gentleness and Greatness

TUESDAY, April 4. Ps. 18:34, 35. "He teacheth my hands to war; . . . and thy gentleness hath made me great." The Hebrew poet places warfare and gentleness close together. He would suggest that struggle and tenderness should not be separated. The Bible is not an effeminate book; it burns with indignation against wrongdoing, the oppression of the weak: and it threads its pages with the thought that work and warfare with the principalities of evil without and within are the business of humanity. Yet it teaches that no activity should be so prolonged or so intense as to bury the heart. Only as the heart speaks out of the rush and tumult of our strife are we truly great.

O. Henry's last poem, "The Crucible," tells the story of this ideal of the great but gentle man:

Hard ye may be in the tumult,
Red to your battle hilts,
Blow give for blow in the foray,
Cunningly ride in the tilts;
But when the roaring is ended,
Tenderly, unbeguiled,
Turn to a woman a woman's
Heart, and a child's to a child.

Test of a man, if his worth be
In accord with the ultimate plan,
That he be not, to his marring,
Always and utterly man;
That he bring out of the tumult,
Fitter and undefiled,
To woman the heart of a woman,
To children the heart of a child.

Good when the bugles are ranting
It is to be Iron and fire;
Good to be oak in the foray,
Ice to a guilty desire.
But when the battle is over (Marvel and wonder the while),
Give to a woman a woman's Heart, and a child's to a child.

C. S. C.

Joseph the Type of Jesus

WEDNESDAY, April 5. Gen. 41:38-49 and John 5:19-24. The parallel between Joseph and our Lord is very close. Joseph was the best-beloved son, and our Lord was the Father's best beloved. "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." "Thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world." Joseph had prophetic glimpses of coming authority and power; and when God brought his Only-Begotten into the world he said, "Let all the angels worship him." Joseph was sent by Jacob to visit his brethren. "The Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world." Joseph was rejected by his brethren; Jesus by the Jews. Joseph was cast into the pit; Jesus lay in the grave. Joseph was sold for twenty pieces of silver to the Ishmaelites; Jesus was sold by the treachery of Judas for thirty pieces of silver, and then handed over to the Gentiles. Joseph in prison preached the gospel of deliverance to the two who were imprisoned with him, and one of them returned to his position in the palace; Jesus took the dying thief with him to paradise. Joseph, though a Hebrew by birth and rejected of his own brethren, was nevertheless raised to supreme power in a Gentile state, and saved myriads of them from death. His Egyptian name meant "Saviour of the World"—our Lord's title. Though disowned by the Jews, Jesus has been exalted and is now enthroned in the hearts of myriads of Gentiles, to whom he has brought salvation from death and spiritual bread for their hunger. After Joseph had been for some time ruling and blessing Egypt, his very brethren came to him for his forgiveness and help; and so in days not far away, we shall see the Jews returning to Jesus, and saying, as thousands are now doing in Eastern Russia, "Jesus is our Brother."

F. B. M.

Self-Centered Lives

THURSDAY, April 6. Haggai 1:6. "Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm." These words represented the attitude of Jehovah at a time when men were dwelling in their "ceiled houses," and the temple of God was lying in neglect. It is the word through the ages to those who gather simply for themselves and think not of their brothers; their very success turns to want, by reason of their narrow self-seeking; their wealth is "put into a bag with holes."

In these days of concentration upon one's individual tasks, when the world is saying, "You must be ambitious and become a specialist if you would succeed," we are inclined to forget that certain self-centered ambitions have always ended in failure and unhappiness. Fame and popularity and seeing one's name in the newspapers are not necessarily proofs of real inner victory; these may denote a vast selfish ambition that is making the possessor miserable.

What am I seeking? Why am I seeking it? Am I succeeding at the expense of inward peace? If so, my life needs to be lifted out of purely selfish striving into taking some part in building the temple of God on earth. Happiness comes along the way of service to others; it flees from the self-centered life. Real success is an abiding presence in the life of multitudes who are never heard of outside of a limited circle. Henry Drummond gave this recipe for self-centered people: "Go and do something for some one!"

C. S. C.

Shiloh, the Rest-Giver

FRIDAY, April 7. Gen. 49:1-10 and Matt. 11:25-30. Who is this Shiloh! The greatest Hebrew critics tell us that it means the Rest-Giver, or the Man of Rest. But who can this be except Christ? The Jews have always interpreted this prophecy as referring to the Messiah, and understood the scepter mentioned in this verse to be the sign of kingship. It was their boast that even in captivity they had rulers and governors of their own; but when a foreigner named Herod was placed on the throne, all Jewish patriots were in deep consternation. Men with wild and haggard looks, their garments rent, and ashes on their streaming hair, went through the streets crying, "Woe to us! woe to us! for the scepter is departed from Judah, and a lawgiver from between his feet!" How was this? Had the Most High revoked his ancient covenant? Thirty years later, when Judah, yet a distinct tribe, with officers of its own, had not yet vanished, a few poor shepherds heard the solemn jubilee of heaven celebrating the birth of our Lord.

Before the entire break-up of the Jewish system, the Shiloh came. While they were expecting him at the front door, he stole in at the back. When they were expecting him with outward show, he came softly and quietly as springtime or daybreak. He had rest in himself. What else could have kept him so calm amid the tumult at Nazareth, the raging storm on the lake, and the mob in Gethsemane? And he gave rest—rest from weary years of pain; rest from tears and heartache; rest from sin. Moreover, as he has spoken through the centuries, his still small voice has been heard above the fevered throb of human life, saying "Come unto me." . . The Shiloh rest is not in heaven, in circumstances, or in action, but by faith in Christ.

F. B. M.

There Will You Dwell Forever

SATURDAY, April 8. Matt. 12:12. "How much better is a man than a sheep!" Man in his body is a more splendid animal; in his mind, he is unspeakably superior. In his wealth, he may have millions to the nothing of a sheep. In man's moral nature, he is infinitely grander, as the heavens are higher than the earth. Man being in the image of God, makes the difference one of kind rather than of degree. Man is a living soul, furnished with conscience, reason, will, affections and genius to think and do, like the Father God who brought him into being. Man is God's child; a sheep is the Creator's creature.

Our Lord assuming human form glorifies manhood above every other earthly object. Man being great in himself is not enhanced by extraneous equipage, such as wealth, honors, powers, social distinctions or great learning. Christ had none of these; he came in poverty, that he might show the real value of manhood. He came to separate man from the animal—the prodigal from the swine; to show him his higher immortal nature, to restore him to the likeness of his God. Man does not die as the beast dieth, for his soul enters a new and eternal environment.

E. W. C.

Our Editorial Forum

PRESIDENT
OTTO KOENIG

MANAGING EDITOR
GEO. H. SANDISON

SECRETARY
THEODORE WATERS

Across the Border

OUR military enterprise in Mexico, undertaken as a punitive expedition, is now under way. Carranza's troops are cooperating with our own in the hunt for Villa and his bandit followers. If the Carranzistas keep faith, our task may be accomplished quickly. Our government has emphatically disclaimed any purpose of intervention, yet it is intervention, although, being mutual intervention by agreement of both republics, and according equal privileges to each, it does not necessarily lead to war.

Villa's murderous bandit raids, like the crime of the Serbian outlaws who struck the blow that plunged Europe into strife, were committed with no other purpose than to involve the two republics in a conflict. To force American intervention in Mexico, he planned and carried out the massacres of peaceful American noncombatants. But the wise diplomacy of the two governments in adopting mutual intervention, and in uniting their forces to hunt down the outlaws, Villa did not foresee. The better element of the Mexican people is as desirous to put an end to his career of treason and assassination as we are resolved to punish him for his wanton murders of our citizens.

Our task in Mexico is in the hands of tried and capable leaders. Though not of our seeking, it is a duty from which we shall not shrink. And when it is over, we may reasonably hope for the restoration of law and order in Mexico, with satisfactory protection for our citizens, and better relations between the two republics than have prevailed in the past.

The Jew and World Citizenship

WHEN peace returns to the world, one of the foremost questions to be settled will be the rights of the Jews. A National Union for Jewish Rights has been formed in London, with the object of securing for the race equal citizen privileges in all lands. It is not the purpose nor even the hope of the movement to realize the Zionist idea of a return to Palestine, but to induce the various governments to place the Jew on an equality with other races and nationalities in all the countries. Leaders in the approaching Jewish Congress in the United States are taking the same broad ground, and a declaration to that effect will probably be adopted when the Congress meets. Special emphasis will be put on the need of better treatment of the race, particularly in Russia and Rumania, where it has been subjected to the grossest indignities. Segregation and expatriation are not even thought of. In the opinion of the leaders, the time is at hand when the Jew may hope for a great change in social, economic and political conditions, and when expulsions and pogroms will be things of the past. The catalogue of the crimes of civilization against the Jew is a long and black one, and especially those of Russia, the greatest foe of freedom and progress in modern times. We trust that the day may soon come when the children of Israel will no longer be an oppressed and despised race, but will be accorded the justice and recognition which have too long been denied them. Nor should it be forgotten that there is a blight resting on every nation which has oppressed the Jews, and a blessing promised to all who deal with them in the generous spirit of human brotherhood. Civilization is passing through a change which, let us hope, will go far toward effacing the old narrowness, the selfishness and the racial and religious antagonisms of the past. In the coming social regeneration, the Jew will stand on an equality with his fellow men.

The Shakespeare Anniversary

THE thought of the world has been going back to Shakespeare, dead now three hundred years. He has two claims to immortality: one as master—more than master, one of the creators—of English style; the other as master analyst of the human heart.

We might have thought up to two years ago that human nature had been somewhat chastened and refined since he lived, and we still like to hold this true. But with the sight of Europe's seas of blood before us and the knowledge of fraud and trickery, cruelty and dishonor on every hand, it is sometimes difficult to believe we have advanced far. The great poet's plays ranged over a period of fifteen hundred years, and his own time saw almost as much hate and lust and woe in the world as in the century of Antony and Cleopatra. The three hundred years since his day make, after all, but a short span. We had boasted of its glories, largely made possible by the Reformation which was beginning to recreate the world while Shakespeare lived; but now these glories are almost blotted out in blood.

The wonder of Shakespeare is that, living in an age of even greater horror than this, he yet held, high and true and sound, the principles of honor, virtue and kindness. Dr. Dan B. Brummitt, writing some years ago for the Methodist Quarterly, analyzed Shakespeare's doctrine of sin and showed that it comes near tallying, precept by precept, with that of Scripture.

Macbeth remains the chamber of horrors of sneaking sin. Macbeth, quaking before Banquo's ghost, is the type of all guilty souls brought face to face with their sin. And the power of sin and the depth of its stain have nowhere been more truly measured than in Lady Macbeth's cry:

> Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood > Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather
> The multitudinous seas incarnadine.

True, sweet love in Romeo and Juliet; parents' love in King Lear; the love of friend for friend in The Merchant of Venice; love of courage and truth—these are among the messages of the bard of Avon.

Occasionally a bright gem of spiritual truth shows in his pictures of human life. Portia voices the Gospel message when she says:

> Though justice be thy plea, consider this—
> That, in the course of justice, none of us
> Should see salvation; we do pray for mercy.

Lorenzo catches a glimpse of heaven:

> Look how the floor of heaven
> Is thick inlaid with patines of bright gold:
> There's not the smallest orb that thou beholdest
> But in his motion like an angel sings,
> Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims.
> Such harmony is in immortal souls;

Though he complains,

> But whilst this muddy vesture of decay
> Doth grossly close us in, we can not hear it.

Most of Shakespeare's plays were tragedies—partly because that has always been the prevailing form of the dramatic art; partly because of the humor of this and other great minds that believed there was in life more of sorrow than gladness.

The artist is not apt to be a reformer. He shows life as it is. It remains for the prophet, the preacher, the reformer, the crusader, to try to recreate the world. The task of the Christian Church is so to renovate the life of mankind that when a new Shakespeare is born he will find a better, cleaner, gladder world to write about.

Verdun and Bethlehem

"AT one point there was a small gully in which the German dead were piled twenty-five feet high, the assailants trying again and again to advance over the bodies of their comrades."

> "The shrapnel from our seventy-five millimeter guns and the projectiles from our heavy artillery fell among them and you could see the great gaps, as if a mower had passed with a scythe. The high explosive shells which burst on contact fell, and limbs shot into the air. We were so close that pieces of torn flesh fell among us. Behind us the French artillery fired into the German masses, the German shells flying over our heads toward the Douaumont section. Then our machine guns, placed in batteries every five yards, began to play, and we saw the dead in groups upright where there was not room to fall."

These paragraphs are descriptions from eye witnesses of the scenes about Verdun.

Now notice this, from the columns of an American financial newspaper:

> Manufacturers see in the battle of Verdun additional orders for American-made ammunition. One estimate places the number of shells fired by both sides at 4,000,000. This is twice the number of shells shipped by the Bethlehem Steel Corporation last year. This year the Bethlehem will ship about 9,000,000 shells. . . . The head of one of the largest munition plants says large orders for shells will be placed in this country within the next six weeks. . . . Last week, after the tremendous shell fire upon Verdun, the cables became urgent for prompt deliveries. It is believed in financial circles that the attack on Verdun means a hastening of the repeat orders to American manufacturers.

Yet there are some who criticize and condemn earnest social reformers and experts for insisting that war and business are essentially one.

On Losing One's Head

THERE is a soothing and satisfactory influence in the charm of the essay, which is missing in our modern literature. One can imagine with what eagerness the great essayists of the past might have indulged their kindly wit, their good-natured satire and their quaint and felicitous forms of expression in dealing with such themes as are presented in the strenuous life of to-day. Never was there such abundance of material as now, that would have appealed to writers like Lowell, Emerson, and Holmes. It strikes us that Charles Lamb would have fairly chortled his delight as he sat down to discuss in his own quaint and droll fashion such a theme as "Losing One's Head." With what glee he would have indicated the preliminary symptoms, step by step following each other in a sort of megalocephalic cadence, to its culmination in more or less complete self-illusion and the utter disregard of logic or consistency. Dr. Eliot of Harvard seems to have had such an experience when, the other day, he declared that the time had come for us to plunge into war on the side of the Allies, although he knew the whole nation was straining every point to avoid such a course. Even President Wilson showed that he was not immune when he urged that we should have the "biggest navy in the world."

A startling case of "losing one's head" is that of Colonel Glenn, military chief of staff at Governor's Island, New York, who pictured the country in danger of a simultaneous invasion by sea, which would land upon our Pacific Coast 3,000,000 trained troops and 4,000,000 on the Atlantic. He said nothing of the obvious fact that, granting an average troopship's capacity to be 2,500 men, the problem he stated would call for a fleet of 1,200 transports to carry troops from Japan and a still bigger one of 1,600 transports for the 4,000,000 invaders from Europe, the whole forming an armada which the united naval powers of the world could not supply.

There are so many engaged in "saving the nation" that it not surprising to find, here and there, one ordinarily clever statesman losing his head and his bearings together. If we may judge by the conflict of views in the newspapers, not a few editors who have lost their latitude are now proceeding on instinctive lines, hammering a head occasionally just to keep up the war spirit, and on the general principle that any attitude is better than none. Happy the citizen who refuses to be locoed by the popular frenzy, and who keeps his mind open, and takes the optimistic view that the great overruling Power will surely unravel the tangle in due time and bring everything out all right in the end.

Why Blot Out the Bowery?

LOVERS of the old-time landmarks, not only in New York but in other states, are united in opposition to the proposed change in the name of that famous metropolitan thoroughfare, the Bowery. At one time, it is true, the Bowery was rendered deservedly notorious by the character of the resorts in which it abounded; but it has long ago lived down its evil reputation and cleaned up the dens that defaced it in the sixties and seventies. It has borne its present name for two and a half centuries, and, from the time when it was a garden walk that brings back fragrant memories of the Bouwerie of the days of Governor Peter Stuyvesant, it has been a section replete with social and historical interest. The whole nation would miss the Bowery, and to rename it "Central Broadway," as proposed, would be to wipe out one of our most picturesque landmarks and take away a good slice of the interest the metropolis possesses for the visiting multitudes from other states, who would not consider that they had seen life unless they had explored the Bowery. It has served as the center of innumerable romances. It has had its bright times and its dark days; its garish, dizzy pleasures and its ghastly tragedies. It has many times leaped to the sound of the war-drums, and just as often has it sung the songs of peace. Today it is little more than a quiet, law-abiding, cheap shopping section as safe for the pedestrian as any similar thoroughfare in America.

For a hundred years the Bowery has been the soul of the East side. Successive waves of Irish, German, Italian, Jewish and Scandinavian immigration have swept over it, and it has always been a main channel of our polyglot population. It is more distinctly cosmopolitan than any other American thoroughfare save Broadway, and the point has been very well made that, in recent years, it has become quite as respectable as the latter. By all means, let the Bowery retain its name for old times' sake.

The Bible and Newspaper

CONDUCTED BY

FERDINAND C. IGLEHART, D.D.

World's Greatest Oil Well

A MEXICAN petroleum company the other day opened a new oil well, which is flowing at the rate of five thousand barrels an hour. The oil is shooting a ten-inch stream five hi dred feet high, it was announced at the company's of es. Fifty million cubic feet of gas preceded the oil. A now flowing, it is considered the greatest oil w in the world. Coal oil is not a new discovery. T "holy fires" of Baku on the Caspian Se worshiped for centuries by those living nc, are but the blaze of the petroleum that is ill abundant there. The North American In ans found the native product, which was ca d Seneca oil. It is claimed that long befo them the Mound Builders, who worked the co er mines of Lake Superior, the lead m s of Kentucky, and the mica mines of N h Carolina, not only skimmed the oil fr the streams, but dug holes into which it ca e from the earth, and dipped it out for in strial purposes. It is only since the middle of e nineteenth century that the petroleum in stry has become a practical factor in pr ucing light, heat and power. This co try produces two-thirds of the world's ou ut of petroleum. They did not know an hing about coal oil in Bible times. Oil w then secured from animal and vegetable su tances. Olive oil was used for food and ot r purposes, and in the religious rites. It as perfumed with myrrh, sweet cinnamon, sw t calamus, and cassia, prepared according to his divine direction. "And thou shalt m it an oil of holy ointment, an ointment co pound after the art of the apothecary; it sh be a holy anointing oil." (Ex. 30 : 25.)

Week for Debt-Paying

VARIOUS kinds of days are observed in this country, such as "Raisin Day," " ple Day," and so forth. In some cities pe ds longer than a day are grouped, as " sperity Week," or "Baby Week." The lat t development of the kind is borrowed fr the Chinese. Those people have a custo of celebrating New Year's Day by looking up heir creditors and paying their debts. In nitation of that custom, there has been an ttempt in this country to institute a " ional pay-up week," which has been tried in me localities. The burgess of the town of W herding, Pa., designated as the time for pa ng up from February 21 to 26 inclusive. It a good thing to have a cleaning up financia . It ought to be oftener than once a ye It is a religious duty to pay one's debts. Th e is only one thing better, and that is to ma no debts; to pay cash for what you get. Th e is the temptation to buy more than is wa ed, and at a higher figure on credit than wh cash is paid. Credit was extended in bu ness in olden times. Christ makes thi reference to it: "There was a certain cre tor which had two debtors: the one owed five undred pence, and the other fifty." (Luke 7: .)

Solving the Excise Problem

THE New York American fostered the introduction into the New York State Le lature this year of three bills, one prohi ing the sale of any patent medicine containing ov ten per cent. of alcohol except by a physician's pre ription; another placing the responsibility for the ale, use and possession of habit-forming drugs up the physician, druggist, and Board of Health; the ther making it unlawful to manufacture, sell or po ss any beverage containing more than ten per cen of alcohol. The patent medicine and habit-for ng drug bills meet with the favor of the best pe e, but the bill forbidding whisky, brandy and such dri s, and allowing light wines and beer, though a step in e right direction, will not satisfy the church and ten erance people, who do not share the opinion that wa niversal fifty or a hundred years ago, that wines an eer are not only harmless but healthful, and that wh y only is injurious, but who demand in a territor so wet as the Empire State, first local option, or the ght of the people to have some say on the subject, an econd, the prohibition of the traffic by a popular ver t. The Hearst newspapers for many years by the cartoons and severe editorials against strong drink have done incalculable damage to the saloon interests of the country. In the solution of the liquor problem we have gotten past the point of discrimination in favor of wine and beer as against whisky, past the stage of regulation, to that of the total destruction of the traffic. Fifty-seven per cent. of the people of the nation have already recorded their votes for the extermination of the liquor business. The New York American wrote to a number of distinguished men and statesmen asking their endorsement of the bills. The answer of Moses Alexander, the Jewish governor of Idaho, which recently adopted prohibition, will meet a popular response throughout the country. It is as follows: "The necessity of a moral crusade against the habit of alcoholic beverages and narcotic drugs is not open for discussion; the moral part must be supplemented by legal enactment. The community owes it to itself for self-preservation, and the state owes it to itself for the purpose of stamping out an evil that is undermining the lives of many of its citizens. The great benefit of prohibition is that more groceries, clothes and shoes are bought and paid for, the children are better clad, and the wrinkled brow of many a mother is smoothed by new hopes and ambitions, and we can say that prohibition is worth the price no matter what it costs. We have tested and tried it and we know." Governor Alexander in his moral courage and contests resembles the Hebrew prophets of old He and his state share this view of the wisest men among the Jews: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise." (Prov. 20 : 1.)

Records of Indian Music

THE Bureau of American Ethnology has collected and recorded specimens of the music of various tribes of American Indians for the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. A study of this music is being made by Miss Frances Densmore, who has collected 1,000 songs on the phonograph. The songs relate to religion, love, war, social dances and daily life, healing of the sick, hunting and other occupations. A number of the songs secured from the Chippewas have to do with the belief in the Mide (Miday) or Grand Medicine which is their religion and teaches many practical doctrines; that long life is coincident with goodness, and that all evil inevitably reacts on the offender. The chief aim of the Mide is to secure health and long life for its adherents and music forms an essential part of every means to that end. Among other things, the members of the cult are taught that their membership does not exempt them from the consequences of their sins. Lying, stealing and the use of liquor are strictly forbidden. A number of songs known as dream songs, collected on the White Earth and Leech Lake reservations, are said to have come to the minds of the Indians when they were in dreams or trances. These songs have a strong mental influence upon the Indians, to whom the supernatural is very real. No songs except those believed to be of supernatural origin were used in treating the sick, either with herbs or by the use of jugglery. They were all believed to be essential to a cure. Indian music, except for the songs of daily life, is closely associated with the supernatural, and echoes that deep universal cry of the human soul for God of which Paul thus speaks in his matchless address on Mars Hill: "That they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us. For in him we live, and move, and have our being." (Acts 17 : 27, 28.)

Public Library's Success

THE report of the New York Public Library for the year 1915, just published, shows the largest patronage of any library in the world. Its daily average number of readers is double that of the British Museum of London, or the Bibliothèque Nationale of Paris. According to the report, 10,384,579 books were borrowed during the year, as compared with 9,516,482 in 1914, and 2,558,717 persons entered the central building at Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street. There are 1,309,427 books and pamphlets in the central building, the volumes in the circulation departments of the branch libraries bringing the total number of pieces in the whole library up to 2,410,879. The number of employees is 1,248. The library has forty-three branches, of which thirty-two are in Manhattan, seven in the Bronx, and four in Richmond. The good this library and similar institutions do to the people, especially to those unable to procure books, is inestimable. "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting, get understanding." (Prov. 4 : 7.)

Secret of Long Life

MRS. LOMIS BRAYTON SARVIN of Madison, Wis., nearly one hundred years old, gives the following rules for a long life: "Keep good hours, and do not forget your spiritual life in the pursuit of worldly things. Be regular in all your habits, and above all be true to your conscience." These are wise words, and seem like a message from the other world through the aged saint who has practiced what she has preached and is near her coronation. The spirit of her message is: "The things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal." (II Cor. 4 : 18.)

Disturbance at a Cremation

THE Hindus in the locality of Pomona, Calif., were up in arms lately because an undertaker refused to let them have the nails from the little fingers and the second toes, four teeth from the mouth, and a small disk of skull from the body of Ramah Singh, a Hindu who was murdered at Claremont some time ago. The Hindus ordered the body cremated, but wanted those trophies to treasure in accordance with some mystic custom of their race. When the undertaker refused to grant the request, they went to the crematory in Los Angeles and created a scene. Their protests were unheeded, however. Amid the errors, the gross superstitions and violent demonstrations of those Hindus, this old Bible question is again suggested as a pertinent query concerning such a strange demonstration: "Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing?" (Ps. 2 : 1.)

New Weather Prophet

MR. W. F. CAROTHERS, a private student of meteorology, with an observatory of his own at Houston, Texas, claims to have discovered the secret of the weather, and to be able to foretell it for one to two weeks. He has demonstrated to the satisfaction of Professor Willis L. Moore that the cause of weather variations is pulsations in solar intensity, and that these pulsations can be accurately measured and the weather forecast for many days. If Mr. Carothers's claim be correct he will have conferred on civilization one of the most valuable benefits it has received in a hundred years. What a loss to crops, shipping and land transportation would be saved if the weather man could tell whether it would be cold or warm, wet or dry one or two or three weeks ahead! What an element of safety would be introduced into property and life! There are so many miracles of invention nowadays, that we are inclined to hope that the claim of Mr. Carothers and Professor Moore with reference to the new discovery may prove true. Christ makes this reference to the little knowledge of the weather possessed by the ancients: "When it is evening, ye say, It will be fair weather, for the sky is red. And in the morning, It will be foul weather today; for the sky is red and lowering." (Matt. 16 : 2, 3.)

A Hundred-Year Contract

CONTINUING FRANK G. CARPENTER'S ALASKA NARRATIVE

Copyright, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

"Our car is an open platform on wheels"

I HAVE just returned from a trip through what promises to be one of the most famous gold mines of the world. I have ridden through its miles of tunnels behind an electric engine, and have walked through the mighty caverns, called stopes, where they are blasting down the ore and dropping it into the cars for the mills. I have gone through the new crushing and reduction works, the latest of their kind, and have seen, as it were, the mechanical triumph of the twentieth century in saving the riches hidden in the bowels of the earth.

The greatest mines of today are those which deal with low-grade ores. This is so of the gold mines of the Rand, in South Africa. It is so of the largest copper mines of the Rockies and of the Treadwell mines, which lie within a rifle shot of where I am writing. I have told you how the Treadwell properties have already produced $60,000,000 of pure gold. They have repaid the purchase price of Alaska many times over. All of that gold came from ore that ran from two to three dollars a ton. The mine I visited today has a mighty ore body whose gold contents average about $1.50 per ton, and still the machinery for mining and milling is such that fully half of that amount is clear profit. The actual cost of mining the gold is now about 60 cents a ton, and it may be cut to 50 cents or even lower than that.

Have you any idea of what gold ore carrying only $1.50 a ton means? Gold is worth about $20 an ounce, and at that rate $1.50 worth of gold would equal only about one-thirteenth of an ounce. Divide a twenty-dollar gold piece into thirteen parts and each part will not be as big as a pea. Nevertheless, that pea of gold is all that is to be found in one whole ton of this ore.

A ton of ore is a cartload for two horses. Now grind your pea into the finest of powder and put one of the grains of that powder in every pebble or broken piece of a cartload of gravel and you have some idea of how the gold is scattered through the rock and how difficult it is to get it all out.

Or suppose the gold to be salt, and the ore to be water. I went to a drug store today and weighed out enough salt to just equal the weight of the gold in a ton of this ore. The salt did not fill the smallest teaspoon. But a ton of water would fill a 250-gallon hogshead. Now if you should drop your spoonful of salt into the hogshead and churn up the water until the salt is thoroughly mixed through it all, you would have just the proportion of the gold and rock in the mine of which I am writing. Think of getting the pea made of gold powder out of the cartload of rock in such a way that half of it will more than pay all the costs, and you have the problem which the operators of this mine have successfully solved.

It is one of the biggest businesses of the world of today. It takes millions to work the mine and it will probably pay millions in profits. The mine I refer to is the Alaska Gastineau property. It is only one of several low-grade propositions along the Gastineau Channel which will keep thousands of miners and millions of dollars of machinery at work here for a century to come.

The mountain of low-grade ore over the Alaska Gastineau mine rises almost precipitously from the Gastineau Channel. Its ore body is said to cover something like 2,000 acres. It is more than two miles in length and the miners have already made twenty miles of tunnels and cross-cuts in their development works. According to the report of the managing director, D. C. Jackling, to the stockholders, the block of ore has something like 21,000,000 tons above a certain level and at least 100,000,000 tons above the level of the sea. The Treadwell group on the opposite side of the channel is now extending mines under the sea, so that there is really no telling how large the Gastineau ore body is.

Nearly all the work of the mines and the mills is done by electricity, and it is the dropping of the water on the turbines ten miles away that gives the force that is now dragging this gold from the earth, and changing it into the great yellow bricks which go to the mint.

BUT come with me and take a look at this mountain of gold, whose treasures electricity and its helpers, the sooty-faced miners, are bringing forth to the light of the sun. We take the motor car stage at Juneau and fly over the board streets to the outskirts of the city. We wind around under the mountains in full sight of the Treadwell mines across the channel over the way, and at the end of three miles come to Thane, where are the offices and homes of those who manage the great milling plants and reduction works of the property. We can see the mills 700 feet above us on the sides of the mountain. They seem to grow out of the rocks, extending for a long distance down the slopes, so that gravity carries the ore through one process after another.

The offices are right on the sea. The mines themselves are three miles back in the mountains. They begin about 2,500 feet above where we are now, and we are hauled up by a cable to visit them. Our car is an open platform on wheels, with a wall at the lower end to keep us from falling or sliding, as the car climbs the track. The road has a 33 per cent. grade, and the way is almost straight up the side of a cliff covered with forests.

At the end of the cable we meet what might be called the private car of the managers. It is a steel box upon wheels with open doors at the sides and seats under cover. It is equipped with a storage battery, and is so small that it can go anywhere throughout the mine. In it we ride around the side of the mountain. We fly through a canyon and enter a tunnel, which is two miles in length and 4,000 feet below the snow-clad peaks overhead. It is through this tunnel that the ore goes in trains to the mills.

The tunnel is so large that a Pullman train could go through it without scratching the paint. It is lighted by incandescent lamps which hang down from above. It has a double track so that continuous trains of cars can move back and forth at the same time. All of the hauling is done by electricity. In this main tunnel the cars work upon trolleys. The other tunnels are smaller and there the ore cars are hauled by storage battery engines, in order to keep the miners from touching the live wires.

WE get off and stand at one side, as an ore train comes thundering along. It is drawn by a powerful electric engine. The train consists of twenty-eight steel cars, each of which holds ten tons of ore. It carries 280 tons of gold-bearing rock, and there is at least $500 worth of gold in its cars.

All of the loading is done by gravity. The ore is blasted out in the great stopes, or caverns, which have been made along the eight levels above us. The stopes are connected with the tunnels of the various levels, and the ore is brought in steel cars from them to the chutes, whence it falls into the great ore bins above the main tunnel where we are now.

The loading arrangements are such that the mere pulling of a lever will drop a river of ore into a car. Four cars are loaded at once, and within two minutes by my watch I saw forty tons put on the train and within fifteen or twenty minutes a whole train was loaded. After this the cars carry the ore straight to the mills. There it is automatically dumped and the machinery is such that it is hardly touched by man's hands until the gold has been won.

By and by we leave our electric engine and ride on one of the shaft elevators to the level above. Our elevator boy is a giant over six feet in height, and he wears a long oilskin coat which makes him look taller. As we pass from level to level we can see the cars moving by; and finally at one thousand feet above where we started we step out and tramp through a tunnel to visit a stope where the miners are working.

Here the darkness is almost Egyptian and the path is as rough as that of the Hill of Difficulty which so wearied poor Christian to climb. We had acetylene lamps to pick our way over the beds of ore underfoot and we crawled up and down over thousands of tons of gold bearing rock before we stood under the roof of a low chamber covering more than an acre.

We could now see the miners at work. Each had his own light, which shone dim in the distance. They were operating drills moved by compressed air and were putting in the dynamite for blasting the ore. At certain hours the blasts are shot off, and the great masses of rock are thus taken out and broken for the cars and the mills.

Mills of the Gastineau Mines, said to be the largest in the world

AFTER leaving the mines I went to the mills. They are said to be the largest and most modern of any gold-crushing plant in the world. Within the past year the company has spent five million dollars upon them and nothing has been spared to make machinery do every possible part of the work. Everything is moved by electricity. Electric cranes, some of which will lift thirty tons, carry great loads from place to place. The same force raises the ore and there are automatic skips of five tons each that load and empty themselves, moving on day and night all the year through.

The ore is dumped by electricity upon screens the wires of which are as thick as your thumb, and it passes thence into immense crushers, which take the largest pieces and break them into lumps about two inches thick.

From these screens the ore goes into storage bins of 10,000 tons each, and from them it is carried by skips and wide belt conveyors through sets of steel rollers that work on the principle of a clothes-wringer. The rolls are so graduated that they crush the ore finer and finer as it goes through one set after another, until the great rocks are reduced to a powder as fine as the flour of which cream crackers are made. The flour, which contains the rock and gold, is then passed over shaking tables flooded with water in such a way that gravity separates the minerals from the rocks, the heaviest particles falling to the lower side of the table. You can then see the various minerals, each having its own streak of color. Here is the lead with its mixture of gold and silver; here at the bottom the pure gold, a streak of yellow grains and dust. Above the lead is the lighter black iron sand. After the gold and lead are separated they are passed over Wilfley tables covered with mercury. The mercury takes up the gold, and it is then put through the furnace and vaporized, to get the gold out.

Continued on page 397

Through Gates of Pearl

Augusta Albertson

CHAPTER XII

IT WAS several months after my dream journey before I had the courage to attempt to reduce my experience to writing. Doubtless it is one of the functions of memory to enable one to recall in calm moments what may have passed with insufficient notice at a time of crowded thoughts and feelings. Some parts of my vision appear now even more distinctly, as to their true significance, than when the hand of my angel guide rested upon my shoulder. Having told my story, I now desire to sum up the lessons I have learned which have any bearing upon my future attitude toward life, death—and what comes afterward.

FIRST of all, death has no power to terrify my mind, or to fill it with vague forebodings of the hour when heart and flesh shall fail. I think I know the secret of what happens to the human spirit the first five minutes after death. It is vastly comforting to know that, whatever happens, we shall "hold together," we shall still consist, persist; that life is a continuous line, bent, but not broken, by the dissolution of the body. What do I mean by "bent"? Certainly I do not mean that life is impaired in any sense by death, but rather that it is affected by transfer from one medium to another only as rays of light are affected—as our vision is affected when we look at a stick partly in the air and partly in the water: the stick seems broken, but it is not.

dear friend who had lost three children, each at about the same age, said, at the burial of the last, "I am a rich man and I have achieved what people call fame, but I would gladly give up all my goods and all my reputation if I might know positively that my children are somewhere, —that they still live." That friend himself has died within the last year. Now he knows. I recall another who on the morning of the day he died, conscious of the approach of death, whispered, "Tonight I shall know all."

I AM not so foolish as to believe that this confidence in the unbroken continuity of life can be attained only by those who have been permitted to see in some fashion the secrets of the world to come. We may be as sure of what we have not seen as if we had seen it. The bodily senses are very untrustworthy. With the wonderful sight of the soul, we who believe in Christ—that God hath raised Him from the dead—already see that > "death itself is slain,

> To be the victor nevermore again."

have already spoken of the impression I received concerning the reality of the heavenly life. It is not as the old Greeks imagined it to be an underground realm where ghostly shapes grope in darkness. The celestial body is as real as the terrestrial body, only infinitely more mobile, facile, and obedient to the wishes of the spirit that resides within it.

ertainly they who have entered into "larger life in God's own sight" are endowed with new bodily faculties. Perhaps this may tax the faith of some, but why should it? A score of years ago, it would have been regarded as fanciful if one had predicted that the time was coming when we could flash our messages of thought from continent to continent over seas and mountains, without the use of clumsy wires. That the redeemed from earth acquire new psychic powers is very clear. My guide again and again answered my unspoken questions, and read my mind as one reads a book.

I HAVE said I was not admitted to the Presence Hall of the Infinite. And yet, throughout all my journey, from gate to gate, from palace to pavilion, from realm to realm, I was conscious that I was not out of the presence of the Infinite. The sense of God's not-far-awayness was present everywhere. How can I describe it? I have had some rare moments on earth, as doubtless all others have who, through faith in Christ, have tasted "the good word of God and the powers of the world to come." There have been transfiguration peaks, mounts of vision upon which the veil that separates the finite from the Infinite has seemed to grow quite thin. But such experiences have been brief and seldom. There are times when, in prayer, the soul reaches unwonted heights. There are sacramental seasons when heaven bends low above the earth-bound pilgrim. A well-known American bishop speaks of a certain day during a long and critical illness he suffered as his "pearl of days." He was always reticent as to the vision he was granted, but he declared he had great comfort in the consciousness of the nearness of God. The New Testament phrase for such experiences is a curious one; our English translators render it by such a phrase as "sitting together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." The word "places" is supplied; there is no such word in the original. So it may as well read "in the heavenlies in Christ Jesus."

I MUST include, among my memories of Emmanuel's Land, perfect freedom from everything that taxes and vexes human life. I saw no sight and heard no sound to remind me of selfishness or sin. Think what it must be to inhabit a world in which there is "no more curse"! I saw populous cities, but no cemetery. I passed edifices erected for community use, but no jail, no hospital, no asylum for the defective, no orphans' home! I do not know the full significance of those words of John the Divine Dreamer, in which he speaks of a world in which there shall be no more sea and no more night, but, I take it, to him the sea was a symbol of separation, and the night was an emblem of mystery. I saw the sea and stood upon its shore. I visited the Vale of Night, as I have related. But do not conclude that my poor vision contradicts the perfect one of the exile on Patmos. All that I saw corresponds perfectly to the vision of the aged apostle.

If I were asked to describe in a single phrase the activities of the spirit world, I could not better express my conception of the employments of immortal beings than to say, "They serve him continually." This was written large on every face and beamed from every eye, "God's will is our delight."

I confess that now, as I review the questions I asked my guide in the other world, as I recall the phases of the immortal life concerning which I sought enlightenment, I am amazed that it never occurred to me to ask concerning the resumed relationships of earth—as to reunion of families, recognition of friends, the taking up again of broken ties that bound together life and life. Yet perhaps it is not so strange, since it was perfectly apparent to me that memory continues in the life to come, beautified and clarified, indeed, until it becomes memory at its best. Upon this fact, and upon the further fact that personality is evidently unimpaired by the incident of death, may be based a very definite assurance that we shall know each other there, and that we shall know so much more perfectly than here, that in comparison the most intimate earthly friendship will seem a superficial thing.

TO all who may inquire, seeking enlightenment upon some detail of the heavenly life, let this be the sufficient answer: "We shall be satisfied when we awake, with his likeness." Explanation and Satisfaction are the great words that loom up and shine out from my memory of the vision. If I have painted the picture of an unspiritual heaven, it is because human speech lacks terms to describe some thoughts that are too deep for words. Certainly the Christian heaven, the dwelling-place of saints, is no Mohammedan paradise. The glory of "the general assembly and church of the first-born" is, first of all, that of similitude to the Divine character. We shall be like him.

And, wonder of all wonders, surprise of all surprises, revelation of all revelations, he bears in that world beyond all worlds the same image he bore when he trod the paths of earth. The Man Christ Jesus, the God Man, is still and will be, eternally, "first among his brethren." So this I know, that humanity, with all its weakness and wickedness, with all its poverty of resources and handicaps of heredity and environment, is stamped with the image of its Creator. And the image, marred as it has been, is restored at the hand of him of whose creative thought we are the product.

If I were to be asked, "What is the practical value of such a vision as yours?" I must reply: Apart from the comfort derived from the possession of definite ideas of the beauty and bounty, the serenity and satisfaction, of "Jerusalem the Golden," the fruit of such a vision must be chiefly in the inevitable revision of life's values, the re-appraisement of life's treasures. Earth has lost none of its beauty, none of its charm, but it has lost its finality, its ultimateness. And duty seems not so forbidding, even when it involves obnoxious tasks. It is easier to bear and forbear, easier to surrender self, to "do without," since the end is certain, and the end is near. What we sometimes call the end of life is but life's true beginning. The road does not end at the top of the hill, nor at the bottom. Over the hill lies a valley. The valley is dark with shadows, but beyond the shadows is a great light.

THE dream-journey is ended. My feet again tread familiar paths. But my heart often grows homesick as I contemplate the joys of Over There. The vision has not unfitted me, I hope, to finish my tasks. I shall strive to "endure as seeing the invisible." But

"Life to me is as a station
    Wherein, apart, a traveller stands—
One absent long from home and nation,
    In other lands—

"And I, as he who stands and listens,
    Amid the twilight's chill and gloom,
To hear, approaching in the distance,
    The train for home."

THE END

Concerning “Preparedness”

By HENRY FORD

THE United States, I believe, is confronted by the greatest danger in its history. It is not an external danger. As the President said in New York on January 27: “Nobody seriously supposes that the United States needs fear an invasion of its own territory.”

Our danger is internal. We are confronted by the danger of militarism.

The very burden that caused thousands of men of all races to come to the United States in search of a haven of peace, to escape the toils of militaristic government, now is being preached throughout the land by men, by newspapers, by magazines, moving pictures and in fact every medium of intelligence.

Conscription, the base of militarism, is advocated openly.

And it is all done under the guise of patriotism. The flag is flaunted before the eyes of the people and we are told that our “national honor” is at stake.

The flaunting was started by an organization of men known as the Navy League. It has been taken up by really patriotic men, fearful of the danger which this league first discovered. Other of these organizations started up and made their cry the danger of invasion and the need of preparing for it. The Secretary of the Navy and other officials were made the objects of attack because they, knowing the true conditions, refused to become hysterical.

Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner, delivered in the House two remarkable speeches—“The World Wide War Trust,” and “The Navy League Unmasked”—giving startling revelations of an organized body of war traffickers who promote war and preparation for war—“preparedness.”

He charged that the Navy League, which inspired and financed largely the present agitation for “preparation,” was founded by a group made up largely of war traffickers. He also charged that among the most active members and officers of the League today are men who not only will profit from “preparedness,” but who actually hold a monopoly on the materials for war which the government must purchase—that these war-trafficking men are in agreement with war munitioners of Europe, barring the possibility of the United States government purchasing supplies of war at any price but that fixed by the war-traffickers of the United States. Mr. Tavenner’s charges never have been refuted.

The very men who pile up the armament of all nations,—and it is true that the same firm will often arm both sides in a conflict—will find an enemy for any country they arm. And they will arm that enemy, too, for the profits on arms are great, and the industry is a monopoly.

This state of affairs has been brought right home to Americans in the past few years in Mexico, where we have seen the same arms manufacturers arming every side. And the President, by raising the embargo on arms certainly did nothing for the peace of the world.

We ought to realize that it is the people who not only pay the bills of these munitions makers, but pay the penalty also in the death and misery the use of these arms must brin .

Do we need preparedness?

The President himself, in his speeches made rec tly in the middle west, could find no fear of invasion, an his inconsistencies were pointed out even by the most a ent editorial advocates of the “preparedness” plan. In De em- ber, 1914, the President, in his message to Congress, id: “Let there be no misconception. The country has been is- informed. We have not been negligent of national defe e.”

Since that time the President said he had change his mind. No personal vacillation, however, can chang the facts, and in spite of rumors and suggestions of fear ere have been no material facts placed before the people o the country to show that the President had any military r son for his change of mind.

The people should think for themselves and dema to know the facts.

Whatever the standing of the country’s safety, this uch is due the people; they should be allowed to share the s cret terrorizing dispatches the President declared in his r ent tour he received almost hourly. The nation is great e ugh and the people strong enough to bear the worst, to ow what threatens them.

Not only that, but it is the right of the people to de and of their President the causes for his alarm. And if that arm is not genuine, they have a right to know why it was ut red by the head of the nation.

The people of the United States are patriotic. B t it is time for all to realize that patriotism does not c sist merely of dying for one’s country. I believe that patri ism consists more in living for the benefit of the whole wor l, o giving others a chance to live for themselves, their co ntry and the world. A man is naturally patriotic, and t cry patriotism at him as is now being done throughout the oun- try is more of an insult than a compliment.

I believe, too, that many more men have died beca e o ambition, avarice, and insincerity than ever died in just cause. I have dedicated my life’s work to the educat n o men on this subject with the hope that if war comes gain men will know before they march against the machine guns whether they are marching for a just cause or for amb ion avarice and insincerity.

It is a regrettable fact that many of the mediums of e uca tion in the United States have been swayed to the c for big armament. Not only is this true, but it is equall true that these same organs have bred racial hatred by the rint ing of incendiary news stories and articles, preachin fea of one of the European belligerents, giving promine e to rumors of unneutral acts of violence, and paying igh regard to official denials of the same.

These organs tell us that one of the warring factions in Europe is bleeding to crush militarism, yet in the same pages the assumption of this beginning of militarism is declared to be the solemn duty of the United States.

For a hundred years, with Europe fully armed and strong, we have been safe. Now, with Europe locked in a deadly embrace and bleeding to death, we are called upon to fear its invasion of our shores.

The following from the New York Times of February 9, printed prominently by the Times, but not conspicuously treated by the great majority of city newspapers, gives some idea of the facts.

"Washington, February 8—Testimony that pleased the pacifist element in the House was furnished to the Committees on Military and Naval Affairs today by General Nelson A. Miles, U. S. A., retired, and Rear Admiral Victor Blue, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation. General Miles said he did not fear an invasion of the United States and that an invading army could quickly be driven from the country. Admiral Blue declared the navy now was ready to meet any enemy it might be called upon to encounter in the Pacific."

And, remember, aside from the fact that we are able to do this, there remains still the greater fact that nothing more than generalities regarding the possibility of any attack have been advanced in justification of the attempt to work up an artificial hysteria as a preliminary to inoculation with the rabies of war.

Those who have opposed this militaristic scheme have been characterized as cowards, poltroons and unpatriotic. They are less cowardly than the most ardent militarists, because it is fear that is inspiring those who are not looking for the profits. And this fear is a fear without foundation in reason. Is it unpatriotic to wish for world peace instead of a universal war over commercial rights of a few men or to uphold an unpopular government?

The sooner the government of the world gets down to a business basis the better off the world will be. I cannot conceive how any business man in the United States, after viewing the result of military preparation in Europe, realizing the geographical situation of the United States, and considering the result of the Dardanelles operations, could so allow his fears to be played upon by military bargainers as to approve the plan to make this nation an armed camp. There have been fine words about "preparedness" and "militarism" being totally different, but Europe knows today that the only difference is in the spelling.

Congressman Kitchin, who has risked his leadership of the Democrats in the House to oppose the "preparedness" measure, calls attention to the fact that the United States has been spending of late years a greater part of its revenue for military equipment than has any other nation in the world. With the billions that would be spent under the proposed extravagant program, the tax-payers would be giving nearly 70 per cent of what they contribute to government revenue, for the support of an army and navy.

Would any man, preparing to fight a fire in his shops, store those same shops with tons of inflammables? Yet that is what "preparedness" does. And then, of course, must come the inevitable.

What is the share of the man who pays for all this?

It is the burden of supporting the vast machine until some few men lose their heads and touch the spark to the ready-built kindling-pile. Then he must give his life, or come home a cripple. For those who remain at the end of the sad folly there is high taxes and crepe on the door.

Men sitting around a table, not men dying in a trench, finally settle the differences, anyhow.

If one hundredth of one per cent of all that has been spent on this kind of "preparedness" had been used to do away with national and international differences built up by a diplomacy originating in the Dark Ages, war would have ceased long ago.

Every man must admit the method is foolish. And even the old time "glory" of war is dead, the victim of science. Then why continue?

Why not begin now to build a machinery of reason to do the work that the machinery of force has not accomplished? That is the great duty facing those who govern.

In all the maze of argument for "preparedness" the facts are few. But even its most ardent advocates call attention to the coincidence that this is a presidential election year.

If the cause lies in this fact, and I can hardly believe it, because I am not very well versed in political tricks, it is time for the voters to remind their congressmen and any other candidates who may seek their favor that the people will not spend their money to arm for invading ghosts conjured up by the President or any other man, be he real patriot or a munitions-patriot.

Let the President and others who are preaching this doctrine of fear point out the enemy, let them prove the enemy comes upon us, and every American is willing to lay down his fortune and his life at the feet of the President, as Americans have done before.

But the same Americans, a hard-headed business people, will not lay down a nickel if they become convinced that they are paying merely for an election or a reelection to the White House under the guise of defense of home and fireside. And these Americans have a very disconcerting way of showing their practical impatience with fairy tales.

I strongly urge every American who is interested in this subject that should interest all, to write to Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives office Building, Washington, D. C., for the speeches revealing the motives at the bottom of the "preparedness" agitation.

I strongly urge every man and woman who desires that this country shall remain at peace to write a protest against the extravagant program now in Congress, to write to his Congressman, to the two United States Senators from his state, and to the President of the United States. A sentence or two will do. But make your meaning plain.

Remember, too, that the men now in Congress who have come out strongly against the project need encouragement from home. They face generally a solid wall of ridicule or silence in the press of the cities, and human nature finds it hard to bear up before such a constant hammering even though the object of the attacks feels that the pressure rings not of sincerity. If you feel that the country's safety is being jeopardized by political manipulation, then make your protest a political one so that it will strike the deeper.

I am having this statement printed in the advertising columns of newspapers and magazines throughout the United States. Others will follow. I have no other purpose than to save America from bloodshed and its young men from conscription. I feel that if this militaristic burden is assumed by the country, the United States within 10 years will be in turmoil, its industries paralyzed, and its men, instead of being at work in peaceful industry, will be dying in trenches. And I feel, too, that these men will not be dying to defend their country, as we are now being told, but will perish in the conquest of other men who have a right to live in happiness and peace.—Adv.

A Voice in the Wilderness

By GRACE LIVINGSTON HILL LUTZ

CHAPTER XIX Continued

AFTER all, they really seemed to enjoy it, though they had to get along with three hymn books for the whole company; but Margaret knew how to make hymn singing interesting, and her exquisite voice was never more at its best than when she led off with "My Jesus, as Thou Wilt," or "Jesus, Saviour, Pilot Me."

"You would be the delight of Mr. Brownleigh's heart," said the hostess gushingly at last after Margaret had finished singing "Abide with Me," with wonderful feeling.

"And who is Mr. Brownleigh?" asked Margaret, "and why should I delight his heart?"

"Why, he is our missionary, that is, the missionary for this region, and you would delight his heart because you are so religious and sing so well," said the superficial little woman. "Mr. Brownleigh is really a very cultured man. Of course he's narrow—all clergymen are narrow, don't you think? They have to be to a certain extent. He's really quite narrow. Why, he believes in the Bible literally, the whale and Jonah, and the flood, and making bread out of stones, and all that sort of thing, you know. Imagine it! But he does. He's sincere! Perfectly sincere, and I suppose he has to be. It's his business. But sometimes one feels it a pity that he can't relax a little, just among us here, you know. We'd never tell. Why, he won't even play a little game of poker! And he doesn't smoke! Imagine it—not even when he's by himself, and no one would know! Isn't that odd? But he can preach. He's really very interesting, only a little too Utopian in his ideas. He thinks everybody ought to be good, you know, and all that sort of thing. He really thinks it's possible, and he lives that way himself. He really does. But he is a wonderful person, only I feel sorry for his wife sometimes. She's quite a cultured person. Has been wealthy, you know, and all that sort of thing. She was a New York society girl. Just imagine it; out in these wilds taking gruel to the dirty little Indians! How she ever came to do it! Of course she adores him, but I can't really believe she is happy. No woman could quite be blind enough to give up everything in the world for one man, no matter how good he was. Do you think they could? It wasn't as if she didn't have plenty of other chances. She gave them all up to come out and marry him. She's a pretty good sport too; she never lets you know she isn't perfectly happy."

"She is happy, mother, she's happier than anybody I ever saw," declared the fourteen-year-old daughter of the Fort, who was home from boarding-school for a brief visit during an epidemic of measles in the school.

"Oh, yes, she manages to make people think she's happy," said her mother indulgently, "but you can't make me believe she's satisfied to give up her house on Fifth Avenue and live in a two-roomed log cabin in the desert with no society."

"Mother, you don't know. Why, any woman would be satisfied if her husband adored her the way Mr. Brownleigh does her."

"Well, Ada, you're a romantic girl, and Mr. Brownleigh is a handsome man. You've got a few things to learn yet. Mark my words, I don't believe you'll see Mrs. Brownleigh coming back next month with her husband. This operation was all well enough to talk about, but I'll not be surprised to hear that he has come back alone or else that he has accepted a call to some big city church. And he's equal to it, too. He comes of a fine family himself, I've heard. Oh, people can't keep up the pose of saints forever even though they do adore each other. But Mr. Brownliegh certainly is a good man."

The vapid little woman sat looking reflectively out of the window for a whole minute after this deliverance. Yes, certainly Mr. Brownleigh was a good man. He was the one man of culture and education and refinement who had come her way in many a year, who had patiently and persistently and gloriously refused her advances at a mild flirtation, refused to understand them, and remained her friend and reverenced hero. He was a good man, and she knew it, for she was a very pretty woman, and knew her arts well.

BEFORE the day was over Margaret had reason to feel that a Sabbath in Arizona was a very hard thing to find. The singing could not last all day, and her friends at the Fort seemed to find more things to amuse one on Sunday that did not come into Margaret's code of Sabbath-keeping than one knew how to say no to. Neither could they understand her feeling, and she found it hard not to be rude in gently declining one plan after another.

She drew the children of the Fort into a wide, cozy corner, after dinner, and began a Bible story in the guise of a fairy tale, and the ladies of the Fort slipped away to take a nap, but one or two officers lingered about and strayed in, and with newspapers before their faces got into the story too; so that after all Margaret did not have an unprofitable Sabbath.

But altogether, though she had a gay and somewhat frivolous time, and a good deal of admiration and many invitations to return as often as possible, Margaret was not sorry, when she said good-night, to know that she was to return in the early morning to her work.

The old captain himself was going part way with them, accompanied by his niece and the two young officers who had brought them over, and Margaret rode beside the captain until his way parted from theirs, and had a delightful talk about Arizona. He was a kindly old fellow who adored his frivolous little wife.

The morning was pink and silver, gold and azure, a wonderful specimen of an Arizona sunrise for Margaret's benefit, and a glorious beginning for her day's work in spite of the extremely early hour. The company was gay and blithe, and the Eastern girl felt as if she were passing through a wonderful experience.

They loitered a little on the way, to show Margaret the wonders of a fern-plumed canyon, and it was almost school time when they came up the street, so that Margaret rode straight to the schoolhouse instead of stopping at the Tanners'. On the way to the school they passed a group of girls, of whom Rosa Rogers was the center. A certain something in Rosa's narrowed eyelids as she said good-morning caused Margaret to look back uneasily, and she distinctly saw the girl give a signal to young Forsythe, who for answer only tipped his hat and gave her a peculiar smile.

In a moment more they had said good-by, and Margaret was left at the schoolhouse door with a cluster of eager children about her, and several shy boys in the background ready to welcome her back as if she had been gone a month.

In the flutter of opening school Margaret failed to notice that Rosa Rogers did not appear. It was not until the roll was called that she noticed her absence, and she looked uneasily toward the door many times during the morning, but Rosa did not come until after recess, when she stole smilingly in as if it were quite the thing to come to school late. When questioned about her tardiness she said she had torn her dress and had to go home and change it. Margaret knew by the look in her eyes that the girl was not telling the truth, but what was she to do? It troubled her all the morning and went with her to a sleepless pillow that night. She was beginning to see that life as a school teacher in the Far West was not all she had imagined it to be. Her father had been right. There would probably be more thorns than roses on her way.

CHAPTER XX

THE first time Lance Gardl met Rosa Rogers riding with ieutenant Forsythe he though ittle of it. He knew the girl by sig because he knew her father in a bu ness way. That she was very young a one of Margaret's pupils was all he new about her. For the young offi he had conceived a strong dislike, l as there was no reason whatever for , he put it out of his mind as quicl as possible.

The second time he met them was toward evening, and they were so olly absorbed in each other's society hat they did not see him until he was lose upon them. Forsythe looked up h a frown and a quick hand to hi hip, where gleamed a weapon.

He scarcely returned the sligl salute given by Gardley, and th two young people touched up their rses and were soon out of sight in the iesquite. But something in the frigh ned look of the girl's eyes caused G ley to turn and look after the two.

Where could they be going at hat hour of the evening? It was not rail usually chosen for rides. It was ely and unfrequented and led out the way of travelers. Gardley himsel had been on a far errand for Jasper np, and had taken this short trail bac because it cut off several miles a he was weary. Also he was anxio to stop in Ashland and leave Mom W is's request that Margaret should nd the next Sabbath at the camp a see the new curtains. He was thi ing what he should say to her when h aw her in a little while now, and his interruption in his thoughts was u elcome. Nevertheless he could no get away from that frightened look i he girl's eyes. Where could they ve been going? That officer was a wcomer in the region; perhaps he ha ost his way. Perhaps he did not know hat the road he was taking the girl lec nto a region of outlaws, and that the nly habitation along the way was a bin belonging to an old woman of ird reputation, where wild orgies ere sometimes celebrated, and where en went who loved darkness rather an light because their deeds were evil.

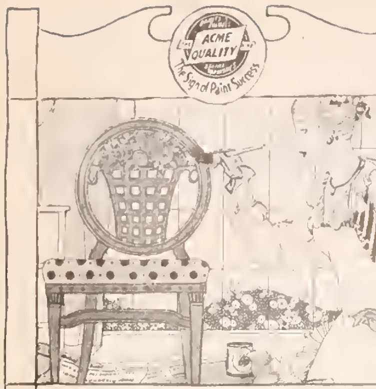
Twice Gardley turned in his s lle and scanned the desert. The sky as darkening and one or two pale rs were impatiently shadowing forth eir presence. And now he could se he two riders again. They had com up out of the mesquite to the top o he mesa, and were outlined against he sky sharply. They were still on he trail to old Ouida's cabin!

WITH a quick jerk Gardley r ed in his horse and wheeled a t, watching the two riders for a mon t; and then setting spurs to his beas he was off down the trail after them o ne of his wild, reckless rides. D wn through the mesquite he plu d. through the darkening grove, and ut and up to the top of the mesa. He d lost sight of his quarry for the time ut now he could see them again ri ng more slowly in the valley below, eir horses close together, and even a he watched, the sky took on its wide ht look and the stars blazed forth.

Suddenly Gardley turned sha ly from the trail and made a detour thr gh a grove of trees, riding with rec ss speed, his head down to escape w branches; and in a minute or tw he came with unerring instinct back to e trail, some distance ahead of Fors he and Rosa. Then he wheeled his h se and stopped stock still, awaiting ir coming.

By this time the great full n n was risen and strangely enough wa t Gardley's back, making a silhouett of man and horse as the two riders e ne on toward him.

They rode out from the cover of e grove and there he was across ir path. Rosa gave a scream, and w nearer her companion and her h se swerved and reared; but Gardl 's



ACME QUALITY
The Sign of Paint Success

HOW PEGGY KEEPS HER HOUSE OUT OF THE "RUN-DOWN" RUT

Peggy and Bob were so proud of their new home and new furniture when they married. But six years and two irrepressible children will leave impressions—to say nothing of depressions—on the best of furniture, walls and woodwork.

Instead of sighing or moving or buying new things, Peggy got busy with a supply of Acme Quality Paints and Finishes and in two weeks the place blossomed out like sunshine after clouds.

Peggy did over the bathroom with Acme Quality White Enamel until it fairly radiated cleanliness and sanitation. She discarded wall paper and had the walls done over with Acme Quality No-Lustre—the oil paint that gives a smooth, washable, sanitary surface. Then she touched up the stairs, floors, doors and furniture with Acme Quality Varno-Lac—the finish that varnishes as it stains.

ACME QUALITY
PAINTS & FINISHES

After it was all over, Peggy was not only surprised with the results, but with the ease and economy of it. Now she keeps an Acme Quality Shelf (as described below) for the little "touching-up" jobs to keep things spick and span.

Peggy began by sending to us for "Home Decorating" and "Acme Quality Painting Guide," two instructive books which will be sent to you, too, upon request.

ACME WHITE LEAD AND COLOR WORKS
Dept. O Detroit, Michigan

Boston Toledo Lincoln
Chicago Nashville Salt Lake City
Minneapolis Birmingham Spokane
St. Louis Fort Worth Portland
Pittsburgh Dallas San Francisco
Cincinnati Topeka Los Angeles

Keep always on hand at least a can each of Acme Quality Varnotile, a varnish for floors, woodwork and furniture; Acme Quality White Enamel for iron bedsteads, furniture, woodwork and all similar surfaces; Acme Quality Black Iron Enamel for ranges, stovepipes and other metal or wood surface. These will cover many of the "touching-up" jobs.

VARNOTILE
Neal's Enamel
ACME QUALITY

bla stood like an image carved in ebo against the silver of the moon, and ardley's quiet voice was in strong con ast to the quick, unguarded exela tion of Forsythe as he sharply dre rein and put his hand hastily to his p for his weapon.

' beg your pardon, Lieutenant For the"—Gardley had an excellent me ory for names—"but I thought you night not be aware, being a newcor r in these parts, that the trail you are taking leads to a place where lad s do not like to go."

'eally! You don't say so!" answe d the lieutenant insolently. "It is y kind of you, I'm sure, but you mi t have saved yourself the trouble. I ow perfectly where I am going, an o does the lady, and we choose to go his way. Move out of the way, ple e, you are detaining us!"

It Gardley did not move out of the wa

' am sure the lady does not know whe she is going," he said firmly. "I n sure that she does not know that it a place of bad reputation, even in thi unconventional land. At least if she nows, I am sure that her father do not know, and I am well acqu ated with her father."

'et out of the way, sir!" said Fo the hotly. "It certainly is none of our business anyway. Get out of the way or I shall shoot. This lady an I intend to ride where we please."

'hen I shall have to say you canno ' said Gardley, and his voice still ha that calm that made his opponent thi him easy to conquer.

ust how do you propose to stop us sneered Forsythe, pulling out his pis l.

This way," said Gardley, lifting a tin silver whistle to his lips and sending orth a peculiar shrilling blast.

And this way," went on Gardley, ea ly lifting both hands and showing a apon in each wherewith he covered th wo.

SLENTLY in the moonlight the ittle procession took its way down th trail, the girl and the man side by sid their captor close behind, and wh the girl summoned courage to gla ce fearfully behind her she saw th more men riding like three grim sh ows. They had fallen into the tr so quietly that she had not heard th when they came. They were Ja er Kemp, Long Bill and Big Ji was a long ride back to Rogers' ra h, and the officer glanced nervously ba now and then. It seemed to him th the company was growing larger al he time. He half expected to see a giment behind him each time he tu ed. He tried hurrying his horse, b when he did so, the followers were ju as close without any seeming ef t. He tried to laugh it all off. Once h urned and tried to placate Gardley w a few shakily jovial words:

Look here, old fellow, aren't you th man I met on the trail the day Miss E le went over to the Fort? I guess y 've made a mistake in your calcula ons. I was merely out on a pleasure ri with Miss Rogers. We weren't go g anywhere in particular, you know. M s Rogers chose this way, and I w ted to please her. No man likes to h e his pleasure interfered with, you k w. I guess you didn't recognize m"

I recognized you," said Gardley. " would be well for you to be careful w re you ride with ladies, especially a night. The matter, however, is one th you would better settle with Mr. R gers. My duty will be done when I h e put it into his hands."

Now, my good fellow," said Fors he patronizingly, "you surely don't i nd to make a great fuss about this a go telling tales to Mr. Rogers a ut a trifling matter——"

I intend to do my duty, Lieutenant F sythe," said Gardley, and the o er noticed that the young man still h l his weapons; "I was set this night t guard Mr. Rogers' property. That I id not expect his daughter would be a part of the evening's guarding has n hing to do with the matter. I shall c tainly put the matter into Mr. R gers' hands."

Rosa began to cry softly.

"Well, if you want to be a fool, of course," laughed Forsythe disagreeably, "but you will soon see Mr. Rogers will accept my explanation."

"That is for Mr. Rogers to decide," answered Gardley, and said no more.

The reflections of Lieutenant Forsythe during the rest of that silent ride were not pleasant, and Rosa's intermittent crying did not tend to make him comfortable.

The silent procession at last turned in at the great ranch gate and rode up to the house. Just as they stopped and the door of the house swung open letting out a flood of light, Rosa leaned toward Gardley and whispered:

"Please, Mr. Gardley, don't tell papa. I'll do anything in the world for you if you won't tell papa."

He looked at the pretty, pitiful child in the moonlight.

"I'm sorry, Miss Rosa," he said firmly, "but you don't understand. I must do my duty."

"Then I shall hate you!" she hissed. "Do you hear? I shall hate you forever, and you don't know what that means. It means I'll take my revenge on you and on everybody you like!"

HE looked at her half pityingly as he swung off his horse and went up the steps to meet Mr. Rogers, who had come out and was standing on the top step of the ranch house in the square of light that flickered from the wide fireplace. He was looking from one to another of the silent group, and as his eye rested on his daughter he said sternly, "Why, Rosa, what does this mean? You told me you were going to bed with a headache!"

Gardley drew his employer aside and told what had happened in a few low-toned sentences; and then stepped down and back into the shadow, his horse by his side, the three men from the camp grouped behind him.

Mr. Rogers, his face stern with sudden anger and alarm, stepped down and stood beside his daughter:

"Rosa, you may get down and go into the house to your own room. I will talk with you later," he said. And then to the officer:

"You, sir, will step into my office. I wish to have a plain talk with you."

A half hour later Lieutenant Forsythe came out of the Rogers house and mounted his horse while Mr. Rogers stood silently and watched him.

"I will bid you good evening, sir," he said formally as the young officer gave a salute and rode away.

"That will be all tonight, Gardley, and I thank you very much," called the clear voice of Mr. Rogers from his front steps. The four men mounted their horses silently and rode down a little distance behind the lieutenant, who wondered in his heart just how much or how little Gardley had told Rosa's father.

The interview to which young Forsythe had just been subjected had been chastening in character, of a kind to baffle curiosity concerning the father's knowledge of details, and to discourage any further romantic rides with Miss Rosa. It had been left in abeyance whether or not the Fort should be made acquainted with the episode, dependent upon the further conduct of both young people. It had not been satisfactory from Forsythe's point of view; that is, he had not been so easily able to disabuse the father's mind of suspicion, nor to establish his own guileless character, as he had hoped.

And this is why Lieutenant Forsythe feared Lance Gardley, although there was nothing in the least triumphant about the set of that young man's shoulders as he rode away in the moonlight on the trail toward Ashland.

And this is how it came about that Rosa Rogers hated Lance Gardley, handsome and daring though he was; and because of him hated her teacher, Margaret Earle.

An hour later Lance Gardley stood in the little dim Tanner parlor talking to Margaret.

"You look tired," said the girl compassionately as she saw the haggard shadows on the young face, showing in spite of the light of pleasure in his eyes. "You look very tired. What in the world have you been doing?"

To be continued

Now Find out Now

WRITE us to-day for the free book about the new Encyclopaedia Britannica called "A Book of 100 Wonders." This book is really interesting in itself, and it will tell you about the world's standard reference-work at a surprising price.

Never before At so low a price Never again

THE "Handy Volume" issue of the Britannica costs 64 per cent less than the bigger-volume issue that was until now the only form in which the new Britannica could be purchased. Of course the two issues contain identically the same reading matter and the same illustrations.

The "Handy Volume" issue now costs you considerably less than you will have to pay for it if you wait until the present stock is exhausted. Then the sale at the present low prices will have to stop, because the war is forcing up the costs of the raw materials and of manufacturing these books.

To-day Write now To-day

WRITE us immediately for the book that will tell you what you need to know about that wonderful utility, the Britannica.

This free book tells you about The Encyclopaedia Britannica from many different points of view; gives a history of the early editions; contains pictures of famous contributors to different editions, especially the last; has many interesting pictures from the new Britannica; gives you specimen pages, showing the print—and the interesting reading matter that is in the Britannica; tells how interesting this great work is to women, and how valuable it is to children, and how useful and necessary to everyone—school-boy or school-girl, college graduate or teacher, or man or woman without the advantages of a good education. Send now for this book.

¶ Sign and mail the coupon to-day.

Sears, Roebuck and Co.
Sole Distributors—Chicago

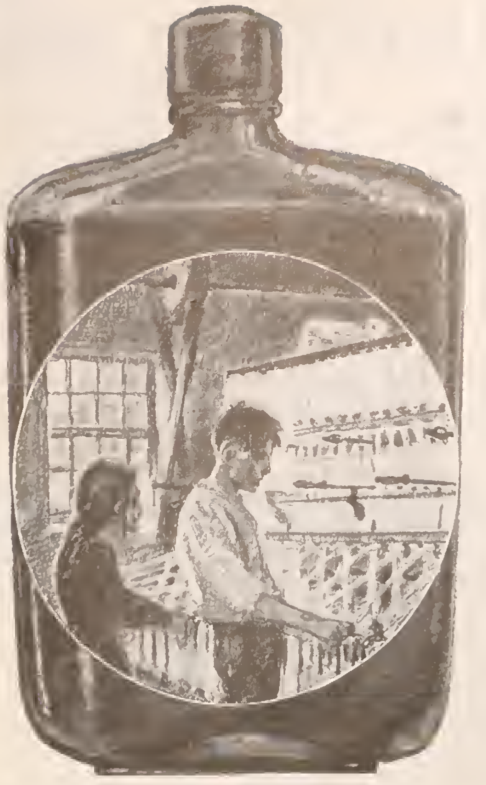
Please send me, free, the "Book of a Hundred Wonders," telling about the Britannica, with sample pages of type and illustrations, details of bindings, prices, terms, etc., before the present bargain sale closes.

Name____

Address____

167-Z

"THE BOTTLE"—VI.



STUNTING

Dear John:

Don't you believe what the neighbors told Jane, when she called.

I didn't put the kids to work just so I could get more money to drink up.

Both Bill, Jr., and the girl wanted to go to work. You see, I've been all over town trying to find work, but I can't seem to land a job.

Flory says she's glad to work, she meets so many interesting people.

The neighbors are lying when they say I'm lying around drunk most of the time. I'm looking for a job. You know I'm too fine a man to do common day labor. I might have taken a job on that new construction works; but they hire none but total abstainers. So you see I couldn't be taken on.

I simply have to have whisky now, I'm so weak and run down.

It will never get—

Your old pal,

BILL.

Dear Bill:

"Today we know that the jolly comrade (Alcohol) for the price of one hour of exhilaration, cheats us out of our self-respect: that it brings to ruin every being and every nation that yields to it." That's what Professor Kraepelin says, and he is right.

What's the most expensive drink you ever had, Bill? No, not what you paid for it over the bar. I mean, in the big accounting.

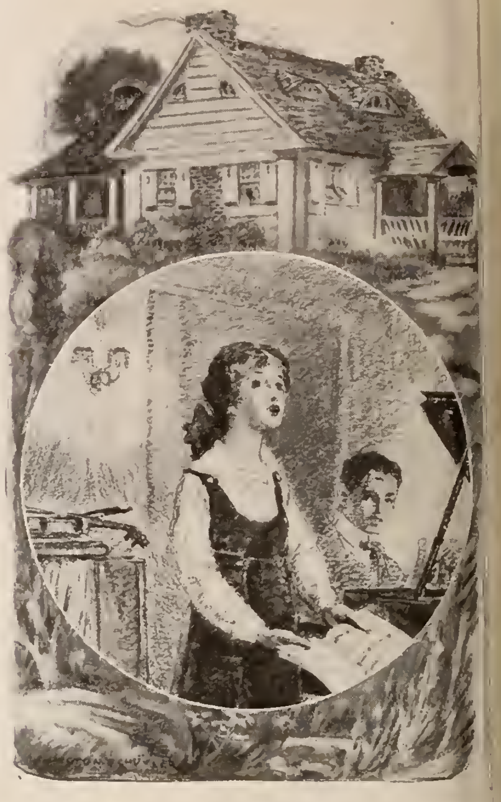
Some of them have cost you your bright prospects. Some your home. Some your happiness, friends, everything. Right now you are paying the very heaviest price of all—putting the kids to work. Bill, Jr., will never be able to stand it.

Think, Bill. Isn't it too high a price to pay? I have so wanted to help you, old fellow. Come out some evening and we'll talk it all over.

Remember, Bill, how you used to like music? My boy and girl are accomplished musicians now. They'll give you a real concert and play your old favorites. So come along with Flory and the kids and see

Your old friends,

JANE and JOHN.



UNFOLDING

No. I

No. II

No. III

No. IV

No. V

No. I

No. II

No. III

No. IV

No. V

Adventures With the Soul

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

ONCE there was a girl who lived in a great, busy city, far away from the home that she had known as a child; farther, much farther, away from the ideal home that her fancy pictured. She did routine work at a fairly good salary and she did it well. But the work was always very much the same, and hour after hour, as she went on mechanically making the same motions, saying the same words, writing the same sentences, one began to feel that she was almost a machine.

I used to watch the girl sometimes, as she worked at her endless files, and memorandums, and cabinets. And sometimes the thought of her monotonous life would make me vaguely nervous—even though she never showed a sign of being bored or nervous herself. And I pitied her. And then one day, in the middle of a particularly colorless morning, I glanced over at her table and saw that she was smiling, and humming a snatch of song.

"A penny for your thoughts!" I called out, across the dull quietness of the room.

The girl started ever so slightly, and stopped humming. "Perhaps," she told me softly, "you wouldn't understand my thoughts. Perhaps you'd think I was silly. Perhaps you'd —laugh."

"I don't think that I'd laugh," I answered interestedly, but the girl smiled like a small, modernized Sphinx, and went on with her work.

After that I wanted to know the girl personally—away from the office. I wanted to know the desires that lay behind the mystery of her eyes. I wanted to know the thoughts that made her mind a garden of blossoms. Above all I wanted to find out what made her smile and sing while she was doing work that did not interest her.

So I lunched with the girl, and I saw her at her home, and I saw her in my home. I hunted as earnestly as any detective might have hunted. And I found the answer on her bookshelf.

THE girl had a few novels on her bookshelf, and several volumes of modern poetry. But the rest of the books were travel books. Books on scaling the Alps, books on piercing the African jungle, books on crossing great oceans and struggling over vast snowy plains. She had books full of the fragrance of the Southland, the mystery of the Orient, the tenor of the north. And the books had the look of books that had been read over and over, books that have been loved, books that have been lived with.

"You like to read about foreign countries, don't you?" I questioned.

She glanced at me and the soul of her shone through her eyes and made her whole face vivid with interest and love of life. "Indeed I do," she answered; "they are the very biggest things in my whole life, I think."

And as I waited patiently for her to finish, she went on.

"You see," she told me, "all my life, when I was a tiny kiddie even, I wanted to be an explorer. If I had been a boy, I think I would have slipped away to queer ports on an old sailing vessel, or started West to be a scout, or tried to go along on some arctic expedition. But I was a girl, and girls don't sleep on boats, or go scouting, or discover North Poles. So I learned the work that I am doing now, and got a position in an office. It was a good position, but at first it sickened me. I kept thinking, 'Here I am, tied down to a desk, with nothing to see but the office buildings across the street. Here I am doing the same endless round of petty duties when all the time I want to be climbing mountains and crossing seas!' And I rebelled against the unfairness of it all—the irony of the fate that kept me working at the tasks that bored me. Then, with a bit of money that I had saved, I bought some travel books. And as I read them, I put myself in the place of the author and I imagined that I was discovering countries and finding treasure. And then, somehow, as I sat in the office doing my work, I began to look at each day's task as a mountain to be climbed. And I began to think of every bit of dull filing as a ray plain to be crossed in my discovery of a new cont nt. And after a while I no longer thought of my w as work; I thought of it as obstacles to be overco in my journey through life. And then I knew th no matter if I lived all my life in the same city, if I ent all my daytime in the office doing work tha was mechanical—just a series of movements and rds that had almost become a part of me—I knew hat no one on earth could keep me from taking my urneys and climbing my mountains, and discoverin my continents. For I was doing it with my imagi ion and my heart and my soul!"

JUST a few days ago an echo of this thought me to me in a letter from one of my girls. The ter held a tiny newspaper clipping—a clipping wit the picture of a tiny wistful Cupid on it, and a all four-line stanza. I forget the exact words of the se, but it was called, I think, "The Courageous Cu d," and he (the Cupid) said that, though folk might t to tie him down to little unimportant tasks, no one ld make him unhappy. For he would have adven res with his soul.

I wonder how many folk there are who are ng one kind of work when they want, with every fi of their being, to be doing something else. I am re that there are hundreds of people, thousands, en. . . . I wonder how many folk want to climb intains, and discover new lands, and cross deserts, en all the time duty is keeping them at the task of v king in an office or doing housework. And I w der how many of these folk are brave enough to do that u task uncomplainingly? I wonder how many ca do their work well, with a smile and a bit of song, en it isn't the work they would choose to do? I wo ler how many of these folk fuss and fret and rail ag ist fate when the fussing and fretting can do no g d? Oh, you friends of mine, have your adventures ith your soul.

Christian Herald Prayer League

Al Christians are urged to unite with he members of the Prayer League in ail prayer at the noon hour. Also any ne at liberty to send a request for ray or an acknowledgment of answered ray, thereby becoming enrolled as a nenr of the Prayer League. All orrpondents are specially requested to nak their letters as brief as possible. Vri requests and acknowledgments on epte sheets.

A AD·letter comes from "A Heart-roken Sister": "I have lost father, motr, husband, babies, sister, home, hea, and now my only brother is eri sly ill. One night last week he was not pected to live. The doctor states he is no cure. It seems as if I could not and the sorrow of his loss. Will you ot join in earnest prayer for his reccery, also for spiritual help?"

M. J. A. Hardy, the Prayer Lea e's beloved "Mother," writes:

"ave a lady friend living in New London, Con who is the wife of a Baptist minister. Che son, who was studying for the ministry, uddly became insane about three years go, d is now a great trouble to them. My rie writes me that he was a fine, promising ou man, and they had the brightest hopes f h future as a minister. But now their op are all blighted unless God will hear nd swer our prayers and restore him. My rie says she w'll not give up, but will just ee n praying and trusting that God will ak im whole in his own good time. Now I you be glad to have the Prayer League join s i rnest prayer to God that he will restore his ung man, if it be his will, to the joy of is rents and friends."

M. E. H. Heap, from Remsen, Iowa, writ again to ask prayer that she may learn he ereabouts of her husband and their three hil n. Her husband deserted her two years go England, taking away her little children. She hungry to see her little ones, and asks pray that her husband may be converted so hat e may be reunited with her family.

A riend who wishes his name withheld has nt fifty dollars for the work of the Bov y Mission and twenty-four dollars for he ildren's Home. He is a great sufferer for wo serious diseases, and asks prayer that he y be restored to health.

And mother writes asking prayer for re-stor happiness in her home. Her oldest on as become a slave to drink, and her you est son is also wandering away from the Sav r.

A old subscriber from Mississippi writes: "I d the Prayer League column first before er ng anything else. It is a godsend to me. hus his one column is worth its weight in gol It has given me more faith and made me b er Christian. I sent a request a year ago the League and God graciously answered t."

Another writes from Waco, Texas: "With gre joy and gratitude I write to say that sev l weeks ago I asked your prayers for he ental restoration of my daughter. She as erfectly regained her mind. The doctors say r recovery was wonderful." A friend in Ma chusetts writes: "I wrote you about a rel e who had lost his memory through over-wo He has so far recovered that he has tak a new position." A lady writes from Ne Jersey: "About a month ago I asked for yo nited prayers to God that he would cure my usband. I believe he has heard and is ans ring our prayer."

s. W. H. K., writes from Tuskegee, Ala.: "W h much happiness I write to say that God ha onderfully answered prayer for the heal-ing f a daughter, also for a son. The Holy Sp has wonderfully touched his heart, and oundly converted him." Mrs. J. M. S. wr s from Golden City, Mo.: "I want to ac owledge an answer to pray r. My dear br er has been converted and joined the ch h."

s. Desma Pentecost Kenyon writes from Ga sville, Ga.: "I became a member of your Pr r League about three years ago and wish to cknowledge many answers to prayer. Pl e enter my little eight-months-old son on th radle Roll."

knowledgments have also been received fr Mrs. H. I. H., Little Silver, N. J.; A Fr d, Springfield, Ill.; M. L. B., New Bed-for Mass.; A Reader, Hinton, W. Va.; Mrs. S., oldsboro, N. C.; Mrs. M. B. S., Hannibal, M Mrs. A. A. S., Orange, N. J.; E. L. V., M vay, Ky.; Minister, Gettysburg, Pa.; H., Lancaster, Pa.; L. M. A., Moline, Ill.; M H. A. M., Grand Rapids, Mich.; Mr. A. A., Churchville, N. Y.; Mrs. C. A. B., M tverde, Fla.; L. J. F., Pittsburg, Pa.; J. W., Newburgh, N. Y., Mrs. C. N., Free-war, Ore.; Mrs. H. O. B., Parsons, Kan.; M B., Tyner, Sask.; Mrs. W. E. C., Stickney, S. .; Mrs. A. H., Warren, Pa.; Mrs. S. A. M . Emmett, Tenn.; An Old Subscriber, M issippi: Mrs. L. E. B., Wichita, Kan.; M ., Talladega, Ala.; Mrs. G. W. N., Perry, N .; Mrs. J. W. C., University Park, Iowa; M E. P., Lindsay, Calif., Mrs. C. A. W., Columbus, Texas: Mr. and Mrs. C. M., Whitehouse, Ky.; Mrs. C. B., Los Angeles, Calif.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at Pittsfield, N. H.; Sadler, Texas; Gloversville, N. Y.; Palisade, Neb.; Lipscomb, Texas; Grinnell, Ill.; Monterey, Va.; West Salem, Wis.; Reelsville, Ind.; White Head, N. S., Can.; Goldsboro, N. C.; Indiana, Pa.; Kansas City, Mo.; Bangor, Mich.; San Francisco, Calif.; Tucson, Ariz.; Cambridge City, Ind.; Spokane, Wash.; Ferndale, Wash.; Crete, Neb.; Tyner, Sask., Canada; Sac City, Iowa; Williamsport, Pa. (in St. John's Church); Williamsport, Ohio (in the M. E. Church); St. Louis, Mo. (that the saloons may be closed); Warren, Pa. (that Sunday school class may all accept Christ); Landingville, Pa. (in the U. B. Church); Norwalk, Wis. (for a world-wide revival). Mrs. C. A. K., San Francisco, Calif., asks prayer that a Baptist minister may receive a call.

Mrs. M. A. M., Mrs. A. S. C., R. H. S., ask prayers that their sons' minds may be restored; P. K. S., W. L., their wives; Mrs. I. L. S. asks prayer that mother's mind may be restored also that father's mind may be strengthened. Seventeen other friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for other relatives or friends or for themselves.

Nine friends ask prayer that their sight may be strengthened; Mrs. J. C. B. asks prayer that eyes may be healed of cataracts; E. H. N., that father's sight may be restored. Nine other friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for friends or relatives. Forty-three friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Twelve parents ask prayer that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit. Mrs. R. E. D., that father and two brothers may be delivered from the liquor habit; Mrs. H. F. W., A Subscriber, M. B. D., Mrs. J. R., Mrs. E. B., their husbands. Twelve other friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be delivered from the habit. Mrs. C. H. C. asks prayer that brother may be cured of the drug habit. Mrs. G. C., A. A. E., M. E. D., ask prayers that their three sons may be converted. Thirty-seven parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; thirty-six wives, their husbands; sixty-eight friends ask prayer that friends or relatives may be converted.

Eleven readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for relatives or friends.

One hundred and twenty-eight friends ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including Mrs. K. M., that a friend's voice may be restored; E. B., that daughter may be restored to health and return home. Ninety-four ask prayer for healing of self.

Ten friends ask prayer that their hearing may be restored; Mrs. E. and Mrs. W. W. C. ask prayer that mother's hearing may be restored. Five others ask prayer that hearing of friends may be restored.

Forty-two friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Seventy friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs.

◆

A Handy Friend

THERE is a story told of a farmer and his wife who lived many miles from a town and who were wakened one night by a cry of distress from the baby. It was a first baby and its first attack of croup. The parents were helpless; they did not know what to do; the baby seemed to be choking its life away. Even if they could have telephoned for a doctor he must have reached them too late. But the mother thought of her new "Handy Volume" Encyclopedia and there she found instructions as to just what to do and in another hour the baby was sound asleep again.

It is not with babies alone that a reliable reference book is of value. Wherever there are growing children there are always questions to be answered. Assignments are given at school to be looked up, geography and history need to be supplemented, school debates require much search for material, and in all these emergencies a good encyclopedia is more than valuable, it is priceless.

Then there are countless questions that arise in the home and in business, questions of law, questions of method, questions of detail. Many books are sold that are designed to meet one or another set of needs. Some of them approach the nature of an encyclopedia, but most of them are incomplete and circumscribed in their material and capacity. Only a carefully compiled and complete encyclopedia can meet all these situations and answer all of these questions.

What to do About DANGER in Your Bath Room

Your bathroom looks sanitary, but danger may be lurking in it---poisonous sewer gas that sickens and often kills.
It comes from a poor connection of the waste pipe to the closet.
So far, science has discovered but one safe solution to this menacing problem --- a Donovan Safety Flange. Without further delay

Send for the book, "The Dangers of Sewer Gas."

It's free, yet it contains information worth more than mere money to you. Write today.

THE TRENTON POTTERIES COMPANY
Dept. G
TRENTON, N. J.

The Trenton Potteries Co.,
Dept. G, Trenton, N. J.

Please send to me FREE Booklet, "The Dangers of Sewer Gas."

Name. . . . .

Address. . . . .

You know this trade-mark through national periodical advertising

IN the early days of manufacture it was necessary only to please the King or the Queen—if you did that your fortune was made.

Royal approval was advertising enough. "But, in a democracy," says Max Nordau, "a single, however exalted, person, or a small circle's favor, would do very little for you. You must impress direct the mind of the million. And to effect this there is only one means, advertising.

In a democracy every man is king and every woman is queen as far as buying is concerned. It is not enough to "impress the mind of the million" you must please "the million" with the goods sold by your advertising. Otherwise the money spent in advertising will have been thrown away.

That is why goods offered for the royal approval of "every man" and "every woman" are so generally good. They must be good goods or the maker's business will be killed by the royal disfavor of "the million."

Trade-marks are important cogs in the machinery of national advertising. They are the marks of identification by which "the million" is able to register its favor or disfavor for goods bought. Branded articles are nearly always the best of their kind because the manufacturer who advertises them cannot afford to risk the disfavor of "the million."

Trade-marks and national advertising are the two most valuable public servants in business today. Their whole tendency is to raise qualities and standardize them, while lowering prices and stabilizing them.

CHRISTIAN HERALD
MEMBER OF THE QUOIN CLUB
THE NATIONAL PERIODICAL ASSOCIATION

Coffee Prices
Cut in Half

The Landlady Explains to Her Big Family of Fashionable Boarders How She Can Afford to Give Them Such Delicious Coffee

She Wants Every Housewife, Hotel, Sanitarium and Boarding House in the Country to Know of This Wonderful Coffee Bargain

FREE TRIAL TO ALL

EXO
COFFEE
5 Pounds
$1.00

Good coffee—real coffee—coffee at a price you can't resist. That's what housewives get in our wonderful Exo blend. Direct connections with big plantations, cutting out all middlemen and especially the great war in Europe—these are the reasons we now offer you this bargain which would ordinarily cost you from 35 to 45c per pound. It would be hard to equal elsewhere at any price.

We want your regular trade and want you to stay a customer. We would never put out this remarkable offer if we thought we could sell you but once. Coffee does its own talking, and the taste of Exo coffee talks quality. We won't need to write another word in praise of it if we get you to taste it just once. We handle only one grade of coffee—the best from Santa Paula, Brazil. What it is today, so it is tomorrow and always—the tastiest, most pleasing and aromatic coffee that anyone can buy anywhere.

Many will try to keep up coffee prices, but we have lowered them. The Brazilians couldn't sell their crop in Europe, so they had to sell it, cheap, to us. Never have we known such real coffee value. It's the greatest coffee bargain we ever knew.

Why buy doubtful coffee, stale, old or "shop-worn"? Try Exo Brand; its deliciousness will be a genuine revelation. We sell it whole or ground, whichever way you like it. Send for trial package today. Exo Brand Coffee simply cannot fail to please you. It cannot be obtained at grocers. It is only sold at our warehouse, direct to consumers. The Independent Coffee Company, 233 E. Water Street, Milwaukee, Wis.

Send coupon below.

(111)

TRIAL COUPON

Direct from the Coffee Plantations of Brazil to You

Independent Coffee Co.,
233 E. Water St., Milwaukee, Wis.

Please send me free a trial package of your Exo Coffee, for which I enclose 5 cents to cover postage and packing.

Name..

Street..

R. F. D. No.......... P. O. Box..........

City.................... State....................

Æneas and Dorcas

International Sunday School Lesson for April 9. Acts 9:32-43. Compare also Prov. 31:10-31

TALKS ON THE GOLDEN TEXT

"In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works." Titus 2 : 7.

Machinists and dressmakers alike know the value of a pattern. The pattern shop of a manufactory is as important as the machine shop. And few women dare attempt to make a dress without a pattern. Practically every article, from a needle to a skyscraper, is built according to a pattern. If one pattern is faulty many products may be faulty and insecure. What kind of lives are those people living who take our lives for a pattern? That is our main business: To live so that people who are influenced by us will live right. And there is only one safe and sure way to] be a safe and sure pattern. That is to take Jesus for our own pattern. Ordinarily a pattern has no power; but Jesus not only shows us how we ought to live but gives us power to live that way. And he offers us also power to enforce our own influence with spiritual magnetism and energy so that others shall be led not only to follow us, but to follow him.

Simon Peter at Work

By Arthur H. Howland

It is hard to say whether this story about Dorcas is a happy or a sad one. It is happy because it tells of the amazing joy which came to one household and one circle of friends; but it is sad when we think of the millions of homes, our own homes among them, to which no such blessing came when our loved ones went down to death.

The narrative of Dorcas comes second in our lesson study, but it is of such intense interest that it is hard to resist the temptation to take it up first.

Jesus himself said a significant thing when the disciples came back, jubilant and enthusiastic, from their first healing tour. "Lord," they cried, "even the devils are subject unto us through thy name." But he advised them gently: "In this rejoice not that the spirits are subject unto you, but rather rejoice because your names are written in heaven." He was constantly emphasizing the infinitely greater preciousness of the things that were eternal.

So we may imagine him saying to those who might have come running to him with the news that Peter had raised a good woman from the dead at Joppa. "Rejoice not at this, that a woman has been brought back from the freedom of heaven to the bondage of earth again; but rejoice in this, rather: that thousands and millions who die trusting in me shall live forever in the better world."

The plan of Jesus is to obliterate death. A soul that believes in him gets the victory over death as soon as he believes. In fact, to the true believer in Jesus it does not make much difference what world he lives in. So long as he can be with his Master and labor for his Master and be joined in spirit to those he loves, he is content.

And as for our friends who die, we know that they are safe and glad in his presence, and that we shall see them again. In fact, it often seems that they are with us now, and that all the trouble is with our eyes, that we cannot quite see them in the new form they have taken on.

So, after all, the big thing about this lesson is not the report that Peter brought Dorcas back from death, but that Dorcas had learned how a Christian ought to live.

With this introduction, let's go back to the lesson's beginning and see what Æneas has been doing for the last eight years. Lying in bed. A bad way for a man to spend his life. No wonder he kept growing weaker and weaker. I once heard an after-dinner speaker play on the words "Æneas was sick of the palsy." He said there was no doubt at all that by this time Æneas was thoroughly sick of the palsy. That was the first step toward getting better: he was tired of being sick. Some people like to be sick. They would deny that if you accused them of it, but as a matter of fact, medicine and doctors and sympathy and attention and leisure appeal to them in a subtle way, and they are far more sick than they would be if they were thoroughly sick of being sick.

So when Peter came along, stalwart, robust, busy, a new longing came over Æneas to be straight and strong. Peter said: "Get up, Æneas. You do not need to lie abed. Jesus Christ makes you well. Arise, and make your bed."

He arose immediately. If he had waited, the moment of faith and desire and will might have passed, and he would have lain down for eight years more.

Notice how busy Peter had been. He had been visiting "all quarters." We last heard of him holding evangelistic meetings through Samaria after the great pentecostal revival at the city of Samaria. Æneas and his friends were glad enough he came to Lydda, and the result of the great blessing that came to the sick man turned the hearts of the inhabitants of Lydda and the neighboring town of Saron to the Lord.

What is more inspiring than the spectacle of a man filled full of divine energy hurrying around from one place to another scattering blessings? Think what these towns would have missed if Peter had not welcomed that power of God into his life or had not lived so he could keep it there. Think what these people would have lost if Peter had not been alert to follow the leadings of the Spirit from place to place where he was needed.

It is beautiful, the eagerness with which people who are in spiritual need wait the coming of God's messenger who is to show them the way to light and power and blessing. And no life can be quite so happy as that life that goes about bearing Christ's health and Christ's salvation to those who are hungering for it. We are to study next week the narrative of Peter's visit to the expectant household of Cornelius at Cæsarea and the gladness he brought them.

But here at Lydda, after he had led Æneas back to health, came the sad message from Joppa: "Sister Dorcas is dead. Come."

George Macdonald wrote a beautiful poem embodying the fancy that Dorcas had seen Jesus and heard him speak. She longed to make something for him to express her sympathy and love. But then she had heard him say that anything made or done for others in his name was made and done for him. So she went back to her home in Joppa, and there won that sweet reputation of a woman "full of good works."

When God called Moses he asked him: "What is that in thine hand?" He answered: "A rod." And God used that rod to deliver his people. When the call of Christ reached Dorcas we may imagine that he asked, "What is that in thine hand?" And she replied, "A needle." And with that needle she made the name of Jesus and his church fragrant throughout the city.

In teaching the lesson make five leading points: (1) The value and power of such a life of service as Dorcas lived. (2) The fact that Jesus means life. Whether in this world or in the other, those who trust him are always alive. (3) The health-giving power of Jesus. The church misses a wonderful opportunity in neglecting its healing ministry. Christ still has power to heal sicknesses in answer to faith as he still has power to forgive sins and cleanse souls. (4) The power that was in Peter. We may share this divine power that shall make us ministers of light and joy wherever we

BLUE STREAK
BLUE STREAK
GOOD YEAR

THE Goodyear-Akron Guaran d Blue Streak is the best loo g bicycle tire on the market.

It has a distinctive Blue Streak on h side of the beautiful non-skid tr l.

The Blue Streak is the only single e bicycle tire Goodyear makes— d into it goes real Goodyear qua

Buy Goodyear-Akron Blue Stre , non-skid, from any reliable bic e or hardware dealers anywhere r $2.50 each.

Goodyear-Akron Blue Streaks carry the e guarantee as tires for which you are a d to pay as high as $5 apiece

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber .
Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON
Bicycle Tires

Better than the Gingerbread that Grandmother Used To Make

Gail Borden
EAGLE
BRAND
CONDENSE
